Where defendant did not assign misconduct of the prosecuting attorney in argument at the time when the objectionable statement was made to the jury, such objection will not be considered on appeal.

2. Criminal Law 🔑814(12) — Instruction as to Presumption of Good Reputation of Defendant Erroneous When Not in Issue.

In a prosecution for manslaughter, where no evidence was offered for or against defendant's reputation, an instruction that the law presumed defendant had a good reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity was properly refused, despite Code Civ. Proc. § 1847.

3. Criminal Law 🔑829(5)—Refusal of Instruction Covered by One Given Not Error.

In a prosecution for manslaughter, the court properly refused to instruct that defendant was entitled to act on the appearances as they presented themselves to him as a reasonable man, though it might subsequently turn out that decedent was unarmed, and there was no danger to defendant, where another instruction covered the same ground, without error of which defendant can complain.

4. Criminal Law 🔑829(11) — Instruction, Repetition of One Given, Properly Refused.

In a prosecution for manslaughter, where the court charged that the jury should consider with caution any testimony as to defendant's oral admissions, it did not err in refusing to instruct that declarations are weak and unsatisfactory in their nature as evidence, etc.

5. Criminal Law 🔑829(8) — Instruction, Repetition of One Given, Properly Refused.

In a prosecution for manslaughter, the trial court did not err in refusing to charge that evidence of decedent's bad character for peace and quiet could be considered by the jury, where the subject-matter was sufficiently covered by another instruction.

6. Homicide 🔑341 — On Conviction of Manslaughter Defendant Cannot Complain of Instruction as to Murder.

Where defendant was convicted of manslaughter only, he cannot complain of the court's act in omitting to give part of his requested instruction enumerating the facts on which a reasonable doubt should cause acquittal of murder.

7. Homicide 🔑199—Evidence of Drunkenness Goes Only to Degree of Crime.

In a prosecution for homicide, evidence of drunkenness can be considered only to determine the degree of the crime, the weight to be given which is a matter for the jury to determine in connection with all the other evidence and circumstances.

8. Homicide 🔑173 — In Determining Intent Jury can Consider Means Used.

In determining the intention, at the time of the killing, of defendant, charged with the homicide, the jury is entitled to consider the means used in making the fatal assault.

9. Homicide 🔑290 — Instruction to Consider Means of Killing in Determining Degree Proper.

In a prosecution for homicide, in defining murder of the first and second degrees and manslaughter, the trial court properly stated that in determining defendant's intention it was important to consider the means used to accomplish the killing.

10. Criminal Law 🔑922(16)—Instruction as to Necessity of Proof Beyond Reasonable Doubt Proper.

In a prosecution for manslaughter, when taken with the other instructions, a charge that, if the commission of the homicide by defendant is proved to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, it devolves on defendant to prove circumstances of mitigation, etc., held not erroneous, as virtually instructing that defendant should prove mitigation or justification, and not that he might raise a reasonable doubt as to such defense.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; T. N. Harvey, Judge.

John Albert Hopper was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

E. J. Emmons, of Bakersfield, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Jerry H. Powell, of Los Angeles, for the People.

CONREY, P. J. The defendant appeals from a judgment rendered against him upon conviction of the crime of manslaughter.

[1] Appellant charges the district attorney with misconduct in making a certain statement in his argument to the jury. No assignment of such misconduct was made by defendant at the time when the statement was made to the jury, and the objection will not be considered now.

Appellant claims that the court erred in refusing the following instructions requested by him:

1. "You are instructed that the law presumes that the defendant has a good reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity."

2. "The defendant would be entitled to act upon the appearances as they presented themselves to him as a reasonable man, although it might subsequently turn out that Warn was unarmed, and in fact there was no danger to the defendant."

3. "You are instructed that declarations are very weak and unsatisfactory in their nature as evidence, and you are instructed that it is your duty to scrutinize closely any evidence of declarations owing to such fact. The extrajudicial statements of a prisoner, unaccompanied with other facts or circumstances, are not sufficient, and will not justify a conviction."

4. "Evidence of the bad character of the deceased for peace and quiet can be considered by you as having a tendency to show the purpose and intent at the time of the affray that actuated the deceased, and can be considered further by you for the purpose of arriving at the condition of the defendant's mind at the time of firing the fatal shot, if the defendant is shown by the evidence to have known the reputation of the deceased for peace and quiet."

5. "You are instructed that it is the duty of the prosecution to prove every material fact necessary to constitute the charge against the defendant beyond all reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty, and in this case among the material facts to be proven are, first, that the deceased was killed by the defendant; second, that the killing was done with malice aforethought and with premeditation. And if you have a reasonable doubt upon any one of these material facts, it is your duty to acquit the defendant of murder in the first degree."

[2] The court did not err in refusing any of these requested instructions. Under the first point, appellant relies upon section 1847 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The requested instruction does not conform to that section. Moreover, no evidence was offered in this case for or against the reputation of the defendant in any particular, and we are unable to see that appellant has been prejudiced by the absence of this instruction, even if appropriately it could have been given.

[3] The second point is sufficiently met by the fact that the court did give to the jury the following instruction:

"The jury are instructed that the defendant as a reasonable man, knowing what he knew and seeing what he saw, had a right to act upon the appearances as they presented themselves to him as a reasonable man, even if you find that Warn at the time was actually unarmed, and if the defendant as such reasonable man, knowing what he knew and seeing what he saw, had a right to believe and did believe from such appearances that he was about to suffer great bodily harm at the hands of Warn, and that if, acting alone upon such belief, he fired the shot at Warn, then I instruct you that the defendant is entitled to an acquittal at your hands."

Without saying that the instruction given is entirely correct, we do say that it is free from any error of which the defendant is entitled to complain. This instruction having been given, the defendant could not be prejudiced by the refusal of the court to instruct the jury in the language requested by him.

[4] In connection with point 3, it should be noted that the court instructed the jury that, "if there is any testimony as to the oral admissions alleged to have been made by the defendant, you are instructed that you are to receive the same and consider them with caution," and also fully charged the jury as to the necessity for proof of defendant's guilt beyond all reasonable doubt. From the defendant's own testimony it appears that he fired the shot by which Warn, the deceased, was killed. Aside from the extrajudicial admissions shown by the testimony, the evidence against the defendant is abundant and clear as to all matters connected with such extrajudicial statements or admissions by the defendant.

[5] Under point 4, we note that the court instructed the jury as follows:

> "You are instructed that the defendant had a right, at the time of firing the fatal shot, to consider fully all acts of violence that he had seen the deceased commit, all threats that he had heard the deceased make, together with the disposition of the deceased, as the defendant knew it, in order that the defendant might know or believe what the deceased meant or intended at the time that the fatal shot was fired."

There was no evidence of bad "reputation" of the deceased for peace and quiet, but the defendant testified concerning a quarrel which he had recently witnessed between the deceased and another person, in which the deceased used threatening language toward that other person. The subject-matter of the instruction refused by the court was sufficiently covered by the instruction given as above stated.

[6] Under the fifth point, it is admitted that the court gave all of the requested instruction except the last sentence thereof. In view of the fact that defendant was convicted of manslaughter only, he is in no position to complain of this modification of the instruction, and we need not discuss the merits of appellant's criticisms thereon.

[7] 6. Appellant objects to the closing sentence of the fourteenth instruction, which is as follows:

> "Evidence of drunkenness can only be considered by the jury for the purpose of determining the degree of crime, and the weight to be given it is a matter for the jury to determine in connection with all the other evidence and circumstances in proof in the case."

The language quoted is a correct statement of the law. People v. Keyes, 715 Pac. 6.

[8, 9] 7. Instruction No. 17 defines murder of the first and second degrees and manslaughter. In that instruction the court said:

> "In determining the intention of the defendant at the time of the transaction complained of it is important to consider the means used to accomplish the killing."

It is of this statement in the instruction that appellant complains. There is no doubt in our minds that the jury is entitled to consider the means used by one in making an assault as an element in the determination of his intention at the time. The statement quoted, especially in the connection in which it was used, is without error.

[10] 8. Instruction No. 21 reads as follows:

> "Upon a trial for murder, if the commission of the homicide by the defendant is proved to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, then it devolves upon the defendant to prove circumstances of mitigation or that justify or excuse the act, unless the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that the crime only amounts to manslaughter, or that the defendant was justifiable or excusable."

Appellant's objection to this instruction is that—

> "It was virtually instructing the jury that the defendant should prove mitigation or justification, and not that he might raise a reasonable doubt as to these defenses."

We think that the instruction, when taken together with the other instructions given by the court to the jury, was without error. The jury was fully instructed that the burden was upon the prosecution to prove defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.

9. The last point insisted upon refers to an instruction concerning the right of self-defense. That the instruction correctly stated the law is not denied, but appellant claims that there was no evidence to which it could apply, and therefore that the instruction was confusing and misleading. There was evidence of circumstances to which the instruction reasonably might be applied.

Our examination of the case convinces us that the defendant had a fair trial, free from prejudicial error, and that he was fortunate to escape with a conviction which reduced his offense to manslaughter.

The judgment is affirmed.

ANDREWS v. KARL. (Civ. 2928.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⚷93, 95(2), 187—WHERE TIME IS OF THE ESSENCE, FORFEITURE RESULTS ON BREACH OF CONTRACT.

Where time is made of the essence of a contract for the sale of land, terminating it on failure to comply strictly and punctually with conditions, the effect is to entail a forfeiture on the mere default of the purchaser by his failure to make payments when and as he obligated himself to do, if the vendor has not waived the default or forfeiture, as is within his right by express agreement or unequivocal acts or demeanor.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⚷95(2), 101—WAIVER SUSPENDS RIGHT OF FORFEITURE WHICH CAN BE REVIVED ONLY ON NOTICE.

Where the conduct of the vendor of land, or the entire course of business between him and the purchaser, amounts to a waiver of the clause in the contract making time of the essence, the waiver creates a temporary suspension of the right of forfeiture in the vendor for delay in payment by the purchaser, which can be revived only by giving definite and specific notice of the vendor's intention.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑95(2), 101—WAIVER OF FORFEITURE NOT REVIVED.

Where the vendor of land on maturity of the first annual installment stated that he did not need the money, but that instead the purchasers could continue to improve the property, increasing its value, and endeavor to resell it, the vendor thereby waived any forfeiture incurred by the purchasers through failure to make payment promptly on time, and, the vendor never having given notice of intention to restore the right, it was not revived.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑86, 191, 296—REFUSAL OF VENDEE TO PERFORM, ABANDONMENT OF CONTRACT.

Willful refusal by a vendee of land to perform his agreement amounts to an abandonment of the contract by him, and the repudiated contract is no protection to the vendee in possession against the legal title, but the vendor may recover possession in an action of ejectment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by R. C. Andrews against A. Karl. From conditional judgment for plaintiff, he appeals. Affirmed.

Kendrick & Ardis, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

H. C. Head, of Santa Ana, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an action in ejectment to recover possession of real property in Orange county. The judgment, after adjudging plaintiff to be the owner, directs defendant to deliver possession upon the payment to him by plaintiff of $1,000. Plaintiff, claiming that he is entitled to possession unconditionally, appeals from the judgment.

The outstanding facts, as shown by the findings, are substantially as follows: On November 7, 1913, plaintiff, being then the owner of the property, and defendant and one M. Neimark, executed a written contract whereby plaintiff, as the vendor, agreed to sell and convey the property to defendant and Neimark, as the vendees, for $21,350, payable, $2,000 at the date of the execution of the contract, and the balance in equal installments, the first installment, $1,000, to be paid on February 10, 1914, the second, $1,350, on January 1, 1915, and the remaining installments on the 1st day of January of each succeeding year to and including January 1, 1924, with interest on all deferred payments. The vendees likewise agreed to pay all state and county taxes and assessments. The vendees were to be entitled to all crops grown upon the land. Time was made of the essence of the contract. It also was provided that if the vendees failed to comply with the terms of the contract, they should forfeit all rights to the property and to any moneys paid by them. Upon the execution of the contract the vendees entered into possession thereunder. No part of the purchase price has been paid, except the $2,000 paid at the date of the execution of the contract. Nor have the vendees paid any part of the taxes for the year 1915. The action was commenced December 17, 1915. After the execution of the contract, but prior to February 10, 1914—on which date the first annual installment was payable by the vendees—plaintiff orally informed the vendees "that he did not need the money, and that it would be better for them to use the money in working and improving the land, and thereby increase the value thereof, and that after they had improved the land it could be sold and the plaintiff receive from the purchase price the amount due him under the terms of the contract; * * * that defendant had said M. Neimark would then be repaid the sum of $2,000 which they had paid on account of the purchase price of the land, * * * and that the balance obtained on the sale of said land could be divided equally between the plaintiff and defendant and said M. Neimark, and that the defendant and said M. Neimark could, in that way, make a good profit from their labor in working and improving the land." In May, 1915, defendant purchased all the interest of his covendee, Neimark. Ever since plaintiff informed the vendees that he did not need the money, and that it would be better for them to use the money in working and improving the land, etc., defendant has worked upon and improved the property in accordance with the proposal thus made to him and his covendee. Plaintiff purchased from the vendees for $1,000, the crop that was on the land at the time they took possession; and the court finds that, of the $2,000 paid to plaintiff at the date of the execution of the contract of sale, $1,000 was repaid to the vendees for the crop. Wherefore, the court finds that the vendees "received the benefit of the said crops so purchased by plaintiff, and plaintiff received the use and benefit of the other $1,000, and no more." Prior to the action, but how long prior thereto the court's findings do not state, plaintiff demanded possession, with which demand defendant refused and still refuses compliance. As a conclusion of law, the court found that—

> "Plaintiff is entitled to a judgment adjudging that he is the owner of all the real property described in plaintiff's complaint; and for a judgment that the defendant deliver possession thereof to the plaintiff upon the payment to defendant, A. Karl, by plaintiff, of the sum of one thousand dollars with interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum from November 17, 1913."

For reasons presently to be stated, we think the facts found by the court show a waiver of the clause making time of the essence of the contract, and that plaintiff's right to a forfeiture of the vendees' rights under the contract was temporarily suspended—so temporarily suspended that his right to a forfeiture could be restored only by giving a definite and specific notice of his intention to exercise the right if the vendees should fail to pay, within a reasonable time, all sums due under the contract. If there was such a waiver and suspension of the right of forfeiture, then plaintiff is not in a position to complain of the judgment. For if there was such waiver and temporary suspension of the right of forfeiture—not restored by a sufficient notice of intention to revive the original contractual relations and obligations—then plaintiff was not entitled to the possession for failure of the vendees to make the payments at the times fixed therefor in the written contract. And if not entitled to a judgment awarding him possession, plaintiff cannot complain of a judgment that gives him the possession conditionally, i. e., possession conditioned upon his payment of the sum of $1,000.

It should be stated here that the facts found by the court, and which, for reasons presently to be given, were sufficient to establish a waiver of the stipulation making time of the essence, are fairly within the issues tendered by respondent's answer. Defendant, it is true, did not plead the written contract set forth in the findings. He did, however, plead a contract of purchase, made with plaintiff, under which he and his covendee took possession, though his answer does not attempt to set forth all the terms of the contract, nor does it specifically allege whether it was written or oral. But his answer does allege substantially all the facts found by the court respecting what plaintiff said to the vendees, some time prior to February 10, 1914, to the effect that he did not need the money, that it would be better for them to use it in improving the land, and that they could then sell, etc. That is, the answer alleges all the facts which constitute the waiver upon which defendant relies.

[1, 2] Thus, then, is presented the question of the correlative rights of the parties under the facts as found by the court. Where time is made of the essence of the contract, terminating it upon a failure to comply strictly and punctually with its conditions, its effect is to entail a forfeiture by sheer force of the contract itself, upon the mere default of the purchaser by his failure to make payments at the times and in the manner that he obligated himself to, provided, however, that the vendor has not waived the default or consequent forfeiture, which he has the right to do. This he may do by express agreement to that effect, or by unequivocal acts or demeanor affording reasonable inducement for the purchaser, in reliance thereon, to alter his course as to strict and punctual compliance with his contract, either in advance of or after the prescribed time. The stipulation that time shall be of the essence of the contract is made solely for the benefit of the vendor. The rule that the vendor, by his conduct, may waive strict performance and temporarily suspend his right of forfeiture is based on the doctrine that he should not be permitted to use a provision intended for his benefit as a means of intrapping the purchaser. And where the conduct of the vendor, or the entire course of business between the parties, amounts to a waiver of the clause in the contract making time of the essence, such waiver creates a temporary suspension of the right of forfeiture, which can only be revived by giving definite and specific notice of an intention to revive and enforce it. Stevinson v. Joy, 164 Cal. 279, 285, 128 Pac. 751; Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 290, 297, 110 Pac. 947, 139 Am. St. Rep. 126; Myers v. Williams, 173 Cal. 304, 159 Pac. 982; Pearson v. Brown, 27 Cal. App. 125, 129, 148 Pac. 956; Burmester v. Horn, 35 Cal. App. 549, 170 Pac. 674; Gray v. Pelton, 67 Or. 239, 135 Pac. 755.

[3] The proposal made by plaintiff to defendant and his covendee, prior to the maturity of the first annual installment on February 10, 1914, could only have the effect to lull the vendees into a sense of security, and induce them to believe that no payments need be made at the times provided by their contract, but that, instead, they could continue to improve the property, thereby increasing its value, look for a purchaser, endeavor to sell the land, and, if they succeeded in finding a purchaser willing to buy for an adequate price, adjust, after such sale, all the financial matters between plaintiff and themselves growing out of their contract. And because the natural consequence of plaintiff's proposal was to lull the vendees into a sense of security and cause them to believe that no payments need be made until they succeeded in finding a purchaser for the land, his conduct was tantamount to a waiver of any default on the part of the vendees, not only as to the one payment, but as to all that they should have made, under the strict terms of their contract, prior to the action. It is a reasonable inference from the facts found by the court that defendant and his covendee had not succeeded in finding a purchaser before the action was begun. The court found that the plaintiff told the vendees, not only that he did not need the money, but that "it would be better for them to use the money in working and improving the land, * * * and that after they had improved the land it could be sold and the plaintiff receive from the purchase price the amount due him." Thus no definite time was fixed within which the vendees might sell the property. Unless notified by the plaintiff that he had changed his mind, the time within which they might find a satisfactory purchaser might run on indefinitely, so that no payment need be made, under the terms of the written contract, unless and until plaintiff notified them of his intention to revive the original contractual obligations. And since plaintiff never gave defendant or his covendee definite and specific notice of an intention to restore the right of forfeiture, by giving notice to make the payments as provided by the contract, and a reasonable time thereafter within which to comply therewith, it follows that the right of forfeiture, temporarily suspended by plaintiff's conduct, was not revived before he began his action to recover possession.

[4] Appellant cites authorities to the effect that where the vendee refuses to perform the contract, the vendor, at his election, may treat the vendee as a trespasser or as a tenant at will, against whom ejectment will lie. Undoubtedly it is the rule that where a vendee in possession, neither performing nor willing to perform, has absolutely refused to complete the contract, he may be treated as one who has abandoned the contract under which he entered, and the vendor, by an action in ejectment, may recover the possession. The willful refusal of the vendee to perform his agreement amounts to an abandonment of the contract by him; and a repudiated contract is no protection to a vendee in possession against the legal title. Whittier v. Stege, 61 Cal. 238; Hicks v. Lovell, 64 Cal. 14, 27 Pac. 942, 49 Am. Rep. 679. While there can be no doubt of the existence of the rule invoked by appellant, the difficulty that confronts him is that the facts pleaded by respondent, and found by the court, do not show an abandonment of the contract on the part of the respondent, nor a refusal to perform. Instead, they show that respondent was relying upon appellant's statement that after the vendees "had improved the land"—an indefinite period of time—it could be sold, and then the sums due appellant, whatever they might be, could be paid. True, the oral proposal made by appellant to respondent and his covendee and acted upon by them, did not create an enforceable contract; but, under the doctrine of estoppel, it did effect a waiver of the time clause and a temporary suspension of appellant's right to a forfeiture—a temporary suspension that could be revived only by giving a definite and specific notice of an intention to that effect and a reasonable opportunity to the vendees to comply therewith. There is no pretense that appellant ever gave either of his vendees notice of his intention to revive the original contractual relations and obligations. It is true the complaint alleges, and the court finds, that "plaintiff has demanded of said defendant A. Karl the possession of said property." But a demand for possession is not the equivalent of a notice to the vendee to perform the covenants stipulated by him in his contract of purchase. Nor does it appear when the demand for possession was made. It may have been made on the very day the action was commenced. So that, even if a demand for possession could be deemed the equivalent of a "definite and specific notice of intention to enforce" the obligations of the contract, so as to revive the temporarily suspended right of forfeiture, it does not appear that the vendees were afforded a reasonable time before the action within which to perform the stipulations of their contract. Until appellant shall have given a definite and specific notice of his intention to restore the original contractual relations and obligations—waived by his oral proposal to the vendees—respondent need not show either a readiness or an ability to perform the strict letter of his written contract.

BECHTOLD et al. v. CONEY. (Civ. 2802.)

1. EVIDENCE 🔑434(11) — PAROL EVIDENCE OF MISREPRESENTATIONS INDUCING CONTRACT ADMISSIBLE.

In view of Civ. Code, §§ 1566, 1567, in an action for cancellation of a contract for the purchase by plaintiffs of territorial rights in a patent, plaintiffs, in attempting to show actual fraud, as defined by section 1572, and which is always a question of fact by section 1574, were entitled to show all the misrepresentations which were matters of inducement for entering into the written contract.

2. PATENTS 🔑215—CANCELLATION OF SALE OF PATENT FOR "ACTUAL FRAUD."

Purchasers of territorial rights in a patent were entitled to cancel the contract for either of two misrepresentations of the seller that he owned the patent, whereas he owned only an undivided sixth interest, and that he would furnish a machine as designated, together with specifications for manufacture, which he never intended to do; Civ. Code, § 1572, defining "actual fraud" to be a promise made without intention to perform.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Actual Fraud.]

3. PATENTS 🔑214—SUIT BY PURCHASER OF TERRITORIAL RIGHTS TO CANCEL SALE NOT BARRED BY LACHES.

In view of circumstances, purchasers of territorial rights in a patent held not barred by laches from maintaining their suit to cancel the contract as induced by fraud, because they did not formally rescind until June 1st, the contract having been made March 23d, after efforts to obtain repayment of money received by the seller.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by Harry Bechtold and another against K. Coney. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Edward E. Gehring and Burton Jackson Wyman, both of Oakland, for appellant.

M. J. Rutherford, of Oakland, and E. C. Miles, of San Francisco, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an action for the cancellation of a certain contract for the sale and purchase by the plaintiffs of certain territorial rights in a United States patent covering a file-sharpening device, and the recovery of $250 paid by plaintiffs on account of the purchase price of such rights. Plaintiffs claim the right to rescind and cancel the contract because of certain alleged misrepresentations and fraud practiced upon them by the defendant, which induced them to enter into said contract. Judgment was for the plaintiffs, and the defendant appeals.

[1] The contract of sale was in writing and is in evidence. It provides for the sale to the plaintiffs of all the right, title, and interest of the defendant in and to a certain patent right, for the price of $500, $250 to be paid upon the signing of the agreement and the balance to be paid within 60 days, and also that the written assignment of such right was to be left with a bank in escrow, to be delivered to the purchasers upon payment of the second installment of the purchase price, and also provides for a forfeiture of all rights of the plaintiffs, provided payment was not made within the 60 days. Appellant contends that this written agreement superseded all previous negotiations, and such previous negotiations, representations, etc., were all merged in the contract, and may not be shown by the plaintiffs to vary the terms of the written contract. If this contention were true, it would never be possible to avoid a written contract for fraudulent misrepresentations, unless such misrepresentations were also in writing and made a part of the contract. This clearly is not the law. The Civil Code provides (section 1566) that a contract may be rescinded where the consent is not free, and in the following section it is provided that consent is not free when such consent is induced by fraud. Actual fraud is defined in section 1572, Civil Code. The plaintiffs, in attempting to show actual fraud, as defined by said last-mentioned section, were entitled to show all the matters of inducement for entering into the contract.

Actual fraud is always a question of fact (Civ. Code, § 1574), and the trial court has made very complete findings, covering numerous fraudulent misrepresentations by the defendant, any one of which is sufficient to warrant the relief granted to the plaintiffs. It is therefore not necessary for us to discuss each of said findings. The court found that before the signing of the contract defendants made statements and representations to the plaintiffs which were fraudulent, and that, among other things, said defendant represented that he was the exclusive owner of a certain United States patent right, the said patent number being 680,152, as said patent is filed of record in the Patent Office of the United States of America. The court further found that the plaintiffs believed and relied upon said representation and statement, and were induced and influenced thereby, and, while believing and relying upon such representation, made and entered into the contract in question; that said statement was false and untrue, and known by the defendant to be false and untrue, and that the defendant was not the exclusive owner of the said patent rights so designated, but that defendant is only the owner of a one-sixth undivided interest in said patent right; and that said one-sixth interest did not and does not entitle said defendant to the exclusive right in any territory in the state of California or any other state. This finding is sustained by the testimony of the plaintiff Bechtold, who testified that the defendant represented that he was the sole owner of the patent. The answer admits that the defendant was the owner only of a one-sixth interest in said patent.

[2] The court also found that the defendant represented to the plaintiffs that, upon the signing of the agreement and the payment of the first installment of the purchase price, he would furnish to said plaintiffs a machine for sharpening files, as said machine is set forth and designated in said patents, together with specifications for the manufacture of other machines. The plaintiff Bechtold testified positively that the defendant agreed to deliver such a machine to him upon the signing of the agreement, and that said machine was never delivered. The trial court found that the defendant never had any intention of delivering said machine, and this finding is of a fact fairly inferable from the entire evidence. This brings the case within the fourth subdivision of section 1572, Civil Code, defining actual fraud to be a promise made without any intention of performing it. Either of the findings discussed herein would support the judgment, and to such matters the doctrine of caveat emptor clearly has no application, and we think appellant's argument upon this doctrine needs no further discussion.

[3] Appellant also urges that the plaintiffs were guilty of laches in failing to rescind the contract earlier. The contract was entered into upon March 23, 1917. Plaintiffs allege that they did not discover the falsity of the representations until about May 1, 1917, and at that time demanded a return of their money, and that they formally rescinded the contract upon June 1, 1917. The plaintiff Silva testified that about April 23, 1917, one month after the agreement was signed, he asked for a return of his money, which was two or three weeks after plaintiffs discovered that misrepresentations had been made. He testified that, when he received the information from Washington regarding the defendant's limited ownership of the patent right, he showed the papers and abstract to the defendant, and that the defendant promised to return his money when he succeeded in selling more territorial rights in the patent; that, because of this promise by the defendant, the plaintiff continued his visits and demands for his money, and discussed the matter with the defendant seven or eight times, relying upon defendant's promise from time to time that he would return the money; and that he (Silva) finally became tired of waiting, and formally rescinded the contract on June 1st, and brought suit on June 8th. Under such circumstances, we do not think there was any lack of diligence upon the part of the plaintiffs.

SAYLOR v. TAYLOR. (Civ. 2357.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑110 — ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL NOT APPEALABLE.

An order denying motion for new trial made January 13, 1917, is not an appealable order in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 963, as amended by St. 1915, p. 209, and an appeal therefrom must be dismissed.

2. NEGLIGENCE 🔑111(1) — ALLEGATION IN GENERAL TERMS SUFFICIENT.

An allegation that defendant so carelessly and negligently drove and managed his automobile that it struck the automobile in which plaintiff was riding was sufficient, though in general terms.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑706(7) — WHETHER DRIVER OF PLAINTIFF'S AUTOMOBILE WAS EXERCISING DUE CARE, FOR THE JURY.

In an action for personal injuries from an automobile collision, where defendant was on the wrong side of the street and the machine in which plaintiff was riding was on the right side, and its driver attempted to turn toward the center of the street and avoid defendant, and defendant turned in the same direction, causing the collision, it was a question for the jury whether the driver of plaintiff's automobile, as a reasonably prudent man in the exercise of due care, was justified in so turning his car.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑706(5) — EVIDENCE JUSTIFYING VERDICT FOR PLAINTIFF FOR PERSONAL INJURIES IN AUTOMOBILE COLLISION.

In an action for personal injuries resulting from an automobile collision, evidence held sufficient to justify a verdict for plaintiff.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1048(6) — ERROR IN CROSS-EXAMINATION, CLEARLY WITHOUT PREJUDICE, HARMLESS.

In an action for personal injuries resulting from an automobile collision, although cross-examination by plaintiff of defendant's witnesses as to radius in which it was possible to turn a car, of the make and manufacture of that driven by defendant, was erroneous, yet where it is apparent from the nature of the questions and answers thereto that it was without prejudice it must be considered harmless.

6. PLEADING 🔑122 — DENIAL OF ALLEGATION OF APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN AD LITEM UPON INFORMATION AND BELIEF INSUFFICIENT.

In a personal injury action by an infant by a guardian ad litem, defendant's denial of the appointment of such guardian upon information and belief is insufficient to require plaintiff to submit proof thereon; the order and records affording defendant ready means of ascertaining the truth of the allegation.

7. DAMAGES 🔑216(7)—INSTRUCTION AS TO COMPENSATION FOR FUTURE SUFFERING ERRONEOUS.

An instruction that if the jury believed plaintiff was "liable" to continual suffering and future mental anguish and bodily pain the verdict should be commensurate therewith was erroneous, since Civ. Code, § 3283, provides that "damages may be awarded in a judicial proceeding, for detriment resulting after the commencement thereof, or certain to result in the future," and the word "liable" must be construed, not as referring to a detriment certain to result, but rather to a future possible or probable happening which may not actually occur.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Liable.]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1170(9) — WHERE JUDGMENT IS FOR THE RIGHT PARTY IT WILL NOT BE REVERSED.

Although an instruction was erroneous where the appellate court is satisfied upon examination of the evidence that it did not result in miscarriage of justice, the verdict should not be set aside in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Action by Ruth Saylor, a minor, by Edgar F. Saylor, her guardian ad litem, against A. V. Taylor. From judgment for plaintiff and from order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. Scott Jacobs, of Hanford, for appellant.
R. Justin Miller, of Hanford, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained as the result of defendant's negligent operation of an automobile. Judgment upon veruict in favor of plaintiff was entered for $450, from which and an order denying his motion for a new trial defendant appeals.

[1] The order denying the motion for new trial, made on January 13, 1917, is not an appealable order (section 963, Code Civ. Proc., as amended in 1915; Stats. 1915, p. 209), and the appeal therefrom is therefore dismissed.

[2] Upon the ground of uncertainty defendant interposed a demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled, and this ruling is assigned as error. His contention is that the allegation, to wit, "that defendant * * * so carelessly and negligently drove and managed his said automobile that by reason of his negligence the said automobile violently collided with and struck the automobile in which this plaintiff was riding, and that as a result of the said collision so caused as aforesaid, this plaintiff was" injured, was, in general terms and by reason thereof, insufficient. That the allegation was sufficient admits of no question. "It is well settled that negligence may be charged in general terms; that is, what was done being stated, it is sufficient to say it was negligently done, without stating the particular omission which rendered the act negligent." Smith v. Buttner, 90 Cal. 95, 27 Pac. 29; Champagne v. A. Hamburger & Sons, 169 Cal. 683, 147 Pac. 954.

[3, 4] At the close of plaintiff's evidence defendant moved for a nonsuit upon the ground that the evidence showed that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, which motion was denied, and this ruling is assigned as error. The evidence clearly tended to show that the automobile in which plaintiff was riding was traveling westerly on the north side of the center of a street running east and west and near the curb line, at which time defendant was approaching from the opposite direction, driving his automobile on the same side of the street and also near the curb line, between which and defendant's automobile there was not room to pass; that when the driver of plaintiff's car reached a point less than 20 feet from defendant's car, which was still approaching, he, in order to avoid the threatened head-on collision, turned to the left, at which time defendant also turned in the same direction and the two cars collided. Admittedly defendant was on the wrong side of the street, and under the evidence it was a question for the determination of the jury as to whether, under the circumstances shown, the driver of plaintiff's automobile, as a reasonably prudent man and in the exercise of due care, was justified in turning his car to the left to avoid the collision threatened by the negligent act of defendant. Not only was there no error in the ruling of the court in denying the motion for nonsuit, but there is likewise no ground for appellant's contention that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. Indeed, the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses is such that if the jury believed the truth of their statements it could not have arrived at a different verdict.

[5] Error is predicated upon the ruling of the court in permitting the cross-examination of two witnesses called by defendant and questioned as to the damage suffered by defendant as a result of injuries to his car in the collision. Thereupon, on cross-examination, plaintiff questioned them as to the radius within which it was possible to turn a car of the make and manufacture of that driven by defendant. The ruling of the court in permitting these questions was erroneous. Nevertheless, it is apparent from the nature of the questions and the answers thereto that such error was absolutely harmless and without prejudice.

[6] Plaintiff sued by her guardian ad litem, alleging that on July 22, 1914, Edgar F. Saylor was by an order of court appointed in such capacity. In his answer defendant, upon information and belief, denied the allegation. No proof was offered thereon, for which reason he claims the judgment should be reversed. The order was made in the case, the records of which afforded defendant a ready means of ascertaining the truth of the allegation, and hence it was not an allegation as to which issue could be joined by a denial for want of information and belief. Mulcahy v. Buckley, 100 Cal. 484, 35 Pac. 144; Mullally v. Townsend, 119 Cal. 47, 50 Pac. 1066.

[7] The court instructed the jury that plaintiff's right to recover was not limited to such damages as may have occurred up to the time of the filing of her complaint in the action, and further said, "But in case you find from the evidence, that plaintiff is liable to continual suffering, and is liable to future mental anguish and bodily pain, then your verdict should be commensurate to such subsequent suffering, mental anguish, and physical suffering as by the evidence she may reasonably suffer in the future, as well as for that suffered down to the time of the filing of her complaint, not exceeding the amount claimed" therein. We agree with appellant that the giving of this instruction was error, since under section 3283, Civil Code, "damages may be awarded, in a judicial proceeding, for detriment resulting after the commencement thereof, or certain to result in the future." As used, the word "liable" must be construed, not as referring to a detriment certain to result, but to a future possible or probable happening which may not actually occur. Home Insurance Co. v. Peoria & P. U. Ry. Co., 178 Ill. 64, 52 N. E. 862. The jury, notwithstanding an instruction later given by the court in the language of section 3283, might have considered the first one applicable to the facts established and, as claimed by appellant, indulged in the realm of speculation and conjecture as to the liability of future suffering and detriment. That it was error and not cured by the subsequent instruction with which it was in conflict, see Martin v. Southern Pacific Co., 130 Cal. 285, 62 Pac. 515, Melone v. Sierra Ry. Co., 151 Cal. 113, 91 Pac. 522, and Walker v. Southern Pacific Co., 162 Cal. 121, 121 Pac. 369.

[8] Nevertheless, and conceding the error, we are satisfied, upon an examination of the evidence, that it did not result in a miscarriage of justice, without which, as provided in section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, this court should not set aside the judgment rendered. It appears without contradiction that plaintiff was seriously, if not permanently, injured; that in addition to both limbs and an artery being badly cut, necessitating a number of stitches being taken to close the wounds, a ligament of the kneecap was almost severed, which likewise had to be drawn together by stitches; in addition to all of which her nervous system was more or less impaired. It further appeared that at the time of the trial, about a year after the accident, plaintiff's condition, as a result of the injuries, was such that she could not stand upon the limb affected by the severed ligament without suffering pain. Hence conceding the jury, as claimed by appellant, might have indulged in speculation and conjecture, it is apparent, when considering the amount of the verdict as compared with the serious injuries sustained by plaintiff, that if they did enter into the realm of speculation the voyage therein was of exceedingly short duration and not to an extent that affected the verdict.

An examination of other alleged errors predicated upon the giving and the refusing to give instructions discloses no merit in appellant's contentions based thereon.

The judgment is affirmed.

SAYLOR v. TAYLOR. (Civ. 2356.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 29, 1919.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Action by Edgar F. Saylor against A. V. Taylor. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. Scott Jacobs, of Hanford, for appellant.
R. Justin Miller, of Hanford, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from a judgment entered on the verdict of a jury, wherein the plaintiff recovered damages for injuries and loss occasioned by defendant's negligent driving and management of an automobile, whereby said automobile was caused to collide with an automobile of the plaintiff.

This case was tried with the action of Ruth Saylor, a minor, against A. V. Taylor, defendant (Civil No. 2357 of this court, 183 Pac. 843), wherein the minor sued for damages for personal injuries received by her in the same collision. All of the points relied upon by counsel for appellant in support of the appeal herein are included among those presented and considered in the appeal in said case No. 2357, in which the decision is this day filed. The arguments made in support of the points presented in this case are identical with the arguments made upon the same proposition in the other case. The judgment in that case having been affirmed, this appeal should take the same course.

PEOPLE v. CAMP. (Cr. 471.)

1. STATUTES 🔑285—WHEN DULY CERTIFIED, CANNOT BE IMPEACHED BY LEGISLATIVE JOURNALS.

The validity of a statute, which has been duly certified, enrolled and approved, and deposited in the office of the secretary of state, cannot be impeached by a resort to the journals of the Legislature, or by extrinsic evidence of any character.

2. STATUTES 🔑118(6)—TITLE OF STATUTE AS TO CRIMES AGAINST CHILDREN SUFFICIENT.

Pen. Code, § 288, prohibiting any lewd or lascivious act upon a child under the age of 14, etc., entitled, as enacted by St. 1901, p. 630, "An act to amend the Penal Code by adding a new section thereto to be numbered," etc., "relating to crimes against children," held not in violation of Const. art. 4, § 24, requiring expression of the subject of an act in the title.

3. STATUTES 🔑118(6) — ACT AS TO CRIMES AGAINST CHILDREN NOT CONTRADICTORY TO ITS TITLE.

Pen. Code, § 288, prohibiting any lewd or lascivious act upon or with a child under 14, etc., entitled, as enacted by St. 1901, p. 630, "An act to amend the Penal Code by adding a new section thereto to be numbered," etc., "relating to crimes against children," held not violative of Const. art. 4, § 24, as explicitly negativing and contradicting the subject expressed in the title; it not being misleading or calculated to deceive.

4. STATUTES 🔑86 — ACT AS TO CRIMES AGAINST CHILDREN NOT CLASS LEGISLATION.

Pen. Code, § 288, prohibiting any lewd or lascivious act upon or with a child under 14, held not to involve special legislation, within the meaning and contemplation of Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 2, applying, as it does, to all children under 14 years of age and to all of a class.

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑250, 258—INFANTS 🔑12—ACT AS TO CRIMES AGAINST CHILDREN NOT A VIOLATION OF FEDERAL CONSTITUTION.

Pen. Code, § 288, prohibiting any lewd or lascivious act upon or with a child under 14, held not to deny to persons prosecuted under its provisions the equal protection of the laws, or to deprive them of liberty without due process, contrary to Const. U. S. Amend. 14, § 1, though other sections of the Penal Code relating to crimes against children, such as sections 272, 273, 273g, and 650½, made the condemned acts misdemeanors only.

6. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1213—PUNISHMENT IN STATUTE AS TO CRIMES AGAINST CHILDREN NOT UNUSUAL.

Pen. Code, § 288, prohibiting any lewd or lascivious act upon or with a child under 14, held not to authorize the infliction of unusual punishment, within the meaning of the inhibition of Const. Cal. art. 1, § 6.

7. STATUTES 🔑183—WHEN LITERAL MEANING OF TERMS ABSURD, MEANING CONSISTENT WITH CONTEXT FOLLOWED.

A cardinal rule of statutory construction is that, if giving a word or phrase its literal meaning would result absurdly, such meaning must be disregarded, and a meaning ascribed consistent with the context and evident object of the act, that would render it not only consistent, but reasonable in effect, and therefore effectual.

8. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑13—CLERICAL ERROR IN STATUTE INSUFFICIENT TO RENDER IT UNCERTAIN.

Pen. Code, § 288, prohibiting any lewd or lascivious act upon or with a child under 14, is not rendered incurably uncertain, vague, and unintelligible, in that it cannot be ascertained what lewd and lascivious acts are prohibited, because the section, by clerical error or otherwise, refers to Pen. Code, pt. 2, relating solely to criminal procedure, instead of part 1.

9. INFANTS 🔑20—VERDICT IN PROSECUTION FOR CRIME AGAINST CHILD SUFFICIENT.

Verdict that defendant was guilty of the crime of lewd and lascivious conduct with a male child under the age of 14 years, a felony, as charged in the indictment, which must be presumed on collateral attack to have sufficiently stated the offense as defined by Pen. Code, § 288, by following substantially the language of the statute, held sufficiently to have found that the crime was committed upon or with the body of a child, as prohibited by the statute and as charged by the indictment.

10. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1088(1)—WHAT PAPERS INCLUDED IN RECORD OF CRIMINAL TRIAL.

The record of a criminal action consists of, first, the indictment or information and a copy of the minutes of the plea or demurrer; second, a copy of the minutes of the trial; third, the written instructions, etc.; and, fourth, a copy of the judgment.

11. INFANTS 🔑20—STATUTE RELATING TO CRIMES AGAINST CHILDREN NOT REPEALED.

Pen. Code, § 288, prohibiting any lewd or lascivious act upon or with a child under 14, held not impliedly repealed by Juvenile Court Law, § 28; there being no inconsistency between them.

12. INFANTS 🔑20—LENGTH OF SENTENCE ON PROSECUTION FOR CRIME AGAINST CHILD AUTHORIZED.

In view of Pen. Code, § 671, despite section 18, the court had jurisdiction to sentence to imprisonment for more than five years defendant, convicted of lewd and lascivious conduct upon a child under 14, in violation of section 288.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Charles Camp was convicted of lewd and lascivious conduct with and upon the body of a male child under the age of 14 years. From an order denying his motion for order vacating and setting aside the conviction and judgment for want of jurisdiction, he appeals. Affirmed.

George D. Collins, Jr., of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. On the 16th of October, 1914, defendant, having been convicted by a jury of the crime of "lewd and lascivious conduct with and upon the body of a male child under the age of 14 years," was sentenced by the superior court of the county of Sacramento to imprisonment in the state prison for the term of 15 years. On the 21st day of January, 1919, defendant made a motion "that an order be made and entered herein vacating and setting aside the conviction and judgment for want of jurisdiction in said court." An order to show cause was issued and, after a hearing, the motion was by the court denied, and the defendant remanded to the custody of the warden of the state prison. The appeal is by the defendant from the order denying said motion.

It is stated in the grounds of appeal that said order is "contrary to law, and that said conviction and judgment are void on the face of the record, for want of jurisdiction in said superior court over the subject-matter of the action, and that said judgment in said action is also void, because in excess of the authority of said superior court to the extent that the sentence therein specified exceeds the term of 5 years." Defendant was tried and convicted under the provisions of section 288 of the Penal Code, which reads as follows:

"Any person who shall willfully and lewdly commit any lewd or lascivious act, other than the acts constituting other crimes provided for in part two of this Code, upon or with the body, or any part or member thereof, of a child under the age of fourteen years, with the intent of arousing, appealing to, or gratifying the lust or passions or sexual desires of such person, or of such child, shall be guilty of a felony, and shall be imprisoned in the state prison not less than one year."

Appellant urges the following points as grounds for reversal of said order: That said section 288 is void for the following reasons: (1) That the same, after being amended in the senate, was not read at length in the assembly; (2) that it is in violation of section 24 of article 4 of the Constitution, in that the subject of the act is not expressed in the title, but, on the contrary the act itself explicitly negatives and contradicts the subject expressed in the title; (3) that it is in violation of subdivisions 2 and 33 of section 25, article 4, of the Constitution; (4) that it operates to deny to the defendant the equal protection of the laws guaranteed him by the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States; (5) that it operates to deprive defendant of his liberty without due process of law in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment; (6) that the act is incurably uncertain, vague, and unintelligible, in that it cannot be ascertained what lewd and lascivious acts are prohibited, as the statute refers to part 2 of the Penal Code, which relates solely to criminal procedure, and that the courts are denied the power to strike out from said section "part 2" and substitute "part 1"; that so to amend the section is to deprive defendant of his liberty without due process of law, in violation of said Fourteenth Amendment; (7) that said section and said judgment are in violation of article 1, section 6, of the Constitution, in that they inflict unusual punishment; (8) that the conduct of which defendant has been convicted is made a misdemeanor by sections 273 and 273g of the Penal Code, and is therefore expressly excluded from section 288; (9) that section 288 has been repealed by section 28 of the juvenile court law of 1913; (10) that by section 18 of the Penal Code the maximum penalty for a violation of section 288 is 5 years, which the defendant has served.

Most, if, indeed, not all of the objections to section 288 of the Penal Code urged here on constitutional grounds have been decided adversely to the position of the appellant by the courts. The objections will nevertheless, be given some notice.

[1] 1. It has been so often held in this state that it is no longer an open question that the validity of a statute, which had been duly certified, enrolled and approved, and deposited in the office of the secretary of state, cannot be impeached by a resort to the journals of the Legislature, or by extrinsic evidence of any character. Sherman v. Story, 30 Cal. 253, 89 Am. Dec. 93; County of Yolo v. Colgan, 132 Cal. 265, 64 Pac. 403, 84 Am. St. Rep. 41; Kingsbury v. Nye, 9 Cal. App. 574, 577, 99 Pac. 985. See, also, De Loach et al. v. Newton, 134 Ga. 739, 68 S. E. 708; State of Washington v. Jones, 6 Wash. 452, 34 Pac. 201, 23 L. R. A. 340; Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 672, 12 Sup. Ct. 495, 36 L. Ed. 294. This point requires no further consideration herein than such as is involved in the citation of these cases.

[2, 3] 2. The title to section 288 of the Penal Code, as it was enacted by the Legislature of 1901 (Stats. 1901, p. 630), reads as follows:

"An act to amend the Penal Code by adding a new section thereto, to be numbered section two hundred and eighty-two, relating to crimes against children."

Thus it will be observed that the title of the act states generally that the crimes which the section is designed to punish are those perpetrated upon or against children. It was not necessary, to make the act conform to the requirements of the Constitution in that respect, to embrace in its title a specification of the nature of the crimes to which the section relates; and the courts of this state have held that such a title as was contained in the act in question, being an amendment of one of the Codes, sufficiently expresses the subject of the act as required by section 24 of article 4 of the Constitution. See People v. Dobbins, 73 Cal. 257, 14 Pac. 860; Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. 633, 29 Pac. 251; People v. Lovren, 119 Cal. 88, 51 Pac. 22, 638; Jackson v. Baehr, 138 Cal. 266, 71 Pac. 167; County of Butte v. Merrill, 141 Cal. 396, 398, 74 Pac. 1036; People v. Oates, 142 Cal. 12, 75 Pac. 337; People v. Merritt, 18 Cal. App. 58, 122 Pac. 839, 844.

Nor can we perceive any merit in the contention that the act itself contradicts or is in any wise inconsistent with its title. The title, as we have seen, declares that the subject of the act involves certain crimes against children and the act itself specifically sets forth the acts constituting the crimes to which the title refers. In other words, the title declares in general terms the nature of the legislation of which it is a sort of preamble, and that it has relation to certain crimes against children, and the act itself describes or defines the particular kind of act constituting the crime thus intended to be included among those provided for in other sections of the Penal Code against the same class of persons and which define as such crimes acts of a different nature from that constituting the basis of the legislation involved in section 288. It is therefore very clear that, when compared to the act itself, no inconsistency between them can be discerned, nor can it be said, when so compared, that the title is misleading or calculated to deceive or convey an erroneous impression as to the subject of the legislation involved in the act.

[4] 3. Section 288 does not involve special legislation, within the meaning or contemplation of subdivision 2 of section 25, article 4, of the state Constitution. The act applies to all children under 14 years of age, or to all of a class. It has been held time and again that an act of the Legislature which applies uniformly upon the whole or any single class of individuals or objects, when the classification is founded upon some natural, intrinsic, or constitutional distinction is a general law. See cases cited in Treadwell's Constitution, p. 255. That children or minors constitute a class founded upon a natural or intrinsic distinction, and as to whom legislation peculiarly applicable to individuals of their immature years is necessary for their proper protection, are propositions which cannot well be controverted. As to some matters in connection with the welfare of minors, particularly those not beyond or far beyond their infancy, a general law, in the more comprehensive sense of that phrase, could not be made.

Section 288 is particularly directed to the prevention and punishment of lewd and lascivious conduct with and upon the bodies of children under 14 years of age because as a rule, it may properly be assumed, they are not sufficiently matured mentally to appreciate as fully as older persons the consequences to them, both morally and physically, of such acts of degeneracy, and they therefore generally have neither the judgment nor the physical power, which in such cases is often minimized where there is no developed mental power, to protect themselves against the perpetration upon them of such outrages which it is the object of this law to prevent, if it can be done, or to punish where such acts have been done. Such crimes as the one denounced by section 288 are (we think experience shows to be true) ordinarily committed by persons of mature years, or who at any rate are old enough to know that the inevitable tendency of conduct so abnormal and utterly diabolical is to corrupt the morals of children and to make them what the perpetrator of such crime himself is. It was therefore quite natural that the people should by their Constitution authorize the enactment of laws for the special protection of a class of persons not of sufficient mental and physical development by reason of their youth to protect themselves against those human parasites who make a practice of satiating in a measure their abnormal sexual appetites by that sort of conduct with such minors.

[5, 6] The contention that section 288 denies to persons prosecuted under its provisions the equal protection of the law, contrary to the mandates of the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution, is founded upon the theory that, while said section makes the act therein denounced as criminal a felony, other sections of the Penal Code relating to crimes against children make the acts specified therein misdemeanors only. In support of this argument, counsel refers to sections 272, 273, 273g and 650½ of said Code. None of these sections, however, relates to lewd and lascivious acts "upon or with the body or any member thereof, of a child under the age of fourteen years." But section 273g does relate to such practices in the presence of any child. It provides:

> "Any person who in the presence of any child indulges in any degrading, lewd, immoral or vicious habits or practices, or who is habitually drunk in the presence of any child in his care, custody or control, is guilty of a misdemeanor."

That section was undoubtedly intended to include those cases only where the lewd or immoral conduct is carried on in the presence of children, and where the same is not practiced upon or with the body of the child. Furthermore, said section includes all children without regard to their age, while section 288 is confined in its operation to children under the age of 14 years. Section 650½ makes it a misdemeanor for any person to do certain acts or things in derogation of the rights of property or of the person of an individual, and, among other things, provides that the rights of person are violated and punishable as above indicated, when the name of a person is used by another for the accomplishment of lewd or licentious purposes, etc. This section obviously has no bearing upon nor is the subject-matter or the object thereof analogous to the crime defined by section 288. The other sections (272 and 273), while prohibiting and penalizing the abuse or misuse of minors, do not relate or refer to acts of lewdness or lasciviousness either with the body of a child or in the presence of children without practicing the same upon or with their bodies. It follows that there is no discrimination involved in our Code sections with respect to acts of lewdness or lasciviousness upon or with or in the presence of children. Indeed, there is a marked distinction between the several crimes denounced by the Penal Code for such acts. It is quite true that the crimes referred to may, in a general sense, be said to be correlated, as are robbery and larceny, because of possessing a certain element in common. Both these crimes involve the element of the felonious taking from another his personal property, but they are essentially differentiated by reason of the fact that the stealing in the one case is accomplished by means of force or fear, while in the other a less violent method is resorted to.

So in the case before us. It is true that the act of lewdness or lasciviousness penalized by section 288 involves some of the elements to be found in section 273g. Indeed, it involves some of the elements involved in the crime of rape or the infamous crime against nature; but there are features in those crimes which not only distinguish them one from the other, but which distinguish them from any other crime denounced in our statutes involving acts appertaining, either directly or indirectly, to sexual relations. Upon such distinction it is competent for the Legislature to annex a different punishment for the different crimes, and in doing this the Legislature will be, and presumptively has always been, governed by the nature of the acts constituting the crime, or in the case of penal statutes for the prevention of crimes against children, fix the penalty in accordance with the effect that the prohibited acts would naturally have upon that class of persons (and consequently upon society), taking into consideration their age, where that element is important in the determination of such effect, or disregarding the fact of age, where it cannot logically or in the nature of the case enter as a factor into the determination of such effect. Of course, no one will question the constitutional authority of the Legislature to fix the penalty to suit the crime, or, in other words, to fix different penalties for different crimes; the penalty in each case being measured or fixed according to the nature of the particular crime and its effect upon society. See People v. Barbieri, 33 Cal. App. 770, 780, 166 Pac. 812; Ex parte Selowski, 177 Pac. 301; Selowski v. Superior Court, 181 Pac. 652. It follows from the foregoing that section 288, either when taken alone or when considered in comparison with the other sections of the Penal Code above named, in no way impinges upon rights guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, or has the effect of denying to a person prosecuted under its provisions the equal protection of the law or depriving him of his liberty without due process of law. Nor does the section authorize the infliction of unusual punishment, within the meaning of the inhibition in that respect of section 6 of article 1 of the state Constitution. See Wilkerson v. Utah, 99 U. S. 130, 25 L. Ed. 345; Ex parte Kemmler, 136 U. S. 436, 10 Sup. Ct. 930, 34 L. Ed. 519; People v. Finley, 153 Cal. 59, 94 Pac. 248.

[7, 8] 4. There is not imparted to section 288 uncertainty or ambiguity or unintelligibleness as to its meaning or intent by reason of the fact that "part 2" instead of "part 1" is therein erroneously referred to as defining crimes involving in their composition, among other elements, that of lewd or lascivious conduct, which specific conduct is by said section excepted from the operation thereof. Part 2 of the Penal Code relates entirely to the procedure in criminal cases, while part 1 contains the definition of of the several crimes and the penalties annexed thereto. It is therefore plainly manifest that the reference by section 288 to "part 2" in the connection in which it is therein used was due, not to the intention of the Legislature, but to inadvertence or an oversight—perhaps a clerical misprision, possibly a mistake of the printer. At any rate, it is, as stated, very clear that the Legislature did not intend in said section to refer to "part 2" of the Penal Code, for such a reference would make the section an absurdity, and it is one of the cardinal rules of statutory construction that if, by giving to a word or a phrase in a statute its literal meaning, absurd consequences would be the inevitable result, then the literal meaning thereof must be disregarded, and such a meaning ascribed thereto, consistent, of course, with the general context and the evident object of the act, as will render the act, not only consistent in all its parts, but reasonable in its effect, and, therefore effectual for the purposes for which it was intended. The validity of the identical section was challenged upon precisely the same ground in People v. Bradford, 1 Cal. App. 41, 81 Pac. 712, and the views and the conclusion expressed and arrived at in that case are in harmony with the views above expressed.

Counsel for the defendant contends, however, that the rules of statutory construction which are applied in the Bradford Case have application to statutes regulating or defining civil rights, and not to penal statutes or legislative acts defining crimes and fixing their penalties, referring to sections 388, 411, 498, 521 and 524 of Sutherland on Statutory Construction (2d Ed.), and the case of Ex parte McNulty, 77 Cal. 164, 19 Pac. 237, 11 Am. St. Rep. 257, as supporting that proposition. We fully agree with what is said in the California case named, that "constructive crimes—crimes built up by courts with the aid of inference, implication, and strained interpretation—are repugnant to the spirit and letter of English and American criminal law," but we do not assent to the proposition that that case holds, or that Sutherland declares the rule to be, that the rules of statutory construction are not, generally, as well applicable to the construction of statutes defining crimes as to the construction of statutes concerning civil rights. There is nothing in the matter of the construction of section 288 but the simple question whether the Legislature intended to refer therein to a part of the Penal Code which would make said section mean something and what it was obviously intended to mean, or to a part of said Code which would render the section not only absurd but in truth nonsensical; and, manifestly, it requires under the circumstances present here no strained interpretation, nor does it amount to the building up of a "constructive crime," to find that the Legislature intended to refer in said section to part 1 and not to part 2 of the Penal Code, and that the reference therein to part 2 is the result of an inadvertence.

[9, 10] 5. There is no merit, so far as the record before us shows, in the point that the "judgment and verdict do not show a violation of section 288 of the Penal Code," and therefore, "the offense not being within section 288, the superior court had no jurisdiction to sentence the appellant to the state prison." The argument addressed to the support of this point is that, while the said section defines the crime therein denounced as the commission of "any lewd or lascivious act * * * upon or with the body * * * of a child," etc., the verdict was that defendant was guilty "of the crime of lewd and lascivious conduct with a male child under the age of 14 years, a felony, as charged in the indictment," and the judgment was in similar phraseology. It will be noticed that neither the verdict nor the judgment stated or declared that the crime of which defendant was convicted was committed "upon and with the body," etc. The indictment upon which the defendant was prosecuted and convicted is not in the record here. We must therefore presume, in this collateral attack upon the judgment, that the indictment sufficiently stated the offense defined by section 288 by following substantially and in all essential particulars the language thereof; and, so viewing the indictment, the verdict sufficiently finds that the crime denounced by said section was committed by the accused by the use of the general language therein contained, viz. "a felony, as charged in the indictment." The "judgment," involving the pronouncement of sentence in a criminal case, is generally orally rendered and delivered, and is usually in informal language, and the law requires it to be no more than that. Pen. Code, § 1202; People v. Terrill, 133 Cal. 120, 123, 65 Pac. 303.

The record of a criminal action consists of the following papers: (1) The indictment or information, and a copy of the minutes of the plea or demurrer; (2) a copy of the minutes of the trial: (3) the written instructions, etc.; and (4) a copy of the judgment. "The judgment need not, and it was not intended that it should, repeat anything contained in the papers which precede it, for, in view of the fact that they go into the record and make a part of it, such repetition would be idle and serve no useful purpose. The only material parts of a judgment are the statement of the offense for which the defendant has been convicted, omitting therefrom all that is contained in the previous papers, and therefore not necessary to be repeated, and the sentence of the court." Ex parte Williams, 89 Cal. 421, 426, 427, 26 Pac. 887, 889. If the judgment with sufficient clearness shows that it is the pronouncement of sentence by the court upon the verdict as returned, and the penalty imposed by such sentence is authorized by the statute under which the prisoner has been convicted, then the judgment satisfies the demand of the statute in that respect. The mere omission by the court, in passing sentence on the prisoner, to state or describe the offense with technical precision, certainly should not, in reason, be held to have the effect of rendering the judgment of sentence void or even voidable. Of course, all this is upon the assumption that the verdict finds the crime as charged, and that the charge, as we are authorized to assume is true here, is correctly described in the indictment. The statement in the judgment that, "Whereas, the said Charles Camp has been duly convicted in this court of the crime of lewd and lascivious conduct with a male child under the age of 14 years," implies that he has been convicted of the offense shown by the verdict upon which the judgment must necessarily rest, and therefore further implies that the offense for which he was sentenced embraced all the vital elements constituting the offense as it is defined by the statute, just as a judgment of sentence for murder upon a verdict convicting the accused of that crime implies, without stating it in the judgment, the unlawful taking of human life deliberately and with malice aforethought. As sustaining the foregoing views, we cite the following cases in addition to those above referred to: Matter of Ring, 28 Cal. 248, 253; Ex parte Gibson, 31 Cal. 619, 91 Am. Dec. 546; Ex parte Raye, 63 Cal. 491; People v. Murback, 64 Cal. 369, 372, 30 Pac. 608.

[11] 6. There is absolutely no ground for the contention that section 288 has been repealed by section 28 of the so-called juvenile court law. Stats. 1913, p. 1303. So much of said section as pertains to the penalty for the offense therein referred to reads as follows:

> "Any person who shall commit any act or omit the performance of any duty, which act or omission causes or tends to cause, encourage or contribute to the dependency or delinquency of any person under the age of twenty-one years, as defined by any law of this state, or any person who shall, by any act or omission, threats or commands or persuasion, endeavor to induce any such person, under twenty-one years of age, to do or to perform any act or follow any course of conduct, or to so live as would cause or manifestly tend to cause any such person to become, or to remain a dependent or delinquent person, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

The design of that law is, so far as a penal statute can go in the accomplishment of so laudable a purpose, to protect minors against those acts and temptations which, if allowed to be practiced and to exist, will surely lead them into habits involving acts of the grossest depravity. Section 3 of the law enumerates and describes eight different acts of omission and commission, any or all of which will constitute a minor a dependent person. Section 4 of said act provides that a "delinquent person" is one who violates any law of the state, or any ordinance of any city, town, etc., defining crime and which involves moral turpitude. Among the variety of acts enumerated in section 3 as constituting the dependency of a minor, neither the act of sexual commerce nor that of lewd and lascivious conduct with or upon a minor is specifically or eo nomine named or mentioned. There can be no doubt, though, that either or both of the last-mentioned acts upon a minor, under the general language of certain subdivisions of section 3 or that of section 4 of the said law, would properly be construed as acts contributing to the dependency or the delinquency of a minor within the common intent of that law; yet it would hardly with seriousness be contended that the penalty fixed by section 28 of said law was intended to supersede or take the place of the penalty prescribed by section 261 of the Penal Code, defining the crime of rape, where a person is prosecuted and convicted under said Code section for the crime of statutory rape—that is, for having sexual intercourse with a female under the age of 18 years, a minor under the juvenile court law as well as under section 261 of the Penal Code.

Nor can such a contention be sustained with respect to the effect of section 28 of the juvenile court law upon section 288 of the Penal Code. Section 28 of the juvenile court law does not repeal section 288 of the Code by express language, and we find nothing in its language, either when considered alone or in connection with other provisions of the law to which it belongs, which would justify the conclusion that it does so by implication or thus affects the penalty prescribed by the Code section for the distinctive crime by said section defined. In other words, the question here is one of legislative intent, and we perceive nothing in the language of section 28 of the juvenile court law, or in that of any other section of said law, from which it is to be inferred that the Legislature intended by said section or by the act of which it is a part to expunge section 288 of the Penal Code or to repeal the penal clause thereof, and this is what the argument of counsel, if sustained, would bring about. The two acts—section 288 of the Penal Code and the juvenile court law, even with its section 28—can consistently stand together, and when this can be said of two different legislative acts having, in a remote way, some relation to each other as to the general subject-matter thereof, then there is no such repugnancy between them as will amount to or operate as a repeal by implication of the earlier act.

[12] 7. The final point urged by appellant is that the court was without jurisdiction to inflict a greater punishment for the violation of section 288 than that of 5 years. The penalty fixed by section 288 of the Penal Code is, as will be observed, imprisonment "in the state prison not less than one year"; no maximum penalty being thereby expressly prescribed. Section 671 of said Code reads:

> "Whenever any person is declared punishable for a crime by imprisonment in the state [prison] for a term not less than any specified number of years, and no limit to the duration of such imprisonment is declared, the court authorized to pronounce judgment upon such conviction may, in its discretion, sentence such offender to imprisonment during his natural life, or for any number of years not less than that prescribed."

The last-named section is obviously a complete answer to the contention of the appellant that the court was without authority to make the penalty in this case greater than that of imprisonment for 5 years. Counsel insists, however, that section 671 has no application to section 288, but that the maximum punishment under the latter section is fixed by section 18 of said Code, which provides:

> "Except in cases where a different punishment is prescribed by this Code, every offense declared to be a felony is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not exceeding five years."

We are unable to see the force of the argument. Sections 288 and 671 must be read together to ascertain the maximum and the minimum penalties in cases arising under the first named section. The two together fix the lowest and the highest limits within which the court was authorized to exercise its discretion as to the punishment. Thus the case here comes within the exception made by section 18; this being as clearly a case "where a different punishment is prescribed" as though both the maximum and minimum penalties were expressly declared in section 288 of the Code.

We have now as fully as we have conceived necessary noticed all the general points made by the appellant. We have not discussed the points, though, from all the angles of the argument advanced in support of the appeal, or strictly followed the varying ramifications thereof. We have satisfied ourselves, however, that there is no substantial merit in any of the points presented, although they have been ingeniously and with as much force as untenable legal problems may be supported pressed upon us in the briefs.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

SARTER v. SISKIYOU COUNTY.

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 4, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 2, 1919.)

1. COUNTIES 🔑74(5) — COMPENSATION OF COUNTY SURVEYOR CANNOT BE INCREASED DURING TERM OF OFFICE.

Pol. Code, §§ 4258, subd. 12, 4044, 4290, relating to compensation of county surveyors, must be strictly construed, the fees and compensation of public officers being a matter of statutory origin and right which cannot be increased during the term for which the officer was elected, in view of Const. art. 11, § 9.

2. OFFICERS 🔑100(2)—PROVISION AGAINST INCREASE OF SURVEYOR'S COMPENSATION DURING TERM APPLIES TO COUNTIES OF TWENTY-NINTH CLASS.

The provision of Const. art. 11, § 9, that compensation allowed by law to county officers cannot be increased during the term for which he was elected, applies as well to a county surveyor of a county of the twenty-ninth class whose compensation consists of fees or salary per diem for work done as to those whose compensation consists of specified salaries.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑63(3)—POWER OF SUPERVISORS TO DETERMINE COMPENSATION OF OFFICERS UNAUTHORIZED BY CONSTITUTION.

The Legislature alone is authorized by the Constitution to fix the compensation of officers, and any attempted delegation of that power to the board of supervisors is of no force or effect.

4. OFFICERS 🔑96—COMPENSATION OF OFFICER AND DEPUTY FIXED BY STATUTE.

A statutory provision that a certain duty shall be performed by a specified officer means that such officer, and no other person, is chargeable with the performance of such duty, and when performed by the officer or by his authorized deputy the law regards the duty as performed by the officer, and a statutory provision for full per diem compensation of such public officer fixes the amount to be paid, regardless of who actually performs the service.

5. COUNTIES 🔑74(6) — COMPENSATION OF COUNTY SURVEYOR AND DEPUTIES FIXED BY STATUTE CANNOT BE CHANGED DURING TERM.

Neither Pol. Code, § 4044, nor § 4290, nor any other statute, makes any provision for the payment of deputy county surveyors in the counties of the twenty-ninth class, and the board of supervisors are limited to the $10 per day allowable to the county surveyor, and cannot pay him or his deputies any additional amount for such day, in view of Const. art. 11, § 9, providing county officers' compensation cannot be increased during the term for which elected.

6. COUNTIES 🔑74(6)—SURVEYOR'S COMPENSATION FOR SERVICES COVERS OFFICE EXPENSES.

A county surveyor of a county of the twenty-ninth class cannot demand the payment of $6 or $10 per diem for services performed by any of his deputies upon the theory that such per diem constitutes the expense necessary for conducting the duties of his office as the law requires, the services of his office being limited to a per diem compensation of $10, allowed the county surveyor by Pol. Code, § 4044.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; James F. Lodge, Judge.

Action by Harvey J. Sarter against Siskiyou County. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Taylor & Tebbe, of Yreka, for appellant.

James M. Allen, of Yreka, for respondent.

HART, J. Plaintiff, who is the county surveyor of Siskiyou county, brought the action to recover $1,222 for labor and services alleged to have been performed by him as such county surveyor. The case was tried by the court upon an agreed statement of facts. Judgment was rendered in favor of defendant for its costs, from which judgment plaintiff appeals.

From the agreed statement of facts, which the court adopted as its findings, the following appears: (1) That defendant is a county of the twenty-ninth class. (2) That plaintiff, at all times mentioned in the statement, was the duly elected, qualified, and acting county surveyor of Siskiyou county. (3) "That plaintiff as such county surveyor performed work and labor for defendant during the years 1915 and 1916 as follows." Then follows an enumeration of certain dates in the months of August, September, October, and November, 1915, and March, April, May, June, July, August, and September, 1916, aggregating 184 days. That plaintiff presented a bill to the board of supervisors at the rate of $10 per day for said 184 days, which bill was duly allowed and paid, "but plaintiff refused to accept such payment as payment in full." (4) "That plaintiff as such county surveyor, in person and by duly authorized deputy, performed work and labor for defendant at other places in said county than the work mentioned in paragraph 3 of this statement, which work was performed on the same days as work mentioned in said paragraph 3, and bill was presented for said work as follows." Certain dates were mentioned which were the same as some of those for which plaintiff was allowed $1,840, "totaling 157½ days' work for which plaintiff presented his bill at the rate of $6 per day, which bill was finally rejected by the board of supervisors" in December, 1916, and has not been paid. (5) "That plaintiff as such county surveyor, in person or by duly appointed and authorized deputy, performed work and labor for defendant at other places in said county than the work mentioned in paragraphs 3 and 4 of this statement, which work was performed on the following dates." The dates mentioned were the same as some of those for which plaintiff received the $1,840, and totaled 38 days, for which plaintiff presented a bill at the rate of $10 per day, which was disallowed by the board of supervisors. (6) That all of the work mentioned in paragraphs 3, 4, and 5 was ordered and directed to be done by the board of supervisors, "and was all such work as is required by law to be done by the office of the county surveyor, and it was his legal duty to perform all such work, either in person or by deputy, and it was all work of such nature as could be legally performed by the county surveyor or his deputy. That in order to perform all of said work as directed by defendant and its board of supervisors it was necessary to have much of it performed by deputy." The presentation of the bills to the board of supervisors was then set out, and it was stated "that the board of supervisors of said county, defendant, are ready and willing to allow the county surveyor of said county, plaintiff, $10 per day for all work performed for the county."

[1] As illustrative of the point in dispute, plaintiff was paid $10 for his services rendered on April 12, 1916. He also presented a bill for $6 and another bill for $10 for further services on said day, which, if allowed, would made his compensation for that one day $26. It is appellant's contention that, as he and two deputies performed services on that day, he should receive $26 therefor, while respondent claims that $10 was the full compensation which he could receive under the law.

Subdivision 12 of section 4258 of the Political Code (which section specifies what salaries shall be paid to officers in counties of the twenty-ninth class) reads as follows:

> "The county surveyor, such fees as are now or may hereafter be allowed by law; provided, he shall be given all work for the county in which the county employs a surveyor or civil engineer; and provided, further, that it shall be the duty of the board of supervisors of counties of this class to so employ him."

Section 4044 of the Political Code, enacted in 1907, provides:

> "* * * In lieu of fees, as now provided by law, the surveyor shall receive such compensation as the board of supervisors may allow, not to exceed ten dollars per day for all work performed for the county, and in addition thereto, all necessary expenses and transportation on work performed in the field."

Section 4290 of the same Code provides:

> "The salaries and fees provided in this title shall be in full compensation for all services of every kind and description rendered by the officers named in this title either as officers or ex officio officers, their deputies and assistants, unless in this title otherwise provided, and all deputies employed shall be paid by their principals out of the salaries provided in this title, unless in this title otherwise provided. * * *"

> "Acts relating to the fees and compensation of public officers are strictly construed, and such officers are only entitled to what is clearly given them by law." Lewis' Sutherland on Statutory Construction, § 714; County of San Diego v. Bryan, 18 Cal. App. 460, 123 Pac. 347; City of Corona v. Merriam, 20 Cal. App. 231, 128 Pac. 769; Irwin v. County of Yuba, 119 Cal. 686, 690, 52 Pac. 35; State v. Wofford, 116 Mo. 220, 22 S. W. 486.

The reason upon which this rule rests is that the right of a public officer to be compensated for his services as such is a statutory right or of statutory origin. A public officer, therefore, can receive for his services as such only such compensation as the legislative body competent under the Constitution to prescribe the salaries or compensation of such officers shall or may fix, and when this is done, neither the courts, in any case, nor the board of supervisors, in the case of any county officer, has the power or the right to increase the compensation so fixed (Dougherty v. Austin, 94 Cal. 601, 28 Pac. 834, 29 Pac. 1092, 16 L. R. A. 161); and it is well settled in this state that the compensation allowed by law to a county officer cannot be increased during the term for which he has been elected. Article 11, § 9, Const.; Dougherty v. Austin, 94 Cal. 603, 28 Pac. 834, 29 Pac. 1092, 16 L. R. A. 161, and other cases cited in McFadden v. Borden, 28 Cal. App. 471, 152 Pac. 977.

[2] Nor can it be doubted that the constitutional provision just mentioned applies as well to those county officers whose compensation consists of fees as to those whose compensation consists of specified salaries. Martin v. Santa Barbara, 105 Cal. 213, 38 Pac. 687. Section 9 of article 6 of the Constitution does not say that the salaries of county officers shall not be increased during the term for which they are elected, but that the compensation of such officers shall not be so increased. No one would seriously contend that the payment by the day of a person for services rendered is any less a compensation for the services than a salary or a definite sum per month or year would be.

[3] It has also been held by our Supreme Court that the Legislature alone is authorized under the Constitution to fix the compensation of county officers, and that any attempted delegation of that power to boards of supervisors is wholly nugatory and of no force or effect. Dougherty v. Austin, supra.

As we have pointed out above, and, indeed, as the appellant himself claims is his right, the surveyor could, if his construction of the compensation clause of section 4044 of the Political Code be sound, put a number of deputies appointed by him to work and claim and receive for each deputy $6, or, as he did in the case of one deputy in this instance, even $10, per diem for every day they are employed in county work coming within the duties of the county surveyor. In fact, if his construction of said section is correct, he could do this even where the deputies were assisting him in one particular piece of work for the county. We do not think the Legislature, by the section of the Code referred to, intended or contemplated any such a situation. In other words, our opinion is that section 4044 of the Political Code is not justly or reasonably susceptible of such a construction.

The deputy of a public officer, when exercising the functions or performing the duties cast by law upon such officer, is acting for his principal or the officer himself. The deputy's official acts are always those of the officer. He merely takes the place of the principal in the discharge of duties appertaining to the office. When, therefore, the law provides that it shall be the duty of a certain public officer to do or perform certain public official acts, the deputy of such officer, if there be one, is necessarily included within the terms of the provision. If the law provides that an official act shall be performed in a particular way, it is no less the duty of a deputy to do the act in the manner so prescribed than it is that of the officer himself. In brief, a deputy under a public officer and the officer or person holding the office are, in contemplation of law and in an official sense, one and the same person. As stated, the deputy acts for and in the place of the principal, and his (the deputy's) acts are therefore not his, but those of the holder or incumbent of the office. When the holder of a public office dies or resigns, the authority of his deputy ipso facto ceases upon the happening of either event. It is true, therefore, that when the law says that certain duties shall be performed by a certain specified public officer it is meant that such officer and no other person is charged with the performance of such duties, and, when performed, whether personally by the officer himself or by an authorized deputy under him as such officer, the law regards such duties as having been performed by the officer upon whom it has expressly placed that burden, and not by a deputy in the office. It logically follows, then, that where the statute provides, as is the case here, for the compensation of a public officer, and further provides that such compensation shall be in full payment for all services of any kind and description rendered by such officer as such, there can be no other meaning to such statute than that the compensation so provided for shall be in full for all services required to be rendered by such officer, regardless of who actually performs the services—whether the officer himself or an authorized deputy appointed to assist him in the performance of the duties of the office, and it also follows that, where there is no law providing compensation to be paid to a deputy under a public officer out of the public treasury, such deputy is not entitled to and cannot legally claim compensation to be so paid, nor can his principal claim the right to be paid compensation for such deputy. Neither section 4044 of the Political Code nor, so far as we are advised, any other Code section or statute, contains any express provision or authority for the payment of compensation to a deputy or to deputies in the office of the county surveyor of Siskiyou county. The section named merely provides, as stated, for the compensation of the surveyor himself, and section 4290 of said Code plainly and unambiguously declares that the compensation so authorized shall be in full for all services of any kind and description rendered by the surveyor. We must hold that these sections mean precisely what their very plain and unambiguous language clearly implies. To hold otherwise, or as appellant construes section 4044, would compel us to import into said section language or a provision which it does not contain, or, under a fair and reasonable view thereof, it does not contemplate. Moreover, construed as appellant views its language, said section would violate the provisions of article 11, § 9, of the Constitution, in that it would result in increasing the compensation of the surveyor during the term for which he was elected. As above pointed out, even the Legislature itself has no power to do this, and in no event could the supervisors legally do such an act, even if the Legislature were to attempt to confer upon them such power. Dougherty v. Austin, supra. An act which the Constitution says cannot be done directly, obviously cannot be done indirectly, and therefore the position of the appellant that he, and not his deputies, is entitled to compensation to be paid by the county for services rendered the county by such deputies involves, if by such means the deputies are to be compensated, a proposition sanctioning the doing of an act by indirection which the Constitution plainly declares cannot be done directly; and if, on the other hand, the position is that the surveyor himself is entitled to receive more compensation than the maximum amount to which he may, by authority of law and the action of the supervisors, be entitled, then, as already shown, it would involve a proposition diametrically opposed to the mandate of the Constitution that the compensation of a county officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office.

It would hardly seem necessary to cite cases to support the above construction of section 4044 of the Political Code, nor do we intend to do so at length herein, but the Indiana case of State ex rel. Holman v. Roach, Auditor, 123 Ind. 167, 24 N. E. 106, so closely resembles the instant case in its facts that we feel that no apology should be required for reproducing herein certain observations from the opinion therein which, it will readily be noted, have cogent application to several of the features of this case. Indeed, strange as the coincidence may appear, that case was one in which a county surveyor made precisely the same claim that appellant here makes, viz. that, under a statute in all respects similar to our section 4044 of the Political Code, he was entitled to receive or to be paid from the public treasury a certain specified per diem for each of his deputies, notwithstanding that there was no provision of law expressly or otherwise authorizing the payment of compensation to deputies in the office of the county surveyor from public funds. The court, in that case, after laying down and buttressing by innumerable authorities the elementary rule that, "where a public officer claims a compensation for official services, he must show either a statute authorizing such compensation, or a contract with some one who has the authority to bind the county," said:

> "It follows that, as there is no statute fixing any compensation to be paid deputy surveyors for services rendered to the county, or to any one else, the county cannot be required to pay for such services. It is believed to be the universal rule that, where the law fixes no compensation for deputies, they must be paid by the officer who employs them, and not out of the public treasury. To hold that a county surveyor could perform the work required of him under this statute by deputy, and charge the per diem fixed by law for each day such deputy served, would be to open the door to the grossest frauds. It would allow the surveyor to employ persons less skillful and competent than himself, at a small compensation, and thus speculate upon the public. If he employed five deputies in one day at $1.50 each, and charged $3 for his own services, he would receive a per diem of $10.50, instead of $3, as the law provides. We do not think this law should receive the construction contended for by the relator."

[6] Nor can the surveyor demand the payment of $6 or $10 per diem for services performed by each or any of his deputies upon the theory that such per diem constitutes the expenses necessary for conducting the duties of his office as the law requires. While not a question necessary to be decided here, we may venture the opinion that the surveyors of counties of the class to which Siskiyou is assigned under the legislative classification of counties are entitled to be reimbursed by the counties for any necessary and legitimate expenses incurred in the discharge of their official duties. But we do not understand that appellant claims such per diem for his deputies as expenses necessarily incurred in the performance of the duties of his office. His position is, as above stated and considered, that the per diem he claims for each of his deputies is compensation for services rendered by him as surveyor through or by such deputies, a proposition which, as we have shown, is clearly untenable.

We have carefully examined the brief of appellant, but we have not thus been convinced that the argument therein advanced sustains his position, or that the cases he cites are in point here. It may be true, as counsel suggest, that the compensation allowed the surveyor by section 4044 is wholly inadequate in proportion to the duties required to be rendered by him, but this fact, if it be one, cannot be made a just basis for a construction of said Code section contrary to the plain language of the statute and the manifest intent of the Legislature.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

WITHERS v. BOUSFIELD et al.
(Civ. 2859.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 21, 1919. Amended Aug. 8, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 18, 1919.)

1. Vendor and Purchaser ⚷50—Deed to Third Party and Triparty Agreement as to Sales, One Contract.

Where vendors executed grant, bargain, and sale deed to third parties and entered into a triparty agreement with purchaser and third parties, whereby third parties agreed to sell or execute contract for sale of small tracts of the land conveyed upon purchaser's demand, and deposit certain per cent. of proceeds in a bank to vendors' credit, the deed and triparty agreement should be considered as parts of one contract.

2. Mortgages ⚷1—Conveyance to Third Parties, a Deed of Trust Securing Price.

Transaction between vendors, purchaser, and third parties, whereby third parties to whom vendors conveyed land agreed to sell separate tracts of the land upon purchaser's demand and deposit certain per cent. of proceeds in a bank to vendors' credit, was in effect a deed of trust to secure payment of purchase price; the third parties being trustees.

3. Guaranty ⚷35—Of Price Not Affected by Infirmities in Trust Securing Payment.

The liability of guarantors of payment of purchase-money note was not affected by any infirmity in a trust to convey created to secure payment of purchase price; the guarantors being liable on independent contract of guaranty, and not being parties to the trust.

4. Mortgages 🔑82 — Main Scheme of Trust to Convey Land Not Affected by Partial Invalidity.

Where vendors, to secure payment of purchase price, conveyed land to third parties under third parties' agreement to sell tracts thereof upon purchasers' demand and deposit certain per cent. of proceeds in bank to vendors' credit, a provision of the trust so created, authorizing third parties to convey to purchasers upon completion of trust, even though invalid under Civ. Code, §§ 847, 857, would not affect the valid provisions of the trust, since the invalidity would not interfere with main scheme.

5. Mortgages 🔑27—Triparty Agreement Invalid as Trust Enforceable as Equitable Mortgage.

Triparty agreement between vendors, purchasers, and third parties, whereby vendors conveyed the land to third parties to secure payment of purchase money under third parties' agreement to sell separate tracts of the land upon purchasers' demand, deposit certain per cent. of proceeds in bank to vendors' credit, and convey land to purchasers upon discharge of indebtedness and payment of expenses, if invalid as a trust under Civ. Code, § 857, will be given effect as an equitable mortgage.

6. Trusts 🔑136 — Triparty Agreement Where Third Party Taking Title was to Sell Land, Not Dry Trust.

Triparty agreement, whereby vendors conveyed land to third parties to secure payment of purchase price and whereby third parties agreed to sell separate tracts of land on purchasers' demand and apply certain per cent. of proceeds to payment of purchase money, and interest in outstanding contracts and remaining portion of land to purchasers when vendors shall have received payment in full of purchase price held not a dry and passive trust.

7. Perpetuities 🔑6(10)—Triparty Agreement Conveying Land in Trust Not Invalid.

Triparty agreement, whereby vendors conveyed land to third parties to secure payment of purchase price and whereby third parties agreed to sell separate tracts of land upon purchasers' demand and apply certain per cent. of proceeds to discharge of purchase-money indebtedness and convey interest in outstanding contracts and remaining portion of land to purchasers upon payment to vendors of purchase price, did not suspend power of alienation beyond period of lives in being under Civ. Code, § 715, since purchasers could at any time secure conveyance.

8. Trusts 🔑11(2) — Re-Execution of Trust to Convey After Amendment of Statute, Valid.

Even if a trust to convey was invalid under Civ. Code, § 857, a later contract, re-executing the original transaction subsequent to the taking effect of the amendment of 1913 (St. 1913, p. 438) to such statute, authorizing trusts to convey, was valid and enforceable.

9. Vendor and Purchaser 🔑180 — Note by Purchaser Deposited with Third Parties, Purchase Money, and Not Penalty.

Note from purchaser to vendors, deposited with third parties to whom vendors had conveyed the land to secure payment of purchase money, held, in view of triparty agreement and the deed, and in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 2, a note for the purchase price, and not merely a penalty deposited with third parties as trustees.

10. Guaranty 🔑21—Guarantors of Purchaser's Note Estopped to Deny It was Evidence of Price.

Guarantors of purchaser's note to vendors, by consenting to and requesting ratification agreement ratifying original agreement between purchaser and vendors referring to note as representing purchase money, were estopped from claiming the note to be a penalty, and not evidence of the purchase price.

11. Guaranty 🔑1, 45, 46 — Nature and Enforcement of.

A guaranty is a promise to answer for the debt of another, and may be enforced upon default of the principal without any previous demand or notice.

12. Guaranty 🔑70—Delay in Enforcing Purchase-Money Note No Defense to Guarantors.

In action against guarantors of payment of purchase-money note, mere delay by vendors in proceeding against purchaser was no defense.

13. Guaranty 🔑34—No Privity Between Principal Debtor and Guarantors.

There is no privity or mutuality or joint liability between the principal debtor and guarantors who by independent contract have guaranteed payment of debt.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; W. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by W. S. Withers against Robert E. Bousfield, Jennie E. Bousfield, and others Judgment for plaintiff, and named defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Byrne & Lamson, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Robert B. Gaylord, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. Plaintiff brought this suit upon a contract guaranteeing the payment of a certain promissory note for $150,000, executed February 21, 1913, by Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, payable on demand to the plaintiff or order. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff, and defendants Robert S. Bousfield and Jennie E. Bousfield alone appeal. The corporation maker of the note was not made a party.

On the 21st day of February, 1913, plaintiff and the Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated a corporation, entered into a contract whereby plaintiff sold and the corporation bought that certain real property located in the county of Contra Costa, known as Brook-Wood Acres, the purchase price being the sum of $150,000, together with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, from October 31, 1913, until paid. Concurrently with the execution of the contract, and as a part of the transaction, Withers and his wife executed and delivered to L. G. Burpee and E. N. Walter, as joint tenants, and not as tenants in common, and to the survivors of them, their heirs and assigns, a grant, bargain, and sale, deed of the property. Burpee and Walters, in writing attached to the agreement of sale, accepted the conveyance of the premises under the deed, so executed, and consented to hold the title under such deed, and accepted such title under, and subject to, and pursuant to, the terms of the entire agreement; it being the purpose of the parties that Burpee and Walter should, upon demand of the corporation, execute contracts for the sale of, or sell for cash, various portions of the Brook-Wood Acres tract at the prices and upon the terms in the contract of sale specified.

Under the terms of the agreement, 80 per cent. of the selling price of the various parcels of land, as sold, and all moneys otherwise paid to Burpee and Walter under the contract, were by them to be forthwith deposited in bank to the credit of plaintiff, the vendor of the whole tract under the contract of sale, and all such moneys were payable to him upon demand, excepting that Burpee and Walter could retain from the final payment, made by any purchaser, sufficient money to release the parcel purchased from the lien of two mortgages covering the entire tract, and which were provided for in the agreement. The remaining 20 per cent. of the purchase price belonged to the Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, the buyer of the whole tract under the contract of sale.

By its terms the agreement declared that it was intended to, and did, secure the payment by the corporation to plaintiff of the selling price of Brook-Wood Acres, with interest, and all moneys which might be, or become, payable to him under the agreement, including any advances made by him in connection with the improvement or sale of the property, with interest thereon, and was also intended to secure the payment to Burpee and Walter of their charges and expenses, and all moneys, with interest thereon, advanced by them for the payment of expenses under the agreement, all of which expenses and charges were to be paid by the corporation.

After providing with particularity the conditions under which the corporation should be deemed in default under the agreement, such as failure to sell portions of the tract at selling prices aggregating certain specified sums, and amounting to a certain designated number of acres, by dates specified, and failure to pay to Burpee and Walter, either through payments by purchasers under contracts of sale, or by direct payments made by the corporation, the agreement recites the giving, by the corporation to plaintiff, and its deposit with Burpee and Walter, of a certain promissory note, for the sum of $150,000, representing the purchase price to be paid for the tract of land, the payment of which note, the agreement further recites, "has been guaranteed jointly and severally by Robert E. Bousfield, Jennie P. Bousfield, I. M. Ver Mehr, Irene Lee Ver Mehr, W. G. Dodge, Leonie M. Dodge, F. C. Mills, and Mabel Corse Mills, but which guaranty is conditioned that the liability of said guarantors under said guaranty or any of them, respectively, shall not exceed the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars ($25,000.00); it being the purpose of said guaranty that not more than $25,000.00 shall be collected by said first party (plaintiff) under the same."

Concurrently, also, with the execution of the agreement of sale, the Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, executed to plaintiff, and deposited with Burpee and Walter, its promissory note for the principal sum of $150,000, representing the purchase price to be paid Withers for the land. The note contained the following paragraph:

> "Payment of this note is secured by a certain agreement of even date herewith entered into between Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, and with W. S. Withers, relating to the sale by W. S. Withers to Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, of certain real property of W. S. Withers in Contra Costa County, California, known as Brook-Wood Acres. The personal liability of Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, under this note aside from the security above mentioned, or after realizing upon such security, shall not exceed and is hereby limited to the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars ($25,000)."

The note was executed for the corporation by its president and secretary, and the seal of the corporation attached. It was signed by each of the defendants, who each in turn acknowledged and signed, before a notary public, a joint and several guaranty of payment of the note, waiving presentation, demand, notice of nonpayment, and protest. The liability of the guarantors was, by the terms of the instrument, limited to the sum of $25,000.

In the event of any default upon the part of the corporation, so the agreement provides, but apparently not before, Burpee and Walter are to deliver the note to plaintiff on demand, after indorsing, as payments thereon, all moneys received by them for the account of plaintiff, on the purchase price of Brook-Wood Acres, including any payments on account of interest, and certain other credits which are specified. At any time on, or after, the delivery of the note to plaintiff, or in the event of any default upon the part of the corporation in the payment of the note according to its terms, upon demand of plaintiff Burpee and Walter are, by the agreement, required to sell all portions of Brook-Wood Acres not theretofore conveyed by them, or such portions as in their discretion they may find it necessary, to make the payments thereafter provided in the agreement, and to make the sale in the manner therein fully and with particularity described. Suffice it to say that the procedure for making these sales is similar to, if not exactly like that provided in the various forms of trust deeds, so universally used, and so long upheld by the courts of last resort of this and other states, as being a legal method for the sale of property conveyed to trustees as security for the payment of an existing indebtedness. Sacramento Bank v. Alcorn, 121 Cal. 379, 53 Pac. 813; Balfour-Guthrie Co. v. Woodworth, 124 Cal. 169–174, 56 Pac. 891; Younger v. Moore, 155 Cal. 767–771, 103 Pac. 221.

[1, 2] The grant, bargain and sale deed of Brook-Wood Acres, executed by plaintiff and wife to Burpee and Walter, and the triparty agreement, executed by plaintiff as first party, the corporation, Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, the second party, and Burpee and Walter as the third parties, were intended to be effective, and must be considered and regarded, as parts of one contract. Younger v. Moore, supra; San Diego Construction Co. v. Mannix, 175 Cal. 548, 166 Pac. 325. So construed, the transaction between the parties loses its complexity, and amounts to nothing more nor less than the execution by the corporation to plaintiff of an ordinary deed of trust, to secure the payment of the note for $150,000, given as the purchase price of Brook-Wood Acres, the payment of the note being further secured to the extent of their limited liability, by the contract of guaranty executed by the guarantors, who are the defendants in this action. While Burpee and Walter are not referred to in the transaction as trustees they were in fact such.

[3] Because the trust agreement provides that upon payment to plaintiff of the entire selling price, with interest, and all other indebtedness of the maker of the note, connected with the sale of the tract—in short, upon full performance of the terms of the agreement—the trustees shall convey to Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, all unsold portions of Brook-Wood Acres, and all portions sold but for which deeds have not issued, and, likewise, were, in the event of a failure of title at the inception of the deal, to reconvey the property to plaintiff, the appellants contend that the trust is void, under sections 847 and 857 of the Civil Code. They rely upon Estate of Fair, 132 Cal. 525, 60 Pac. 442, 64 Pac. 1000, 84 Am. St. Rep. 70; Id., 136 Cal. 79, 68 Pac. 306, as authority to the effect that a trust to convey is void, and that the statute concerning trusts was a legislative pronouncement of the public policy of the state. Invoking the rule that courts will not directly enforce any obligation arising out of a contract illegal by reason of being against public policy, by carrying it into effect, or indirectly by awarding damages, or compensation, for a breach of it, appellants first seek to avoid the liability of their contract of guaranty by an assertion of the infirmity of the trust. We fail to see any right resting in the appellants to attack the trust, if any of the alleged weaknesses therein exist. The guarantors became liable, on default of the corporation to pay its note, to the extent of their independent contract of guaranty. They were not parties to the trust in any manner. Kinsel v. Ballou, 151 Cal. 754, 761, 91 Pac. 620. They had no interest in the real property involved in, or in the outcome of, that transaction, other than to expect that whatever sums were realized from the sales of the property, either to purchasers or at trustees' sales, on default made by the maker of the note, would be applied in reduction of the amount due on the note.

[5] For another reason appellants' attack on the transaction resulting in the trust should not be allowed to prevail. As before pointed out, the deed of February 21, 1913, from plaintiff and wife to Burpee and Walter, and the trust agreement of the same date between the same parties, and accepted by Burpee and Walter, must be considered as parts of a single transaction, and so construed. Primarily, the trust expressed was intended solely by way of security for the indebtedness of Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, with interest, expenses of protecting the property, and compensation of the trustees. If, as is urged, the resulting trust was invalid, as being for some purpose not authorized by section 857 of the Civil Code, defining the purposes for which express trusts in relation to real property may be created, and we were thereby compelled to hold it was not a valid deed of trust, the rights of the parties could be preserved by holding the instruments to constitute an equitable mortgage (Younger v. Moore, supra), with power of sale as part of the security and an incident or appurtenance of the mortgage lien (Faxon v. All Persons, 166 Cal. 707, 716, 137 Pac. 919, L. R. A. 1916B, 1209). "No policy of the law is violated by treating this instrument as creating a lien in the nature of a mortgage, if it cannot be upheld as a deed of trust." Earle v. Sunnyside Land Co., 150 Cal. 214, 228, 88 Pac. 920, 925.

[6] Appellants urge a further objection that the trust in the present case is but a dry and passive trust. They are mistaken. The agreement declares that it is intended to secure, and shall secure, the payment by the purchaser to the seller of his selling price of the property, with interest, and all other moneys which may become due or payable under the contract. The trustees are given various active duties to perform in the execution of the trust. These are: Upon failure of title of Brook-Wood Acres to reconvey the premises to plaintiff; upon demand of the corporation (provided it was not in default) to enter into contracts for the sale of, or sell for cash, various portions of the tract at the prices, and upon the terms in the contract specified; to receive the selling price therefor and apply the same on the purchase price of the entire tract; to approve the form of sales contracts agreed to by the other parties to the agreement; upon performance by any purchaser of his contract to convey to him the subdivision so purchased by him; to execute upon request of Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, such maps for recordation as might be from time to time approved by the other parties to the contract; in the event of any default by Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, to deliver the note of the corporation to Withers, after having indorsed as payments thereon all moneys received by them on the purchase price of the tract; at any time after delivery of the note, or any default of the corporation, upon demand of Withers to sell all unsold portions of the tract, at public auction, in the manner set forth in the agreement, and apply the proceeds of such sale, as directed therein; to assign to Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, any unsold outstanding contracts of sale upon payment to Withers, or themselves, of all moneys due; and upon payment of all the purchase price of the tract, and all moneys due under the agreement, to convey the remaining portions of Brook-Wood Acres to the corporation.[1]

[7] Another contention of the appellants is that the trust, if otherwise valid, provided for a suspension of the absolute power of alienation beyond the period of lives in being. Section 715, Civ. Code. "The power of alienation is not suspended when all the parties in interest, including the trustee and the beneficiary, can join in a conveyance and transfer a legal title."

In the present case there was no suspension of the power of alienation, since Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, "could at any time, by paying the indebtedness to the plaintiff, receive a reconveyance of the property, or, by uniting with the trustees and" plaintiff execute a conveyance to a purchaser. Balfour, Guthrie Co. v. Woodworth, supra; Blakeman v. Miller, 136 Cal. 138, 141, 68 Pac. 587, 89 Am. St. Rep. 120; Toland v. Toland, 123 Cal. 140, 141, 142, 55 Pac. 681.

Respondent makes a timely suggestion in opposition to the right of appellants to assert the alleged invalidity of the trust. Section 857 of the Civil Code was amended at the session of the Legislature in 1913 (St. 1913, p. 438) by including, among authorized trusts in real property, a trust to convey. Long after this amendment became effective, to wit, on December 15, 1914, in connection with certain extensions of time and other modifications of the contract, plaintiff and Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, executed a document in which they re-executed the original contract of February 21, 1913, as modified in the documents of later date, and each respectively agreed to perform the provisions of the original instrument.

This agreement, after reciting the due execution of the original contract of February 21, 1913, the modification thereof under dates of July 15, 1913, and December 30, 1913, and the taking of contracts, under the provisions of the main contract for the purchase of various portions of Brook-Wood Acres, contains the following clause: "Now, therefore, this agreement, witnesseth: That the said main contract and the terms and provisions thereof shall be and are hereby modified as hereinafter set forth, but not otherwise, and each party hereto upon his part agrees to perform the terms and provisions of this agreement and of said main contract and modifying agreements as modified by this agreement, and in that behalf, it is hereby by the parties hereto agreed as follows, to wit." Then follow the modifications referred to, which, among others, constitute an extension of time of the making of various payments and which constitute a change in regard to acreage required to be sold to subdivision purchasers. The agreement, in addition to many apt references to the "main contract," contains this clause, "except as herein expressly stipulated all of the provisions of said main contract and said modifying agreements shall stand and that any and all terms and provisions thereof not in conflict with the terms of this agreement shall continue in force; to the end that the said main contract and modifying agreements shall continue in force as written, except as expressly modified by the terms of this agreement, and that all and singular the terms and provisions of said main contract shall apply and continue in force as if the modifying terms herein set forth had been originally contained in said main contract and modifying agreements." [1] This sentence added by amendment dated August 8, 1919.

[8] At the same time, and as a part of the same transaction, six of the guarantors, including the present appellants, signed a waiver of the $25,000 limitation upon their liability as guarantors, and jointly and severally guaranteed full payment of the note for $150,000. Whether the original trust agreement was valid or invalid by reason of the prohibition of the statute, the later contract re-executing the original transaction was valid and enforceable (Burleson v. Burleson, 11 Tex. 2), and the appellants guaranteed the payment of the note which it provided for.

After the making of the contract of sale, on July 15, 1913, the Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, being in default in the aggregate amount of its sales, as required by the agreement, Withers, by separate agreement, executed by himself and the corporation, waived the default and extended the time until January 1, 1914, for procuring selling contracts aggregating $50,000, making sales aggregating 200 acres of land and paying the aggregate sum of $2,500. The new agreement was conditioned that no other condition of the contract of sale should be waived, and that the time for performance of any other provision of the contract should not be extended or affected; also, that this new agreement should only become effective when consent to the execution thereof was executed by all the guarantors of the note executed and referred to in the first agreement. Pursuant to this requirement, each of the defendants signed an instrument, which was annexed to and made part of the new agreement, whereby each of them jointly and severally requested and consented to the execution of the agreement and the modifications therein provided, and stipulated that neither the execution of the new agreement nor said modifications should modify or release the liability of any of them under their guaranty of said note; such guaranty being thereby ratified, approved, and confirmed.

Thereafter, on July 29, 1913, another agreement was made and signed by plaintiff Withers as the first party, Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, the second party, and all of the defendants as third parties, wherein, after reciting the agreement of sale, February 21, 1913, and the extension agreement of July 15, 1913, the corporation and the defendants agreed that plaintiff might at any time waive or modify all or any of the provisions of the agreement of sale of February 21, 1913, and that any departure from said agreement by Withers should not in any way waive, release, or modify the liability of the corporation or of the defendants under the promissory note executed and referred to in the agreement of February 21, 1913, or under the guaranty of said note by the defendants.

On December 15, 1914, plaintiff and Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, entered into an agreement in writing, modifying the agreement of the main contract of February 21, 1913, and requiring a balance to be struck as of January 1, 1915, which said balance should constitute the unpaid portion of the purchase price of the land, and providing for the payment thereof. This agreement provided that it should not be binding until the written consent to and request for its execution, annexed thereto, was executed by the guarantors of the note referred to in the main contract. It further provided that the limitation of personal liability of $25,000 of the corporation was waived by it to the end that it became obligated the full amount ot the unpaid purchase price. Concurrent with the execution of this agreement, and as part of the same transaction, each of the guarantors, including the defendants, in writing consented to and requested the execution thereof and in consideration of the agreement they each waived the statute of limitations upon the guaranty of the note to the end that the statute should not begin to run on said guaranty prior to the first of January, 1918.

On the same day, December 15, 1914, each of the defendants other than E. C. Mills and Mabel Corse Mills signed an instrument in writing, by which, after reciting the contract of February 21, 1913, and the guaranty of the note by them, together with the recital of the various extensions, they jointly and severally guaranteed the full payment of the note for $150,000, waiving presentment, demand for payment, notice of nonpayment and protest, it being the declared intention thereof, according to the document, among other things, to guarantee said note unqualifiedly and to waive the $25,000 limitation upon the liability of the guarantors and each of them.

[2] This sentence and the one preceding it were added by amendment made August 8, 1919.

Various contracts had from time to time been made by the parties under the provisions of the agreement of sale, and on the 26th day of January, 1915, plaintiff and Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, agreed that there was due and unpaid from the company to plaintiff, under the agreement and the various contracts, the sum of $130,000.54, together with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. from and beginning with the 15th day of January, 1915, and provided for designated credits upon the happening of certain contingencies.

On February 25, 1915, the Berkeley Bank of Savings & Trust Company was designated by Withers and the Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, as third party to the agreement in place of Burpee and Walter. The latter, by deed, joined in by the wife of each, conveyed the property to the Berkeley Bank of Savings & Trust Company, and delivered the promissory note to the bank.

Further defaults being made by Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, plaintiff brought this action against defendants on April 5, 1915, on their guaranty. No demand was made upon defendants before bringing the action; neither was the property sold by the trustee prior to that time. Pending trial, however, the Berkeley Bank of Savings & Trust Company duly sold the property upon the demand of the plaintiff, under the terms of the agreement of sale. The net proceeds of said sale were the sum of $45,112.35, which sum said plaintiff credited on the note set forth in plaintiff's complaint herein.

Upon the filing of the complaint, the defendants Bousfield, Ver Mehr, and Dodge filed their answers denying any liability under the guaranty, and alleging that there was no consideration for the same. The cross-complaint admitted the execution of the instrument of the 15th day of December, 1914, waiving provisions of the guaranty, limiting their liability thereunder to $25,000, but alleging that the defendants never agreed that said guaranty should be an unrestricted guarantee of the full payment of the note, but that said waiver only guaranteed the deficiency, if any, up to $150,000, which should remain to satisfy the balance of the purchase price of the real property, which was the subject of the agreement of sale, after the same had been sold, and the proceeds divided according to that contract.

By way of cross-complaint, which defendants Bousfield subsequently filed, it was alleged that the instrument of December 15, 1914, by which defendants Bousfield, Dodge, and Ver Mehr, jointly and severally guaranteed the full payment of the note for $150,000, waiving presentment, and unqualifiedly waiving the $25,000 limitation upon the liability of the parties (already referred to) was intended to mean, and its legal consequences were intended to be, that said defendants waived the limitation of $25,000, contained in the guaranty for said note, and that they were to be liable for the deficiency, if any, up to $150,000, which should remain of the said purchase price after the real property, described in the agreement of sale, had been sold, and the proceeds applied according to the terms thereof, but through the mutual mistake of the defendants and the plaintiff, and the Brook-Wood Acres corporation, said instrument failed to express that intention in so many words, and prayed that the instrument be reformed accordingly.

The court found in favor of plaintiff and against the defendants on all points, and, after crediting the net proceeds of the sale of the property made by the substituted trustee, the Berkeley Bank of Savings and Trust Company, of $45,112.35, gave judgment against defendants Mills in the sum of $25,000, and against defendants Bousfield, Ver Mehr, and Dodge in the sum of $58,554.36, together with the sum of $5,000 attorney's fees.

[9] Appellants contend that the main agreement, the contract of February 21, 1913, was not a contract of purchase and sale of real property, and that the note for $150,000 was not a note for the purchase price of the land, but that in reality it was executed and deposited with the trustees as a penalty; that the recital in the preamble of the contract "that the said first party (plaintiff) has sold to the said second party (Brook-Wood Acres Company, Incorporated), and the said second party has bought from the said first party, all upon the terms and conditions, and in the manner hereinafter set forth, and purchase price thereof to be payable as hereinafter set forth, that certain real property," etc., is palpably untrue. This contention cannot be supported by a logical analysis of the note, the deed and the agreement, when read together. In view of the plain and unambiguous statement in the agreement we are satisfied, as a matter of fact, that the note represented the purchase price paid for Brook-Wood Acres.

[10] We prefer to accept the view of respondent that the parties to the contract intended to be, and were, bound by its recitals. Section 1962, subd. 2, Code Civ. Proc. From all the surrounding circumstances attending the transaction, we are led to conclude that no other contract relative to the sale of the land was contemplated, and that the note for the $150,000, was executed by the corporation, and delivered to the trustees, as the evidence of and for the purchase price of the tract. The main agreement of February 21, 1913, in paragraph 29 thereof, refers to the note "for the principal sum of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($150,000.00), representing the purchase price to be paid for said Brook-Wood Acres; the payment of which note has been guaranteed, jointly and severally by" the defendants. Concurrently with the execution of the ratification agreement, of December 15, 1914, and as part of the same transaction, the appellants, and the other guarantors, consented to and requested the execution of the said ratification agreement which by its terms specifically refers to and deals with the note for the $150,000. Appellants, by their own acts, therefore, are estopped from claiming the note to be a penalty, and not evidence of the purchase price for the land. The note is a demand note. Appellant contends that as there is no allegation in the complaint that a previous demand was made on the maker of the note, or that suit had been instituted against it (which would have taken the place of a formal demand), and as there was no proof in support of any such demand or suit, the maker of the note never became liable, and the action against the guarantors was premature.

[11-13] A guaranty is a promise to answer for the debt of another person, and it may be enforced, upon default of the principal, without any previous demand or notice. By its various transitions the contract of guaranty in this case became an absolute undertaking to pay the whole debt of Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, if the company did not, and no mere delay of plaintiff to proceed against the maker of the note, or to enforce any other remedy, can be availed of by the guarantors as a defense. First National Bank v. Babcock, 94 Cal. 96, 104, 29 Pac. 415, 28 Am. St. Rep. 94; Carver v. Steele, 116 Cal. 116, 47 Pac. 1007, 58 Am. St. Rep. 156. This is not an action for the collection of the Brook-Wood Acres, Incorporated, debt as such. It is an action upon an independent contract of the defendants. There is no privity, or mutuality, or joint liability between the principal debtor and its guarantors. Adams v. Wallace, 119 Cal. 67, 71, 51 Pac. 14. Moreover, the defendants, including appellants, made an independent contract upon which they became liable without regard to the sale of the property, under the terms of the trust, as against the principal debtor. Kinsel v. Ballou, 151 Cal. 754, 762, 91 Pac. 620; Adams v. Wallace, supra.

This case presents no different aspect from the foregoing, and numerous other cases, decided by the courts of last resort of this state, in which it has been held that, regardless of the necessity for exhausting the security given, before resorting to the personal liability of the maker of a note, nevertheless an indorser, or guarantor, may be sued upon his personal liability before, and without, such action having been taken.

It was proper for the court to allow the attorney fee included in the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

LISENBEE v. LISENBEE. (Civ. 1983.)

1. DIVORCE ⚿286—IN ABSENCE OF APPEAL FROM DECREE POWER OF COURT OVER HUSBAND'S PROPERTY NOT REVIEWABLE.

In the absence of appeal from the decree in a divorce action, the appellate court, on the husband's appeal from an order appointing receiver of the proceeds of his realty after failure to comply with the terms of the decree in the divorce suit, cannot review the question whether the superior court in a divorce proceeding has jurisdiction to deal with the separate property of the spouses.

2. DIVORCE ⚿267—COURT CAN SELL HUSBAND'S PROPERTY TO MAINTAIN WIFE AFTER DECREE FOR MAINTENANCE.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 136, 140, and in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 671, the court which in her divorce suit had granted a wife a decree for maintenance, did not exceed its jurisdiction, in appointing receiver to take custody of and sell the husband's property to satisfy such decree for maintenance, on any ground that the judgment upon either the community property or the separate property of the husband created a lien which must be foreclosed to become effective.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Action for divorce by Maud Irene Lisenbee against Charles Samuel Lisenbee, wherein plaintiff was awarded a community interest in certain realty, and defendant was ordered to pay a sum per month for her maintenance. From an order appointing receiver to take over and receive from the sheriff all money derived from the sale of the realty of the husband, he appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 181 Pac. 804.

A. H. Carpenter and J. D. Hinkle, both of Stockton, for appellant.

Charles De Legh, of Stockton, for respondent.

HART, J. On the 22d day of May, 1915, the complaint in this action was filed, in which plaintiff prayed for a divorce from defendant, and, among other things, asked that certain property, mentioned in the complaint be declared to be community property. The action went to trial, and the court found that plaintiff was not entitled to a divorce for the reason that there was not sufficient corroboration of the alleged acts of cruelty set forth in the complaint; that the real property mentioned in the complaint was the separate property of defendant, but that plaintiff, having with money earned by her from her work and labor contributed toward the purchase of said property, was entitled to a community interest therein to the value of $1,500; and defendant was ordered to pay for her maintenance the sum of $25 per month, which payments were made a lien on the community interest of the parties.

On the 24th day of November, 1917, the court made a formal order for the issuance of a writ of execution, directed to the sheriff of San Joaquin county, "reciting said judgment and directing the said sheriff to levy upon and sell according to law in such cases the following described real property, or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy said judgment" for maintenance and costs, the real property described in the complaint, and in which, it was found, the plaintiff had a community interest to the extent of $1,500.

The defendant having failed to comply with the terms of the decree requiring him to pay to plaintiff $25 per month, the court on the 14th day of January, 1918, after due proceedings, made an order appointing one R. B. Teefy a receiver in the premises, said order reciting that he "is authorized and empowered to take over and receive from the sheriff of this county any and all money derived from the sale of the real property upon execution in this action in excess of the sum of $500 (now due this plaintiff), and the said R. B. Teefy is also authorized and empowered to take over and hold possession of any real property described in said writ of execution remaining unsold after the satisfaction of such writ."

This appeal is by the defendant from said order appointing receiver.

It is contended: (1) That "the superior court in a divorce proceeding has no jurisdiction to deal with the separate property of the spouses"; (2) that the court exceeded its jurisdiction by appointing a receiver to take custody of and sell the property described in the order appointing the receiver for the purpose of satisfying the judgment for maintenance, costs, etc.

[1] The point first above stated we cannot review on this appeal, since there is here no appeal from the judgment in the divorce action. Indeed, all that the record here contains as to the divorce action itself is the judgment roll therein. The record does not show the evidence upon which the court based its findings in said action. We must therefore presume that there was sufficient evidence to support the findings. While the order from which this appeal is prosecuted grew out of the divorce action and, indeed, involves the granting of an ancillary remedy in aid of the execution of the judgment in said action, this is, nevertheless, so far as the right to attack said judgment is concerned, under the record before us, a collateral proceeding—that is to say, the attack on said judgment on this appeal is in effect collateral, and consequently all intendments and presumptions in support of the judgment must be indulged just the same as though the present proceeding were an entirely new and independent action having such relation to the divorce action as to make the question of the validity of the judgment in the latter action a material and important issue in the former. It may be observed that the finding that the property described in the complaint "is the separate property of the defendant, save and except the sum of $1,500 in value thereof, which the court finds is the community interest of plaintiff and defendant," seems on its face to be somewhat contradictory or, at least, not clear in its meaning, still it is a matter of little consequence whether the property which the receiver was authorized to take charge of and sell to satisfy the judgment is community or the separate property of the defendant. Civ. Code, § 141. That section, in effect, provides that, where there is community property of the spouses, such property must be resorted to for satisfaction of an allowance for maintenance or alimony, but, if there be no community property, then the separate property of the husband may be resorted to for that purpose.

[2] As to the second point, viz. that the court exceeded its jurisdiction by appointing a receiver to take custody of and sell the property, the contention of the appellant is that the effect of the judgment upon either the community property or the separate property of the defendant was to create a lien thereon, and, therefore, to make the lien effective, it was necessary to foreclose the same in a proceeding for that purpose. There is no force to the proposition.

Under the terms of section 671 of the Code of Civil Procedure a judgment, from the time it is docketed, becomes a lien upon all the real property of the judgment debtor, not exempt from execution, in the county, owned by him at the time, or which he may afterwards acquire, until the lien ceases. The effect of such lien is to preserve whatever efficacy the judgment has from the time it is docketed, and it is, in effect, merely a remedy in aid of the execution. In other words, the object of the lien is manifestly to render the judgment capable of enforcement, even though the judgment debtor should sell or mortgage his real property after the judgment was docketed. No contention has ever been made that a judgment cannot be satisfied by an execution issued in the usual manner of such a process. It would, indeed, amount to a procedural circumvolution wholly unnecessary and antagonistic to the genius of the reformed procedure if the law contemplated and it was necessary to hold that, to secure the benefit of the lien provided in section 671, a proceeding to foreclose such lien was required. The judgment in a divorce action, in so far as it awards maintenance to the wife, is the same as any money judgment, the wife's position being assimilated to that of a creditor of her husband (Murray v. Murray, 115 Cal. 266, 275, 47 Pac. 37, 37 L. R. A. 626, 56 Am. St. Rep. 97); and, while the effect of the docketing of such a judgment is to create a lien upon the property, community or separate, of the husband, the satisfaction of such judgment, in the absence of a provision awarding any other remedy for that purpose, could undoubtedly be secured by the usual method of executing judgments or without resorting to a proceeding to foreclose the lien following from the docketing of such judgment.

But the Code sections conclusively answer the contention of appellant with respect to the remedy to be invoked to secure the payment of money due under an order or judgment awarding, in a divorce action, maintenance to the wife.

Section 136 of the Civil Code provides:

> "Though judgment of divorce be denied, the court may, in an action for divorce, provide for the maintenance by the husband, of the wife and the children of the marriage, or any of them."

Section 140 of the same Code reads:

> "The court may require the husband to give reasonable security for providing maintenance or making any payments required under the provisions of this chapter, and may enforce the same by the appointment of a receiver, or by any other remedy applicable to the case."

Thus the remedy for the enforcement of an order or a judgment for maintenance through the instrumentality of a receiver appointed by the court for that purpose is expressly authorized by the Code, and in this case the court has done no more or gone no further than the law authorizes.

It is, of course, true that the general power in the courts to appoint receivers to take charge and control of and, for the purposes of the receivership, title to property in litigation is an extraordinary power, and should be exercised with great care and circumspection and only upon the imperative necessities of the case in which it is sought to be invoked. The Legislature, however, seems to have deemed the appointment of a receiver as peculiarly adapted to the enforcement of a judgment for maintenance in an action for divorce and, indeed, the only efficacious remedy in cases like this where other remedies applicable thereto have failed in their purpose, and it is probable, therefore, that it was intended that it should be allowed upon a mere showing that other remedies had proved to be ineffectual for that purpose. This view is sustained by the consideration that, generally, such cases do not involve complicated matters or numerous conflicting interests, the sole object being merely to satisfy a judgment as to a single claim growing out of the relationship of marriage between the parties, and therefore primarily based upon considerations antedating the time of separation or divorce and inhering in the contract of marriage itself.

Section 140 of the Civil Code does not, it is true, specifically point out the duties and powers of a receiver appointed by virtue of its provisions; but the section has been construed in several cases and the authority and duties of such a receiver defined. We may refer herein to one of those cases only —Petaluma S. Bank v. Superior Court, 111 Cal. 488, 44 Pac. 177, in which at page 495 (44 Pac. 179), the court thus explained the powers and duties of a receiver appointed under said section 140:

> "So far as I am advised, this section has not been the subject of a judicial construction, and the powers and duties of a receiver appointed in pursuance of its provisions have not been defined; but it would not seem difficult to determine in what cases and for what purposes he is to be appointed. The whole object of his appointment is to provide security for the payment of such allowance as is made for the maintenance of the divorced wife, and this would be accomplished by vesting him with the title and control of some productive property of the husband, out of the income of which he could pay such allowance, or by authorizing the sale of property to create a fund, the income of which would be applied to the same purpose."

It is not improper to say that counsel for the respondent filed no brief in this case, nor did they orally argue the cause when it was called for hearing. Whether respondent thus intended to manifest an abandonment of the case on appeal or regarded her position so obviously sound as to require no argument, either oral or written, we are, of course, unable positively to say. We are constrained to say, however, that, if it was her intention for any reason to abandon the case on appeal, it was her duty to have joined in an authorization for a dismissal of the appeal, and thus have saved this court, already burdened with work which must be disposed of within a limited time, of a considerable amount of extra labor. On the other hand, if it was her desire to secure a decision by this court of the legal issues submitted by the appeal, she should have supported her position upon the points involved either by oral argument or a printed or typewritten brief, and thus have taken from this court that labor which rightfully belongs to the lawyers. We have, however, notwithstanding the extra labor entailed upon us by the neglect of respondent to present her side of the case, examined the points with the same care that we always try to give to those cases which are fully argued and presented, assuming that, if respondent desired to abandon the case on appeal, she would have apprised us of the fact, and the examination thus given the case has convinced us that there is, upon the record as it stands before us, no merit in the appeal.

The order is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MILLS SING. (Cr. 656.)

1. SALES 🔑202(1), 316(1)—ON CASH SALE, DELIVERY AND PAYMENT CONCURRENT ACTS.

Where a sale is a cash sale, delivery of the goods and payment of the price are concurrent acts, and the vendor, though he has delivered, supposing he would immediately receive the price, may reclaim the property, if the purchase money is not paid according to terms, provided he has not waived payment, or been guilty of laches or estopping conduct.

2. SALES 🔑199—ON CASH SALE, WAIVER OF CONDITION OF CONCURRENT PAYMENT QUESTION OF INTENT.

In case of a cash sale, where delivery and payment are concurrent conditions, whether or not the seller has waived the condition of payment is a question of intention.

3. SALES 🔑218½ — ABSOLUTE DELIVERY WITHOUT DEMAND OF PRICE PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE OF WAIVER OF CONCURRENT PAYMENT.

An absolute delivery of property to the buyer without demand for the price is presumptive evidence of a waiver of the condition of present payment and of a willingness to give credit, which presumption may be rebutted by the acts and declarations of the parties, or the circumstances.

4. SALES 🔑218½—WHETHER DELIVERY ON CASH SALE WITHOUT PAYMENT PASSES TITLE FOR JURY.

Whether delivery of goods on a cash sale without payment is absolute, so as to pass title, or conditional, so that title does not pass, depending, as it does, on the intention of the parties, the intent that the delivery before payment shall be conditional may be inferred from the acts of the parties and the circumstances, and is a question for the jury; an express declaration of intention to insist on immediate payment not being necessary.

5. LARCENY 🔑60—EVIDENCE THAT ON CASH SALE IMMEDIATE PAYMENT WAS WAIVED.

In a prosecution for larceny of potatoes, possession of which was obtained by defendant on the pretense of buying for cash, evidence held to warrant the jury in inferring that the seller did not intend to waive payment as a condition to the passing of title to the potatoes.

6. LARCENY 🔑8—POTATOES SOLD FOR CASH WITH RETENTION OF TITLE BY SELLERS SUBJECT OF LARCENY BY BUYER.

Where title to potatoes remained in the persons who grew them, the potatoes were subject to larceny by defendant, though he had obtained their possession by representing himself as a buyer for cash, and so obtained delivery conditional on payment.

7. FALSE PRETENSES 🔑12—LARCENY 🔑14 (1) — BUYER FOR CASH OBTAINING POSSESSION WITHOUT PAYMENT GUILTY OF LARCENY.

Where defendant represented to the owner of potatoes that he was a buyer for cash, and so obtained possession of the potatoes conditional on immediate payment, and stole them, he was not guilty of obtaining goods under false pretenses, rather than larceny, in which the owner has no intent to part with his title, though he may intend to part with possession, while in false pretenses the owner does intend to part with title.

8. EMBEZZLEMENT 🔑5 — LARCENY 🔑3(2) — DISTINCTION AS TO TIME OF FORMATION OF INTENT.

In embezzlement, there is no intent at the time of taking to steal or wrongfully appropriate the property, but accused, having rightfully come into possession, thereafter forms the intent fraudulently to convert the property to his own use, while in larceny the person taking it has at the time an intent to steal or feloniously appropriate.

9. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑112(7) — TRANSPORTATION OF STOLEN GOODS INTO A SECOND COUNTY, CRIME IN EACH COUNTY.

Where, after defendant had first stolen the potatoes, larceny of which is charged, he carried them away into another county for sale, his possession was a larceny in each county into which he carried the goods, every moment's continuation of the trespass and felony amounting in legal contemplation to a new caption and asportation, and he could be prosecuted in the second county, into which he carried the goods, as for a larceny committed therein, apart from Pen. Code, § 786.

10. LARCENY 🔑28(3), 40(5)—PROOF OF TAKING ADMISSIBLE IN COUNTY TO WHICH GOODS WERE CONVEYED.

An information for larceny may charge its commission in the county into which the goods were taken, and the first larceny in another county, though not alleged in the information, may be given in evidence.

11. LARCENY 🔑32(1)—NAME OF OWNER OF PROPERTY NOT MATERIAL IN INFORMATION.

In larceny, the name of the owner of the stolen property is not a material part of the offense charged, being required only to identify the transaction, so that defendant by proper plea may protect himself against another prosecution, as he could do on a charge of feloniously stealing sacks of sweet potatoes, the property of three named Japanese.

12. Indictment and Information 🔑132(2)—Three Days' Hauling of Potatoes Stolen, One Offense.

Where defendant planned to steal 252 sacks of potatoes, by representing that he was buying for cash and so getting possession, and it took three days to haul the potatoes away from the sellers' ranch, there was nevertheless but one larceny, not a distinct offense at the time of each of the three haulings requiring an election by the prosecutor.

13. Criminal Law 🔑829(18)—Refusal of Instruction, Repetition of One Given, Not Error.

In prosecution for larceny, where defendant pleaded not guilty, but offered no evidence, and the court instructed on reasonable doubt, and on the duty of the jury to acquit if such a doubt existed, etc., refusal of an instruction that, if there was any reasonable theory deducible from the evidence consistent with defendant's innocence, there must be an acquittal, held not prejudicial; the matter having been adequately covered.

14. Criminal Law 🔑465—Evidence of Price Accused had Agreed to Pay Not Inadmissible as a Conclusion.

In a prosecution for larceny of potatoes, defendant representing that he was a buyer for cash, testimony of a witness as to the price defendant and his confederate had "agreed" to pay for the potatoes held not inadmissible as a conclusion; the witness having testified to the particulars of the negotiations.

15. Criminal Law 🔑423(1)—Declarations and Acts of Conspirators Admissible Against Coconspirator.

What one conspirator to commit larceny said or did in furtherance of the common purpose during the life of the conspiracy was admissible against his coconspirator, prosecuted for the larceny.

16. Criminal Law 🔑427(3)—Manner of Introduction of Evidence to Establish Conspiracy.

Where the facts from which a conspiracy is to be inferred are so intimately blended with other facts going to constitute the crime conspired to be committed that it is difficult to separate them, it is not essential to the introduction of evidence of the acts and declarations of one of the conspirators that the evidence should first be introduced to establish prima facie the fact of the conspiracy.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Mills Sing was convicted of grand larceny, and from the judgment, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Paul W. Schenck and Richard Kittrelle, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of grand larceny. He appeals from the judgment of conviction, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The information was filed in, and the action tried by, the superior court of Los Angeles county. It is charged in the information that defendant and one St. Clair, "on or about the first day of September, 1918, at and in the county of Los Angeles, * * * did * * * feloniously steal, take, and haul away 252 sacks of sweet potatoes, * * * the personal property of N. Namekawa, Y. Takahaihi, and K. Yasunaga." Briefly, the evidence discloses the following facts:

The three persons whose property defendant is alleged to have stolen are Japanese. These three Japanese were partners, farming on a ranch near Anaheim, in Orange county. On August 31, 1918, defendant, who is a Chinaman, and St. Clair, went to the ranch of the Japanese, introduced themselves, and told one of the Japanese that they wanted to buy some sweet potatoes, for which they would pay $3.50 a hundred pounds. The Japanese told them he would sell them the potatoes if they would pay cash, and asked them if they were ready to pay the cash that day telling them it would take about three days to dig the potatoes. In reply, defendant and St. Clair told the Japanese that they did not have the cash with them that day, but to dig the potatoes nevertheless, and they would bring the cash the next day. That day defendant and St. Clair agreed to take 150 sacks of a hundred pounds each, at $3.50 per hundred pounds, agreeing to make a cash payment. The next day, September 1st, defendant returned to the ranch with a truck and driver. The Japanese who, the day before, had made the agreement for the sale of the potatoes, asked defendant if he had brought the cash. Defendant replied that he had not, but that his company was a "big company," and that he would bring the cash the next day. That day, September 1st, defendant took away in the truck and hauled to the White Express Garage in Los Angeles a little more than 100 sacks. The next day, September 2d, defendant again visited the ranch with a truck, and hauled away, to the same garage in Los Angeles, about 70 sacks of potatoes. The following day, September 3d, St. Clair came to the ranch, with a truck and driver, and hauled away, to the same garage in Los Angeles, 76 sacks. Upon this occasion the Japanese asked St. Clair if he had brought the money. St. Clair said that he had not, whereupon the Japanese asked him why he had not. St. Clair replied, as defendant previously had, that his company was a "very big company." He then asked the Japanese to accompany him to Los Angeles, saying: "I will pay right away." Altogether, 252 sacks of potatoes were hauled away from the ranch near Anaheim to the garage in Los Angeles. On the third trip, the occasion when St. Clair caused the 76 sacks to be hauled away, the Japanese who had conducted the negotiations accompanied St. Clair to Los Angeles, arriving at the garage about 1 o'clock on the morning of September 4th. The Japanese remained outside the door of the garage until after daylight, watching the potatoes. Defendant previously had given this Japanese a card on which was written, "Henry St. Clair Produce Co., 1807 East Seventh Street," and under this, "112 West Ninth Street. Main Office, room 235, telephone 10175." When St. Clair and the Japanese arrived at the garage early in the morning of September 4th, the former told the Japanese to go to the office of the company in the morning and he would receive his money. About 8 o'clock in the morning of September 4th, the Japanese went to the office of the supposed "big company," as described on the card given him by defendant, but there was no office there. About an hour and a half later he returned to the garage, only to discover that, in the meantime, the potatoes had been taken away. Two days later some of the potatoes were found in the stall of a produce man in a market in Los Angeles. This produce man testified that he had bought two truck loads of potatoes from defendant at $3.25 a hundred pounds. At this time the market value in Los Angeles was $4 per hundred pounds. There is evidence to justify the inference that defendant and St. Clair sold the balance of the potatoes to other produce men, after they had caused them to be hauled to Los Angeles.

[1-3] That the evidence shows the case to be, not larceny, but some other crime, such as false pretenses, or embezzlement, is a proposition seriously urged upon us by appellant. With this contention we cannot agree. That the crime was larceny, and none other, is clearly established by the evidence. Throughout all the dealings, the Japanese who carried on the negotiations with defendant and St. Clair was particular to emphasize the fact that the sale was to be strictly a cash transaction. Where a sale is a cash sale, delivery of the goods and payment of the purchase money are concurrent acts, and the vendor, though he has made delivery, supposing that he would immediately receive the purchase price, may reclaim the property from the purchaser, if the purchase money be not paid according to the terms of the sale, provided he has not waived the cash payment, or been guilty of laches or such conduct as would estop him. If the condition of cash payment is not waived, the title does not pass until the price is paid. Blackwood v. Cutting Packing Co., 76 Cal. 212, 18 Pac. 284, 9 Am. St. Rep. 199; 24 R. C. L. p. 23. It frequently happens that the seller will deliver the goods, notwithstanding the failure to fulfill the condition of payment. In such cases, the question whether the delivery is to be considered a waiver of the condition that payment shall be made before the title passes may depend upon the attendant circumstances; for whether the condition has been waived or not is a question of intention. An absolute delivery of property to the buyer without a demand of the purchase price is presumptive evidence of a waiver of the condition of present payment and of a willingness to give credit to the buyer. This presumption, however, may be rebutted by the acts and declarations of the parties, or by the circumstances of the case.

[4-6] Whether the delivery without payment is absolute, so as to pass the title, or conditional, so that the title does not pass, depending as it does upon the intention of the parties, the intent that the delivery before payment shall be conditional, and not absolute, may be inferred from the acts of the parties and the circumstances of the case, and is a question of fact for the jury. An express declaration of an intention to insist upon the performance of the condition is not necessary, but such intention may be inferred from acts and the attendant circumstances. Osborn v. Gantz, 60 N. Y. 542; Parker v. Baxter, 86 N. Y. 593. In the present case the jury was warranted in inferring that the Japanese did not intend to waive payment as a condition to the passing of title to the potatoes. All his acts, coupled with the evident purpose of defendant and St. Clair to obtain possession of the potatoes by fraud and deceit—leading the Japanese to believe at each successive step in the transaction that a cash payment would be made immediately—clearly indicate that it was not the intention of the vendors to pass the title to the potatoes, or to permit their resale by defendant or St. Clair prior to the payment of the cash price agreed upon. The title remaining in the three Japanese partners, the potatoes were subject to larceny. If a person, with a preconceived design to appropriate the property to his own use, obtains possession of it by means of fraud or trickery, the taking is larceny. 17 R. C. L. p. 13; People v. Rae, 66 Cal. 423, 6 Pac. 1, 56 Am. Rep. 102.

[7] There is no foundation for the claim that the crime was that of obtaining goods under false pretenses. In larceny, the owner of the thing has no intention to part with his title to the person taking the thing, although he may intend to part with possession. In false pretenses, the owner does intend to part with his title to the thing, but it is obtained from him by fraud. People v. Delbos, 146

Cal. 734, 81 Pac. 131; People v. Rial, 23 Cal. App. 713, 139 Pac. 661. Here there was evidence justifying the inference that the Japanese had no intention to part with title until the cash payment should be made; also that defendant and St. Clair, by fraud and deception inducing the Japanese to believe that an immediate cash payment would be made, and harboring the preconceived intention feloniously to appropriate the potatoes to their own use, obtained the possession fraudulently.

[8] Nor was the crime that of embezzlement; for, the title remaining in the Japanese, defendant and St. Clair, as the evidence shows, not only obtained possession by fraud and deceit, thereby inducing the owners to make delivery, but, before delivery was made to them, they had formed the preconceived design to appropriate the potatoes to their own use after they should have succeeded in inducing the Japanese to part with the manual possession. In embezzlement, there is no intent, at the time of the taking, to steal or wrongfully appropriate the property; but the accused, having rightfully come into possession, thereafter forms the intent to fraudulently convert it to his own use. In larceny, the person taking the property has, at the time of the taking, an intent to steal the property or to feloniously appropriate it to his own use. People v. Bojorquez, 35 Cal. App. 350, 169 Pac. 922; People v. Smith, 23 Cal. 280.

[9, 10] It is claimed that the superior court of Los Angeles county did not have jurisdiction to try the case. Appellant contends that the crime was wholly begun, ended, and consummated in Orange county, and hence argues that section 781 of the Penal Code, which gives jurisdiction to either court where the crime is committed partly in one county and partly in another, is inapplicable. It is also urged by appellant that the court did not acquire jurisdiction under section 786 of the Penal Code, because the information charges the crime to have been committed in Los Angeles county, instead of charging that it was committed in Orange county, and the potatoes then brought into Los Angeles county. Section 786 of the Penal Code provides that—

> "When property taken in one county by burglary, robbery, larceny or embezzlement, has been brought into another, the jurisdiction of the offense is in either county."

It doubtless is true that the crime of larceny was committed when defendant, with intent feloniously to appropriate the potatoes to his own use after he should have obtained their possession, secured the possession in Orange county through the fraud and deceit then and there used to induce the Japanese to make a delivery to defendant or to his confederate St. Clair, or to the truck driver who was employed by them to haul the potatoes to Los Angeles. But even so a new larceny was committed in Los Angeles county—the larceny with which the defendant was charged in the information. If, after one has done what completes the theft, he continues traveling away with the goods, still intending to appropriate them to his own use, each step is a new trespass and a fresh larceny. So that the possession of goods stolen by the thief is a larceny in each county into which he carries them. The legal possession still remaining in the true owner, every moment's continuation of the trespass and felony amounts, in legal contemplation, to a new caption and asportation. Bishop's New Crim. Proc. vol. 1, § 59; 17 R. C. L. pp. 45, 46; People v. Staples, 91 Cal. 27, 27 Pac. 523. In legal contemplation, the crime of larceny is committed in both counties, and the thief may be prosecuted and punished in either. People v. Mellon, 40 Cal. 648, 654; People v. Scott, 74 Cal. 94, 96, 15 Pac. 384; People v. Tyree, 21 Cal. App. 701, 132 Pac. 784 This principle of law is elementary; and the information may, as here, charge the commission of the larceny in the county intc which the goods have been taken, and the first larceny, though it is not alleged in the information, may be given in evidence.

Appellant, with much confidence, asserts that People v. Prather, 134 Cal. 386, 66 Pac. 483, 724, is in irreconcilable conflict with these views. That case, recognizing that the crime of larceny is committed in both counties, when a thief, having taken property by larceny in one county, brings it into another, the intent to steal continuing, simply holds that the prosecutor for the county into which the goods are brought may pursue either one of two courses: (1) He may lay the venue in the county into which the property is brought, charging the crime to have been committed in that county, thus relying upon the larceny that, in legal contemplation, is committed therein; or (2) he may charge the larceny that was committed in the county where the first felonious taking occurred and then allege that the stolen property was brought into the county in which the crime is prosecuted. It was the second of these two possible courses that was pursued by the prosecutor in the Prather Case. Where the intent still to steal the property does not continue when the property is brought into the county where the prosecution is had the information must charge the larceny that was committed in the county where the property was originally stolen and then allege that the property was brought into the county where the prosecution is had. In such a case, jurisdiction in the county into which the goods are brought can only be by reason of the provision contained in section 786 of the Penal Code. But where, as here, the intent to steal continues after the goods are brought into the second county, the larceny may be charged to have been committed in that county.

That this view of the law is fully recognized by the court in the Prather Case is established by the fact that there the court, after quoting from Bishop, says:

> "This principle of law is elementary, and involves the proposition that a new larceny is committed in every county to which the thief takes the property; and the correct information in such a case should charge the commission of the crime of larceny in the county where the person is to be prosecuted. Under such circumstances, the first larceny is a mere matter of evidence, and should not be alleged." 134 Cal. 388, 66 Pac. 484. (Italics ours.)

In the Prather Case the prosecution was based upon the original larceny committed in Yolo county, and the jurisdiction of the court in Sacramento county was based upon section 786. Here the prosecution is not based upon the original larceny committed in Orange county, but upon that which in legal contemplation, was subsequently committed in Los Angeles county, and jurisdiction of the Los Angeles court is in no wise dependent upon section 786, but exists because, in the eyes of the law, a larcenous taking was had in the latter county.

[11] The information charges that defendant did feloniously steal and take away 252 sacks of potatoes, "of the personal property of N. Namekawa, T. Takahaihi and K. Yasunaga." Appellant claims that there is no evidence that these three owned the potatoes. N. Namekawa, one of the three Japanese named in the information as the owners of the potatoes, testified that he and the other two were partners, that he was engaged in farming on a ranch near Anaheim, that his two partners were farming with him, that they were raising sweet potatoes, and that he carried on all the negotiations with defendant and St. Clair for the sale of the potatoes. This was sufficient evidence of the ownership as alleged, even though the witness, as might be expected of an ignorant person, frequently referred to the potatoes as "my potatoes," and to the ranch as "my ranch." Moreover, the variance, if any there was, was not fatal. It would have been fatal at common law; but in this state it is provided by statute (section 956 of the Penal Code) that—

> "When an offense involves the commission of, * * * a private injury, and is described with sufficient certainty in other respects to identify the act, an erroneous allegation as to the person injured * * * is not material."

In larceny the name of the owner of the stolen property is not a material part of the offense charged. It is only required to identify the transaction, so that the defendant, by proper plea, may protect himself against another prosecution for the same offense. The essential thing is an averment which shall show conclusively that the property does not belong to the defendant. People v. Nunley, 142 Cal. 105, 75 Pac. 676. Defendant and St.Clair having been charged with feloniously stealing and taking away 252 sacks of sweet potatoes, the property of the three Japanese named in the information the larceny was identified with sufficient certainty to enable defendant, by proper plea, to protect himself against another prosecution for the same offense, even though it should appear that the potatoes were owned by but one of the three.

[12] Because part of the potatoes were taken and hauled away from the ranch of the Japanese on September 1st, and part on September 2d, and the balance on September 3d, appellant claims that there were three separate and distinct offenses, and that the court should have granted his motion to compel the prosecution to elect one of the three offenses as that upon which it would rely for a conviction. The transaction in which the potatoes were taken was a continuous one. Appellant and his confederate, St. Clair, when they first went to the ranch of the Japanese and negotiated for the potatoes, evidently designed to obtain possession of the 252 sacks by fraud and deceit; i. e., by fraudulently pretending that the sale was a bona fide cash sale, and by leading the Japanese to believe that the potatoes notwithstanding their delivery, would be immediately paid for, and would not be resold until cash payment should be made as represented by them. It is evident that, from the beginning, defendant and St. Clair intended to appropriate the potatoes to their own use after having obtained the possession fraudulently. Although the deliveries to defendant and St. Clair and the hauling away were distinct acts, still they were continuous. The whole transaction was one continuous proceeding, instigated by one impulse and one purpose. Appellant and his confederate having embarked upon a scheme to appropriate the potatoes to their own use, after they should have induced the Japanese to deliver possession under the impression that they would immediately receive cash payment, and having pursued this scheme until it was effectuated, it is immaterial that it required a number of days to consummate it. All the potatoes having been taken in pursuance of one purpose, they were, legally speaking, taken at the same time, The law is that, if the different asportations from the same owner are prompted by one design, one purpose, one impulse, they are a single act, without regard to time. [13] Complaint is made that the court refused to give an instruction as follows:

> "If there be any reasonable theory or hypothesis deducible from the evidence consistent with the innocence of the accused, your sworn duty compels you to accept such theory or hypothesis and acquit him."

This instruction might well have been given, but its refusal was not prejudicial error. Defendant offered no evidence. He neither developed, by evidence on his behalf, nor, so far as the record before us shows, put forth or suggested, any particular or special theory or hypothesis. In every criminal case, where the defendant has interposed the plea of "not guilty," the general theory of innocence is, of course, adopted by him. But as to this general theory the court's instructions covered all that appellant was entitled to ask. The court defined larceny, grand and petit; instructed the jury that, to justify a conviction, the prosecution must establish, beyond a reasonable doubt, the crime as charged in the information; and defined "reasonable doubt" by giving the oft-approved language of Chief Justice Shaw in the Webster Case, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 295, 52 Am. Dec. 711. The jurors were told that "a defendant in a criminal action is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proven"; that "in case of a reasonable doubt, whether his guilt is satisfactorily shown, he is entitled to an acquittal"; that "if, after a consideration of the whole case, any juror should entertain a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant, it is the duty of such juror entertaining such doubt not to vote for a verdict of guilty"; that "the burden of proof is upon the prosecution"; that "every person is presumed to be innocent until he is proven guilty"; and that "if, upon such proof, there is a reasonable doubt remaining, the accused is entitled to the benefit of it by an acquittal." For these reasons we are satisfied, after an examination of the entire case, including the evidence, that the refusal to give the requested instruction did not result in a miscarriage of justice.

[14-16] We find no prejudicial error in the admission or rejection of evidence. Appellant bases several of his objections upon theories of the law that we already have disposed of contrary to his contentions. A number of objections to questions were made upon the ground that they called for the conclusion of the witness; as, for example, a question asked of the Japanese witness as to the price the defendant and St. Clair had "agreed" to pay for the potatoes. This, like other similar questions, was unobjectionable, for the witness had previously testified to the particulars of the negotiations between himself and appellant and St. Clair. Appellant objects that evidence of certain declarations made by and acts of St. Clair was hearsay. But the entire record warrants the inference that appellant and St. Clair were conspirators from the moment when they first visited the Japanese ranch to the time when the last potatoes were sold or otherwise disposed of by them. What St. Clair said or did in furtherance of the common purpose during the life of this conspiracy, was, of course, admissible. Where, as here, the facts from which the conspiracy is to be inferred are so intimately blended with other facts going to constitute the crime that it is difficult to separate them, it is not essential to the introduction of evidence of the acts and declarations of one of the conspirators that evidence should first be introduced to establish prima facie, in the opinion of the court, the fact of conspiracy. People v. Fehrenbach, 102 Cal. 394, 36 Pac. 678.

What we have said thus far disposes of every point made in support of the appeal that is worthy of discussion.

Judgment and order affirmed.

McAULIFF v. McFADDEN et al.

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 30, 1919.)

1. Appeal and Error ⟹757(1)—Only Portion of Record Necessary to be Printed on Appeal Under Alternative Method

On an appeal under the alternative method, where a lengthy typewritten reporter's and clerk's transcript is presented as the record, appellant is only required to print in his brief such portions of the record as are needed to fairly and lucidly present the points upon which he relies.

2. Appeal and Error ⟹757(2)—Admission in Answer Not Considered Where Pleading Not in Full in Brief.

Appellant's claim that material facts are admitted by the answer cannot be determined, where the pleadings are not printed in full in the briefs, since a careful comparison of the entire complaint with the entire answer is required.

3. Vendor and Purchaser ⟹50—Written Instrument and One Made in Consideration thereof form Single Contract.

Where a written contract for the sale of a lot upon installment payments and a contemporaneous written contract, expressly referring thereto and reciting that it was made in consideration thereof providing that vendors should not look to purchaser for payments of amounts beyond a certain portion of what purchaser earned painting signs for vendors, the two instruments evidence but a single contract, under Civ. Code, § 1642, and must be so construed as to give effect to each under section 1641.

4. Reformation of Instruments ⟹47 — Plaintiff Entitled At Least to Portion of Price Paid by Him.

Where sign painter contracted with real estate firm to purchase a lot owned one-half by the firm and one-half by undisclosed co-owners, and collaterally contracted that he might pay the purchase price installments by one-third of his monthly bills for sign painting, in his suit against the firm and undisclosed co-owners for reformation of the contract and for recovery of sums paid thereon, judgment for defendants, foreclosing plaintiff's interest in the lot unless balance of purchase price was paid, cannot be supported on theory that firm had no authority to find the co-owners by the collateral agreement as well as the land sale, for in such case, the contracts being inseparable, there would be no contract at all binding plaintiff, and he should have had judgment for at least the portion of the purchase price paid.

5. Equity 🔑39(1)—Can Adjust All Matters Between Parties Within Issues and Evidence.

In an equity suit to reform a land sale contract and for recovery of amount paid thereon, the court can retain jurisdiction to adjust all the rights and equities of the respective parties that are within the issues and disclosed by the evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by H. B. McAuliff against Joseph E. McFadden and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and new trial ordered.

Herbert N. Ellis, of San Diego, and C. B. Ellis, for appellant.

Riley & Heskett, of San Diego, for respondents.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an action for reformation of a contract, for the recovery of $421.07 alleged to have been paid by plaintiff on the contract, and for the further sum of $2,000 damages alleged to have been suffered by reason of the defendants' breach of the contract. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals. The contract was one for the sale to plaintiff of certain real property.

[1] The appeal is prosecuted under the "alternative method," and a lengthy typewritten reporter's and clerk's transcript is presented to us as the record on appeal. No part of the record is printed in respondents' brief, or in any supplement thereto. In appellant's brief there is printed the findings, in full, fragments of the pleadings, and a few excerpts from the testimony of the witnesses. As appellant is only required to print in his brief such portions of the record as may be necessary to present to this court, fairly and lucidly, the points upon which he relies (De Bock v. De Bock, 28 Cal. App. Dec. 1029[1]), we think enough is printed in appellant's brief to necessitate a consideration by us of the principal question presented by his appeal.

[2] We cannot, however, consider appellant's claim that certain facts, material to the question mainly relied upon by him, are admitted by the answer. Whether such facts are so admitted could be determined only from a careful comparison of the entire complaint with the entire answer. As neither pleading is printed in full in the briefs, we are unable to say that the answer makes any of the admissions claimed by appellant.

From the findings—printed in full in appellant's brief—and from such of the evidence as is therein printed, we are able to glean the following:

Prior to January 27, 1913, plaintiff had been furnishing to defendants McFadden & Buxton, copartners, sign paintings in considerable quantities, for which he was entitled to receive pay at certain rates. On the date last mentioned, defendants McFadden, Buxton, Strahlmann, and Mayer, as vendors, but through and "in the name of the defendants McFadden & Buxton," entered into a written contract with plaintiff—hereafter referred to as the formal written contract of sale—whereby plaintiff, as vendee, agreed to purchase from the vendors, and the latter agreed to sell, lots 32 and 33 in block G of McFadden & Buxton's North Park, in the city of San Diego. Strahlmann and Mayer are not mentioned in the contract as parties thereto. This particular written contract provided that the purchase price, $1,350, should be paid as follows: $50 cash, and the remainder in monthly installments of $50 each on the first day of each and every month thereafter, until the total balance of $1,300 should be paid, deferred payments to bear interest at 7 per cent., and plaintiff to pay all taxes and assessments. According to the terms of this contract, plaintiff was obligated to pay at least $50 per month on the first day of each and every month, commencing February 1, 1913, and ending March 1, 1915. The action appears to have been commenced after the last-mentioned date. So that if this was the only contract relative to the sale of the lots and the payment of the purchase price—that is, if this document contained the whole agreement respecting the sale—then plaintiff was in default, for he had not paid more than $421.07 when the action was commenced, and, consequently, he is not entitled to any relief, unless, as he claims, another writing, signed by McFadden & Buxton, was not only a part of the entire contract, but introduced a new element respecting the manner of paying the purchase price.

At the time when the formal written contract of sale was entered into, it was contemplated by plaintiff and by McFadden & Buxton that the former would continue to furnish sign paintings as theretofore. Pursuant to such expectation, and at the same time when the formal contract of sale was executed, plaintiff and McFadden & Buxton made another contract—a contract which hereafter will be referred to as the collateral agreement. This collateral agreement was evidenced by a writing signed by McFadden & Buxton, and, though not signed by plaintiff, was unquestionably acted upon by him. This document is as follows:

[1] Opinion superseded by decision on rehearing, 183 Pac. —.

> "San Diego, California, Jan. 27, 1913. Mr. H. B. McAuliff, City—Dear Sir: In consideration of the contract entered into this date whereby you have agreed to purchase lots 32 and 33, block G, North Park, for the sum of thirteen hundred fifty dollars, it is agreed and understood that all payments to be made on this property shall be one-third the monthly bills for sign painting rendered from you, and in no case will we ask for more. Said payments to be credited on the first of each month. Yours very truly, McFadden & Buxton, by G. E. Buxton."

Buxton, who was the only witness for defendants, testified that the two contracts "were made at the same time; * * * it was the mutual understanding between us [plaintiff and McFadden & Buxton] that the deal [the contract for the sale of the two lots] wouldn't have been made without having this agreement"—the collateral agreement. Buxton, in his testimony, also said that it was not contemplated that there should be any other method of paying for the lots than the sign painting that plaintiff was to do. McFadden & Buxton were the record owners of the lots and had the handling of the property, though it is a fair inference from the facts appearing in the court's findings together with those disclosed by the brief excerpts from the evidence printed in appellant's brief, that, at the date of the contract of sale, the two lots were owned by the four defendants—McFadden, Buxton, Strahlmann, and Mayer. Plaintiff testified as follows:

> "He [Buxton] * * * says: 'You have been doing a lot of work for us people [referring to a time immediately preceding the contract of purchase and sale]; we think you ought to reciprocate by buying a lot.' I told Buxton that I didn't want a lot; that I didn't think I could afford to buy a lot. 'Well,' he says, 'We can make this so easy that it won't cost you a cent.' * * * Mr. Buxton told me, and I understood him fully, that they would have enough work so that I could pay $50 a month towards the lot, being two-thirds of the amount of work they were likely to have, and the two-thirds would be paid in cash."

This testimony is not contradicted by any evidence printed in the briefs. Plaintiff paid his vendors a total of $421.07. From the findings and the parts of evidence printed in the briefs, it is clear that this aggregate sum of $421.07 was made up of payments made in the manner provided for in the contemporaneous collateral agreement. Plaintiff made all the signs and did all the sign painting that he was asked to do after the execution of the formal contract of sale and the contemporaneous collateral agreement. He was eager to do anything the defendants had for him to do, and never refused a job for them. It is a reasonable inference from such of Buxton's testimony as is printed in appellant's brief that the real estate business fell off shortly after the contract of sale, that for this reason McFadden & Buxton had no property for sale upon which to paint advertising signs, and that for this reason the work which they had contemplated having for plaintiff, when the contract of sale was made, fell off, and hence the amount thereafter earned by plaintiff from his sign painting was not sufficient to enable him to make the payments on the lots in the manner provided by the contemporaneous collateral agreement.

The court found that there was no agreement between plaintiff and any of the defendants that the latter, or any of them, would purchase from plaintiff signs or sign paintings subsequent to the contract of sale; that the formal written contract of sale, executed by plaintiff and the record owners, McFadden & Buxton, was complete within itself and contained all the conditions of the agreement of sale; that the contract of sale was voluntarily entered into by plaintiff; that no fraud, misrepresentation, deceit, or bad faith was practiced upon him by defendants, or any of them; and that no provision or condition of the formal written contract of sale was omitted through error, mistake, fraud, deceit, or oversight. The court also found that defendants have performed all of the conditions of the contract of sale to be by them performed, but that plaintiff has failed to perform the terms and conditions of the contract of sale on his part to be performed.

[3] In its conclusions of law, presumably followed by and incorporated in the judgment—though the latter document is not printed in any of the briefs—the court finds that defendants Strahlmann and Mayer, to whom McFadden & Buxton had assigned their interests before the action was commenced, are entitled to recover from plaintiff $1,182, as the unpaid balance of the purchase price, and that, if plaintiff fails to pay the same within 30 days from the entry of judgment, all his right and title to the lots shall be foreclosed.

The finding that the formal written contract of sale was complete within itself and contains all the conditions of the agreement of sale, and the finding that plaintiff has failed to perform the terms and conditions of the contract of sale on his part to be performed, can be sustained only upon the theory that the two instruments were not parts of one transaction and did not evidence one single contract. But this, we think, is an erroneous theory. The two instruments, the formal written contract of sale and the contemporaneous collateral agreement, signed by the vendors, McFadden & Buxton, and acted upon by plaintiff, relate to the same subject-matter and were executed as parts of one transaction; the latter expressly referring to the former, and reciting that it was made in consideration of the execution of the formal contract of sale. The language of the collateral agreement is:

> "It is agreed * * * that all payments [on the contract of sale] * * * shall be one-third of the monthly bills for sign painting rendered from you [plaintiff], and in no case will we ask for more."

This language, read in the light of the attendant circumstances, as disclosed by the evidence printed in appellant's brief, and taken in connection with the provision of the formal written contract of sale calling for the payment of $50 per month until the full amount of $1,300 shall have been paid, means that each monthly installment of $50, together with interest and the sums due from plaintiff for taxes and assessments, shall be paid out of moneys to be earned by plaintiff from sign painting to be done by him for the record owners, McFadden & Buxton, and implies that plaintiff shall be given enough sign painting to enable him to earn thereby such amounts that he could receive at least two-thirds of the amount earned in cash, and allow the remaining one-third to be credited on the monthly installments of the purchase price of the lots, as such installments fell due. It is a familiar rule, recognized by all courts, that where several papers covering the same subject-matter are executed by or between the same parties at the same time, all are to be considered together, and with the same effect as if all had been incorporated in one document. Civ. Code, § 1642; Ingoldsby v. Juan, 12 Cal. 564, 577. The several contracts must be so construed as to give effect, as far as practicable, to every part of each instrument. Civ. Code, § 1641; Flinn v. Mowry, 131 Cal. 481, 484, 63 Pac. 724, 1006.

[4, 5] The judgment of the lower court cannot successfully be defended upon the theory that McFadden & Buxton, the sole record owners, had no authority to bind their undisclosed co-owners, Strahlmann and Mayer, by the collateral agreement. Strahlmann and Mayer are not mentioned in the formal written contract of sale. As the court finds, that contract "was made by defendants [i. e., the four defendants Strahlmann, Mayer, McFadden and Buxton] through and in the name of McFadden & Buxton," the owners of record. Plaintiff dealt with the record owners and no one else. If these record owners had no authority to bind their undisclosed co-owners by the collateral agreement, or if the collateral agreement was not ratified by the latter, then there was no contract binding on appellant. For appellant unquestionably contracted for, and supposed he would receive, the entire fee-simple title to the lots, not merely an undivided one-half, or such undivided part of the whole title as might be owned by but two of the four co-owners. It was for the complete fee-simple title that he agreed to pay. And he agreed to pay for it in the manner provided by the contemporaneous collateral agreement that was signed by and given to him by the only owners of record—the persons, and the only persons, with whom he dealt. That is what he bargained for—that and nothing else. He, and those with whom he had all his dealings, the two record owners, understood that he was to pay for the lots as provided in the contemporaneous collateral agreement, and not otherwise, and that thus he was to become entitled to own the two lots in severalty. If, therefore McFadden & Buxton had no authority to bind their undisclosed co-owners, then the contract did not give appellant what he bargained for, and in that event it would not be binding upon him, he would not be in default, and the court should have given him judgment against McFadden & Buxton, at least for the sum of $421.07, which the latter, withholding from plaintiff out of his earnings for sign painting, had applied on the purchase price of the lots.

The action was a suit in equity, and the court could have retained jurisdiction to adjust all the rights and equities of the respective parties that were within the issues and disclosed by the evidence. If, on the other hand, McFadden & Buxton were authorized to contract with plaintiff in their own name, but on behalf of themselves and their co-owners, Strahlmann and Mayer, then there was but one contract, and the collateral agreement, without any reformation of the formal written contract of sale, must be taken to be a part of the whole contract—a contract which, as already shown, permitted appellant to make his payments on the lots out of such future earnings as he might make in painting signs for the record owners, McFadden & Buxton.

We have not undertaken to determine the precise nature of all the rights of the respective parties to the action, nor what judgment should be entered herein. That would involve a consideration of facts and questions not presented by or argued in the briefs on file. For this reason we content ourselves with saying that, for reasons already given, certain of the findings are contrary to the evidence and inconsistent with other facts found by the court, and, upon the record before us, the judgment as entered is clearly erroneous.

For these reasons, the judgment should be reversed, and the case retried. It is so ordered.

We concur: SLOANE, J.; THOMAS, J.

To constitute the offense of obtaining money by false pretenses, there must be an intent to defraud, actual fraud must be committed, false pretenses must be used to perpetrate the fraud, and it must be accomplished by means of false pretenses, which are the cause of inducing the owner to part with his money.

2. False Pretenses 🔑49(1)—Sufficiency of Evidence to Sustain Conviction.

Evidence held to sustain conviction of having obtained money by false pretenses from the innocent indorser of a forged check.

3. Criminal Law 🔑1144(16) — Presumption on Appeal That Verdict was Based on Any Theory Shown by Evidence.

In support of conviction, the appellate court is authorized to presume that the verdict was predicated on any theory deducible from the evidence which will support the charge and the verdict.

4. Criminal Law 🔑511(2) — Corroboration of Accomplice Sufficient if It Tends to Connect Defendant with Crime.

Corroboration of an accomplice need not be by evidence of itself sufficient to support the charge, being sufficient, though slight, if it tends to connect defendant with the commission of the crime charged.

5. False Pretenses 🔑7(1)—Representation that Check was Good Meant Good for Its Face.

The representation of defendant, subsequently charged with obtaining money by false pretenses on a check, that the check was good, made when he presented it for indorsement to the party defrauded, necessarily carried with it the representation that the check was good for its face, or $200.

6. Criminal Law 🔑1159(4) — Credibility of Witnesses for the Jury.

The appellate court, even with the added powers vested in it with respect to review of questions of fact by Const. art. 6, § 4½, cannot consider the evidence to determine whether the witnesses on whose testimony the jury presumptively predicated a verdict of guilty testified to the truth or not.

7. Criminal Law 🔑1173(2) — Failure to Instruct on Accomplice Testimony Harmless Where Other Evidence Sustains Conviction.

In a prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses on a forged check, in view of the circumstances, failure of the trial court to explain to the jury the status of an accomplice as a witness, and how his testimony should be viewed and considered, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, held harmless to defendant.

8. Criminal Law 🔑824(7) — Failure to Charge on Accomplice Testimony Not Error Where No Request Made.

Failure to instruct on accomplice testimony was not erroneous; defendant not having requested such charge and refusing assistance of attorney.

9. Criminal Law 🔑641(1) — Right of Representation by Counsel Not Denied.

A professional court interpreter, familiar with the methods of criminal jury trials, who, on his trial for obtaining money by false pretenses, himself managed and presented his defense, having announced ready for trial, was not deprived of his right, under Const. art. 1, § 13, to be represented by counsel, if he desired, having voluntarily failed to procure such assistance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

William Rose was convicted of having obtained money by false pretenses. From the judgment, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Martin I. Welsh, of Sacramento, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. By an information filed in the superior court of the county of Sacramento on the 31st day of March, 1919, defendant, William Rose, and one Nicholas Kinominas (whose name appeared later to be Kintominas) were charged with having obtained money by false pretenses from one Peter Hassouros (whose name also appears in the record as Hassouras). The defendant, Rose, had a separate trial, was convicted by a jury, and was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison. He prosecutes this appeal from the judgment of conviction and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The prosecuting witness, Peter Hassouras, was in the restaurant business at 126 J street in the city of Sacramento. He testified that he first met the defendant about the 11th day of January, 1919, and got to know him fairly well. On the 31st day of January, 1919, Rose asked him to indorse a check, which he presented to him, and which was in the words and figures following, to wit:

"Garden City Fruit & Produce Co., Packers and Shippers.
"11 No. 198.
"(M) El Paso, Texas, Jan. 23rd, 1919.
"Pay to the order of George Pappas $200 00/xx two hundred and no/100 dollars.
"$203.77
"Not over two hundred 200
"For ......
"J. A. Sackler.
"To the El Paso Bank and Trust Company, El Paso, Texas."

Said check was indorsed: "George Pappas." Hassouras went with defendant to the California National Bank, both parties indorsed the check, the bank paid to Hassouras $200, and he handed the same to defendant. The check afterward came back unpaid.

1. It is first contended by appellant that the evidence was insufficient to establish: (1) An intent to defraud; (2) that an actual fraud was committed; (3) that false pretenses were used for the purpose of perpetrating the fraud; and (4) that those false pretenses were the cause which induced the owner to part with his money. We may also consider in this connection appellant's second point, which is stated to be:

> "That the prosecuting witness was not induced by representations of the defendant, Rose, to part with his money, but, on the contrary, relied upon the faith which he had in his own friends."

Peter Hassouras, a witness for the people, testified on direct examination:

> That, on the day he indorsed the check, Rose said to him: "I have a check, $200, and the bank here don't know me. Won't you indorse the check for me, to go and cash it?" Hassouras replied: "I don't think I will, because I don't know you."

> "There was two other fellows, Greeks, friends of Rose, they introduced me to him—they know Rose for a long time—he was a good man; they said, 'We are responsible for it, if the check is not good;' and that is how I went to the bank and cashed the check, on account of these two other friends of mine. I didn't have to indorse the check on account of Rose, because I don't know him before—just met him in the restaurant. * * * Q. Why did he want you to cash it, and not the bank? What did he say? A. He said because he didn't have any money here—he isn't acquainted here in this town. Q. And did he tell you the check was good? A. Well, he said—yes."

The defendant, who was not represented by counsel at the trial, objected to the question as leading and the objection was sustained. The district attorney then asked:

> "What did he say about the check, when he asked you to cash it? A. He said: 'Mr. Hassouras, won't you indorse a check, $200, for me, because I am not known here in this—in Sacramento, and no bank will cash this check for me.' I said: 'I will, but I don't know you.' Mr. Rose, he said, there is two other parties, two or three other boys—they said: 'If the check is not good, Mr. Hassouras, we are responsible for it.' I know these other people—they was friends of mine for ten years, and honest people, and that is the reason I indorsed the check."

On cross-examination by the defendant, the witness testified:

> That defendant ate his meals in witness' restaurant nearly every day; that he was accompanied by his "partner," Kintominas, the codefendant, and some other men. He repeated that he said he could not indorse the check for William Rose because he did not know him, and that he also said, "But I will indorse the check for you boys." The witness testified that, at the preliminary hearing of the case, he had testified that on the day before he indorsed the check Kintominas told him "that William Rose has a check of $200 in his own possession, and the check is good to his own knowledge, and William Rose looking for you to indorse the check."

On redirect examination the witness said:

> That the first one who asked him to cash the check was a man by the name of Jim Ledgeropous. * * * "Q. Mr. Hassouras, at the time that you spoke about the check was first called to your attention in the place that morning, when the defendant, Rose, and those other men were there. I will ask you if, at that time and place, the defendant Rose at any time told you that the check was good? A. Yes."

In answer to a question by the defendant, he said:

> "At the time before we left the restaurant (to go to the bank), you and the two other fellows told me the check was so good."

Nick Kintominas, the codefendant, was called as a witness on behalf of the people and testified: That, from April 18 to August 14, 1918, he, his brother, George Morgan, and John Gust Constantine Sackler were doing a wholesale fruit and produce business in El Paso, Tex., under the name of the Garden City Fruit & Produce Company, with a branch store in Los Angeles; that J. A. Sackler was authorized to draw checks on behalf of the firm against its account in the El Paso Bank & Trust Company; that he last saw Sackler in Tulsa, Okl., in September, 1918; that Sackler had taken the balance of the firm's money, which caused it to cease business; that witness kept possession of the check book and other books of the firm.

The check book referred to was produced at the trial. In the body of the book are stubs numbered from 100 to 197, both inclusive, upon which are enumerated sundry amounts for which checks had been drawn. The stub of the check corresponding to No. 198 (the check in question) had been removed from the book. Checks 199, 200, and 201 had been removed from the book, and there are no entries upon the corresponding stubs. Checks 202 to 396, both inclusive, remain in said check book intact.

The witness testified that he met defendant, Rose, about two weeks before November 1, 1918, in Salt Lake, and that he met him after that time in Los Angeles; that he (witness) paid the railroad fares of himself and defendant to Sacramento; that they came to Sacramento on January 13, 1919, and were living together at a hotel, where witness paid the room rent; that the check book above mentioned was in witness' suit case in their room, and that defendant saw it about January 22d or 23d and asked what it was, to which witness replied, "This is book I have of El Paso, for our business;" that at that time checks numbered 198, 199, 200, and 201 were in the book. He said that Rose knew all about the members of the firm of the Garden City Fruit & Produce Company, and knew that Sackler signed checks for the firm. The witness testified that he was well acquainted with Sackler's handwriting, and that the signature, "J. A. Sackler," on the check in question, was not that of Sackler. He said that he first learned, on February 3 or 4, 1919, that a check had been taken from the check book and cashed. He testified:

> "Mr. William Rose came to me one night in the room, and he was walking in the room; he couldn't sleep. I say: 'Rose, why couldn't you sleep?' He say: 'I couldn't sleep. * * * I am in a hell of a fix. That check I cashed last week, Mr. Hassouras, is no good, so I can't sleep good.' Mr. Rose, he said: 'I take out from your own book the checks, too, and I wanted to cash it, because I needed the money.' I told him: 'I didn't know what you were doing, and what you are doing since; I didn't need no money; I have money.'"

The information, in substance, charges that the defendants, Rose and Kintominas, for the purpose of cheating and defrauding one Peter Hassouras, and thereby obtaining the money upon the check in question, did, at the time and place therein named, "willfully and unlawfully, knowingly and designedly, falsely and fraudulently pretend and represent to the said Peter Hassouras that a certain check and draft, in words and figures as follows, to wit: [following which is a copy of said check]—was worth the sum of $200; whereas, in truth and in fact the said check and draft was worth nothing, as they the said defendants then and there well knew;" that said Hassouras, believing said false and fraudulent representations to be true, was induced thereby to deliver and did deliver to said defendants the sum of $200, etc. The information was embraced in the court's charge to the jury and was first read to them, and then followed full and clear instructions as to the nature of the crime charged, the vital elements of which it consists, and a statement that it was incumbent upon the prosecution to prove each of the essential elements of the crime to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt. Among the instructions so given was the following:

> "To constitute the offense charged, four things must concur and four distinct averments must be proved: (1) There must be an intent to defraud; (2) there must be actual fraud committed; (3) false pretenses must be used for the purpose of perpetrating the fraud; and (4) the fraud must be accomplished by means of false pretenses made use of for the purpose, viz.: They must be the cause which induced the owner to part with his property."

[1, 2] The foregoing instruction, with sufficient clearness, states the facts necessary to be established to prove the commission of the crime here charged, and we think that a careful examination of the testimony, as taken at the trial and as disclosed by the record before us, will show that the jury were warranted in finding, as their verdict implies that they did find, that the facts essential to the consummation of the crime charged existed in this case.

[3] It may be conceded that Hassouras, in indorsing the check in question and thereby becoming responsible and liable to the bank for the integrity of that instrument, acted upon two considerations, viz.: (1) The fact that the defendant represented to him that the "check was good"; (2) that the friends of Rose, referred to by Hassouras, assured the latter that Rose was a reliable person and that, if the check proved to be spurious or worthless, or, as they put it, "not good," they would indemnify and reimburse him for any loss suffered by him from his indorsement thereof. But, even with this concession, it does not follow that, the jury was not warranted in finding that the inducing cause for his indorsement of the check was the representation made to him by Rose that the check was all that it purported to be upon its face. Indeed, we hold it to be our duty to assume from the evidence that the jury concluded that but for the representation by Rose to Hassouras that "the check was good," thereby conveying to the latter's mind the belief that the instrument was in all respects what upon its face it appeared to be, Hassouras would not have indorsed the check; for it is not reasonable to suppose (and the jury may be assumed to have taken the same view of the situation) that an honest and responsible person, in his right mind, would deliberately, by his act of indorsing a check for accommodation, impart to such instrument the force of his unqualified approval, if he believed, or even suspected, at the time of doing so, that it was fictitious or worthless, even though he received assurances from third parties that the holder of the check was an honest and reliable person and that they would make good the loss if any occurred from such indorsement. Therefore, we say that, while it might be true that Hassouras was to some extent influenced to indorse the check by the friends of Rose and their statement that Rose was a reliable and trustworthy person, the jury could have found, and it is our duty to assume that that was the theory upon which they predicated their verdict, that the cause inducing Hassouras to indorse the check was the representation by Rose that the check was good, or what it purported to be. In other words, there is evidence to justify the theory that Hassouras acted upon the representation by Rose that the check was good for the sum of $200 and, in support of the verdict of conviction, we are authorized to presume that the verdict was predicated upon any theory deducible from the evidence, which will support the charge and the verdict.

The case of People v. Weir, 120 Cal. 279, 52 Pac. 656, is to some extent an authority sustaining the foregoing considerations. There the defendant became engaged to marry the prosecuting witness, and after the engagement he falsely represented to her that he had an opportunity of receiving employment with a prominent real estate firm, and that as a condition to such employment it was necessary that he should deposit with the firm the sum of $1,000. He further stated to her that he required the sum of $200 to make up the sum so required. His representation as to the employment and his representation as to the need of the $1,000, were false and untrue. He obtained the $200 from his fiancée upon those representations, and thereafter disappeared and was seen no more by her until his arrest and prosecution for obtaining from her the $200 by the false pretenses mentioned. He was convicted of said crime, and on appeal it was claimed in his behalf that the woman loaned him the money because of their engagement to marry, and not because of his representation as to his alleged employment and the necessity for a cash deposit. The Supreme Court thus disposed of the contention:

> "The engagement simply acted as a leaven in placing her mind in that plastic condition in which it would the more readily absorb the false representations made by defendant. Defendant also stated to the prosecuting witness that, if she would advance the $200, 'they then could be married right away.' It is now insisted that such statement was the superinducing cause which actuated the girl's mind in parting with the money. Again, we deem this a technicality of small dimensions, and the suggestions already made meet the contention. Under any circumstances these questions were matters of fact for the jury to decide."

In People v. Gibbs, 98 Cal. 661, 664, 33 Pac. 630, it is in effect held that where, in a case of obtaining money or property by false pretenses, several different false representations are alleged, a verdict of guilty will stand if one only of the false representations be proved; and in 19 Cyc. p. 407, it is stated, upon the authority of the cases cited in the footnotes, that—

> "Although the pretense must be an inducing cause of the owner's parting with his property, it need not be the sole inducing cause. It is sufficient, if it had a material influence in inducing the owner to part with his property, although he was influenced in part by other causes."

In the present case well may it be said that the jury were warranted in finding that the assurances of Rose's friends to Hassouras that he (Rose) was a reliable man, and that they would stand good for the loss to him if the check proved to be worthless, merely had the effect of so influencing his mind as to have induced him the more readily to act upon the representation of Rose that the check was what he claimed it to be and what it appeared upon its face to be.

[4] That Rose knew, or at least that the jury were warranted in finding that he knew, that the check was worthless when he represented to Hassouras that it was good, is shown by the testimony of Kintominas, the substance of which is hereinabove produced. That witness, as seen, stated the circumstances under which Rose procured the check book of the Texas firm of which Kintominas was a member, and then told of Rose's confession to him that he had filled out the check in question and had procured it to be cashed, and explained, as he was worrying over his act, that he was "in a hell of a fix." It is, however, contended that Kintominas was an accomplice of Rose, and that his testimony was not corroborated. Whether Kintominas was such an accomplice was a question of fact for the jury. We may assume that they accepted his testimony as verity, so far as the facts detailed by him were concerned, and concluded that he had nothing to do with the transaction. But, conceding that Kintominas was an accomplice, there is ample corroboration of that portion of his testimony tending to show that Rose knew that the check was fraudulent and worthless, or not what it purported to be, in the general surrounding circumstances of the transaction. The fact that he brought acquaintances to Hassouras to assure the latter that he was an honest and reliable man, the fact that he insisted that the check was "good," and the fact that it proved to be worthless constituted circumstances corroborative of the testimony of Kintominas tending to show that the defendant at all times knew that the check was worthless or of no value. The corroboration in such a case need not be by evidence of itself sufficient to support the charge. If slight, and tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime charged, it is enough.

[5] In this connection we may consider the contention that there is no testimony that the defendant represented to Hassouras that the check was worth or of the value of $200. It appears from the record to be true that Rose did not, in so many words, or in express language, specifically represent that the check was worth or was of the value of $200; but he did represent it to be good when he presented it to Hassouras for his indorsement, and this statement necessarily carried with it the representation that the check was good for what it appeared upon its face to be worth, viz. $200. Indeed, how could the check be good, within the natural meaning of the word "good," as so applied, unless it was good for the amount it purported to be for? The question answers itself. The officers of the bank, which honored and paid the check upon the indorsement thereof by Hassouras, testified that the check was fictitious and wholly without value, and that Hassouras, upon being notified of that fact, repaid the bank the amount it had given Rose on the check.

From the foregoing considerations, it appears with sufficient clearness that the jury, having accepted as correctly revealing the facts of the transaction relative to the check the testimony presented by the people, the salient portions of which are above considered, were justified in finding: (1) That the check was fictitious and worthless; (2) that Rose knew it to be so when he asked and induced Hassouras, by false and fraudulent pretences as to the integrity of said check, to indorse it and thus become liable as an indorser upon it; (3) that, acting upon Rose's false representation that "the check was good," or that it was what it appeared upon its face to be, Hassouras indorsed the check; (4) that Rose's representations to Hassouras as to the check were false and untrue, and were so made with the intent and the design fraudulently to obtain from and defraud Hassouras of the sum of $200, the face value of the check; (5) that, upon such false and fraudulent representations, he did defraud Hassouras of said sum, and thereby actual fraud was committed. Thus it is clear that all the elements constituting the crime charged were, upon what appears to be sufficient evidence, found by the jury to exist in the transaction out of which the charge alleged in the information grew.

[6] Of course, this court, even with the added powers vested in it with respect to the review of questions of fact by section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, cannot consider the evidence for the purpose of determining whether the witnesses upon whose testimony the jury presumptively predicated their verdict testified to the truth or not. In other words, the question as to the credibility of the witnesses is one which does not and cannot in the nature of the case come within the powers of a court of review, and the constitutional provision referred to cannot vest in such courts or clothe them with any such remarkable power. Indeed, no claim has ever been made, so far as we know, that the said section of the Constitution was intended to authorize a court of review to attempt so obviously an impossible act, and if any such claim should be made it could not and would not be sustained. Therefore, where the testimony from which a certain result at nisi prius has been reached is not inherently improbable, and is sufficient to support the conclusion arrived at, then, so far as is concerned the question whether the evidence supports the verdict or the findings, a reviewing court is powerless to interfere with the result arrived at below. In this case the testimony upon which the jury evidently founded their verdict is not inherently improbable, and, as above stated, it is upon its face sufficient to uphold the verdict arrived at. We cannot, consequently, interfere with the verdict on the ground that it does not derive from the evidence sufficient support.

It is next contended that the court erred to the prejudice of defendant's rights by its omission to instruct the jury with respect to the status under the law of an accomplice of the accused on trial, when such accomplice becomes a witness against the accused and the peculiar consideration which the law says must be given an accomplice's testimony. Section 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides (among other things) that the jury are—

> "to be instructed on all proper occasions: * * * (4) That the testimony of an accomplice ought to be viewed with distrust," etc.

There was in this case some evidence from which it might be inferred that Kintominas was implicated in the crime charged against Rose. In fact Kintominas was jointly charged in the information with Rose with the commission of the crime of which the latter was convicted. The court gave no instruction based upon subdivision 4 of section 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure, above adverted to. No such instruction was proposed by the defendant; but it is the contention that it was the court's duty to have given such instruction upon its own motion, and that its failure to do so was error.

[7, 8] It would have been well for the court, upon its own volition or initiative, to give an instruction explaining to the jury the status of an accomplice as a witness and how his testimony should be viewed and considered; but, under the circumstances of this case, its failure to do so cannot be held to have been prejudicial to the defendant. There is, as has already been shown, plenty of evidence, without that of Kintominas, the alleged accomplice, to sustain the verdict. As seen, the testimony of Kintominas was particularly important, in that it tended to show that Rose knew that the check was without any value whatever when he asked Hassouras to indorse it. But it will also be borne in mind Rose represented to Hassouras, without any qualifying language, that "the check was good." He was the holder and pretended owner of the check, and knew the circumstances under which he received it into his possession. He knew more about the check than did Hassouras or the other parties who attested to his (defendant's) honesty before and to Hassouras. The fact that the check proved worthless is a strong circumstance tending to show that he knew the check was fictitious and worthless when he induced Hassouras to indorse it, and the jury were authorized from that fact to find that he at all times was aware of the worthlessness of the check and that his design in securing the indorsement of the instrument by Hassouras was to obtain from the latter in that fraudulent way the amount of money the check purported to be for. Thus it is plain that with the testimony of Kintominas eliminated from the record, or wholly disregarded, the verdict would still have ample support. It follows that the failure to give the instruction under the circumstances of this case can hardly be said to be error, inasmuch as the defendant did not request the court to give it; but, if erroneous, it cannot be held to have operated prejudicially against the defendant or to have produced a miscarriage of justice. Article 6, § 4½, Const.

In People v. Lawlor, 21 Cal. App. 63, 131 Pac. 63, the defendant himself requested the court to give a like instruction, and the court there held that, while the request should have been granted and the instruction given, in view of the quantity and convincing character of the evidence tending to show the guilt of the defendant, the error was without prejudice, and consequently could not justly be held to have produced a miscarriage of justice. In view of this conclusion, the cases cited by the appellant in support of his contention that the court erred by failure to instruct the jury upon the law relative to accomplices are of no consequence here. It may be suggested, however, that in the following of those cases the instructions were proposed by the accused, but, although pertinent to the cases as made by the evidence, were disallowed by the court: People v. Bonney, 98 Cal. 278, 33 Pac. 98; People v. Silva, 121 Cal. 668, 54 Pac. 146. In the other cases cited, which were decided long before section 4½ was incorporated into article 6 of the Constitution, the peculiar circumstances thereof were such as to require it to be held that the refusal or the failure of the trial court to instruct upon accomplices constituted prejudicial error.

[9] It is lastly contended that the cause should be reversed for the reason that the defendant was without counsel to assist him in his defense. The argument on this proposition seems to be that a legal trial of a person charged with a public offense cannot be had, unless, at such trial, the accused has the assistance of an attorney at law in his defense; but, obviously, this is not so. The argument is based upon article 1, section 13, of the Constitution, which declares that—

> "In criminal prosecutions, in any court, the party accused shall have the right to a speedy and public trial; to have the process of the court to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf, and to appear and defend, in person and with counsel."

That provision of the Constitution, in so far as it relates to the right of an accused to be represented at his trial by counsel, only declares and guarantees that right, and does and can do no more than that; for it still remains with the accused to determine for himself whether he will exercise the right and so be attended at his trial and defended therein by counsel. Of course, if he desires to be so represented and assisted in his defense by counsel, there cannot be a denial to him of that right, even though he be without the necessary means to employ and compensate the attorney. If, on the other hand, he does not desire an attorney to assist him in his defense, there is no law which can compel him either to employ one for that purpose or to accept the services of one assigned to him by the court, should the court adopt that course.

In this case the defendant, upon being arraigned upon the information, was asked by the court if he had or wanted counsel to conduct his defense, and he replied that he would himself attend to that matter. It does not appear that he thereafter asked or requested the court to appoint an attorney to defend him, and he appeared at the trial without an attorney, announced himself ready when the case was called for trial, and himself managed and presented at the trial his own defense. If, therefore, he thinks he now has reason to believe that he suffered by reason of having no lawyer to assist him in his defense, he, and not the court nor the law, is to blame. He testified that he was a professional court interpreter, and from this fact we may assume that he is a man of intelligence and had from his experience as such an interpreter become more or less familiar with the general rights of an accused on trial in the courts and with the methods of conducting jury trials. We can, therefore, see no ground for excusing his neglect to secure, either by employment or by appointment by the court, if he was unable to pay for the services of one, a lawyer to represent him at the trial and conduct his defense. It certainly, under the circumstances of this case, cannot be held a ground for a reversal of the cause because the defendant, for reasons best known to himself, elected to waive the assistance of a lawyer and to manage his own defense.

It may be added, in this connection, that the defendant appeared to understand the situation presented at the trial remarkably well, for he seems to have cross-examined the witnesses testifying against him with no little degree of cleverness. Moreover, we can justly say that the case was tried by the court fairly and impartially and with a just recognition of the rights of the accused.

We conclude that there has been presented here no legal reason for sending the case back, and therefore the judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

181 Cal. 174

WERNER v. GRAHAM et al. (L. A. 4952.)

1. Covenants 🔑72 — Building Restrictions Released by Quitclaim.

Where lots had been sold subject to building restrictions, grantor's deed to purchaser of a lot, quitclaiming any interest in the lot, had the effect of releasing the restrictions as to the lot, so far as it was in the grantor's power to release them.

2. Deeds 🔑156—Provisions in Deed Conditions and Not Covenants.

If the provisions of a deed regarding building restrictions were in fact conditions, and not covenants, the defendants, owners of other lots with similar restrictions in deeds from a common grantor, were not entitled to enforce them as against plaintiff, where the reversion clause of plaintiff's deed ran in favor of grantor, his heirs and assigns, which does not include the defendants, since, under Civ. Code, §§ 768, 1046, by "assigns" must be meant assignees of the reversion or right of re-entry.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Assigns.]

3. Covenants 🔑79(3)—No Privity of Contract Between Grantee in Deed With Restrictions and Grantees in Similar Deeds.

If the restrictive provisions of a deed, with regard to buildings, amounted to covenants as well as conditions, where neither the plaintiff, seeking to quiet title against the restrictions, nor any of the defendants, owners of other lots under similar deeds, were the original parties to the covenants, and plaintiff did not contractually assume the covenant obligations, and defendants did not acquire by assignment from the common grantor his rights as covenantee, there was no privity of contract between plaintiff and defendants.

4. Covenants 🔑81 — Building Restrictions Not Covenants Running With Land.

Where plaintiff seeks to quiet title against building restrictions on his lots against owners of other lots with similar restrictions in deeds from a common grantor, there is no privity of estate between the plaintiff and the defendants in the usual sense of the word, neither holding through or under the other or others, and the restrictions are not recognized by the common law as covenants running with the land, and are not for the benefit of the estate conveyed to plaintiff, but to its detriment.

5. Covenants 🔑69(2) — Restrictions in Deeds are "Equitable Easements" for Benefit of Dominant Tenement.

Building restrictions in a deed, frequently spoken of as "equitable easements," were unknown to the common law and are not among the servitudes enumerated by Civ. Code, §§ 801, 802, and the enforcement thereof is limited to those which directly concern and benefit the dominant tenement, and the instrument creating such servitude will be strictly construed; any doubt being resolved in favor of the free use of the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Equitable Easement.]

6. Covenants 🔑79(3)—Persons Entitled to Enforce Equitable Easement Created by Building Restrictions Determined.

As to the "equitable easement" of building restrictions claimed against a certain lot sold with building restrictions, there is, as to lots sold by the common grantor prior to his conveyance of such lot, no equitable servitude, since it cannot be said that the covenants in the deed to such lot were exacted by him for the benefit of lots he did not own.

7. Covenants 🔑79(3) — Equitable Easement of Grantor Created by Building Restrictions Lost by Quitclaim Deed.

Where lot was sold with building restrictions, but grantor later quitclaimed any interest therein, lots which such grantor sold subsequently had no servitude over such lot; such servitude having been surrendered by the grantor's quitclaim.

8. Covenants 🔑79(3) — Building Restrictions in Deeds Not Covenants Running With Land.

Where owner of tract sold a portion thereof with restrictions, but without a word indicating that the land conveyed was part of a larger tract, the balance of which the grantor still retained, or that the restrictions were intended for the benefit of other lands, or that their benefit was to inure to and pass with other lands, and without description or designation of the land which was to be the dominant tenement as to the equitable servitude created by the restrictions, and the only expression as to who might act in case of breach of the restrictions was that in such case the land should revert to the grantor, his heirs or assigns, it is not possible reasonably to construe the restrictions as covenants running, not to the grantor, his heirs or assigns, but to him as the owner of certain land not designated or described, and to his various successors in interest in such land, especially in view of Civ. Code, § 1468, although subsequently enacted, defining covenants running with the land as "expressed to be for the benefit of the land of the covenantee."

9. Covenants 🔑79(3) — Where Lots Are Sold With Building Restrictions, With No Reference to Common Plan in Deeds, Understanding of Parties Immaterial.

Where owner of a tract sells a lot therefrom with restrictions, but without express reference in the deed to a common plan of restrictions, or in any way indicating any agreement between grantor and grantee that the lot is taken subject to such a plan, it is immaterial, as affecting the question whether the restrictions run personally to the owner, and not to the owners of other lots in the tract, that the owner, in selling such lots from time to time, in each conveyance has exacted restrictive covenants evidently in accordance with a common plan, since not the grantor's intent alone, but the joint intent of the parties, must govern, and of such intent their deed constitutes the final and exclusive memorial.

10. QUIETING TITLE 🔑15—THAT PLAINTIFF SEEKS TO ESCAPE BUILDING RESTRICTIONS NOT EXISTING AS TO HIM NOT INEQUITABLE.

In a suit to quiet title against building restrictions, a judgment, not merely denying plaintiff relief, but affirmatively holding plaintiff's land subject to such restrictions, cannot be upheld on the ground that plaintiff's seeking to escape from the restrictions is inequitable, where such restrictions do not in fact exist so far as defendants are concerned.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Fritz Werner against Mary M. Graham and others. From a judgment granting plaintiff less relief than demanded, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

E. W. Sargent, W. G. Cooke, and John F. Keogh, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Valentine & Newby, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

OLNEY, J. This is an action to quiet title to real property; the purpose being to obtain a judicial determination that the land of the plaintiff is free of certain restrictions as to its use contained in a deed to a previous owner through whom the plaintiff claims. The land consists of one of the lots of a considerable tract, and the defendants are other lot owners within the same tract. The judgment of the lower court was that the plaintiff's title was, as to all the defendants, subject to the restrictions in question, and from this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

It appears that one Marshall was, in 1902, the owner of the whole tract which was at that time unimproved, and in that year he subdivided it into blocks and lots, and filed of record a map of the tract as so subdivided. This map showed no building lines, or anything else to indicate any purpose of restricting in any way the manner in which the different lots might be built upon or otherwise improved, or the uses to which they might be put. Immediately following the recording of the map, Marshall began to sell and convey the lots. There were 132 lots in all, and by October 21, 1905, he had sold and conveyed 116 of them, including the lot now owned by the plaintiff. In all of the deeds from Marshall appear restrictive provisions, which, while differing slightly in some instances, dependent upon the location of the particular lot, as, for instance, upon its facing east or west, are yet so uniform and consistent in character as to indicate unmistakably that Marshall had in mind a general and common plan which he was following. The restrictions in the deed by Marshall conveying the plaintiff's lot are typical and read:

> "Provided, however, that this conveyance is made upon and shall be subject to the following express conditions, to wit: That no building to be used as a saloon, or tenement houses known as flats, or livery stable, or store of any kind or nature whatever shall be erected or placed on said premises or any part thereof, nor shall any such business be conducted on said premises or any part thereof at any time within thirty (30) years from the date hereof; that no derrick for boring any oil well shall be erected or placed, nor shall oil be produced in any manner whatsoever, on said premises or any part thereof at any time within fifty (50) years from the date hereof; and also that any buildings to be used as dwelling houses which may be erected or placed upon said premises or any part thereof at any time within twenty-five (25) years from the date hereof, shall be located and placed as follows:
> "On lots numbered thirty-four (34), thirty-five (35), seventy-eight (78), seventy-nine (79), one hundred and twenty-two (122), and one hundred and twenty-three (123), facing east, and on lots numbered seventy-six (76), seventy-seven (77), one hundred and twenty (120), and one hundred and twenty-one (121), facing west. And the reasonable cost thereof shall not be less than three thousand ($3,000) dollars; and said dwelling and its appurtenances shall be located not less than forty (40) feet from the front property line of said premises, and not more than one house and its appurtenances shall be built or placed on each lot herein conveyed. If the said party of the second part, his heirs, assigns, or successors in estate, shall in any way fail to keep or perform the conditions above specified, or any one of them, in any respect whatsoever, then any and all right, title, interest, and estate hereby granted or conveyed shall revert to and become vested in the said parties of the first part, their heirs or assigns.
> "The said party of the second part accepts this deed and conveyance upon and subject to each and all of the said conditions herein set forth. It is further understood and agreed that each and all of said conditions and covenants shall run with said premises and shall be binding upon the heirs, assigns, and all successors in estate of the said party of the second part."

Some of the conveyances so made by Marshall were prior to his conveyance of the plaintiff's lot, and some of the defendants are now the owners of lots so previously conveyed. The larger number of conveyances were made subsequent to the deed through which the plaintiff claims title, and others of the defendants are now the owners of lots so subsequently conveyed.

[1] On October 21, 1905, when, as we have said, Marshall had sold 116 out of a total of 132 lots in the tract, Marshall quitclaimed to the then owner of the plaintiff's lot any interest in it. The effect of this deed was, of course, to release the restrictive provisions as to the plaintiff's lot, so far as it was in the power of Marshall to release them. After the giving of this quitclaim deed, Marshall continued to sell lots until he had disposed of them all. The deeds for these lots likewise contain the restrictive provisions. It does not appear clearly whether or not any of the defendants are the present owners of lots conveyed by Marshall subsequent to his quitclaim deed, but we assume some of them are.

It also appears in evidence that in selling the lots Marshall represented to the respective purchasers that he was exacting the same restrictive provisions from all purchasers. Residences were built upon the tract from time to time by purchasers of lots, and the tract became, and has remained, an exclusively residence district of the better sort. It should also be mentioned that the immediate deed by which the plaintiff acquired title contained no restrictions. It is claimed by the defendants that he nevertheless had actual notice that all of the lots in the tract were subject to uniform restrictions according to a general and common plan. This the plaintiff denies, but in view of the conclusion we have reached it is of no importance whether he had such notice or not.

[2] It should also be noted that the restrictions are cast in the form of conditions, and not of covenants; that is, the conveyance by its terms is made upon the condition that so and so shall not be done, and, if it is done, the property conveyed shall revert. In the last paragraph of the restrictive provisions they are referred to as "conditions and covenants"; but this single expression is the only language of obligation, as distinguished from that of condition, and essentially the form is one of condition, and not of covenant. If the provisions are in fact conditions, and not covenants, the defendants are not entitled to enforce them against the plaintiff; for the reversion clause runs in favor of Marshall, his heirs and assigns, and does not include the defendants, since by assigns must be meant in this state assignees of the reversion or right of re-entry. Sections 768 and 1046, Civ. Code; Johnston v. Los Angeles, 176 Cal. 479, 485, 168 Pac. 1047.

[3] Assuming, however, for the purpose of discussion, that the restrictive provisions in the deed amount to covenants, as well as conditions, there is yet no privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendants. Neither the plaintiff nor any of the defendants were original parties to the covenants, nor has the plaintiff contractually assumed their obligations, nor have the defendants acquired by assignment from Marshall his rights as covenantee. Marshall has in fact surrendered those rights.

[4] Likewise there is no privity of estate between the plaintiff and the defendants, at least in the usual sense of the word. The plaintiff does not hold under or through any of the defendants, nor any of them under or through him. It follows that the covenants are not covenants recognized by the common law as running with the land, such as covenants between lessor and lessee, or between grantor and grantee, for the benefit of the estate conveyed, as, for instance, warranties of title, for all of which a privity of estate is required. Furthermore, the covenants here involved are manifestly not for the benefit to the estate conveyed, but to its detriment.

[5] If, then, these covenants are to be given force, as between the plaintiff and the defendants, it clearly must be because: (a) The burden imposed by them was one upon the land conveyed and incident to its ownership, so that the plaintiff, when he acquired his lot, acquired it subject to such burden; and (b) the benefit of the covenants was an incident of the ownership of the other lots in the tract, so that when Marshall parted with them the benefit of the covenants passed with them as an incident of their ownership, and the defendants are now entitled to such benefit as the present owners of the lots. In other words, in order that the covenants have force, not merely as between the original parties, but as between the plaintiff and the defendants, it must appear that their insertion in the deed by Marshall was, in effect, the creation of what amounts to a servitude, to the burden of which the plaintiff's lot was subjected as the servient tenement, and to the benefit of which the remainder of the tract was entitled as the dominant tenement.

The enforcement of covenants restricting the use of one parcel of land for the benefit of another parcel, not merely as between the original parties, but as between their respective grantees, between whom no privity of estate or of contract can properly be said to exist, originated at a comparatively recent date in the chancery courts, and apparently without a clear appreciation of the fact that the enforcement of such covenants for and against grantees of the original parties was, in effect, the creating of servitudes. Such servitudes are frequently spoken of as "equitable easements." They were unknown to the common law and are not among the servitudes enumerated by our Code. Sections 801 and 802, Civ. Code. They are opposed to the rule that the owner of land may not create new and heretofore unknown estates, and while their validity—that is, the enforceable character of such covenants as against grantees of the original parties—is now too well established to admit of question, it has resulted that the covenants which will be so enforced are limited to those which directly concern and benefit what we may term the dominant tenement, and also that any provisions of an instrument creating or claimed to create such a servitude will be strictly construed, any doubt being resolved in favor of the free use of the land. Firth v. Marovich, 160 Cal. 257, 116 Pac. 729, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1190; Berryman v. Hotel Savoy Co., 160 Cal. 559, 117 Pac. 677, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 5; Bresee v. Dunn, 172 Pac. 387.

[6] Viewing the facts of the present case in the light of what has just been said, and leaving out of consideration for the time being the element of a general and uniform plan of restriction, it is quickly evident that as to those lots, which Marshall had parted with prior to his conveyance of the plaintiff's lot, there is no equitable servitude. Marshall was no longer interested in those lots and by no possibility can it be said that the covenants in the deed to the plaintiff's lot were exacted by him for the benefit of lots which he did not own.

[7] In like fashion it is plain that there is no servitude over the plaintiff's lot in favor of those lots which Marshall still retained when he gave the quitclaim deed of 1905 and with which he parted subsequently. If a servitude had previously existed in favor of those lots, he, as their owner, had the right to surrender it, and undoubtedly did so by his quitclaim deed.

[8] The remaining question is as to the existence of a servitude in favor of those lots which Marshall still owned when he sold the plaintiff's lot, and with which he parted before he gave his quitclaim deed. This is purely a question of the construction and consequent effect of the deed by Marshall parting with the plaintiff's lot. The situation in this respect is that one, the owner of a tract of land, sells a portion of it, exacting of the grantee restrictive provisions as to its use, but without a word indicating that the land conveyed is part of a larger tract, the balance of which the grantor still retains, or that the restrictions are intended for the benefit of other lands, or that their benefit is to inure to or pass with other lands, and without any description or designation of what is an essential element of any such servitude as is claimed, namely, the land which is to be the dominant tenement. Servitudes running with the land in favor of one parcel and against another cannot be created in any such uncertain and indefinite fashion. It is true the nature of the restrictions is such that, when considered in connection with the fact that Marshall still retained the greater portion of the tract, it is not improbable that he exacted them for the benefit of the portion so retained. But the grantee's intent in this respect is necessary, as well as the grantor's, and the deed, which constitutes the final and exclusive memorial of their joint intent, has not a word of that effect, nor anything whatever which can be seized upon and given construction as an expression of such intent. If such was their intent, it has not been expressed. Omitting, as we must, any consideration of what the understanding was between Marshall and his grantees, except as shown by the instruments between them, and construing the deed in the light of the fact that Marshall was at the time the owner of a large number of other lots in the tract, it may yet well be that the grantee intended to obligate himself only to Marshall, his heirs and assigns. Certainly that is all that is said. It is also difficult to see how there can be any valid creation of what is practically a servitude, without some designation or description of what is an essential factor, namely, the dominant tenement. McNichol v. Townsend, 73 N. J. Eq. 276, 67 Atl. 938; Renals v. Cowlishaw, L. R. 11 Ch. Div. 866; Wagner v. Hanna, 38 Cal. 111, 116, 99 Am. Dec. 354. The fact, also, that the only expression in the deed as to who may act in case of a breach of the restrictions is that in such case the land shall revert to Marshall, his heirs or assigns, is strongly indicative of the fact that it was intended that Marshall, his heirs or assigns, should alone have the right to act. Clapp v. Wilder, 176 Mass. 332, 57 N. E. 692, 50 L. R. A. 120. It is not possible, in view of these considerations and the rule of strict construction very properly applicable, reasonably to construe the restrictions as covenants which run, not to Marshall, his heirs or assigns, but to Marshall as the owner of certain land, not designated or described, and to his various successors in interest in such land. This view is amply supported by authority. Los Angeles, etc., Co. v. Muir, 136 Cal. 36, 68 Pac. 308; Berryman v. Hotel Savoy Co., supra; Bresee v. Dunn, supra; Sailer v. Podolski, 82 N. J. Eq. 459, 88 Atl. 967; Hemsley v. Marlborough Hotel Co., 62 N. J. Eq. 164, 50 Atl. 14; Badger v. Boardman, 16 Gray (Mass.) 559; Skinner v. Shepard, 130 Mass. 181; Clapp v. Wilder, supra.

It is also in line with section 1468, Civil Code, which reads:

> "A covenant made by the owner of land with the owner of other land to do or refrain from doing some act on his own land, which doing or refraining is expressed to be for the benefit of the land of the covenantee, and which is made by the covenantor expressly for his assigns or to the assigns of the covenantee, runs with both of such parcels of land."

The restrictive provisions under consideration here are not, as required by this section, "expressed to be for the benefit of the land of the covenantee." The section was not adopted until 1905, after the deed in question was given, and is therefore not controlling; but it is an expression of what the necessary requirements should be in order that covenants of this character may run with the land.

[9] So far the case has been considered without reference to the fact that Marshall in all his deeds exacted similar restrictions, and clearly had in mind a uniform plan of restrictions which he intended to impose, and actually did impose, upon all the lots in the tract as he sold them. Does the addition of this element make any difference? It is undoubted that, when the owner of a subdivided tract conveys the various parcels in the tract by deeds containing appropriate language imposing restrictions on each parcel as part of a general plan of restrictions common to all the parcels and designed for their mutual benefit, mutual equitable servitudes are thereby created in favor of each parcel as against all the others. The agreement between the grantor and each grantee in such a case as expressed in the instruments between them is both that the parcel conveyed shall be subject to restrictions in accordance with the plan for the benefit of all the other parcels, and also that all other parcels shall be subject to such restrictions for its benefit. In such a case the mutual servitudes spring into existence as between the first parcel conveyed and the balance of the parcels at the time of the first conveyance. As each conveyance follows, the burden and the benefit of the mutual restrictions imposed by preceding conveyances as between the particular parcel conveyed and those previously conveyed pass as an incident of the ownership of the parcel, and similar restrictions are created by the conveyance as between the lot conveyed and the lots still retained by the original owner. Of this character is Alderson v. Cutting, 163 Cal. 504, 126 Pac. 157, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 1.

The difference between such a case and the one at bar is that here there is no language in the instruments between the parties—that is, the deeds—which refers to a common plan of restrictions, or which expresses or in any way indicates any agreement between grantor and grantee that the lot conveyed is taken subject to any such plan. Is this difference material? This is the crux of the present case. It has been held that this difference is not material. There are decisions to the effect that, when it appears that the owner of a subdivided tract has sold various lots in it from time to time and in each conveyance has exacted restrictive covenants which, it is evident, when all the deeds are considered together, were exacted in accord with a common plan, it is enough, and that mutual equitable servitudes have been created, although in any single deed taken by itself there is nothing to indicate any intent to create such reciprocal rights. Parker v. Nightingale, 6 Allen (Mass.) 341, 83 Am. Dec. 632; Hopkins v. Smith, 162 Mass. 444, 38 N. E. 1122; Bacon v. Sandberg, 179 Mass. 396, 60 N. E. 936; Sayles v. Hall, 210 Mass. 281, 96 N. E. 712, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 625, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 475.

There is likewise authority to the contrary. Mulligan v. Jordan, 50 N. J. Eq. 363, 24 Atl. 543; Roberts v. Scull, 58 N. J. Eq. 396, 43 Atl. 583; Sharp v. Ropes, 110 Mass. 381; Judd v. Robinson, 41 Colo. 222, 92 Pac. 724, 124 Am. St. Rep. 128, 14 Ann. Cas. 1018.

An analysis of such a case, however, leaves, we believe, no reasonable doubt as to which line of authorities is correct. The intent of the common grantor—the original owner—is clear enough. He had a general plan of restrictions in mind. But it is not his intent that governs. It is the joint intent of himself and his grantees, and as between him and each of his grantees the instrument or instruments between them—in this case, the deed—constitute the final and exclusive memorial of such intent. It is also apparent that each deed must be construed as of the time it is given. It cannot be construed as of a later date, and, in particular, its construction and effect cannot be varied because of deeds which the grantor may subsequently give to other parties. Yet that is exactly what is done in the decisions holding that mutual servitudes exist in cases where all the deeds taken together, evidence a common plan of restrictions, although no single deed by itself evidences anything more than an intent to put particular restrictions on a particular lot. As a concrete instance, take the first deed given by Marshall. At that time there was nothing to evidence any general plan of restrictions, and if the question as to the effect of the deed had arisen then, it must necessarily have been construed as if no such general plan existed. If it must have been so construed at that time, it must be so construed now. Whatever rights were created by the deed were created and vested then, and the fact that it later appears that Marshall was pursuing a general plan common to all the lots in the tract cannot vary those rights. The same is true of each deed as it was given. Nor does it make any difference that, as claimed by the defendants, Marshall gave each grantee to understand, and each grantee did understand, that the restrictions were exacted as part of a general scheme. Such understanding was not incorporated in the deeds, and, as we have said, the deeds in this case constitute the final and exclusive memorials of the understandings between the parties. Any understanding not incorporated in them is wholly immaterial in the absence of a reformation. Long v. Cramer, etc., Co., 155 Cal. 402, 406, 101 Pac. 297; Sailer v. Podolski, supra; Sprague v. Kimball, 213 Mass. 380, 100 N. E. 622, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 962, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 431.

This whole discussion may in fact be summed up in the single statement that, if the parties desire to create mutual rights in real property of the character of those claimed here, they must say so, and must say it in the only place where it can be given legal effect, namely, in the written instruments exchanged between them, which constitute the final expression of their understanding. It follows that the additional element mentioned—that Marshall exacted similar restrictive covenants from all the grantees of lots in the tract—does not affect the matter, and cannot change the conclusion reached without it.

That conclusion, as before expressed, is that the restrictions in the deed by Marshall to the plaintiff's predecessor in interest ran personally to Marshall, and not to the other lots in the tract, and that the defendants, who claim wholly as lot owners, did not acquire the right to insist upon those restrictions.

[10] The point is made that a suit to quiet title, as this is, is a suit in equity and that the action of the plaintiff in seeking to escape from the restrictions in question is inequitable, and therefore relief in equity should be denied him. This is no justification of the present judgment, which goes further than denying the plaintiff relief, and affirmatively makes his title subject to the restrictions. It would also do the defendants little good to secure now a dismissal of the plaintiff's action, in view of what we have said as to the nonexistence of the restrictions as to the defendants. The plaintiff would be at liberty to use his lots without regard to the restrictions, and the defendants could not prevent him.

But, however this may be, the rule relied upon by the defendants has no application here. It may be very unneighborly and unfriendly for the plaintiff to put his lot to uses which will impair the residential character of the tract; but that is a very different thing from his seeking to clear his title of restrictions which are asserted against it, but which do not in fact exist, and which, so far as the defendants are concerned, never did exist, and that is all the plaintiff is seeking to do in this action.

The lower court found the substantial facts in the case. Upon those facts as found judgment should have been given for the plaintiff. The judgment is therefore reversed, with directions to the lower court to enter judgment for the plaintiff quieting his title as against the defendants.

PARKER v. KENWORTHY et al.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Stanley A. Smith, Judge.

Action by John W. Parker against John F. Kenworthy and another. From a judgment for defendant Kenworthy, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Valentine & Newby, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Pendell & Gleason, E. W. Sargent, W. G. Cooke, J. F. Keogh, and G. Roy Pendell, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

OLNEY, J. This is an action between the owners of lots in the same tract as that involved in Werner v. Graham (L. A. No. 4952) 183 Pac. 945, this day decided. The dispute is here, as there, as to the reciprocal rights of the present owners of lots in that tract. The material facts are identical. The only differences are: (1) That this is an action by certain lot owners against another, seeking affirmatively to enforce certain restrictions as to the use of the latter's lot, while in Werner v. Graham the position of the parties was reversed, and the plaintiff was seeking to free his lot of the claim of the defendants that they were entitled to enforce such restrictions; and (2) that in the present case the trial court held that the restrictions were not in force as between the present lot owners, while in Werner v. Graham the trial court held that they were. Our conclusion in Werner v. Graham accords with the result reached by the lower court in this action, and necessitates an affirmance of the judgment.

McGINN v. VAN NESS et al. (S. F. 8465.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 5, 1919.)

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by George W. McGinn against T. C. Van Ness, Jr., and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants, with the exception of D. L. Bienfield, appealed to the District Court of Appeal, which affirmed (181 Pac. 70), and the appellants apply for hearing in the Supreme Court. Application denied.

Wm. H. Chapman, of San Francisco (R. M. F. Soto, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

Fabius T. Finch, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The application for a hearing in this court, after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, Division 1, is denied, without reference to any question of the correctness of what is stated in the opinion in the paragraph commencing with the words, viz.: "But, even if it were to be assumed that the assessment was defective in the respect claimed," etc.

BARNEBEE v. HUNSTOCK. (Civ. 3065.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 13, 1919.)

1. Appeal and Error ⚷612(2)—On Appeal from Order Issued After Judgment, Judge Must Certify Proceeding.

Where order appealed from is subsequent to the judgment, and arises on a record outside the judgment, it is not for the clerk, but for the judge who determined the motion, to certify the papers and proceedings on which the order appealed from was made.

2. Appeal and Error ⚷640—On Defective Transcript, Order Appealed From Will be Affirmed.

On appeal from order denying motion to vacate judgment, where transcript did not comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, the proper procedure for District Court of Appeal is to affirm order appealed from.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Russ Avery, Judge.

Action by Edna I. Barnebee against Robert H. Hunstock. From an order denying motion to vacate judgment against her, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank C. Hoyt, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles L. Hardy and G. C. De Garmo, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. The plaintiff in this action appealed from an order of the trial court denying her motion to vacate a judgment against her. The matter is presented at this time on respondent's motion to affirm the order appealed from, on the ground that the record on appeal contains no bill of exceptions, nor reporter's transcript certified by the judge who tried the cause and made the order, as is provided by section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The record on appeal presented here consists of a clerk's transcript, containing the judgment roll, together with certain papers and records purporting to have been used in the proceedings subsequent to judgment on the motion to vacate. These additional records consist of plaintiff's notice of motion, minutes of the court reciting that "plaintiff's motion to vacate the judgment heretofore entered herein, having been heretofore argued and submitted, is now denied," and notice to clerk to prepare a transcript, which requests that, in addition to the judgment roll, there be inserted therein "a copy of plaintiff's notice of intention to move for vacation of judgment therein, and the proceedings and order of court denying said motion." This transcript is certified by the clerk, but not by the judge.

The grounds of the motion to vacate, as set out by the notice of motion to vacate, are specifications of the insufficiency of the findings of fact made on the trial to support the conclusions of law and judgment.

[1] The point in controversy is the sufficiency of this transcript. It is conceded that, if the issue presented on the appeal depended upon the judgment roll alone, the clerk's certificate would be sufficient to authenticate the record. But respondent urges that there is no authority of law, under the procedure prescribed by section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, to add any portion of the record of proceedings outside the judgment roll without the approval and certification of the judge before whom the proceedings were had. Such seems to be the plain interpretation of this section. After providing for the stenographic reporter's transcript of the trial, which is required to be authenticated by the judge, the section cited goes on to say:

> "If the judgment, order or decree appealed from be not included in the judgment roll, the party desiring to appeal shall, on the filing of said notice, specify therein such of the pleadings, papers, records and files in said cause as he desires to have incorporated in said transcript in addition to the matters hereinbefore required, and the same shall be included."

This language clearly refers to the transcript to be presented to and approved and certified by the judge. It is inconsistent with the limitation appellant seeks to place upon it, namely, that—

> "The only transcript which the judge is required or authorized to certify is that containing the testimony and other proceedings which are had in the trials of issues of fact."

The language quoted and the decision from which it is taken—and on which appellant relies—arose on the record of an appeal taken upon the judgment roll alone. Jaques v. Board of Supervisors, 22 Cal. App. 627, 135 Pac. 686. Where the order appealed from is subsequent to the judgment, and arises on a record outside the judgment roll, it is not for the clerk, but for the judge who determined the motion, to certify the papers and proceedings on which the order appealed from was made. Thompson v. American Fruit Co., 21 Cal. App. 338, 131 Pac. 878; Credit Clearance Bureau v. Weary & Alford Co., 18 Cal. App. 467, 123 Pac. 548; Totten v. Barlow, 165 Cal. 378, 132 Pac. 749; Richmond v. Julian Con. Min. Co., 176 Cal. 600, 169 Pac. 356.

[2] That an order affirming the order appealed from is the proper procedure on this motion is held on authority of Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Doran, 161 Cal. 118, 118 Pac. 526, and Knox v. Schrag, 18 Cal. App. 220, 122 Pac. 969.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

Ex parte AZEVEDO. (Cr. 849.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 14, 1919.)

1. HOMICIDE 🔑354—MURDER IN SECOND DEGREE MAY BE PUNISHED BY IMPRISONMENT FOR LIFE.

Under Pen. Code, § 190, providing every person guilty of murder in the second degree is punishable by imprisonment for not less than 10 years, it was within the power of the trial court to sentence one convicted of murder in the second degree to imprisonment in the state prison for life.

2. HOMICIDE 🔑352—STATEMENT OF COURT IN PASSING SENTENCE MERELY DECLARATION OF OPINION.

Language of trial judge, in passing sentence of imprisonment for life, that he saw no way out of it except to punish defendant for the crime of murder, not of the second degree, but of the first degree, held merely a declaration that in his opinion, based on the evidence, defendant, who had been found guilty of murder in the second degree, merited punishment equal to that fixed for murder in the first degree.

3. HABEAS CORPUS 🔑30(3)—UNDUE SEVERITY OF SENTENCE NOT REVIEWABLE.

The complaint of defendant, convicted of murder in the second degree and sentenced to imprisonment for life, that his punishment is more severe than it should have been, is a matter which can be considered only by the proper authorities in the case of commutation of sentence, parole, or pardon, and not on defendant's application for writ of habeas corpus to secure his release on the ground that, convicted of murder in the second, he was in reality sentenced for murder in the first, degree.

In the matter of the application of Antone Azevedo for writ of habeas corpus. Application denied.

A. Q. Lomba, of Oakland, for petitioner.

WASTE, P. J. The petition on behalf of Antone Azevedo for a writ of habeas corpus discloses that he is now confined in the state prison at San Quentin, having been convicted of murder in the second degree. But one point is raised by the application.

The jury, by their verdict, found the defendant guilty of murder in the second degree, and recommended the defendant to the mercy of the court, yet he was sentenced to undergo imprisonment for life. In pronouncing sentence the trial court, after a review of the testimony, said to the prisoner:

> "I see no way out of it, Azevedo, except to punish you by imprisonment for the crime of murder, not of the second degree, but of the first degree; and it is therefore the judgment of the court, Azevedo, that you be taken hence and confined in the state prison at San Quentin for the period of your natural life."

The point made by the petitioner is that the court exceeded its jurisdiction, and in reality sentenced the defendant for murder in the first degree.

[1] There is no merit in the contention.

> "Every person guilty of murder in the second degree is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not less than ten years." Pen. Code, § 190.

It was therefore within the power of the trial court to impose upon defendant the punishment pronounced. All the proceedings were in due and proper form. The commitment recites that—

> "Whereas, said Antone Azevedo has been duly convicted in this court of the crime of murder in the second degree, it is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that said Antone Azevedo be imprisoned in the state prison of the state of California for the term of his natural life as a punishment in said case."

[2] The language of the judge, in passing sentence, amounted to no more than a declaration that in his opinion, based on the evidence in the case, which he had just reviewed, and which related to the killing of defendant's wife, the defendant merited punishment equal to that fixed for murder in the first degree.

[3] The defendant's complaint amounts only to a counter plea that his punishment is more severe than it ought to have been. That is a matter which can only be considered by the proper authorities in the case of an application for commutation of sentence, parole, or pardon. People v. Huff, 72 Cal. 117–119, 13 Pac. 168.

The application for the writ is denied.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑694(1)—QUESTIONS OF FACT NOT REVIEWED WHERE EVIDENCE IS NOT IN RECORD.

On appeal from judgment roll alone, where there is no evidence before appellate court, court will not review findings on questions of fact.

2. WILLS 🔑99—WHEN CODICIL REFERS TO LAST WILL.

Codicil, not specifically referring to any will, must be taken to refer to the last executed will.

3. WILLS 🔑99—REFERENCE TO WILL BY CODICIL OR ATTACHMENT TO IT UNNECESSARY.

A codicil to an unrevoked will need not definitely refer to or be physically attached to such will.

4. WILLS ⚿99—MEANINGLESS PROVISION OF CODICIL DISREGARDED.

A provision in a codicil, not specifically referring to any will, revoking a bequest revoked by the last executed will, will be disregarded as meaningless, having nothing upon which to operate; but such provision does not invalidate the remainder of the codicil.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William S. Wells, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Margaret Graham, deceased. From an order and judgment admitting will to probate, contestants appeal. Affirmed.

Peter J. Crosby, of Oakland, and Samuel M. Samter, of San Francisco, for appellants.
F. A. Berlin, of Oakland, and L. R. Weinmann, of Alameda, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from an order and judgment of the superior court for the county of Alameda, admitting to probate as the last will of Margaret Graham, deceased, two certain documents hereinafter described. The facts of the case are:

Margaret Graham died on July 9, 1917, leaving as her only heirs at law the appellants Bridget Pollock, Sarah Burns, and Mary Wall, sisters, and appellants Eva Schutte and Lillie Terwilliger, nieces, daughters of a deceased sister. Her estate was valued at about $9,000. She had previously executed three testamentary documents—two wills and a codicil. The two wills were executed on the same day—May 17, 1917—one in the morning and the other in the afternoon. The codicil was executed on June 25, 1917. The will executed in the morning and the codicil were filed for probate on July 12, 1917, and later, on November 13, 1917, an amended and supplemental petition for probate was filed, which stated that two wills and a codicil had been left by deceased, set out the second will, as well as the first will and codicil, and asked the court to admit to probate such of the documents as might be determined to be valid wills of the deceased. A contest was filed by the appellants upon several grounds, all of which were decided against the contestants, and the second will and the codicil were admitted to probate as constituting the last will of deceased.

[1] There were a number of grounds of contest, but as the appeal is taken upon the judgment roll alone, and no evidence is before us, we may not review the findings upon the questions of fact presented by the contest, and the condition of the record invites our consideration only to the question of law as to the correctness of the action of the trial court in admitting to probate the instrument entitled "Codicil to My Last Will." It is appellants' contention that the second will alone should have been admitted to probate, that it appears upon the face of the codicil that it was not a codicil to such will, and that it was therefore improperly admitted to probate.

The relevant facts with respect to these several documents are: The documents were all executed with proper formalities. In the first will the testatrix directs her executor to pay $500 to Rev. Father Galvin, $300 to Annie Fortman, $500 to St. Joseph's Church, $500 to the same church for prayers, $200 to R. B. Tappan, and the residue of the estate is devised to Maria Anderson, of San Francisco. By this will all former wills are revoked. By the second will the testatrix bequeathed $500 to Father Galvin, $200 to R. B. Tappan, $300 to Annie Fortman, $500 to St. Joseph's Church, and $500 to the same church for prayers, and by this instrument no disposition is made of the residue of her estate. All former wills are expressly revoked by this second will, and the statement is made:

> "I give nothing to my relatives, because of their neglect of me."

It will be observed that the substantial difference in the two wills is that in the first will Maria Anderson is named as residuary legatee, while in the second the residuary estate is not devised at all. The other document admitted to probate is entitled "Codicil to My Last Will." It bequeaths $50 each to the three sisters of the testatrix, who are appellants here, and then proceeds as follows:

> "I declare this to be a codicil to my last will. I strike out my bequest in my will to Maria Anderson—the residuary legatee. I strike out my bequest to Mrs. Annie Fortman, and make her the residuary legatee. I give her the residue of my estate."

[2] The contention of appellants is that this instrument was intended as a codicil to the first will, which had been expressly revoked by the second will, because it refers to and revokes the residuary bequest to Maria Anderson, who is named only in the first, and not in the second, will. In all other respects it might apply equally to the second as to the first will. Appellants contend that said codicil should not have been admitted as a codicil to the second will; that the second will should have been admitted to probate alone, and that, as said second will did not dispose of the residue of the estate, as to such residue the testatrix died intestate. The trial court has concluded that the codicil did not refer to the first will in a sufficiently specific manner to republish said will. Obviously, appellants are not complaining of this holding, because, if the first will had been republished by the codicil, the appellants would have had no interest in the residuary estate. Since the codicil did not specifically refer to the first will, nor specifically refer to any other will in existence, it must be taken to refer to the last executed will. A codicil must refer to some will, and, if no express will is mentioned, it will be taken to refer to the will last in date. Woerner on Administration, vol. 1, p. 90, § 47; Crosbie v. Macdoual, 4 Ves. Jr. 610, 615.

[3, 4] It is not necessary, in order to support the judgment of the trial court, that this codicil should contain sufficient reference to the second will to republish said second will, because said second will was never revoked and required no republication. Exact and definite reference or physical attachment thereto becomes unnecessary. The provision in the codicil revoking the bequest to Maria Anderson may be disregarded, under well-established rules of construction. Matter of Estate of Wood, 36 Cal. 75, 81. It becomes meaningless, because it has nothing upon which to operate. This does not invalidate the remainder of the document, however. In all other particulars the two documents are harmonious and may be construed together. Section 1320, Civ. Code. The ruling of the trial court, and the operation of the two documents standing together, seem to be entirely consistent with the intent of the testatrix as it appears from the documents in evidence. The holding of the trial court is also in accord with the rule that a construction favorable to testacy rather than to intestacy should be indulged wherever possible.

LANKTREE v. LANKTREE. (Civ. 2900.)

1. Pleading 🔑214(1)—On appeal from order sustaining demurrer, facts alleged in complaint are binding.

On appeal from order sustaining demurrer to complaint, facts alleged in complaint are binding upon both parties and court.

2. Contracts 🔑111 — Not to contest divorce against public policy.

Husband's agreement to refrain from contesting wife's divorce suit, in consideration of wife's agreement to make settlement of property rights, held contrary to public policy.

3. Divorce 🔑56—Denied where collusion appears.

Under Civ. Code, § 111, subd. 2, and section 114, divorce must be denied where collusion appears.

4. Divorce 🔑165(3)—On collusion decree should be vacated.

If court has not lost jurisdiction, a collusive divorce decree should be set aside on suggestion, and may be set aside by court of its own motion.

5. Divorce 🔑165(3)—Collusive decree is final as to both parties in absence of fraud.

Where a collusive divorce decree has become final, equity will not interfere at the instance of either party, in absence of showing of coercion, imposition, or fraud upon complaining party.

6. Divorce 🔑165(3) — Collusive decree will not be set aside, after time for appeal, for husband's misrepresentations as to property.

Divorce decree, secured by wife pursuant to husband's agreement not to contest suit, in consideration of wife's settlement of property rights, will not be set aside after time within which to appeal and to move under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, has elapsed, upon wife's complaint that husband misrepresented valuation of his property and that he did not desire to marry another; the wife herself having been at fault in procuring collusive decree.

7. Equity 🔑65(3)—Amendment to bill to set aside collusive decree of divorce denied.

In wife's action to have divorce decree set aside, where complaint shows wife at fault in having procured collusive decree, court, in sustaining demurrer to complaint, will not permit amendment of complaint changing allegations regarding her contract; wife not having come into court with clean hands.

8. Equity 🔑65(1)—Parties to fraudulent transaction left where found.

Equity will leave parties to fraudulent transaction where they have placed themselves.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Everett J. Brown, Judge.

Action by Harriet C. Lanktree against Joseph B. Lanktree. From a judgment entered on an order sustaining without leave to amend, a general demurrer to her complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

McWilliams & Hatfield, of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. J. Burpee and Donahue & Hynes, all of Oakland, for respondent.

BRITTAIN, J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered upon an order sustaining, without leave to amend, a general demurrer to her complaint.

[1] For the purposes of this decision, the facts alleged in the complaint are binding upon both parties and the court. The question is not one of fact, but of law. If the plaintiff's allegations are true, is she entitled to relief? At the instance of a wife who alleges she has procured a collusive decree of divorce, will a court of equity set it aside because she also alleges in substance that she bartered her marital rights for a smaller sum than she might have exacted, if the other party to the collusive agreement had not misrepresented the amount of his property?

In the briefs authorities are not cited, nor is there any serious argument upon the legal effect of the plaintiff's allegations in regard to her having procured the collusive decree. The argument on one side is upon the policy of the law to uphold the marital relation; on the other, upon the principle that, to warrant a court of equity to set aside a former judgment, extrinsic fraud must be shown. The determination of the larger question concerning the fraud which the plaintiff avers she practiced upon the court renders unnecessary lengthy consideration of the other matters argued in the briefs.

Subsequently the plaintiff alleged that the husband engaged in a series of acts and statements of a cruel nature, as a result of which the plaintiff suffered physical and mental breakdown, and that while in this condition she was induced to make the very agreement she had before rejected, which she in terms describes in her complaint as "said collusive agreement for the securing of a decree of divorce from the defendant." It is further alleged that pursuant to this agreement the parties entered into a lengthy contract, a copy of which is appended to the complaint in the present suit. Among many other matters it provided for certain money and property to be given by the husband to the wife. Two days after its date, it is alleged, in further pursuance of the prohibited oral agreement, the plaintiff commenced her action for divorce, in which the defendant defaulted, and the plaintiff procured the interlocutory decree in her favor. There was no appeal, and the time to appeal and to move under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure elapsed. The interlocutory decree became a final judgment at the expiration of 6 months. Nothing remained to be done in the original suit but to enter a formal decree of divorce. No action was taken by the plaintiff in the divorce suit, but on the day of, or the day after, the expiration of the year from the date of the interlocutory decree, the present suit was commenced.

The plaintiff further alleged that the defendant falsely represented to her that he did not desire to marry another, and that in connection with the written agreement for property to be delivered to her he falsely represented the amount of his property. The plaintiff seeks to have the alleged collusive decree of divorce vacated.

[5] Where a collusive decree has become final, courts of equity will not ordinarily interfere at the instance of either party. To warrant such action there must be a showing of coercion, imposition, or fraud upon the party complaining. Bancroft v. Bancroft, 173 Pac. 579, L. R. A. 1918F, 1029. Even though the alleged cruelty of the husband was such as to amount to coercion by which the plaintiff was induced to enter into the oral agreement to procure a collusive divorce, that coercion could not have acted upon her when she was represented by counsel, as she must have been to carry the prohibited bargain into effect. If she had told her attorneys or the court that she had been coerced into making the bargain, she might have been fully protected in regard to her marital rights. If she had sought a divorce because of her husband's cruelty, she might have had full disclosure made in regard to his property.

The only allegation of imposition or fraud in regard to the original agreement was the alleged statement that the husband did not desire to marry another. It is unreasonable to suppose the wife's will was so weakened by the husband's alleged cruelty that she consented to the agreement, but would have had strength to resist the bargain if this statement had not been made. The substance of the appellant's claim is that in the property settlement, after the alleged oral bargain and in pursuance of it, the husband deceived her in regard to the amount of his property, whereby she was induced to accept a ranch valued at $12,000, $250 in cash, and $40 per month so long as she remained unmarried during his lifetime, and an additional $35 per month for one year. The plaintiff alleged the husband represented that this agreement would be fair and equitable for her, and that it would leave him practically penniless and bankrupt. So long as she believed she was getting all it was possible for him to give, she was satisfied. She commenced a collusive suit, she fraudulently procured the interlocutory decree, she was willing to take the benefits of the decree, and she rested under it until it became final.

[6-8] The case does not appear to be one of equitable cognizance. The allegations of the complaint are not sufficient to move a court of equity to reopen a matter finally adjudicated. U. S. v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61, 25 L. Ed. 93. If the plaintiff had been without fault, and the facts had warranted it, deficiencies in the complaint might have been supplied by amendment; but the plaintiff was not free from fault. Her affirmative allegations regarding her own conduct cannot be changed by any proper amendment. By her own statements it appears her hands are not clean. Gunter v. Laffan, 7 Cal. 588. The agreement which the plaintiff alleges she made is one of the kind described by the Supreme Court in the case of Beard v. Beard, 65 Cal. 354, 4 Pac. 229:

> "It was a contract which contemplated the perpetration of a fraud upon a court of justice, and we think it the duty of courts to discountenance and discourage such transactions to the utmost limit of their power."

Equity will leave parties to fraudulent transactions where they have placed themselves. Mitchell v. Cline, 84 Cal. 409, 24 Pac. 164.

The judgment is affirmed.

NISSEN v. EHRENPFORT et al. (Civ. 2848.)

1. ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS ⚷20—ALTERATION OF NOTE, CHANGING ITS MEANING, AVOIDS IT.

The alteration of a negotiable instrument, by which its meaning and effect is changed, avoids the instrument as to any nonconsenting party thereto.

2. GUARANTY ⚷54 — ALTERATION OF NOTE, CHANGING RATE OF INTEREST, DISCHARGES GUARANTOR.

Alteration of note, obligating maker to pay 7 per cent., instead of 6, as originally agreed to, without guarantor's consent, discharged guarantor's liability, under Civ. Code, § 2819, notwithstanding section 2820, providing that creditor's void or voidable promise does not alter obligation or suspend or impair creditor's remedy against principal, within former statute, providing that such alteration of obligation or impairment of remedy exonerates guarantor.

3. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY ⚷101(1) — DOCTRINE THAT AGREEMENT TO DISCHARGE SURETY MUST BE VALID DOES NOT APPLY TO ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENT.

The doctrine that the agreement by which an existing contract is changed must be valid and binding in order to discharge the surety has no application to a case where the agreement is by way of alteration of the original instrument.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Geo. H. Buck, Judge.

Action by James B. Nissen against G. W. Ehrenpfort and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ross & Ross, of Redwood City, for appellant.

Reed, Nusbaumer & Bingaman, of Oakland, for respondent Ehrenpfort.

KERRIGAN, J. The plaintiff, as the assignee of the National Bank of San Mateo, brought suit against the defendants upon five promissory notes executed by defendant Lindeman in favor of said bank, and indorsed as guarantor by defendant Ehrenpfort. Lindeman answered, setting up that in a proceeding in bankruptcy he had been duly discharged from the payment of his indebtedness represented by said promissory notes. Judgment was rendered against him for the amount due thereon, but its execution was perpetually stayed. Defendant Ehrenpfort answered, and among other defenses pleaded that since the delivery of said promissory notes they had been materially altered by said National Bank of San Mateo without his knowledge or consent, by virtue of which alteration he had been discharged from liability upon said notes. The trial court found in accordance with this plea and rendered judgment in his favor. The plaintiff appeals from such judgment.

It is an undisputed fact in the case that the payee of said notes, through one of its officers, and at a time when said notes were overdue, wrote upon the margin of each of them, with the consent of their maker, Lindeman, but without the knowledge or consent of Ehrenpfort, the words, "Int. from Feb. 20, 1916, 7%. O. K.," and that Lindeman indicated his concurrence in said alteration by placing thereafter his initials. By the terms of the promissory notes as originally executed they bore interest at the rate of 6 per cent. only.

[1] It is well settled, not only in this state, but wherever the law merchant prevails, that the alteration of a negotiable instrument by which its meaning and effect is changed avoids the instrument as to any nonconsenting party thereto. Dealing with this subject in his work on Negotiable Instruments (6th Ed., vol. 2, § 1373), Mr. Daniels says:

> "Any change in the terms of a written contract which varies its legal effect and operation, whether in respect to the obligation it imports or as to its force as matter of evidence, when made by any party to the contract, is an alteration thereof, unless all the other parties to the contract gave their express or implied consent to such change; and the effect of such alteration is to nullify and destroy the altered instrument as a legal obligation, even in the hands of a bona fide holder, and whether made with fraudulent intent or not."
> "The alteration may consist in changing (1) its date, or (2) the time or (3) place of payment, or (4) the amount of principal or (5) interest to be paid. * * * And the alteration may be effected by adding to the instrument some new provision, or by substituting one provision for another, or by obliterating or subtracting from it some provision incorporated in it." Id. § 1375.

Numerous authorities are cited by the author in support of the law as thus stated. The same doctrine is stated in almost identical terms in volume 3 of Ruling Case Law, at pages 966, 977, 1109, and 1113.

The rule, as it relates to a guarantor, has been incorporated into our statute law by section 2819 of the Civil Code, which provides:

> "A guarantor is exonerated, except so far as he may be indemnified by the principal, if by any act of the creditor, without the consent of the guarantor, the original obligation of the principal is altered in any respect, or the remedies or rights of the creditor against the principal, in respect thereto, in any way impaired or suspended."

As said in Driscoll v. Winters, 122 Cal. 65, 54 Pac. 387, this is but a restatement of the common law rule.

[2] There can be no doubt that the writing of the words above mentioned upon the promissory notes upon which this action is based is such an alteration as is referred to in the authorities cited. The words in themselves, if written upon a separate piece of paper, would be meaningless as affecting any obligation of the maker of these notes. They acquire significance only when read in connection with the promise to pay the principal sum in said notes named, and their effect is, and was intended to be, that from the date mentioned Lindeman was obligated to pay to the Bank of San Mateo 7 per cent. interest, instead of 6, and such obligation arose from substituting those words in place of the words relating to the rate of interest appearing in the notes, so that each note thereafter constituted an obligation to pay its principal sum and 7 per cent. interest, instead of its principal sum and 6 per cent. interest.

Several cases are cited by the appellant, holding that a notation similar to that above set forth, when indorsed on the back of the note, is not such an alteration as to avoid it; but we think such cases are not in point, or, if they may be so considered, are against the great weight of authority.

The appellant refers us to section 2820 of the Civil Code, providing that—

> "A promise by a creditor, which for any cause is void, or voidable by him at his option, does not alter the obligation or suspend or impair the remedy, within the meaning of the last section" (section 2819, Civ. Code, hereinbefore quoted).

[3] We think it clear that this section of the Code has no application to the facts of the present case. It refers to cases in which the promise or agreement of the creditor is for any reason invalid or not enforceable against him. In such cases it is held that the obligation of the pre-existing contract, as to which the subsequent promise or agreement is made, is not altered, and consequently that the guarantor is not exonerated. The doctrine that the agreement by which an existing contract is changed must be valid and binding in order to discharge the surety has no application to a case where the agreement is by way of alteration of the original instrument. Stillwell v. Aaron, 69 Mo. 539, 33 Am. Rep. 517, 518. See, also, Driscoll v. Winters, 122 Cal. 65, 54 Pac. 387; Pelton v. San Jacinto Lumber Co., 113 Cal. 21, 45 Pac. 12.

The appellant also discusses the question as to whether the payment of interest in advance, as found by the trial court, implies a promise of forbearance on the part of the creditor, thus impairing his remedy, and also the effect of an indefinite extension of time of payment; but in view of the conclusion we have reached that the guarantor was released by the alteration of the promissory notes on which he was otherwise liable, it is unnecessary to follow the appellant in the discussion of those questions.

For the reasons given the judgment is affirmed.

1. MECHANICS' LIENS ⚷277(6)—ON FAILURE TO ANSWER DEFENDANT ESTOPPED TO RAISE QUESTION OF VARIANCE.

In actions to foreclose mechanics' liens, defendants, having failed to answer, and thus to put in issue all material allegations of the complaint, particularly those setting forth the contents of the liens, thus having admitted the truth of the allegations, held estopped to raise the question of variance between the claim of lien and the proof.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS ⚷157(1)—STATEMENT OF PRICE IN FIRST CLAIM NOT A VARIANCE FROM SECOND CLAIM FOR REASONABLE PRICE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, as amended in 1911, in actions to foreclose mechanics' liens, the statement in the second claims of lien that there was no contract price, and that the reasonable price was being charged for the work done, held not a fatal variance from the first claims of lien, stating the contract was agreed upon and was payable on completion.

3. MECHANICS' LIENS ⚷75(1)—OWNER SILENT IN FACE OF IMPROVEMENT WORK RESPONSIBLE THEREFOR.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1187, 1192, one who stands by and sees another improve his property without putting him on notice of the true ownership of the property, must be held responsible for the value of the improvements, not being an innocent party under the conditions.

4. Mechanics' liens ⚷132(1) — Contractors working with owner's consent have 90 days to file claims.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1187, 1192, where contractors did work on a building with the knowledge, consent, and permission of the owners, no notice of completion of the work having been filed, the contractors had 90 days within which to file their claims for lien.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Consolidated actions by Fred A. Krenwinkel and others against Jane Louise Henne and others, and by Leo Suck against Jane Louise Henne and others. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Walter M. Campbell and Campbell & Moore, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

G. C. De Garmo and Robert Whitson, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

THOMAS, J. These two actions, brought for the foreclosure of mechanics' liens against defendants and appellants, were consolidated in the superior court and tried as one. The liens claimed were for labor done and materials furnished in making certain alterations and improvements in a storeroom in the Henne building occupied by Naumann & Schill, Inc., as tenants of the defendants and appellants, who were the owners.

Each lien claimant was an original contractor, and all the work done and materials furnished was at the instance of said tenants, and without the actual knowledge of appellants. The evidence was conflicting as to the knowledge of the employés of R. A. Rowan & Co., as shown and admitted to be the agent of appellant for the collection of rents and care of the building. Each of these respondents, except Suck, filed two claims, the first one in each case being filed within 60 days after completion of their contract, and the second within 90 days after completion, but more than 60 days thereafter. No notice of the completion of any of the work was filed in the recorder's office. Respondent Suck alleged that he was employed by appellants Jane Louise Henne and Jane Louise Henne, as guardian of the person and estate of Christian Henne, a minor, through their agent, Naumann & Schill, Inc., to do certain work and to furnish certain materials. Appellants, by their joint answer to each complaint, deny specifically any knowledge upon their part of any of said alterations or improvements until the completion thereof, and deny, for lack of information or belief, the allegations with reference to the contract for the work and performance thereof. Naumann & Schill, Inc., allowed default to be taken against it.

Upon the consolidation of the cases as aforesaid, the trial of the issues thus presented was had, and the court found in favor of the plaintiffs and respondents here. Findings were thereafter filed, and judgment entered foreclosing the liens. The defendants, appellants here, appeal "from so much of the judgment entered in the above-entitled consolidated actions on the 11th day of March, 1916, as affects in any manner the interests of the said defendants, and of each of them, in and to the real property described therein, and particularly from so much of said judgment as enforces liens in behalf of each of said plaintiffs against said real property and against the interests of each of these defendants therein."

Appellants urge the following points of law as bases for the reversal of the said judgment: That the court erred (1) in admitting in evidence the claims of lien because of a variance between the claims of lien and the allegations of the complaint and the testimony offered in support thereof, in that the claims of lien state an agreed price for the work etc., whereas, as alleged and proven and found by the court, no price for the work was agreed upon; (2) in admitting in evidence the second claims of lien in said cases, because the same were recorded more than 60 days after the completion of the work; and (3) in admitting in evidence the claim of lien of respondent Suck because of a material variance between the statements of the claim of lien to the effect that the work was done by and for the appellants, whereas the allegations of the complaint and the evidence offered in support thereof are to the effect that the work was done for Naumann & Schill, Inc., a tenant of appellants. These may be narrowed down to two points: (1) Error of the court in the admission of evidence, and (2) a material variance between the allegations and the proof. We are unable to agree with appellants on the points raised or either of them.

[1] As to the latter contention, we think the appellants, having failed to answer and thus put in issue all the material allegations of the complaint, particularly those which set forth the contents of the liens, and by such failure having admitted the truth of the allegations, are estopped to raise the question of variance between the claim of lien and the proof. By such failure the appellants, as a matter of law, admitted that respondents' liens contained a statement of the terms, time given, and conditions of the contract entered into between plaintiffs and said Naumann & Schill, Inc., and the claims of lien introduced, therefore, are not vulnerable to the objection that they are at variance with the proof. This applies to all respondents.

spondents it was stated that the contract was agreed upon and was payable upon the completion of the contract, while in the second it was stated that there was no contract price, and that the reasonable price was being charged for the work done. Appellants contend that this constitutes a fatal variance. But does it? Respondents admit that such would be the case under section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure as it formerly read, but not as amended in 1911. Respondents contend, and we think correctly so, that "before being amended the section required the lien claimant to state 'the terms, time given, and conditions of his contract'; but in 1911 the Legislature amended this section by providing that the lien should contain a statement of 'the price, if any, agreed upon for the same, and when payable, and of the work agreed to be done, and when the same was to be done, if agreed upon.' It is apparent that the Legislature by this amendment was seeking to simplify the preparation of claims of lien, and to relieve the lien claimant of the burden of setting out the nature and terms of the contract under which he was employed on the building, and requiring instead a statement of the price he was to receive for his work. In the absence of any particular agreement the law fixes the compensation at the reasonable value thereof, and when respondents stated in their lien claims that the price agreed upon was a certain definite amount, and that this was the reasonable value of such services, they were stating the facts correctly. There is a wide difference between a statement of the 'terms, time given, and conditions' of a contract and the 'price.'" Appellants admit that the claims of lien first filed were filed in time. As to them the only point urged was that of variance. This objection has now been ruled upon. The contention is without merit. Jarvis v. Frey, 175 Cal. 687, 166 Pac. 997.

[3, 4] This, therefore, brings for our consideration the claims of lien filed after the 60-day period, but within 90 days after the completion, which are admitted to be in due form, but which appellants claim were not filed within time. So far as this point is concerned, sections 1187 and 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure, we think, control. These sections must be read together. When so read and construed, is there any room for doubt as to the intent of the Legislature? We think not. In our opinion there is no question of knowledge by the "owner" before us for decision. The court finds as a fact "that all of the work described in plaintiffs' complaints and hereinafter described was done by and with the knowledge, consent, and permission of the defendants herein." This finding is not attacked. There is no question, then, that the evidence supports the finding. Hence, in the light of the two sections above referred to and the record before us, we think that one who stands by and sees another improve his property, without putting him on notice, must be held responsible for the value of such improvements. Under such conditions the owner is not an innocent party. There is no principle or authority, we think, for the contention of appellants that the terms "owner" or "reputed owner" refer to anything but the owner of the fee. To vitalize appellants' contention here would be to make the court vulnerable to the charge of being guilty of having enacted "judicial legislation"—the reading into the act of something entirely foreign to the minds of the legislators at the time the said statutes were enacted.

Respondents ask: "Under these conditions, why should one who has contributed his labor toward the construction of a building, at the request of one whom he possibly believes to be the owner, be entitled to only 60 days as to the owner, and 90 days as to the reputed owner, for filing his lien?" Is not the answer obvious? Section 1192, supra, places the noncontracting owner in the position of a party to the contract, in that it creates a conclusive presumption that the work was done at his instance and request. This works no hardship upon him, as he must be advised as to what is being done in the way of improving his property before the presumption arises. Appellants argue: "Manifestly, then, the owners could not be expected to file a notice of completion. Nor could they be estopped by a state of facts of which they knew nothing." We question the soundness of this argument, as it seems to us obvious that, if the owners knew nothing of the improvements, their interests could not be subject to lien. In view of the court's finding that the work was done as already set forth, and no notice of completion having been filed, respondents would have 90 days within which to file their claims. It follows, then, that the second claims for liens, filed by respondents, were filed within the statutory time.

The judgment is affirmed.

ROYAL INDEMNITY CO. v. MIDLAND COUNTIES PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATION. (Civ. 2772.)

1. ELECTRICITY 🔑14(2) — POWER COMPANY MUST MAKE GUY WIRES SAFE UNDER EXISTING CIRCUMSTANCES.

The duty of an electric power company was not absolutely to insulate or otherwise make safe its guy wires in any particular manner, but to make them safe under all the exigencies offered by the surrounding circumstances.

2. ELECTRICITY 🔑14(2)—PRECAUTIONS TO BE TAKEN TO RENDER GUY WIRES HARMLESS.

In reaching conclusion as to whether a power company was negligent in not guarding against the breakage of guy wires at the top as well as at the bottom, the jury should consider the nature of the country in which the pole was situated, the occupations of the persons living thereabouts, and the usual precautions taken under similar circumstances.

3. ELECTRICITY 🔑19(13)—INSTRUCTIONS IN ACTION FOR INJURIES BY DANGEROUS GUY WIRES SUFFICIENT.

In an action against a power company to recover by subrogation for damages for personal injuries received by another than plaintiff, plaintiff being a workmen's compensation insurer and having paid the loss, instructions held to cover the point that in determining the company's negligence, in relation to its maintenance of a pole and high-power wires, the jury should consider the surrounding circumstances, etc.

4. ELECTRICITY 🔑19(5) — EVIDENCE SUFFICIENT TO SHOW NEGLIGENCE IN MAINTENANCE OF GUY WIRE.

Evidence held to justify finding that defendant electric power company should have anticipated that the guy wire supporting a pole carrying high-power wires might be subjected to sufficient strain, by contact with the usual instrumentalities employed in farming operations, to cause a breaking or tearing away of the strands of the wire, and a consequent sagging, and should have insulated such wire so as to avoid injury to one working on the land.

5. ELECTRICITY 🔑19(5)—EVIDENCE SHOWING REASON TO ANTICIPATE INJURY THROUGH BREAKING OF GUY WIRE.

In view of the physical conditions of the place where the pole was situated, and the use to which the land was put, that of farming, jury held justified in finding that defendant electric power company had reason to anticipate injury to one working on the land near the base of the pole when a horse straddled a guy wire and struggled in being backed off, causing the strands of the wire to break.

6. ELECTRICITY 🔑18(1)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

One working in a barley field at the foot of a pole of an electric power company held not guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to back a horse off a guy wire to the pole which such horse had straddled, the action resulting in a breaking of the strands of the wire and a consequent shock to the person through the horse.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑401—PLEADING SUFFICIENT TO ENFORCE SUBROGATION OF INSURER TO RIGHTS OF INJURED EMPLOYÉ.

Allegations that plaintiff by its policy of insurance insured one and his employés, and that policy was written under the terms of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act, held to carry with it an implied allegation that plaintiff was an insurance carrier entitled to be subrogated to the rights of an injured employé against party causing injury.

8. PLEADING 🔑37 — OMISSION OF IMPLIED ALLEGATION IMMATERIAL.

Omission of an allegation necessarily implied from other allegations is immaterial.

9. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑405(6)—RIGHT TO SUBROGATION BY WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION INSURER SHOWN BY EVIDENCE.

Evidence of plaintiff, insurance carrier under the Workmen's Compensation Act, held sufficient to show that a lawful claim had been made by an injured employé and paid by plaintiff, to entitle it to be subrogated to employé's rights against party causing injury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by the Royal Indemnity Company, a corporation, against the Midland Counties Public Service Corporation, a corporation. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Short & Sutherland and Carl E. Lindsay, all of Fresno, for appellant.

Everts & Ewing and M. K. Wild, all of Fresno, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment rendered on a verdict of a jury in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $13,000. The plaintiff claims to be subrogated to the rights of one A. J. Bellah to recover for personal injuries alleged to have been received by him by reason of the negligence of the defendant. The injured man was a farm hand and was in the employ of one Max Flentge at the time of the accident. It is claimed by the plaintiff that the employer and employé were within the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act, and that the plaintiff was the insurance carrier of the employer and paid the claim of the employé and in consequence succeeded to his rights against the defendant.

[1-4] The facts of the case, in so far as they involve the merits, are as follows: The defendant was a public service corporation engaged in the business of generating and transmitting electricity in the county of

Fresno and elsewhere. It had a line of poles running along the county highway into the town of Coalinga, on which poles ran the high-power lines of the company. The pole involved here was situated on the land leased and cultivated by the employer and along the line of the county road about 8 or 10 feet inside the line. It was guyed by wires running from a point near the top of the pole to the ground on either side. Some of the wires on this pole were dead, but the lower wires, with which we are concerned here, were carrying a load of 10,000 volts of electricity. The guy wires were insulated at a point where, had they broken near the ground and fallen in a perpendicular line from the top of the pole, the insulation would have been below the lowest live wire and the electricity could not have traveled down their length to the injury of any one upon the ground. On the day of the accident, A. H. Bellah, the injured man, was working in company with another man, Wagner, in mowing around the edge of a field of barley. He had a team of horses, as also had his companion. Desiring to eat their luncheon at the place where they found themselves at the noon hour, they unhitched their horses and allowed them to graze, and retired themselves to the shade of the wagon to rest. One of Bellah's horses was a "snorting" colt, and he hitched it to an older horse. The older horse in some way got astraddle of the guy wire of the defendant. Bellah attempted to back it off of the wire. There is conflicting testimony regarding the amount of strain put upon the wire by the horse during Bellah's attempt to release it. One witness testified that the horse was plunging and kicking, but Bellah testified that he was not plunging. But, at any rate, while Bellah was attempting to push and back the horse off of the wire, and had placed the bit in its mouth and was holding on to the ring thereof, several of the strands of the guy wire became detached from the top of the pole, causing the guy wire to sag and come in contact with a live wire at a point below the insulation; the electricity was conveyed down the guy wire into the body of the horse, which was killed by the shock, and Bellah, who was holding on to the bit, received a severe shock which threw him violently to the ground, and as a result he has sustained very serious and permanent injuries. It appears that, when the strands in the guy wires became loosened and it sagged against the live wire, said guy wire remained at approximately the same angle from the pole as it had been originally placed, and the insulation was not, while it was held at such an angle, below the lowest live wire. The plaintiff insists that a breakage or pulling loose of the strands of the guy wire where it was attached to the pole should have been anticipated by the defendant, and that it was its duty to have so insulated the guy wire that, under any conditions which would cause a sagging of the wire, the insulation would nevertheless be at a point below a place of possible contact with the live wires. Appellant argues that there is no absolute duty upon defendant to insulate its guy wires in any particular manner, but that it is possible for the guy wires to be made so strong and to be placed so firmly in their position at a safe distance from the live wires that insulation would be unnecessary; in other words, that the relative positions of the wires themselves may furnish insulation by means of the intervening air. This is tacitly admitted by the respondent, who contends, however, that whether in the particular case the porcelain insulation was necessary and its absence negligence was a question of fact which was submitted to the jury under proper instructions, and that the jury has found by its verdict that the defendant was guilty of negligence in not insulating the guy wires at a point below the live wires in the same manner in which said guy wire was insulated at a point above the lowest live wire. Our conclusion is in agreement with this contention of the appellant. The duty of the appellant was not an absolute duty to insulate or make the wires safe in any particular manner. Its duty was to make the wires safe under all the exigencies offered by the surrounding circumstances. The strands of the guy wire were obviously either insufficient in strength or insufficiently attached to the pole to retain the guy wire at the proper angle from the live wires under the circumstances presented. Perhaps it was impracticable to make them sufficiently strong or sufficiently securely attached, but, if so, then appellant should have guarded against their breakage. Appellant realized this duty in guarding against breakage at the bottom, and yet it is apparent that the wire gave way more easily at the top than at the bottom when subjected to pressure from the bottom, the point at which it would seem most likely that pressure would be exerted. It therefore appears that this possibility should also have been anticipated and guarded against.

True, in reaching this conclusion the jury should take into consideration the nature of the country in which the pole was situated, the occupations of the persons living thereabouts, the usual precautions taken by electric companies under similar circumstances, and such matters. Fairbairn v. Amer. River Electric Co., 170 Cal. 115, 148 Pac. 788. The jury was instructed, however, in a manner which we think covered this matter. It was instructed at the request of defendant that the owner or operator of an electric plant is not an insurer against injury to other persons; that it has done all the law requires it to do if it has exercised the care in the matter of the construction and maintenance, operation, and inspection of its plant necessary so that the same will not be a source of danger or injury to persons lawfully in the pursuit of their business or pleasure; and that the care which the law exacts from any corporation engaged in operating such an instrumentality is always in proportion to the degree of danger reasonably to be apprehended from the use of the means employed. The jury has followed this instruction, we must presume, and has found that the danger of these strands breaking above or becoming detached from the pole was a danger reasonably to be apprehended. The jury had before them the testimony of Rudolph W. Van Norden, a consulting engineer, who stated that he was familiar with the usual custom of equipment, erection, and maintenance of power pole lines carrying high-tension currents, such as the lines of the defendant; that he was familiar with the construction of guy wires used in connection with such equipment; that there are ways and methods known to electrical men, especially electrical engineers, to guy poles in such a way that there is no danger to persons or property at the foot of the guy wire; and that methods of properly insulating wires were generally known to people skilled in the business before the 21st of April, 1916; that the danger of contact with a guy on which there is a circuit such as the circuit in this case, carrying 10,000 volts, would be obviated by inclosing a breaker or insulator in that guy wire at such a point that if contact between the guy wire and the circuit should occur from any cause whatever, the current could not follow down the guy wire and pass through a person in contact with the guy wire; that if the insulator were not at a point where the guy wire could not touch any power wire, so that there would be a continuation of the circuit to the ground, it would cease to be a safety device. It also appears from the record that the pole is located in a field planted with barley, and that the barley was planted right up to the line of the pole. The barley was being cut and horses were being used in connection with the cutting—all of which is a usual and necessary use of the land on which the pole is situated. We think that the jury was justified in concluding that the defendant should have anticipated that the guy wire might be subjected to sufficient strain by contact with the usual instrumentalities employed in farming operations, to cause a breaking or tearing away of the strands of the wire and a consequent sagging of the wire, and should have insulated its guy wires so as to avoid injury to others in the event of such an occurrence.

[5] Counsel for appellant very ably argues that, even though the negligence of the defendant in not insulating its guy wires be admitted, yet such negligence was not the proximate cause of the injury to Bellah, and that such negligence would not have caused any injury to Bellah except for an independent intervening cause over which the defendant had no control, which was the struggles of the horse during Bellah's attempt to back him off of the wire, causing a breakage or detachment of the strands of the guy wire. We shall consider some of the authorities relied upon by appellant. In the case of Polloni v. Ryland, 28 Cal. App. 51, 151 Pac. 296, the court said, quoting from a federal case:

> "An injury that is not the natural consequence of negligence, and which would not have resulted from it but for the interposition of some new, independent cause that could not have been anticipated, is not actionable."

It is said in the case of Bank of Savings v. Murfey, 68 Cal. at page 462, 9 Pac. at page 847, quoting from Beach on Contributory Negligence:

> "An act is the proximate cause of an event, when, in the natural order of things and under the circumstances, it would necessarily produce that event, when it is the first and directed power producing the result, the causa causans of the schoolmen."

Also, quoting from Cooley on Torts:

> "If the wrong and resulting damages are not known by common experience to be usually and naturally in sequence, and the damage does not, according to the ordinary course of events, follow from the wrong, then the wrong and the damage are not sufficiently conjoined or concatenated, as cause and effect, to support the action."

Was the entanglement of the horse in the wire an "independent cause that could not have been anticipated," as said in the federal case; or was it "in the natural order of things under the circumstances," or would the damage "in the ordinary course of events follow from the wrong," as said by our own Supreme Court? Appellant argues that it had no reason to anticipate such a happening. We think, in view of the physical conditions of the country where the pole was situated and the use to which the land was put, the jury was justified in finding that the defendant had reason to anticipate an accident of the general nature of the one that occurred in this case. It is not necessary that the defendant should have anticipated this precise accident. City of Dixon v. Scott, 181 Ill. 116, 54 N. E. 897. The question of proximate cause was submitted to the jury under proper instructions.

[6] We cannot agree with the appellant that Bellah was guilty of contributory negligence. He had the right to assume that the guy wire was safe, either by reason of its strength or by reason of proper insulation. He was doing nothing unusual or foolhardy for a man charged with his duties and performing his work, in assisting the horse in disentangling itself from the wires.

[7, 8] Appellant further contends that the complaint has no express allegation that the plaintiff is an insurance carrier, and that it is only by such an allegation that plaintiff can bring itself within the terms of the law subrogating it to the rights of Bellah. The amended complaint alleges that prior to the 21st day of April, 1916, the plaintiff, by its policy of insurance in writing, did insure the said Max Flentge and his employés at the time of the making of the policy; that said policy was written under and in conformity with the terms of a certain act of the Legislature, designated as the "Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act," etc. (St. 1913, p. 279). This allegation, under the law respecting insurance companies, carries with it an implied allegation that the plaintiff was an insurance carrier. The omission of an allegation necessarily implied from other allegations is immaterial. Richter v. Union Land, etc., Co., 129 Cal. 367, 62 Pac. 39.

[9] Appellant also contends that there was a failure on the part of the plaintiff to prove that the policy of insurance which was introduced in evidence had been properly executed by the plaintiff company, and that therefore there was a failure of proof of the allegation that Bellah had made a lawful claim to the insurance company which is necessary, under the compensation act, to work a subrogation of the insurance carrier. The question arose over proof of the making of a lawful claim by Bellah. If it be true that proof of the execution of the policy was insufficient, there is yet sufficient proof that the company ratified its policy and paid the money to Bellah under said policy. Bellah's claim would be a lawful claim whether made under a policy which had been properly issued in the beginning, or which had been defectively executed by the agents of the company and afterwards ratified by said company. In either event the policy would be good, and the claim would be lawful. We think there was sufficient proof that a lawful claim had been made by Bellah and paid by the plaintiff company, to entitle the plaintiff to be subrogated to the rights of the injured man.

The other objections of the appellant we consider to be without merit and to require no discussion here. Counsel for appellant conceded upon the oral argument that if defendant was liable under the law the judgment was not excessive. It therefore appears that substantial justice has been done between the parties.

TODD v. ORCUTT. (Civ. 2919.)

1. Negligence 🔑85(1)—Defense of contributory negligence applies to children.

The defense of contributory negligence may be invoked in actions on behalf of children who are of an age sufficient to exercise discretion for the avoidance of an injury to themselves, the age of discretion depending on the circumstances and the intelligence and capacity of the child.

2. Negligence 🔑142—Finding as to child's contributory negligence not required by pleadings.

Where the complaint on behalf of an infant run down by a motorcar alleged that he was a child of tender years, but did not allege that he was non sui juris in so far as legal accountability for contributory negligence is concerned, no such issue was tendered, and no finding thereon was necessary.

3. Infants 🔑102—In actions by guardian ad litem pleading must allege and court find infant's age.

In action by guardian ad litem of an infant, it is proper for the complaint to allege, and the court to find, the age of the infant; for, unless the infancy exists, suit could not be brought by guardian ad litem.

4. Appeal and error 🔑931(1)—Correct rule as to contributory negligence of infant presumed applied by courts.

In an action by infant for injuries where the court trying case without a jury found against the infant, it will be presumed on appeal that the court applied the correct rule of law as to contributory negligence.

5. Negligence 🔑85(2)—Care required of child depends on age and circumstances.

A child is only required to exercise the degree of care expected from a child of his age and capacity under like circumstances.

6. Negligence 🔑111(1)—General averment of negligence sufficient.

A complaint charging negligence in general terms is sufficient.

7. Trial 🔑404(4)—Findings construed as a whole.

Findings are to be read as a whole, and, if possible, are to be interpreted so as to uphold the general judgment, and, unless there is an irreconcilable conflict between the general and special findings, the general ones will govern.

8. Highways 🔑184(6)—Motorist not conclusively negligent though driving on wrong side of highway.

Under the Motor Vehicle Act in force at the time an infant was struck by an automobile (St. 1913, p. 646, § 20), a motorist, though he was driving on the left side of the highway, the right being occupied by the tracks of a trolley, cannot be conclusively presumed negligent and to have been violating the act, though there was no express finding that it was not practicable for him to drive on the right side of the road.

9. HIGHWAYS ⚷184(6)—GENERAL AND SPECIAL FINDINGS IN ACTION FOR INJURIES BY AUTOMOBILE NOT CONFLICTING.

In an action on behalf of an infant run down on a highway by a motorcar, held, that the general finding that the motorist was not guilty of negligence was not in conflict with a special finding that he was driving on the left-hand side of the road, it being found that the right-hand side was occupied by a trolley line, for it may well be assumed in favor of the general finding that it was not practicable to drive a motorcar on the right-hand side of the road, and so the motorist did not violate the Motor Vehicle Act.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by Harold Todd, infant, by I. J. Todd, his guardian ad litem, against W. W. Orcutt. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Drew Pruitt, John F. Imel, and C. C. Caswell, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. A boy nine years of age, brought this action by his guardian ad litem, to recover damages for personal injuries caused by an automobile driven by defendant. The case was tried by the court without a jury. Judgment was given for defendant, and plaintiff appeals therefrom.

The accident occurred on Monte Bella road, which, east of the city limits of the city of Los Angeles, is an extension of Stephenson avenue and runs in an easterly direction from the city limits. It is crossed by Bonnie Beach place. It was at a point 30 to 40 feet east of the easterly line of Bonnie Beach place, and approximately in the center line of Monte Bella road, that defendant's automobile collided with plaintiff. The complaint alleges the negligence in general language, as follows:

> "On the 3d day of June, 1915, the defendant * * * operated, guided, ran and conducted said automobile in such a careless, negligent, reckless, wrongful and unlawful manner that said automobile * * * ran into, upon and over the plaintiff."

It also is alleged in the complaint that—

> "At the time of said accident, said plaintiff was a child of tender years, and it was without any fault on his part that caused or contributed to said injury."

Defendant, answering, denied the negligence as alleged, and also denied that the injury was without any fault on plaintiff's part contributing thereto. As a special defense, defendant alleged that whatever injuries were sustained by plaintiff were due to his own contributory negligence in running in front of the automobile. In its findings the court found that, at the time of the accident, defendant was operating his automobile "in a proper and careful manner, and without any negligence on his part"; also, that plaintiff "was guilty of negligence which proximately caused his collision with defendant's automobile." The case comes to us on the judgment roll without any bill of exceptions or transcript of the evidence.

[1] Appellant complains of the findings because the court did not specifically find whether or not plaintiff "was sui juris and chargeable with contributory negligence which would preclude a recovery of damages for his injury." Every minor is, of course, non sui juris in the broad acceptation of the term. But counsel, we assume, by their use of the language just quoted from their brief, intend that the term should be taken in a narrower sense and mean to be understood as claiming that the findings are insufficient merely because the court did not specifically find that plaintiff's age was such that he could not entirely escape all legal accountability.

An infant may be so very young that, like an idiot or a lunatic, no negligence may legally be imputed to him. But not all infants are in that class. "It is," says Mr. Beach, "a question of capacity, and it has been found a very difficult question, and has been, in many cases, a very fruitful source of controversy as to what age is sufficient to constitute an infant sui juris. Unless the child is exceedingly young it is usually left to the jury to determine the measure of care required of the particular child in the actual circumstances of the case. Where there is no doubt as to the capacity of the child, at one extreme or the other, to avoid damage, the court will decide it as a matter of law." Beach on Contributory Negligence, § 117. It has been held that a child seven or eight years of age is capable of taking ordinary care of himself, and may be guilty of negligence. Gillespie v. McGowan, 100 Pa. 144, 45 Am. Rep. 365; Messenger v. Dennie, 137 Mass. 197, 50 Am. Rep. 295. The rule is that the defense of contributory negligence may be invoked in actions by or on behalf of children who are of an age sufficient to exercise discretion for the avoidance of injury to themselves. The law does not fix this age of discretion. It may depend upon the character of the injury, the circumstances under which it occurred, and the size, intelligence, and capacity of the child.

[2-5] The complaint here, while alleging that plaintiff was nine years of age at the time of the accident, did not allege that he was non sui juris, in so far as legal accountability for contributory negligence is concerned. No such issue was tendered, and no such finding was necessary. The complaint does allege, and the answer admits, that at the time of the accident plaintiff was "a child of tender years." It was not necessary nor proper to allege or find that, because plaintiff was a child of tender years, he was not sui juris or chargeable with contributory negligence. It, of course, was proper for the complaint to allege, and the court find, the age of plaintiff. This was necessary in order to show that it was proper for him to appear by a guardian ad litem. But with respect to the question of negligence on his part, his age was only a probative fact, as much so as if, had he been an adult, he were blind or deaf. The ultimate question of fact is: Was he guilty of contributory negligence? And we must assume that, in solving that question, the court applied the correct rule of law, which is that plaintiff was required to exercise the same degree of care, no more and no less, than would be expected from a child of his age, or which children of his years ordinarily exercise under like circumstances, taking into consideration, not only the boy's age, but his capacity for understanding. Studer v. Southern Pacific Co., 121 Cal. 400, 53 Pac. 942, 66 Am. St. Rep. 39; George v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 126 Cal. 357, 58 Pac. 819, 46 L. R. A. 829, 77 Am. St. Rep. 184; Quill v. Southern Pacific Co., 140 Cal. 268, 73 Pac. 991; Cahill v. Stone Co., 167 Cal. 126, 138 Pac. 712.

[6, 7] Appellant contends that the judgment is not suported by the findings. The basis for this claim is that the details of the accident, as disclosed by the court's findings, show, according to appellant, that respondent was guilty of negligence and that appellant was not. As already pointed out, the complaint charged defendant's alleged negligence in general terms, as, indeed, plaintiff had the right to do. Stephenson v. Southern Pacific Co., 102 Cal. 143, 34 Pac. 618, 36 Pac. 407; Pigeon v. Fuller, 156 Cal. 691, 105 Pac. 976; Stein v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 368, 113 Pac. 663. The negligence, thus pleaded, was the ultimate fact. Upon this issue the court found against plaintiff, in a finding that directly traverses the negligence as alleged in the complaint. The court might have stopped with this finding negativing negligence on the part of defendant as alleged in the complaint, but it went on and found, in more detail, certain other facts—facts which appellant claims are inconsistent with the court's findings that defendant was not, and that plaintiff himself was, guilty of negligence. Findings are to be read as a whole, and, if possible, are to be interpreted so as to uphold the judgment. And unless there is an irreconcilable conflict between the general finding that defendant was not negligent and the findings as to the particulars upon which appellant relies, the judgment must be affirmed.

[8, 9] The court found that at the place where the collision occurred the street, from curb to curb, is 56 feet wide; that on the south side of the street are two interurban street car tracks; that the most northerly rail is 5 or 6 feet south of the center line of the street; and that "by reason of these said street car tracks and the condition of the street on the south side of said street, the traffic, both east and west along said Stephenson avenue, is confined almost entirely to the northerly half of said street." Defendant was driving in an easterly direction. So that, ordinarily, it would have been his duty to keep to the south of the center line of the street—that is, on the right-hand side of the highway. The court further found that, at the time of the collision, defendant was driving his automobile along the right-hand side "of said traveled portion of said roadway," i. e., along the right-hand side of that portion of the highway that lies to the north of the most northerly rail; that he was operating his automobile in a careful manner; but that plaintiff, while attempting to cross from the north to the south side of the street, suddenly emerged from behind a vehicle, and before defendant was aware of his presence so as to avoid a collision, ran against defendant's automobile and was injured.

It is provided by the Motor Vehicle Act then in force (section 20, Stats. 1913, p. 646), that the driver of an automobile, "wherever practicable, shall travel on the right-hand side" of the highway. The court did not find, in so many words, that it was not "practicable" for respondent to drive on the right-hand side of the road. Appellant contends, therefore, that because the court found that respondent was not driving on the right-hand side of the road, negligence must conclusively be presumed in the absence of a finding expressly declaring that it was not practicable for him to drive to the right of the center line of the street. It does not clearly appear from the findings that respondent's automobile was wholly to the left of the center line of the road. We shall, however, resolve the doubt in appellant's favor and assume that the automobile was wholly to the left of the center line. But even so, the findings do not disclose any irreconcilable conflict between the general finding of an absence of negligence on respondent's part and the more particular details of the accident as disclosed by the other findings. If the court had expressly found that, at this particular place, it was "practicable" for respondent to drive on the right-hand side of the street, there then would have been a basis for the claim of a direct antagonism between the general finding that defendant was not negligent and the other facts found by the court. But the findings do not say that it was practicable for respondent to drive on the right-hand side of the highway at the place where the accident happened. There is therefore no irreconcilable conflict in the findings of the court. Furthermore, from the facts found it may well be that, at the place where the accident happened, it in fact was not practicable to drive on the right-hand side of the highway, and that it was proper to drive, as the court found respondent did, on the right-hand side of the "traveled portion," i. e., on the right-hand side of that part of the street which lies north of the most northerly of the interurban street car rails. The greater portion of the southerly half of the road seems to have been occupied by the interurban street car tracks. It is possible there were ties between the rails that stood up above the general surface of the road. At any rate, the findings state that it was because of "the condition of the street on the south side," as well as by reason of the presence of the street car tracks, that traffic, both east and west, was "confined almost entirely to the northerly half of said street." If, as is quite possible, there were large ties, above ground, between the rails, almost all of the southerly half of the highway would have been unsuitable for ordinary vehicular travel, and its use by automobiles may not have been practicable. Under such circumstances, negligence cannot be conclusively presumed from the fact that defendant was driving on the right-hand side of that part of the street along which horse-drawn and motor vehicles, going in either direction, ordinarily travel. See Stohlman v. Martin, 28 Cal. App. 338, 152 Pac. 319.

DODGE v. CHAPMAN et al. (Civ. 2926.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⚷33 — PAROL AGREEMENT IF WITHOUT CONSIDERATION INEFFECTUAL TO MODIFY LEASE.

Checks given by tenants for a reduced amount of rent, and receipts given therefor by the landlord in full payment, were not evidence of any contract on the landlord's part to reduce the rent; the landlord's agreement, therefore, to receive a reduced rent for a limited time, was not in writing, and, being without consideration, was ineffectual to modify the lease.

2. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY ⚷99—SURETIES FOR TENANTS NOT RELEASED BY LANDLORD'S ACCEPTANCE FOR A TIME OF REDUCED RENTAL.

Sureties on the bond of tenants were not released as for any alteration of the tenant's contract by the landlord's act in accepting for several months amounts of rent less than was due under the lease, for which he gave receipts in full.

3. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY ⚷88 — ACCEPTANCE FOR A TIME OF REDUCED RENT NOT DISCHARGE OF SURETIES IN LEASE.

Acceptance by a landlord from his tenants of a reduced rent for several months, for which he gave receipts in full, in no way altered or extended the liability of the sureties on the tenants' bond in the penal sum of $3,000 to work their discharge.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by S. C. Dodge against J. W. Chapman, W. L. Altenburg, and others. From judgment against plaintiff as to the named defendants, he appeals. Reversed, and case remanded for new trial as to the named defendants.

W. J. Ford and Ford & Hammon, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Arthur Wright and George W. Somerville, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SLOANE, J. The plaintiff, Dodge, executed a lease of a rooming house property to one Plevros. The lessee was not privileged to assign without lessor's written consent. An agreement was made whereby plaintiff consented to an assignment negotiated by Plevros to the defendants Chas. D. Chapman and Anna E. Chapman, husband and wife, on condition that the Chapmans furnish a bond in the penal sum of $3,000 for their faithful performance of the conditions of the lease. The Chapmans furnished such bond, with themselves as principals, and the defendants J. W. Chapman and W. L. Altenburg as sureties. The assignment was made by the original lessee, and accepted by the assignees; and the lessor, plaintiff here, indorsed on the lease his written consent to the assignment. The lease was for a term of several years, and the stipulated rent for the period covered by this action was $485.75 per month, payable in advance. The rent payments were kept up for a considerable time, but ultimately became in arrears in the sum of $1,863; whereupon the lessor, Dodge, brought this action against the Chapmans, assignees under the lease, and J. W. Chapman and W. L. Altenburg, sureties on the bond. The assignees and principals on the bond, Chas. D. Chapman and Anna E. Chapman, defaulted, but the two sureties answered, setting up against their liability as guarantors, among other defenses, that the plaintiff, lessor, had entered into an agreement with their principals subsequent to the execution of the bond, whereby the obligation for which they were guarantors had been changed, and that they were thereby exonerated from liability thereon. The trial court found against them as to the other defenses, but made a finding in their favor as to exoneration by reason of unauthorized modification of the lease contract. Judgment was for the plaintiff against the defaulting principals, but against him as to the sureties on the bond. From this latter part of the judgment plaintiff appeals.

As the findings were against the respondents on the other grounds of their defense, and they are not appealing, the only question to be considered here is whether the evidence justified the findings of the trial court that they were exonerated from liability as guarantors by a subsequent alteration of the lease contract.

[1, 2] The alleged alteration or modification of the obligations under the lease rests on the following undisputed facts: After the assignees under the lease had been in possession for a few months, they complained to the plaintiff, their lessor, that they were, during the dull summer months, unable to pay the full stipulated monthly rental of $485.75, and the lessor orally consented to remit from the amount the sum of $50 per month, for the months of June, July, and August of that year, and to accept $435.75 for each of these months in full satisfaction of the rentals for that period. This arrangement was made on the 2d of June, 1914, and thereupon the assignees of the lease gave him, their lessor, a check for $435.75 for the month of June, and he in turn gave them a receipt for the month's rent, designating therein the full monthly rental of $485.75. This procedure was repeated for the months of July and August, and was continued for two or three months thereafter, when the assignees of the lease defaulted in, and entirely discontinued, the payment of any rent at all, resulting in the arrears of rentals which form the basis of this action. There was no consideration to plaintiff for the reduction of rent granted, and the agreement to make the reduction was not in writing. The trial court found that this agreement was an alteration of the lease contract, and that it was "partly oral and partly written"; but to reach this conclusion the court erroneously, we think, construed the checks given for the reduced amount, and the receipts given therefor in full payment, as being memoranda or writings constituting part of such an agreement. These instruments may be evidence tending to show that the plaintiff received a less amount than the lease called for in full payment of the monthly rental, but they do not evidence any contract to reduce the rent. The receipt, which was the only writing signed by the plaintiff relating to this matter, on its face, in fact, indicates that the full amount of the rents was collected. The checks drawn by the assignees of the lease merely constitute an instrument of payment of a certain sum of money, and have no more evidentiary force than would bank bills received in payment under the same circumstances. The agreement, then, to receive for a limited time, a reduced monthly rental was not in writing, and was supported by no consideration. As an agreement in modification of the lease, it therefore was without force or effect. There was no period of time, under the lease, when any installment of rent was due and unpaid, that the terms of the lease could not have been enforced for the full amount. In legal effect, then, we have merely this condition: For a period of several months the lessor accepted, without any binding agreement or obligation to do so, a less amount than the lease called for in full satisfaction of the rentals for that period. Conceding that the obligation to pay the stipulated monthly rental was satisfied by these payments, yet the contract was not altered any more than it would have been if the full amount had been paid. It was no concern of the sureties how these payments were made. The landlord could have taken his pay in "chips and whetstones" if he saw fit. He could have given back to his tenants the whole amount of the rents received, had he wanted to, without changing the obligations of the lease.

Section 2819 of the Civil Code provides that "a guarantor is exonerated, except so far as he may be indemnified by the principal, if by any act of the creditor, without the consent of the guarantor, the original obligation of the principal is altered in any respect, or the remedies or rights of the creditor against the principal, in respect thereto, in any way impaired or suspended." It might just as reasonably be argued that the acceptance, when due, of the full amount of monthly rentals called for by the lease, "alters" the original obligation of the principal, and "impairs and suspends the rights of the creditor against the principal," as to make such contention as to the acceptance of a partial payment in full satisfaction. Either way it does, in a sense, alter the obligation. It terminates it. But the terms of the contract have not been changed. If the lessor had entered into a binding and enforceable agreement changing the terms of the lease as to the monthly rentals, a different question would be presented. But here the verbal agreement on which the reduced payments were received was invalid. "A promise by a creditor, which for any cause is void, or voidable by him at his option, does not alter the obligation or suspend or impair the remedy," within the meaning of section 2819. (Civ. Code, § 2820). The acceptance of a lesser amount in satisfaction of the monthly installment then due was a matter outside of, and entirely independent of, the lease contract. The alleged oral agreement never had any executory force as a contract modifying the lease, however effective the payments may have become after their acceptance in full satisfaction of the rent installments.

Such seems to have been the effect of the ruling of the Supreme Court in Sinnige v. Oswald, 170 Cal. 55, 148 Pac. 203, and in Estate of McDougald, 146 Cal. 196, 79 Pac. 875. In the former of these decisions, where it was claimed that the lease was changed by the acceptance of a reduced rent, the court says:

> "The finding that there was no change in the terms of the lease in the alleged particular of reducing the rent is sustained by the evidence. Concessions of the kind that were shown by the defendants, when supported by a consideration, are valid to the extent that a lower rent has been tendered and accepted as satisfaction in full of the installments thus paid. They are not sufficient to establish a change in the written contract so as to affect the amount of future installments."

In the case just cited there was also involved the liability of guarantors, as in the case at bar; but the guarantors there did not raise the question of exoneration by the alleged change in the terms of the rentals. That such voluntary reductions in rent do not discharge guarantors is held in the following decisions: Preston v. Huntingdon, 67 Mich. 139, 34 N. W. 279; Dodd v. Vucovich, 38 Mont. 188, 99 Pac. 296; Ullmann Realty Co. v. Hollander, 66 Misc. Rep. 348, 123 N. Y. Supp. 772. The rule contended for by respondents, and laid down by section 2819 of the Civil Code, that any unauthorized alteration in the terms and obligations of the contract secured releases the sureties, and this irrespective of whether or not the sureties are injured or benefited by the change, is conceded. They have a right to stand on the precise contract guaranteed by them, and are bound by no other. But, as already pointed out, the alteration must be one that affects the executory character of the contract.

We find that most of the authorities presented by respondents are not applicable here, for the reason that they deal with a state of facts which show that valid and enforceable alterations in the obligation under consideration had been made. Perhaps the strongest case presented by respondents is that of Driscoll v. Winters, 122 Cal. 65, 54 Pac. 387, where the guarantor was exonerated because of a change in the contract for which he had pledged himself, which was for the payment by his principal for 16 three-gallon cans of milk daily for the period of one year. It appears in that case that "the contract was modified to the extent that Winters [the principal] should purchase only 13 cans of milk daily." Just how this change in the obligation of the principal was effected does not appear; but the court finds that the contract was altered in this respect, and we are bound to presume that it was done in such a way as to make a valid and binding change in the terms of the contract. Respondents rely, also, on the rule laid down in Tuohy v. Woods, 122 Cal. 665, 55 Pac. 683; but in that case the creditor gave a written extension, for a valuable consideration, on the liability covered by the guaranty. As against this we find, in the case of Stroud v. Thomas, 139 Cal. 274, 72 Pac. 1008, 96 Am. St. Rep. 111, where the surety claimed his discharge by reason of an extension of time of payment of the liability for which he had become a surety, that there was no exoneration of the surety by reason of the fact that the agreement for extension was invalid and unenforceable for want of consideration. The court says:

> "The principal defense in the case is that arising upon the extension of time. The court finds that on August 1, 1898, after the note became due, the plaintiff received $150 on account of overdue interest, and thereupon agreed to extend the time of payment one year, and that the agreement was without consideration. * * * This payment * * * merely satisfied to that extent the debt due, and did not constitute a consideration for the agreement. A promise made without any consideration is not binding. Consequently the agreement for the extension of time was not a valid promise, and would not bind the plaintiff to forbear suit upon the note during the time specified in the agreement."

It is true that the sureties' liability arose here on the original instrument, and was not an independent contract of guaranty; but the principle involved is applicable, as the surety would have been discharged from liability if the agreement extending time to the principal obligor had been enforceable. "An agreement for forbearance founded on an unenforceable agreement, even though carried out by the creditor, will not discharge the surety." Brandt on Suretyship (4th Ed.) § 376; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, pp. 826, 829; Halliday v. Hart, 30 N. Y. 474; Ingels v. Sutliff, 36 Kan. 444, 13 Pac. 828.

[3] There is no merit in respondents' argument that the reduction in the rent in this case extended the liability of the sureties. The $3,000 named in the bond is the amount of the penalty of the bond, and the liability of the sureties extended to any unpaid rents during the term of the lease, not exceeding the aggregate amount of $3,000. The acceptance of a reduced rent, when taken in full satisfaction of the amount due, in no way changed the liability on the bond. We think the trial court misapprehended the effect, as evidence of a written agreement, of the checks and receipts exchanged between the parties in the reduced payment of the monthly rentals.

Appellant asks for an order directing judgment in his favor against the sureties on his bond. This we cannot do under the findings.

The judgment is reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial as to the defendants J. W. Chapman and W. L. Altenburg.

JUDSON MFG. CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

1. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑375(2) — WORKMEN PERFORMING "SERVICE" ON ARRIVAL AT PLACE OF WORK.

An employé, who has arrived at his employer's premises and is thereon for purpose of immediately commencing his actual work, is performing "service" incidental to his employment, within Workmen's Compensation Act, relative to right of compensation for his injury then occurring.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Service.]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑375(2)—INJURY TO WORKMEN CROSSING TRACKS IN PLANT "ARISING OUT OF AND IN COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT."

Accident to employé on his way to work, by being struck by another's train, in use of a necessary mode of ingress, across railroad tracks, provided and required by the employer, and as between employer and employés constituting part of the employer's plant, arose out of and occurred in the course of his employment, within Workmen's Compensation Act.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Course of Employment.]

Shaw and Melvin, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank.

Prosperina Gallia was awarded compensation by the Industrial Accident Board for death of Felice Gallia, and the Judson Manufacturing Company, employer, and the California Casualty Indemnity Exchange, insurer, apply for certiorari. Award affirmed.

Rehearing denied; SHAW and MELVIN, JJ., dissenting. ANGELLOTTI, C. J., votes for rehearing.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Michele Cimbalo, of San Francisco, for respondent Gallia.

Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco (A. E. Graupner and Warren H. Pillsbury, both of San Francisco, of counsel), for other respondents.

LENNON, J. Certiorari to review the action of the Industrial Accident Commission in awarding compensation for the death of one Felice Gallia, who, on April 1, 1918, was struck and killed by an engine operated by the Southern Pacific Company while he was pursuing his way to work along a path crossing the latter's tracks.

Gallia was a laborer in the employ of the Judson Manufacturing Company; his duties consisting in attending an open-hearth furnace. The furnace and factory of the company are situated on the east shore of San Francisco Bay. The premises are bounded on the west by the bay shore and on the east by the right of way on which the Southern Pacific Company maintains numerous tracks for its through and local trains. A path crossing this right of way, and leading from the end of a public street at its eastern extremity directly to the gate of the factory yard at its western extremity, was the sole means of ingress and egress for the employés of the Judson Manufacturing Company to and from its factory and furnace. It was, moreover, the means of access required and authorized by the company. This path was not a public highway. The crossing was, in fact, dominant as to user in the employer, servient to its purposes, and intimately associated with its plant as a part of its necessary establishment. The company had, indeed, even claimed a lawful easement over the crossing for the purposes of the plant. At the time of his injury and death, which occurred about five minutes before the beginning of his shift, Gallia was proceeding from his residence to the factory, and had reached a point on the path in question about 20 feet east of the factory gate.

The Industrial Accident Commission found that Gallia's death resulted from an injury arising out of his employment and received while he was performing a service growing out of, incidental to, and in the course of that employment. Petitioner insists that the facts do not support the finding.

[1, 2] The right to compensation is by no means restricted to those cases where the injury occurs while the employé is actually presently manipulating the tools of his calling. It would be unnecessary to the decision of this case to attempt to formulate a precise and comprehensive definition of the term "service," as used in the statute now under consideration. It seems to us, however, that when an employé has arrived at the premises of his employer, and is thereon for the purpose of immediately commencing his actual work, he is performing service incidental to his employment. The facts stated above show that as between the employer and his employés the path across the Southern Pacific Company's right of way was in fact a part of the employer's plant, and that at the time of his death Gallia was there solely in the line of his duty as an employé. It would be a harsh and indefensible rule that would withhold compensation from an employé engaged in traversing a dangerous pathway in his employer's building on his way to his own particular place of work therein, on the ground that he had not yet entered upon the real work of his employment. We can perceive no difference in principle between such a case and the case at bar.

There have been a great number of cases in other jurisdictions in which the question here involved has been discussed—namely, as to the point at which a person who has been injured while away from his actual place of work leaves his employment. The line is a very fine one. Mole v. Wadworth, 6 B. W. C. C. 129; Richards v. Morris, [1915] 1 K. B. 221; Gane v. Norton Hill Co., 2 B. W. C. C. 42; Moore v. Manchester Liners, 3 B. W. C. C. 527; In re Sundine, 218 Mass. 1, 105 N. E. 433, L. R. A. 1916A, 318—in which compensation was awarded. De Constantin v. Pub. Serv. Com., 75 W. Va. 32, 83 S. E. 88, L. R. A. 1916A, 329; Nelson R. Constr. Co. v. Ind. Com. of Ill., 286 Ill. 632, 122 N. E. 113; Ocean Accident, etc., Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comn., 173 Cal. 313, 159 Pac. 1041, L. R. A. 1917B, 336—in which compensation was denied.

In the case last cited we find a statement to the effect that all those accidental injuries which occur while the employé is going to or returning from his work are excluded from the benefits of the act. This sweeping dictum was not necessary to the decision of the case. The accident there considered occurred, it is true, while the deceased was attempting to reach his place of employment; but the mode of ingress which he undertook to use was not one provided and required by his employer, it was in no sense a part of the premises where his work was to be performed, and, finally, it was not in fact a mode of ingress to his work at all. As remarked by Lord Loreburn in Walters v. Staveley Co., 4 B. W. C. C. 305:

> "In applying this act one has to look to the words of the act itself. * * * Other cases are only useful as illustrations of the way in which these words are applied, and nothing, I think, is more fruitless than to attempt to argue by analogy from one set of facts to another set of facts."

This very danger is illustrated by the citation of that case in support of the dictum in the Ocean Accident, etc., Co. Case. It appears from a careful reading of the opinions of their lordships that their decision in the Walters Case was rested solely upon the ground that the contract of employment there involved did not contemplate the use of the pathway where the injury occurred as a necessary incident to gaining access to the place of employment. The facts, in other words, failed to show that as between the company and its employés the path was in fact a part of the company's plant. Gilmour v. Dorman Co., 4 B. W. C. C. 279, also cited in the Ocean Accident, etc., Co. Case, is similarly distinguishable from the case at bar. On the other hand, it appears from Moore v. Manchester Liners, supra, and from other cases cited by the court in the Ocean Accident, etc., Co. Case, as well as from the additional cases which we have cited, supra, that an injury due to the necessary means of access to the employer's premises, required by the employer and contemplated in the employment, is compensable.

We are of the opinion that the facts here disclosed warranted the finding that the accident by which Gallia met his death arose out of and occurred in the course of his employment. It follows that the applicant is entitled to compensation.

The award is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.; OLNEY, J.

SHAW, J. I dissent. The Constitution authorizes the Legislature to create a liability for compensation to be made to an employé, by the community at large through the medium of the employer, for an injury to such employé incurred in the course of his employment. Const. art. 20, § 21, as adopted in 1911; Western I. Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 694, 707, 151 Pac. 398. To this the Legislature has added the condition that the injury must be one that was sustained by accident arising out of the employment. Workmen's Compensation Law 1913 (St. 1913, p. 283) § 12(a); Act 1917 (St. 1917, p. 834) § 6(a). Gallia was employed to work in the factory of the plaintiff. The only entrance to the factory was a gate on the easterly side. From this gate a pathway extended easterly across the adjacent tracks of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company into the end of a public street. This path was commonly used for access to the factory by all persons desiring to enter, and there was no other way or means of access. In going from his home to the factory Gallia was crossing the tracks aforesaid upon this path, and while so doing he was struck by a Southern Pacific engine and killed.

His contract of employment did not provide that he was to be considered in service while going to the factory from his home, nor did it require him to perform any service while crossing said tracks along said path. It did not specify the route he was to travel in going to and from the factory. At the time he was struck he was not engaged in any work or service for the plaintiff; he had not yet reached the place of employment or the factory, but was still on his way thereto. The engine belonged to the Southern Pacific Company, and was in no way connected with the business of the plaintiff or the work Gallia was to do.

The accident had no more to do with his employment than would an accident which occurred any place on the public street by which he reached the path. His act in going there may have been a thing done "in the course of his employment," according to a few rather strained constructions of that phrase in some of the decisions; but that meaning is against the weight of authority. Bradbury's Workmen's Compensation Law (3d Ed.) p. 468. But I know of no case which holds that an injury from an accident so occurring is one "arising out of" the employment. It could be said to do so only upon the theory that the employment created the necessity of going to the place of employment and that this necessity was the cause or occasion of his being in the place of danger. But exactly the same thing could be said if he had been injured anywhere in the street along his usual and proper route from his home to the factory. And so it might be said that almost anything that occurs to the employé while absent from the place of work arises directly or in natural sequence out of his having been, or being required to be, at the place of employment. But the authorities are unanimous that the phrase does not have this comprehensive meaning. I can see no substantial distinction between this case and our decision in Ocean, etc., Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 173 Cal. 313, 159 Pac. 1041, L. R. A. 1917B, 336, and the many similar cases cited therein, and in Bradbury's Workmen's Compensation Law, above cited, to the effect that the employer is not liable for an injury to the employé during his journey to or from his place of work.

1. TAXATION ⚷148—RAILROAD NOT LIABLE TO TAX ON RECEIPTS FROM SEPARATE FERRY PLANT.

The gross receipts of a railroad company from operation of a ferry, entirely separate and distinct from its railroad business and unconnected therewith, were not taxable by the state board of equalization at 5¼ per cent., under Const. art. 13, § 14.

2. TAXATION ⚷144 — RAILROAD PROPERTY USED EXCLUSIVELY IN ITS OPERATION ONLY SUBJECT TO TAX.

Const. art. 13, § 14, subd. (a), providing that all railroad companies shall annually pay a tax on their franchises, roadways, rolling stock, "and other property or any part thereof, used exclusively in the operation of their business in the state," refers by the phrase "all railroad companies" and "other property or any part thereof," etc., only to the kinds of business which are declared to be so taxable in the opening paragraph of section 14, and includes only property used exclusively in the operation of such business.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Three actions by the Southern Pacific Company against Friend W. Richardson, Treasurer of the State of California. From judgments for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Raymond Benjamin and Frank L. Guerena, Deputy Attys. Gen., for appellant.

Henley C. Booth, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. In each of these cases the defendant appeals from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff. Each case is an action to recover taxes paid to the state under protest for a single fiscal year ending on June 30th. Case No. 8912 was for $21,415.26, paid for the year ending in 1916; case No. 8913, for $23,507.98, paid for the year ending in 1917; and case No. 8914, for $25,920.31, paid for the year ending in 1918.

These taxes were levied by the state board of equalization, under the assumed authority of section 14, article 13, of the Constitution. The sole question for determination is whether or not the state board was correct in the position that the plaintiff was liable, under this section, for the taxes upon the gross receipts from operation of the particular property upon which these several amounts were assessed. The Southern Pacific Company, as is well known, operates an extensive system of railways within the state. As adjuncts thereto, at its Oakland and Alameda rail terminals it operates a number of ferryboats, connecting with its railway lines, to carry its freight and passengers between said terminals and the city of San Francisco, in order to complete the carriage from its different lines of railway to that city.

In addition to these railroad lines and connecting ferry lines, it operates a system of ferryboats between San Francisco and Oakland, known as the "Creek Route." These boats carry passengers and freight from a slip on the San Francisco side to a point in the estuary between Oakland and Alameda near the foot of Broadway in the city of Oakland. They do not connect with any railroad line of the plaintiff, nor with any other railroad line. So far as its business is concerned, it could as conveniently be operated by any other company, since it has no connection whatever with the railroad system operated by the plaintiff. An account of the receipts from this business is kept separate and distinct from the receipts from railroad lines and other ferryboats above mentioned belonging to the plaintiff. They are paid into the general treasury of the plaintiff, and are used by it for any purpose it sees fit. Under the direction of the state board, the plaintiff reported thereto for the year ending 1916 that its gross receipts from the operation of the said Creek Route during said fiscal year amounted to $407,909.82. Said report also included other sums as the gross receipts from the railroad lines and other ferryboats above mentioned. The state board computed the sum of 5¼ per cent. upon said sum as the amount of taxes to be assessed against said plaintiff on account of the gross receipts from said Creek Route, which sum the plaintiff thereupon paid under protest. A similar process took place with respect to the other cases.

The decision of the case depends upon the interpretation to be given to the language of section 14, above referred to. The contention on behalf of the state is that it authorizes an assessment of the fixed percentage upon the gross receipts from operation of the plaintiff company upon every kind of business which it carries on, whether a railroad business or of some other character not necessary for its railroad business, nor connected therewith. The plaintiff, on the other hand, insists that the section authorizes such tax only upon its railroad property, and the necessary or convenient adjuncts thereto. In order to clearly exhibit the question, we quote the parts of the section which relate thereto, as follows:

> "Sec. 14. Taxes levied, assessed and collected as hereinafter provided upon railroads, including street railways, whether operated in one or more counties; sleeping car, dining car, drawing room car and palace car companies, refrigerator, oil, stock, fruit, and other car-loaning and other car companies operating upon railroads in this state; companies doing express business on any railroad, steamboat, vessel or stage line in this state; telegraph companies; telephone companies; companies engaged in the transmission or sale of gas or electricity; insurance companies; banks, banking associations, savings and loan societies, and trust companies; and taxes upon all franchises of every kind and nature, shall be entirely and exclusively for state purposes, and shall be levied, assessed and collected in the manner hereinafter provided. The word 'companies' as used in this section shall include persons, partnerships, joint stock associations, companies, and corporations.
> "(a) All railroad companies, including street railways, whether operated in one or more counties; all sleeping car, dining car, drawing room car, and palace car companies; all refrigerator, oil, stock, fruit and other car-loaning and other car companies, operating upon the railroads in this state; all companies doing express business on any railroad, steamboat, vessel or stage line in this state; all telegraph and telephone companies; and all companies engaged in the transmission or sale of gas or electricity shall annually pay to the state a tax upon their franchises, roadways, roadbeds, rails, rolling stock, poles, wires, pipes, canals, conduits, rights of way, and other property, or any part thereof used exclusively in the operation of their business in this state computed as follows: Said tax shall be equal to the percentages hereinafter fixed upon the gross receipts from operation of such companies, and each thereof within this state."

[1] The theory advanced on behalf of the state is, in effect, that if any railroad company or person, operating a railroad within this state, should engage in the business of operating another and separate public utility within the state, not of a character taxable exclusively or at all for state purposes under section 14, and not necessary, or convenient for the operation of its or his railroad, nor in any manner connected therewith as an adjunct thereto, the gross receipts from the operation of such separate public utility must be included with the gross receipts from the operation of the railroad system and connections, and the fixed percentage computed upon the whole sum. If this is correct, it would necessarily follow that the property used exclusively in operating such separate public utility would be exempt from local taxation for municipal or county purposes. The interpretation contended for would enlarge section 14 by bringing such separate public service business within its scope, in all such cases, although it is not of a class mentioned therein. It would do more. Section 1 of article 13 of the Constitution provides that all property in the state shall be taxed in proportion to its value, except as otherwise provided in the article. The property of the separate public utility would not be within the exception and it would, under section 1, be subject to local taxation for municipal and county purposes; whereas, under the interpretation claimed for the state, it would be excluded therefrom. This would not only be putting into section 14 a provision not contained in it, and inserting in section 1 an exception not there contained, but it would also be establishing a peculiar and unreasonable discrimination with respect to public utilities or kinds of business of a class not declared to be taxable for state purposes.

To make the proposition clear, if further exposition is necessary, we may take the very case here presented. Ferries are not mentioned in section 14; therefore the property used in the operation of a ferry is not taxable exclusively or at all for state purposes under that section, but is subject to local taxation in proportion to value, under section 1. It will be conceded that all ferries not operated by a railroad company which is also operating a railroad are thus subject to local taxation. Local taxation of all such ferries is authorized by section 3643 of the Political Code, and if they connect more than one county, the stationary property shall be taxed in the county in which it is situated and the intangible property and water craft assessed in equal proportions in the respective counties. But under this claim the mere fact that the Creek Route ferry happens to be operated by the Southern Pacific Company, which is also operating a railroad within the state, would cause the property of this particular ferry to be excluded from taxation for local purposes in the city and county of San Francisco, the county of Alameda and the city of Oakland, and make it taxable exclusively for state purposes under section 14, while all other ferries operating between said counties not owned by a railroad company or operating in connection with a railroad would be taxed only for local purposes. Also, it would follow that, if the Creek Route ferry should hereafter become the property of some other corporation which was not operating a railroad, its property would again become subject to local taxation. Such uncertain and unusual results were clearly not within the contemplation of the framers of section 14 of article 13 of the Constitution.

[2] The appellant argues that since subdivision (a) of section 14, which declares the duty to pay the taxes provided for in the opening paragraph, begins with the phrase, "all railroad companies," and, in describing the kinds of property to be so taxed, closes with the phrase, "and other property, or any part thereof used exclusively in the operation of their business in this state," it must follow that persons or corporations carrying on any business of a kind mentioned in the opening paragraph must be taxed in the same manner, and for state purposes exclusively, upon property which they may have and use exclusively in the operation of a separate public utility business in this state which otherwise would not be so taxable. If the meaning of the phrase "their business in this state" is to be enlarged so as to include any business other than the kinds made taxable by the first paragraph of the section, it could as well be said to include any kind of business carried on by such person or company, such, for example, as a farm, or a dry goods store. This would be absurd and the appellant does not so contend. The argument is not sound. The entire context implies the contrary. The only reasonable interpretation is that the phrase refers only to the kinds of business which are declared to be so taxable in the opening paragraph and includes only the property which is used exclusively in the operation of such business. It was so held, in effect, by this court in Lake Tahoe, etc., Co. v. Roberts, 168 Cal. 551, 143 Pac. 786, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1196. We do not mean to suggest that ferryboats and the necessary adjuncts used only to connect separate parts of the railroad line, such as those at Port Costa, or those used only to connect its rail lines with its terminals at San Francisco, are not to be taxed for state purposes only as provided in section 14.

It is ordered that the judgment in each of the above-entitled cases be affirmed.

1. CONTRACTS 🔑169 — TO BE CONSTRUED WITH RESPECT TO SITUATION OF PARTIES.

A contract should be construed with respect to the situation in which the parties were at the time it was made.

2. CONTRACTS 🔑213(1) — CONSTRUCTION OF AGREEMENT TO DRILL OIL WELL DILIGENTLY.

Contract whereby defendant oil development company agreed to drill diligently during the life of plaintiff's options on the land involved held not to require defendant to reach 2,500 feet depth within the period of the options, even if oil were not found, but merely to drill diligently during the life of the options until 2,500 feet depth was reached, or oil in specified quantities found.

3. CONTRACTS 🔑170(2) — CONSTRUCTION BY PARTIES OF OIL WELL DRILLING AGREEMENT.

Defendant oil development company, obligated to drill diligently only during the life of plaintiff's options, or until a depth of 2,500 feet was reached, held not to have construed its contract otherwise by continuing to drill after the period of the options had expired; action referable to its desire to realize on its own investment.

4. CONTRACTS 🔑241 — CONTRACT TO DRILL OIL WELL DURING OPTIONS ALTERED BY TAKING UP OF OPTIONS.

Obligation of defendant oil development company under its contract with plaintiff to drill diligently on land covered by plaintiff's options during the period of the options, or until a depth of 2,500 feet was reached, or oil in specified quantities found, held not changed by defendant's action in taking up the options.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Milton T. Farmer, Judge.

Action by F. R. Burrows and others against the Petroleum Development Company, a corporation. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed.

E. W. Camp, U. T. Clotfelter, M. W. Reed, and Robert Brennan, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John T. Thornton, of San Francisco (F. W. Henshaw and Henshaw, Black & Goldberg, all of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

OLNEY, J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment against it for $40,000 as damages for a breach of contract. The contract was one between the plaintiff Burrows and the defendant, and the other two plaintiffs are interested only as assignees of Burrows of partial interests under the contract. For simplicity in discussion, we shall treat the action as one by Burrows as sole plaintiff. The facts are:

In May, 1909, Burrows held five options for the purchase of adjoining tracts of land in the vicinity of the Kern county oil field. The land had not been explored for oil. Each of the options specified the amount to be paid as purchase price and the time within which it had to be paid. One of the options, which we may call option A, contained no provision for drilling; but each of the others provided as a condition of its continuance during the term specified that the option holder should immediately begin and diligently prosecute the drilling of a well on the land covered by option A.

Shortly after acquiring these options, Burrows assigned them to the defendant under the contract involved here. That contract provided, in effect, that the defendant should immediately begin and diligently prosecute the drilling of a well on the land covered by option A to a depth of at least 2,500 feet, unless oil in certain specified quantities should be sooner found. The alleged breach of contract for which damages are here claimed is the failure of the defendant to drill a well to this depth of 2,500 feet. If oil were not found within this depth in the quantity specified, the contract provided that the defendant had the right to terminate the agreement. On the other hand, if oil were found, the defendant was obligated to exercise the option and purchase the lands, in which case it was to convey certain specified portions thereof equal to three-eighths of the acreage to the plaintiff. The contract also provided that the well should be sunk at a point on the land included in option A to be designated by the plaintiff, but that neither the well nor the governmental subdivision on which it was located should be conveyed to the plaintiff.

Following the making of the contract the defendant began the drilling of a well at a point designated by the plaintiff and proceeded diligently with it. When the well had reached the depth of nearly, but not quite, 2,500 feet, a showing of oil was found, but not in the quantity specified by the contract as relieving the defendant of its obligation to continue drilling, or as imposing on it the obligation to take up the options. The time, however, of option A, which had been extended, was about to expire. It was the key option, as the well was on the land covered by it, and the other options were conditional on drilling a well on that land. The plaintiff and defendant, acting through the plaintiff, attempted to secure a further extension of option A, but were refused. Thereupon, although, as we have said, the defendant was under no obligation to do so, it took up the options and conveyed to the plaintiff the portion of the land which he was to receive.

The defendant continued with the work on the well, but the greatest depth reached was either 2,465 or 2,485 feet, or 35 or 15 feet, as the case may be, short of the specified distance. At this point, through some mishap, which it is not claimed was not reasonably incident to such operations, the well was spoiled. The defendant thereupon promptly started another well, and proceeded with its drilling until a depth of 800 feet or thereabouts was reached, when this well also was spoiled. The defendant then refused to drill again, and this refusal is the alleged breach of contract relied on. There is no allegation or claim that up to this time the defendant had not been proceeding diligently with the drilling as required by the contract. The time when the second well was spoiled, and the defendant ceased drilling, was something over a year and a half after the expiration of the prescribed time of option A as last extended.

The only allegation of damage in the complaint is that the cost of drilling a 2,500-foot well at the point fixed by the contract—such point being on the defendant's, not the plaintiff's, land—would be $40,000. The only proof of damage at the trial was proof of this cost, and this cost is the amount allowed the plaintiff by the judgment of the trial court.

Two questions arise upon the foregoing facts. The first is: Did the refusal of the defendant to go on with drilling after the failure of the second well, and at a time subsequent to the expiration of the period of the options, constitute a breach of its contract? The second is: Assuming a breach, is the cost of such well, as distinguished from its value to the plaintiff—that is, its beneficial effect upon the value of his land, he having no direct interest in the well—the correct measure of damages?

[1, 2] In order to determine whether or not there has been a breach of the contract, it is necessary to determine just what the obligation was which it is claimed was broken. The contract should, of course, be construed with respect to the situation in which the parties were at the time it was made. That situation was that the plaintiff held options merely on the land to be drilled, and that these options would expire at the end of a fixed and rather short period. Under these circumstances the contract transferred the options from the plaintiff to the defendant upon the conditions that the latter was to drill on the land, and, if oil were found in paying quantity, such quantity being specified, it was to take up the options, and that, if the options were taken up, a certain portion of the land was to be conveyed to the plaintiff. The portions of the contract with reference to the defendant's obligations to drill and to take up the options, which are the portions particularly material here, are as follows, epitomizing them in part:

> "First. That the company [the defendant] on or before 22d of May, 1909 (the contract is dated May 8, 1909), shall commence the work of" drilling a well at a designated point, "and will thereafter prosecute the drilling of such well diligently to a depth of at least 2,500 feet unless crude petroleum" in certain specified amounts should be developed sooner. "Accidents, breakage of machinery, and other casualties incident to the drilling of such well shall be excepted in determining whether such well is being or was drilled diligently.
> "Second. That if crude petroleum shall be developed in said well in the quantities above stated, the company shall exercise all or any (and every?) of said options and purchase all or any of said lands in accordance with their terms from the givers of said options if the latter or any of them can convey a title thereto free and clear of incumbrances."

In agreeing upon the foregoing provisions, the parties must have had in mind that the right to drill would expire with the expiration of the options, and that the only way they had as of right to extend this time was to take the options up. Nevertheless, the only provision in the contract requiring their taking up is the one quoted that they shall be taken up if oil in certain quantities is found, in which case the defendant is no longer obliged to continue drilling. It is apparent, therefore, that the parties contemplated both that drilling should cease upon the expiration of the options if they were not taken up, and also that the defendant was under no obligation to take them up unless oil in paying quantities were found before that time.

Nor is there anything in the contract requiring the defendant to reach a depth of 2,500 feet within the period of the options, even if oil were not found. Its obligation is to drill diligently, and the provision relative to reaching a depth of 2,500 feet is merely that the defendant can stop when this depth is reached, even if oil be not found. It is a limitation on the obligation, not an imposing of an affirmative and most drastic burden. There is a very great difference between agreeing to drill diligently during a limited and fairly short time until a depth of 2,500 feet is reached and agreeing absolutely to reach such depth within that time. There is nothing whatever in the contract to support the view that the defendant insured a well 2,500 feet deep within the period of the options, unless oil were found sooner, diligence or no diligence; but, on the contrary, the express language of the obligation is only that the defendant shall "prosecute the drilling of such well diligently."

The necessary construction of the contract, the thing which the parties must of necessity have had in mind, was, therefore, that the defendant's obligation to drill diligently would cease with the expiration of the options, unless sooner terminated by reaching a depth of 2,500 feet or finding oil, and that there was no obligation resting on it to reach that depth within that time, provided only that it drilled diligently. This conclusion can be tested by assuming in this case that the defendant did not take up the options, as it was not required to do, and had gone on, without reaching a depth of 2,500 feet or finding oil, drilling diligently until the options expired and it could no longer drill. Could it be claimed under these circumstances that the defendant had not fulfilled its contract to the letter? It is certain that it could not.

We have devoted this much time to what seems to us a very apparent proposition, namely, that the defendant's obligation to drill was only to drill with diligence during the period of the options, because we believe it is the essential point in the case. The defendant did drill diligently during the entire period of the options, and in fact for more than a year and a half after, and no claim is made here that it did not. The claim is that long afterwards it refused to continue further.

But, it may be said, the options did not expire, the defendant took them up, and its right to continue drilling for the benefit of itself and the plaintiff was therefore not lost. But the question here is not one as to the right to continue, but as to the obligation to continue; and that obligation must be determined, as it must have been understood at the time the contract was made. At that time the parties must clearly have understood that the defendant's obligation would expire with the period of the options. It would be indeed a remarkable construction to put upon the contract to say that it meant that if the defendant, voluntarily and without any obligation so to do, should take up the options for the joint benefit of itself and the plaintiff at an expense of $33,500, it would do so only under penalty of being obligated to continue indefinitely, no matter what the time and expense might be, to drill until either a well 2,500 feet deep was obtained or oil was found. Yet this action, unwittingly in all probability, is nothing more than an attempt to impose just that penalty. The defendant was under no obligation to take up the options. All it had to do at the time it took them up was to go on diligently with the well, as it was doing and did, and let the options expire, and it would be free and clear of any reasonable possibility of claim. It would be wholly unreasonable to hold that by taking them up it assumed any obligation different or more extensive than the contract originally provided for, particularly one so different and so much more burdensome as the absolute obligation here insisted on. The taking up of the options worked no detriment to the plaintiff, and could work none, but quite the contrary. It could only work a benefit to him, and did so. Its sole effect has been that the plaintiff has acquired without cost to him several hundred acres of land, which he would otherwise not have received, and has had the benefit, if there be any, of continued exploration by the defendant for a very considerable period longer than it was contemplated by the contract such exploration without discovery would continue. Such a change of position, wholly beneficial to the plaintiff, cannot reasonably be made a ground for imposing on the defendant an obligation which most certainly it did not otherwise assume.

It may be said, also, that if the options had been extended, instead of being taken up, the defendant's obligation to drill would have continued during the time of such extension, and the effect of taking them up was to secure such extension. The key option, option A, was in fact extended twice, and it was only on the approach of the expiration of the second extension that the land was purchased. It is probably true that by these extensions, obtained at its instance, or at the joint instance of itself and the plaintiff, the defendant's obligation to drill was likewise extended, and that the same would have been true, if further extensions had been similarly obtained. But the defendant's obligation in the case of extensions merely of the options would still remain essentially the same. It would be still an obligation to drill diligently during a certain time, and as such might fairly come within both the scope of the contract and the original contemplation of the parties. But to give the same effect to a taking up of the options, is, as we have said, to impose a wholly different obligation. The time element is removed, and the defendant's obligation is no longer one merely to drill diligently, but is one to insure a well 2,500 feet deep, unless oil be found at a less depth, from which no amount of diligence will excuse it. So different an obligation cannot be said to come within the scope of the contract or the original contemplation of the parties.

[3] It may be said, also, that the defendant, by continuing to drill after the period of the options had expired, itself put a construction on the contract that it was obligated so to continue. This can be truly said only if the natural inference from the fact of its continuing is that it did so because it believed itself obligated. It is only in case the defendant's action in continuing to drill can be reasonably explained only on the supposition that it believed itself bound to do so that it can be said that its action evidences a belief on its part that it was so bound. But this is not the fact. There is another and most apparent explanation. The defendant was then the owner of several hundred acres of possible oil lands. It had invested in them some $33,500 as their purchase price, plus the cost up to that time of the well it was drilling. This cost was in the neighborhood of $25,000 more. Under these circumstances, the most natural thing for the defendant to do was to continue its exploration, whether it was obligated so to do or not, in order to develop the property it had acquired and to realize on the investment it had made. Its action in continuing exploration is fully explainable on this ground, and does not give rise to any inference that the defendant continued because it believed itself bound to continue. Bound or not bound, the natural thing for it to do was to continue.

Finally, it is argued that the terms of the several deeds by the defendant to the plaintiff made as each of the options was taken up and conveying to the plaintiff the portion of the land he was to have, indicate that the obligation of the defendant to drill was to continue. The language relied on varies slightly as between the different deeds, but the variations are immaterial. Taking the language in one as typical, it consists in a recital that the deed is made by the defendant "in fulfillment of a part of its obligations" to the plaintiff under the contract here involved. The answer to this argument is that the recital is strictly accurate under any theory of the case. Each deed—conveying only a part of the land the plaintiff was to have—was by itself of necessity in part fulfillment only of the defendant's obligation, no matter what view may be taken of the contract.

struction—is that the defendant's obligation under the contract at the time the parties made it was to drill diligently through the period of the options, unless within that period a depth of 2,500 feet was reached or oil in the paying quantities specified by the contract found. It also seems to us clear that this obligation was not changed by the taking up the options, and in particular it was not transformed into the very different obligation of guaranteeing either a well 2,500 feet deep or the finding of oil. Such being the obligation of the defendant, its refusal to continue drilling long after the expiration of the period during which it was required to drill was not a breach of its contract.

It follows that plaintiff has no cause of action on the pleadings and proof presented. This conclusion renders unnecessary a consideration of the question as to the measure of damages.

Judgment reversed.

WILBUR, J. (concurring). I concur in the judgment for the reasons stated in the main opinion, and for the further reason that if we assume, as the respondent contends, that the agreement required the appellant to sink the well to a depth of 2,500 feet, the damages for breach of such an agreement, under the circumstances stated, are too speculative to justify a recovery of substantial damages. In this case the well was sunk within 15 feet of the required depth, oil was struck, and property values were correspondingly enhanced, and upon the strength of that showing the appellant exercised the options and conveyed to the respondent all the land it was required to convey in the event that the well had been completed or oil struck in paying quantities. If the well had been sunk 15 feet deeper, it would either have enhanced or depreciated the value of the surrounding property, and the question of whether it would enhance or decrease such value is purely speculative. HAMBEY v. WOOD et al. (S. F. 8299.)

1. Landlord and Tenant 🔑63(1, 2)—Right of Tenant to Set Up Acquired Title as Defense to Specific Performance Against Landlord.

Though tenant at will by written agreement between him and purchaser of property terminated tenancy at will and became purchaser's tenant for a term certain, he was not precluded from acquiring title from the original owner, nor in the purchaser's action for specific performance is he precluded from setting up any title he may have so acquired; the purchaser not seeking to recover for the use and occupation under the lease, but having put the title in issue.

2. Vendor and Purchaser 🔑228(4)—Notice of Prior Contract Voidable Under Statute of Frauds Does Not Affect Title of Vendee.

That a purchaser of land took it with notice of a prior contract of sale, voidable under the statute of frauds, does not affect his title unless the case comes within some exception recognized by equity.

3. Frauds, Statute of 🔑119(1)—Equity Will Relieve Against It Where It Would Place Party Resisting in Inequitable Position.

Equity is bound by the statute of frauds, and general relief against it is given only where to allow it to be set up would be to secure to the party relying on it the fruits of actual fraud, or where it would place the party resisting it in an inequitable position; it appearing further there is evidence as good as a writing between the parties.

4. Frauds, Statute of 🔑129(12)—Possession by Tenant on Oral Sale of Land Insufficient.

Possession of land by buyer under oral contract effected by the technical possession of a tenant, who for long before the creation of his tenancy under the buyer had been occupying the land as tenant at will of the seller, held not the character of possession which would take the oral contract of sale out of the statute of frauds, not rendering the buyer liable to an action for trespass, and not evidencing clearly the new ownership.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; J. A. Bardin, Judge.

Action by Richard Hambey against Webster Wood and others. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. F. Lacey, of Salinas, for appellant.

Alex Webster, of Paso Robles, and Chas. B. Rosendale, of Salinas (Cullinan & Hickey, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

LENNON, J. The facts upon which this appeal is based are stated as follows in the opinion prepared by Mr. Justice Beasly, sitting pro tempore as a member of the District Court of Appeal for the First Appellate District:

"This action was brought to obtain a decree of specific performance of an oral contract for the conveyance of real property. The record consists of the judgment roll alone. From the findings it appears that on March 12, 1916, plaintiff entered into an oral agreement with defendant Wise for the purchase of the property in question for the sum of $1,000, and that said defendant authorized and directed the plaintiff to take possession of the property, which was distant about one hundred miles from the place where the agreement was made. Prior to, and at the time of the making of this agreement, the property was in the possession of one Webster Wood, who is also a defendant in the action. Wood occupied the land from the fall of 1913 to the fall of 1915 as a tenant of defendant Wise, the owner. Wise had refused to make a further lease of the premises to Wood, but entered into an oral agreement with him, by the terms of which it was stipulated that Wood might buy the land for the sum of $1,400, and pay for it later out of the proceeds of the sale of a crop of grain that he then had on hand, and in the meantime he might retain possession of the land. Wood sold the grain, but did not avail himself of the option of purchase up to the time of plaintiff's agreement. He entered into the possession of the land, however, and began the cultivation thereof, and in the fall of 1915, or in the spring of 1916, but prior to March 12, 1916, when the agreement here involved was entered into, he seeded about fifty acres to barley, which was growing upon the lands at the time plaintiff and defendant Wise entered into their oral agreement of sale, and plaintiff was familiar with this fact. Five days after this oral agreement, and on March 17, 1916, the plaintiff told defendant Wood that he had purchased the real property, and that he had a deed thereto which was of record. The statement, in so far as it related to the deed, was false. The same day plaintiff and defendant Wood entered into a written agreement by the terms of which defendant Wood leased from plaintiff the land in question, together with 820 acres of other land all in one body, from March 17, 1916, to November 1, 1916. Thereafter, on March 25, 1916, while negotiating with Wise relative to the purchase of said land, defendant Wood received notice of all the terms of the agreement between plaintiff and Wise. Upon learning that the agreement of sale was an oral one, and that it had not been concluded, Wood induced Wise to convey him the property for a consideration of $1,400, the deed conveying the same being immediately recorded by Wood. Thereafter plaintiff tendered Wise the sum of $1,000, his purchase price, and upon Wise's refusing to convey, this action was brought."

It further appears, as found by the trial court:

"That the defendant Wood, during the period from March 17, 1916, until the conveyance of said real property by defendant Wise, to defendant Wood, continued to remain in possession of said premises as follows: By continuing to exercise dominion over said premises and to have growing thereon the crop of grain referred to, but during said time did not make any physical entry upon or into said premises."

"In its conclusion of law the trial court holds that the plaintiff never took actual possession of the premises agreed to be conveyed, and that there was no part performance of the agreement sufficient to take the agreement out of the statute of frauds or to enable plaintiff to specifically enforce the same. This conclusion is based upon the finding 'that the plaintiff did not go physically upon the said described real property, and did not take any possession thereof other than by the execution of said lease to the defendant Wood.'"

[1] Even if it be conceded that on March 17, 1916, Wood was a tenant at will holding under Wise, and that, by the written agreement entered into on that date between Wood and Hambey, Wood terminated the tenancy at will and became the tenant of Hambey for a term certain, nevertheless Wood was not precluded from acquiring title to the property from Wise, nor is he precluded from setting up in this action any title he may have so acquired, inasmuch as Hambey is not seeking to recover for the use and occupation of the land under the lease, but has put the title itself in issue. Jochen v. Tibbells, 50 Mich. 33, 14 N. W. 690; McKie v. Anderson, 78 Tex. 207, 14 S. W. 576. It follows that Hambey is entitled to compel a conveyance from Wood only in event the latter acquired title under circumstances rendering it unconscionable for him to keep the land. In other words, the single question presented upon this appeal is whether or not Wood purchased the land in good faith, it not being denied that he paid value.

[2] It is well settled that the fact that a purchaser of land took it with notice of a prior contract of sale, avoidable under the statute of frauds, does not affect his title thereto, unless the case falls within some exception which equity recognizes. 39 Cyc. 1772, and cases cited. It is necessary, therefore, for us to determine whether or not the facts of the case disclose any circumstance serving to lift Hambey's oral contract of purchase out of the statute of frauds on or before the date of the conveyance to Wood.

[3] Hambey contends that his possession of the land was such a part performance of the contract as to take it out of the operation of the statute. As pointed out by Lord Blackburn in Maddison v. Alderson, L. R. 8 A. C. 467, the cases allowing possession given and received to suffice to take a contract for the sale of an interest in land out of the statute of frauds have, in effect, construed the statute relative to agreements for the sale of land as if it contained the words "or unless possession of the land shall be given and received." This construction of the statute has been adopted in California. Calanchini v. Branstetter, 84 Cal. 249, 24 Pac. 149; Moulton v. Harris, 94 Cal. 421, 29 Pac. 706. It only remains to consider whether or not the nature of Hambey's possession was such as to satisfy the requirement of the statute. In considering this question, it is not to be forgotten that equity is after all bound by the statute of frauds, and that in general relief is given against the statute only in two classes of cases, first, where to allow the statute to be set up would be to secure to the party relying upon it the fruits of actual fraud, and, second, where to allow the statute to be set up would place the party resisting it in an inequitable position, it appearing further that there is evidence just as good as a writing of the agreement between the parties. Fry on Specific Performance (5th Ed.) §§ 584, 585. In the absence of actual fraud, the question here presented is whether or not Hambey's possession of the land at any time before the conveyance to Wood was such as to place him in an inequitable position if precluded from proving his oral contract and whether or not it was also such as to furnish evidence just as good as a writing of the agreement between himself and Wise. The inequitable situation which is contemplated by the cases holding that the vendee's possession will suffice to take a contract for the sale of land out of the statute of frauds is the vendee's liability to an action for trespass if he is not allowed to prove his oral contract. The evidence just as good as a writing contemplated by those cases is the visibility and notoriety of an actual possession manifesting clearly and unequivocally a new and distinctive ownership. Charpiot v. Sigerson, 25 Mo. 63; Ackerman v. Fisher, 57 Pa. 460; Arguello v. Edinger, 10 Cal. 150; Fulton v. Jansen, 99 Cal. 587, 34 Pac. 331. This court, in Davis v. Judson, 159 Cal. 121, 132, 113 Pac. 147, 152, expressly holding that a nominal or merely technical possession was not sufficient, laid down the rule that—

> The "possession which must be taken in order to meet the equitable requirement of part performance, and warrant specific performance of the contract, is actual possession by the vendee. The ground upon which possession, as constituting part performance and authorizing specific performance, is supported, is that the vendee would be exposed to liability as a trespasser, if he could not invoke the protection of the contract. The uniform rule, however, is that such possession must be an actual possession by the vendee; there must exist the physical fact of possession in him; a possession visible, notorious, and exclusive, such as manifests definitely and clearly that the vendee is claiming and asserting a distinctive ownership of the property, which is inconsistent with the right of possession or ownership in any other person. Less than this could not constitute a vendee a trespasser, and hence this actual possession must, under the authorities, exist to constitute such part performance as warrants the equitable interposition of a court to decree specific performance."

Even more directly to the point in the present case is the rule stated in Browne on the Statute of Frauds (5th Ed.) § 473:

> "To allow a mere technical possession, not open to the observation of the neighborhood, and capable of being proved only by select and confidential witnesses, to be sufficient for obtaining a decree to enforce the contract, would manifestly afford an opportunity for and an encouragement to dishonest testimony. Thus, where the vendor, having at the time a tenant in possession, makes a verbal sale of the premises, it has been held that, the tenant remaining in possession, and merely attorney to the purchaser, there was no such open and notorious change of possession as would justify a court of equity in enforcing a contract, and that, at any rate, the attornment must be formal, public, and explicit."

In support of the text the author cites Brawdy v. Brawdy, 7 Pa. 157, and Johnston v. Clancy, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 94, 28 Am. Dec. 45.

[4] Hambey never entered into physical possession of the land. Moreover, conceding that between March 17 and March 25, 1916, Wood's possession was the possession of Hambey, the fact remains that during that time Wood did not make any physical entry upon the premises. Hambey's possession, if it may be called such, was technical possession by a tenant who for a long period of time prior to the creation of the tenancy had been occupying the land as the tenant of the vendor. It is clear that this possession had not the essential character of the possession which will suffice to take an oral contract for the sale of land out of the statute of frauds. Neither by himself nor by his tenant did Hambey enter into a possession such as would render him liable to an action for trespass. No inequitable situation would therefore have been created by refusing to allow him to set up the contract of purchase. Neither by himself nor by his tenant did he enter into a visible and notorious possession manifesting clearly and unequivocally a new and distinctive ownership. There was therefore a total absence of any act referable to the contract such as, when coupled with the inequitable situation, gives a court of equity jurisdiction to enforce an oral contract for the sale of an interest in land. The facts of the case, accordingly, disclose no circumstance serving to lift Hambey's oral contract of purchase out of the statute of frauds on or before the date of the conveyance to Wood. It follows that Wood, having purchased the land in good faith and for value, does not hold title as an involuntary trustee for Hambey.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; OLNEY, J.; MELVIN, J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.

SHAW, J. I concur in the judgment, but I do not fully agree with all the reasons advanced by Justice LENNON. The rule is that the possession of land by the vendee, under an oral contract, in order to constitute part performance and render the contract enforceable, must be such as would make him liable for trespass, if he could not justify his possession except by the void oral contract of sale. This rule was adopted in equity when the common-law forms of action for trespass were in use. Under the common law, one who entered on land through his tenant to whom he had let the land for a term was liable, after recovery in ejectment by the true owner, to an action of trespass for mesne profits, and the fact that he had not personally entered on the land would not excuse him. Nor would it excuse him in an action of trespass for breaking and entering, if he had leased the land and authorized his tenant to enter thereunder. Therefore the fact that one was in possession by his tenant would make him liable for trespass and would sufficiently answer that part of the equity rule in actions for specific performance. In this case both Hambey and Wood would have been liable to Wise for mesne profits if the sale to Hambey and Wood's possession under the lease could not have protected them.

It is clear also that this should be the rule. There are many cases as of property built for rental purposes, where the only possession ever taken or contemplated by the parties to a sale is a possession accomplished by the attornment of the tenant in possession to the new owner. It has never been supposed that possession of such property, when so taken, could not constitute a sufficient part performance. In so far as the main opinion is inconsistent with the above I do not agree with it.

1. ACKNOWLEDGMENT 🔑22 — PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE AS TO IDENTITY OF PERSONS MAKING ACKNOWLEDGMENTS NECESSARY.

Notary held not legally justified in stating in certificates of acknowledgment that persons who appeared before him to acknowledge the instruments were known to him, as required by Civ. Code, § 1185, unless the identity of the individual making the acknowledgment is established by the oath of a credible witness.

2. ACKNOWLEDGMENT 🔑48—STATEMENT BY NOTARY IN CERTIFICATE GUARANTY OF GENUINENESS OF INSTRUMENT.

A notary's act, in stating in certificates of acknowledgment that the persons who appeared before him were known to him, made the certificates guaranties of the genuineness of the instruments acknowledged, in view of Civ. Code, § 1185.

3. ACKNOWLEDGMENT 🔑22 — WHAT CONSTITUTES PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE OF NOTARY AS TO IDENTITY OF PERSON.

Personal knowledge by a notary of the person making an acknowledgment, such as will justify the notary in stating in the certificate that the person is known to him, involves something more than an introduction by another person and casual meetings following it, and must be based on circumstances surrounding the person, tending to show he is what he purports to be.

4. ACKNOWLEDGMENT 🔑22 — INTRODUCTION UNDER OATH NOT PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE OF PERSON MAKING ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

Merely because a person is introduced to a notary under oath as the one who is to make an acknowledgment, the notary is not legally in possession of such personal knowledge of the person as justifies his making certificate to the acknowledgment.

5. ACKNOWLEDGMENT 🔑48—NOTARY REQUIRING OATH AS TO IDENTITY RELIEVED FROM LIABILITY IF DECEIVED.

If a notary takes all due precautions in taking an acknowledgment, and fully complies with Civ. Code, § 1185, in the absence of personal knowledge of the person, by requiring the oath of a credible witness, he will not be held liable if he is deceived in the identity of the person.

6. ACKNOWLEDGMENT 🔑48—NEGLIGENCE OF NOTARY IN TAKING ACKNOWLEDGMENT AS PROXIMATE CAUSE OF LOSS.

The negligence of a notary in taking an acknowledgment cannot be considered the proximate cause of loss sustained by a lender through the procuration by such lender's agent of loans to false parties, whose acknowledgments were taken by the notary.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Steven Anderson against Martin Aronsohn and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

Carl W. Mueller, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Marshall B. Woodworth, of San Francisco, for respondents.

McCutchen, Olney & Willard, of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

LENNON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendants in an action against a notary public and his sureties on his official bond to recover for damages alleged to have resulted from the negligence of the notary.

It appears from the findings that a few days prior to April 19, 1916, one Ambrose, a real estate agent and loan broker, through whom plaintiff had previously loaned money, called upon the plaintiff to secure a loan of $900 upon certain real estate in the city and county of San Francisco owned by Louetta A. Pilliken, for whom Ambrose purported to act. The plaintiff having decided to make the loan, a note and deed of trust were given to Ambrose for execution by Mrs. Pilliken and her husband. Ambrose returned the document, signed and acknowledged in proper form before the defendant Aronsohn, a notary public, and, upon presentation of an order purporting to be signed by the Pillikens, Ambrose received the amount of the loan in currency. At no time during the transaction did plaintiff deal with any one save Ambrose. In May of the same year, through a similar transaction, plaintiff advanced to Ambrose the sum of $700 upon property owned by one Mary French. Plaintiff subsequently discovered that the owners of the properties in question, the Pillikens and Mary French, had never signed the notes or deeds of trust, or received the money, and that confederates of Ambrose had impersonated these parties before the defendant notary. The certificates of acknowledgment of both deeds of trust were each to the effect that the subscribing parties were "known" to the notary to be the persons whose names are subscribed to the instruments. The question presented upon this appeal is whether or not Aronsohn was legally justified in stating in the certificate of acknowledgment that the persons who appeared before him to acknowledge the instruments were known to him.

It appears that on September 8, 1915, the persons who represented themselves to be the Pillikens were introduced to Aronsohn by Ambrose on the occasion of their assignment of an interest in a mining claim. Aronsohn acknowledged the instrument, and certified to the identity of the parties under the oath of Ambrose, who was personally known to him. He made a record of this transaction in his books. We shall here quote the evidence concerning the further acquaintance of Aronsohn with these parties.

> "Q. Now, did you after this transaction have occasion to meet these two Pillikens again? A. Yes. Q. Frequently or otherwise? A. Yes, five or six times. Q. And where? A. Met them the following day at the Fair, 1915, Native Sons of the Golden West Day, Admission Day, also at cafeteria, on streets, also was at my office. Q. When were they at your office? A. Shortly before April 19, 1916. Q. For what purpose? A. Mr. P. called at my office and asked me where he can get a loan on a note, and I suggested him to wait until Morris Plan Bank open business, as they were advertising loans at 6 per cent.," etc.

It also appears that on March 2, 1915, the person who represented herself to be Mary French was introduced to Aronsohn by his former teacher, Henry Frank. He took an acknowledgment of the signature of this woman, Frank acting as identifying witness. Aronsohn also made a record of this transaction in his books. The following is the evidence of his further acquaintance with this Mary French:

> "Q. When did you again see Mrs. Mary French, if at all, previous to May 6, 1916? A. December 2, 1915. Q. What was the occasion of your meeting Mary French on December 2, 1915? A. She was at my office with Mr. Ambrose, who requested me to acknowledge a document.
> "The Court: Did Mr. Ambrose request you to acknowledge a document, or Mrs. French request you to acknowledge a document? A. Mrs. French."

[1, 2] Basing its conclusion upon these facts, the trial court has decided that Aronsohn was legally justified in stating in the certificates of acknowledgment that the persons who appeared before him to acknowledge the instruments in question were known to him. With this conclusion we are unable to agree. The statutes prescribing the duty of a notary in ascertaining the identity of an acknowledger are not uniform. In some states the notary must either "know" or have "satisfactory evidence" that the person making the acknowledgment is the individual described in the instrument. Under such a statute some courts have held that it is sufficient if the officer's conscience is satisfied. Wood v. Bach, 54 Barb. 134, overruling Jones v. Bach, 48 Barb, 568. Other courts have held the notary to the care and diligence of a reasonably prudent man. Barnard v. Schuler, 100 Minn. 289, 110 N. W. 966. The California statute, however, provides that, unless the person making the acknowledgment is known to the officer to be the individual described in and who executed the instrument, his identity must be established by the oath of a credible witness. Civ. Code, § 1185. As stated by this court in Joost v. Craig, 131 Cal. 504, 509, 63 Pac. 840, 842 (82 Am. St. Rep. 374):

> "This makes the certificate upon personal knowledge a guaranty of the genuineness of the instrument. * * *"

[3] The question presented for our decision relates to the degree of acquaintance which will authorize the notary to certify that he has personal knowledge. The acquaintance of Aronsohn with the confederates of Ambrose subsequent to the time of their introduction to him was not such as to furnish any rational basis for personal knowledge of their identity. Such knowledge, in our opinion, involves such an acquaintance, derived from association with the individuals in relation to other people, as establishes their identity with at least reasonable certainty. Such an acquaintance cannot in its very nature depend upon the mere word of one or two or three individuals, but must be based upon a chain of circumstances surrounding the persons in question, all of which tend to show that they are what they purport to be. That there is nothing to arouse suspicion is not enough. Something affirmative in the nature of evidence of identity must appear during the course of the acquaintanceship, which would not normally appear if the persons were other than they purport to be, before it can be said that their identity has become a matter of personal knowledge; that is to say, personal knowledge involves something more than the casual meetings which followed Aronsohn's original introduction to the confederates of Ambrose.

[4] The question then remains whether or not Aronsohn can be said to have acquired such personal knowledge of the parties upon their introduction under oath as to justify the making of the certificate. Such an introduction is not enough. Hatton v. Holmes, 97 Cal. 208, 212, 31 Pac. 1131; Joost v. Craig, supra. As stated by the court in Homan v. Wayer, 9 Cal. App. 123, 126, 98 Pac. 80, 81:

> "A certificate of personal knowledge is not justified by swearing the person who executed the instrument or any other person." (The italics are ours.)

The reasons for this view are admirably expressed in State v. Meyer, 2 Mo. App. 413, 420. Without perhaps indorsing all that was stated in the opinion, this court quoted with approval from that decision in Joost v. Craig, supra. Speaking for the St. Louis Court of Appeals, Mr. Presiding Justice Gantt said:

> "It is not easy to give a definition of what will constitute 'personal knowledge.' Every one knows that two intimate friends, who have known each other from childhood to mature age, living in the same neighborhood all that time, may, in the fullest and most unreserved sense, be said to have such 'personal knowledge' of each other. But, if a stranger be introduced by a respectable person into any company, it is generally safe to assume that he is what he professes to be, although the person making the assumption has nothing for it but his reliance on the habits of accuracy of the introducer, who, in his turn, may be relying on similar habits in some one else, on whose information he has made the last introduction. It is obvious that, when an officer taking an acknowledgment and making a certificate assumes any such fact, he does it at his own risk. The law warns him, when he has not 'personal knowledge' of his own, to resort to certain observances which the law supposes to be sufficient in practice to prevent imposition. The very lowest of these observances is proof by two witnesses who possess such personal knowledge of the identity of the cognizor with the grantor; for the statute says, cautiously, 'at least two credible witnesses.' Hence we see that, in a case of any doubt, it is not only permissible, but imperative, that the number of witnesses should be increased; that not only their number, but their credit, must be looked to by the officer; that, as their testimony is to be taken, they must be sworn; and that, to secure them for future reference, their names and places of residence must be stated in the certificate. An officer taking all these precautions may, of course, be still deceived, and so be led to make a certificate that is calculated to mislead. But such a certificate is infinitely less likely to deceive or mislead than a declaration that the party making the acknowledgment is well known to the officer making the certificate. It puts all persons upon inquiry, and furnishes a clew for conducting it, and it complies with the law. If, after all, the party making the acknowledgment proves to be an impostor, the officer would, we think, if acting in good faith, stand excused. But we are of the opinion that the noncompliance with the formalities enjoined by the statute, and the assumption of any fact which afterwards proves to be no fact at all, will subject the officer to all the risks attendant on the negligent performances of official duty. It may be very courteous to waive all such formalities; it may be disagreeable to speak plainly, and tell a party that one is not willing to assume that he is not falsely personating another; but no one is at liberty to practice courtesy or gain popularity, to indulge his own indolence, or avoid unpleasant things at the expense of others. If these others sustain loss by his laxity, it is impossible to listen to assurances from him that he meant well, and really did not know better, where it was his plain duty to probe the matter to the bottom, and not to certify at all until he knew what he was talking about. It is perfectly idle for him to protest that he did not know or suspect that his certificate was false. That may be granted; but it is nothing to the purpose. His business was to know that it was true."

[5] Respondents place great reliance on the statement in Joost v. Craig, supra, that—

> "A notary may take all due precautions, and fully comply with the statute and still be deceived. In such case he would not be held liable; but if he has not fully complied with the statute, the rule announced above [in State v. Meyer, supra] is not a whit too stringent."

In view of the context in which this statement is found, and in view of the context in the Meyer Case from which it was paraphrased, it affords the respondents slight comfort. The meaning of the court is clear. It is that if the notary takes all due precautions and fully complies with the statute by requiring the oath of a credible witness, he may still be deceived, and in that event, he will not be held liable, but that, if he has not complied with the statute by requiring such an oath, but has, on the contrary, certified that he has personal knowledge of the identity of a person whom he knows merely through the introduction of another, it is not a whit too stringent to hold that he does so at his own risk.

[6] The respondent contends that Ambrose was the agent of Anderson for the purpose of transacting the loans. Were this in fact the case, the negligence of Aronsohn could not, of course, be considered the proximate cause of the loss sustained by Anderson. Overacre v. Blake, 82 Cal. 77, 22 Pac. 979. But the trial court did not find, and the evidence does not show, that Ambrose did act in the matter as the agent of Anderson.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for trial anew.

FAVORITE et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF RIVERSIDE COUNTY et al.

1. PLEADING 🔑214(1) — DEMURRER ADMITS FACTS ALLEGED.

Where a cause was submitted on demurrer to a petition for a writ of prohibition against the superior court and judge thereof, the facts alleged are admitted.

2. PROHIBITION 🔑20—PETITION TO RESTRAIN JUDGE FROM ACTING BECAUSE DISQUALIFIED INSUFFICIENT.

A petition for a writ of prohibition, restraining the judge of the superior court from making any order in a cause in which a corporation was a party other than to transfer the same, held insufficient to show that any direct liability of the judge as a former stockholder of the corporation existed at the time the application for change of place of trial was made.

3. COURTS 🔑207(5)—DISTRICT COURT OF APPEAL CAN RESTRAIN JUDGE FROM ACTING IN EQUITY SUIT.

Under Const. art. 6, § 4, a District Court of Appeal has jurisdiction of an application for a writ of prohibition to restrain a judge of the superior court from making any order in an equity suit, other than to transfer the same, although appeals in equity causes are taken direct to the Supreme Court.

4. VENUE 🔑49(1) — ON DISQUALIFICATION, ERROR TO REFUSE CHANGE OF VENUE AND CALL IN ANOTHER JUDGE.

If a judge of the superior court was disqualified to hear a case in which a corporation was a party, because his wife was a stockholder, it was improper for the judge to deny a motion to change place of trial, and then call in another judge to hear the case, but he should have directed a change as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 398; there being but one judge of the superior court of the county.

5. CORPORATIONS 🔑506—STOCKHOLDER NOT A PARTY TO ACTION AGAINST CORPORATION.

A stockholder of a corporation is not a party to an action in which the corporation itself is a party.

6. JUDGES 🔑43—DISQUALIFICATION BECAUSE OF OWNERSHIP OF STOCK BY WIFE OF JUDGE.

That the wife of a judge of the superior court owned stock in a corporation which was a party to the suit does not, under Code Civ. Proc. § 170, subds. 1, 2, declaring that no judge shall sit in any proceeding to which he is a party or is interested, or when he is related to any party, or to an officer of a corporation which is a party, disqualify him.

7. JUDGES 🔑43—DISQUALIFICATION BY INTEREST AFTER SALE OF CORPORATE STOCK.

Where it appeared on application for writ to prohibit judge of superior court from trying a cause against a corporation, that the judge had disposed of his stock in the corporation a considerable period before application was made, without more, it cannot be presumed that he was interested, so as to be disqualified, even though the liability of a stockholder for the debts of a corporation is, under Const. art. 12, § 3, direct, etc.

Adair & Winder, of Riverside, for defendants.

SHAW, J. This is an application for a writ of prohibition to prevent the superior court of Riverside county from proceeding in a cause pending in said court wherein the said petitioners are plaintiffs and the Security Investment Company and others are defendants. This proceeding for prohibition was begun in the District Court of Appeal for the Second District and after decision there was transferred to this court for rehearing. The original petition was filed on December 16, 1918. An amended petition was filed on December 19, 1918.

Hon. Hugh H. Craig is the regularly elected judge of the superior court of Riverside county, before whom the cause originally came on for disposition. On December 9, 1918, the petitioners here, without notice to the other party, presented to Judge Craig, ex parte, a paper purporting to set forth a motion to change the place of trial in the action. The sole ground for the motion was stated therein as follows: "On account of the disqualification of yourself to try the same." The fact which caused the disqualification referred to was not stated. Petitioners did not then file said paper, or any papers in the case, but stated to the judge that they would renew the motion on the following day. On December 10, 1918, the petitioners filed an application to change the place of trial of said cause on the sole ground that the wife of the judge was a stockholder in the said corporation, and that Judge Craig was for that reason disqualified to try the cause or make any order therein, other than to change the place of trial, as prescribed by section 398 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The attorneys for the defendants appeared to this motion, and the hearing was postponed to December 12, 1918, on which day the parties appeared, the motion was argued by the respective attorneys, and was denied by the court. It was made to appear that the wife of Judge Craig had disposed of her stock in the corporation on December 10, 1918. On the same day Judge Craig requested Hon. J. W. Curtis, judge of the superior court of San Bernardino county, to sit for him on the following day for the purpose of disposing of the said cause. On December 13, 1918, Judge Curtis presided in the said court, and the said cause was called for further proceedings. Thereupon the petitioners objected to any further proceedings therein, and moved the court to change the place of trial thereof, upon the ground that the wife of Judge Craig was a stockholder in the defendant corporation during the pendency of the action at all times prior to December 10, 1918; that on December 9, 1918, the petitioners had made the application above mentioned to Judge Craig; that they had filed a motion for change of place of trial on December 10, 1918, as above stated; that the matter was heard on December 12, 1918, at which time it had been denied by Judge Craig. This application was heard by Judge Curtis, then presiding in the court, and, after argument, was denied. Thereupon, as before stated, this proceeding in prohibition was instituted against said superior court, and also against Hugh H. Craig, as presiding judge thereof. The object of the proceeding is to restrain the said court from making any order in the said cause, except an order changing the place of trial to the nearest or most accessible superior court, the judge of which is not disqualified from trying the same.

[1] The cause was submitted on a demurrer to the petition. The facts alleged are therefore admitted to exist. But other facts, though pertinent to the prayer of the petition, cannot be considered.

[2] Upon the argument here, it was stated that Judge Craig had been the owner of stock in the corporation defendant prior to June 13, 1917, and it was urged that he was and continued thereafter to be disqualified by reason of such fact, so long as his direct liability as a stockholder continued to exist. On this point we need only say that neither in the petition nor in the notice of motion is it alleged that he ever owned any stock in said corporation. The mere recital of the fact that Judge Craig had stated "that he had disposed of all his stock in said corporation to his wife" is not an allegation of the fact of ownership. It cannot be regarded as such allegation, and particularly in view of the fact that it is not assigned, either in the petition or in any motion addressed to the superior court, as ground for the application to change the place of trial. Nor can statements made by counsel in argument, or statements in an affidavit filed in behalf of the respondent, cure the lack of a material allegation in the petition. This court, therefore, cannot consider the effect of such ownership, if, as a matter of fact, Judge Craig ever did own such stock. The decision of the case must depend wholly on the effect of the alleged and admitted fact that his wife was the owner thereof at the time the application was made to the court, when Judge Craig was presiding therein, to change the place of trial.

[3] There is no merit in the motion of respondent to quash the writ of prohibition issued by the district court. The motion was based on the claim that the case before the superior court was an action in equity—a case in which appellate jurisdiction is, by the Constitution, lodged in the first instance in the Supreme Court alone (Const. art. 6, § 4), from which fact, it is argued, an original proceeding in prohibition to prevent action by the superior court in such a case is cognizable only in the Supreme Court. This assumption is not correct. The same section of the Constitution gives equal and concurrent jurisdiction to the District Courts of Appeal and to the Supreme Court to issue writs of prohibition in all proper cases. So far as jurisdiction to do so is concerned, the questions of appellate jurisdiction and of the nature of the action in which the act sought to be prohibited is threatened are entirely immaterial. As a matter of policy and practice, both this court and the District Courts of Appeal respectively, have at times refused to take jurisdiction of an original proceeding, where the case involved was in the superior court and was originally appealable to the other court. Collins v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 264, 81 Pac. 509; Estate of Turner (App.) 177 Pac. 854. But this practice was not adopted because of any want of original jurisdiction in such cases in either court. This was expressly stated in the Collins Case.

[4] If the fact that the wife of Judge Craig owned stock in the corporation on December 10, 1918, when the application was filed and presented to him as judge of the superior court, is sufficient to disqualify him from sitting or acting as judge in that action, there is no doubt, under our decisions, that it was his duty, upon the fact being established, to grant the application and make an order transferring the case as provided in section 398 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Livermore v. Brundage, 64 Cal. 299, 30 Pac. 848; Krumdick v. Crump, 98 Cal. 119, 32 Pac. 800. There was but one judge of the superior court of Riverside county, and hence the rule stated in Oakland v. Oakland, etc., Co., 118 Cal. 249, 50 Pac. 268, that an action could be retained and tried by another judge of the same court, does not apply. If his disqualification depends upon a fact not within the knowledge of the judge, as might be the case, power to determine from the evidence whether or not the fact existed would be implied from the necessity of the case, but, when established, the mandate of section 398 would certainly apply and be imperative, as was held in said cases, leaving him no discretion in the matter. It is true, as was said in Paige v. Carroll, 61 Cal. 215, that if, before the motion was made, the disqualified judge had called in another judge, not disqualified, to sit for him in the cause, the judge so called in could properly deny the motion to change the place of trial. But in this case

Judge Craig did not call in Judge Curtis to sit in the cause until after he had denied the motion, and therefore, as said in Upton v. Upton, 94 Cal. 28, 29 Pac. 411, it was "his duty to grant it," instead of denying the motion and thereafter calling in the judge. See, also, Barnhart v. Fulkerth, 59 Cal. 130; Finn v. Spagnoli, 67 Cal. 330, 7 Pac. 746. The first question presented on the merits, therefore, is whether or not the ownership of the stock by his wife at the time the motion was regularly presented to him operated to disqualify him from trying the case.

[5, 6] The claim that the fact that the wife is a stockholder disqualifies the husband from trying the case as judge rests upon the following language of section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure:

> "No justice, judge, or justice of the peace shall sit or act as such in any action or proceeding: (1) To which he is a party or in which he is interested; (2) when he is related to either party, or to an officer of a corporation which is a party, or to an attorney, counsel, or agent of either party, by consanguinity, or affinity, within the third degree, computed according to the rules of law."

A provision follows for the waiver by the parties of such disqualification under subdivision 2. It is not material here. The argument is that the wife, as holder of corporate stock, is the owner of an interest in the corporation; that the corporation represents her in such action, and acts for her protection and benefit, and consequently that she is a "party" to the action, within the meaning and scope of the first clause of subdivision 2. That a stockholder is not technically a party cannot be doubted.

> "Where a corporation sues or is sued in its corporate name, the action is by or against the corporation itself as a legal entity, and its members are not in any legal sense parties to the action." 1 Clark & Marshall, Corp. p. 15.

It is only where the corporation defendant refuses to defend the action, or, having begun a defense, it is made to appear that it will not prosecute the defense in good faith, that a stockholder may, upon a proper application showing the facts, be allowed to become a party and defend on behalf of the corporation. He must show that he cannot induce those in control of the corporation to do that which is right in the matter. Waymire v. San Francisco, etc., Ry. Co., 112 Cal. 650, 44 Pac. 1086; 2 Clark & Marshall, Corp. p. 1690. Hence the use of the word "party" in the clause relied on does not signify that the ownership of stock by a person related to the judge within the prohibited degree disqualifies the judge from trying a case against the corporation.

The succeeding clause clearly indicates that the Legislature intended that it should not have that effect, for that clause states the fact which the Legislature must be presumed to have considered necessary to disqualify the judge where a corporation is a party. It limits the disqualification to cases where the relative is an officer of the corporation. The rule of construction that the expression of one thing excludes all others applies, and it is therefore to be presumed that the Legislature did not intend to create a disqualification by reason of the relationship of the judge to any person connected with the corporation except an officer thereof. That this is the proper construction of a statute prohibiting action by one who is related to a party to the suit is well established. It was directly held under a statute precisely like ours in this respect that the judge was not disqualified by his relationship to a stockholder. Searsburgh T. Co. v. Cutler, 6 Vt. 322. And a statute prohibiting a sheriff or constable from serving process in a case to which he is a party, or is related to a party, does not apply to prevent him from serving process in a case where a corporation is a party and he is a stockholder therein. Adams v. Wiscasset Bank, 1 Me. 365, 10 Am. Dec. 88; Merchants' Bank v. Cook, 21 Mass. (4 Pick.) 415. The Supreme Court of Maine in the above case stated the reasons in very apt and convincing language as follows:

> "The argument arising from inconvenience is very strong. * * * Shares are continually changing owners; and a corporation of this kind, if disposed to be evasive, might, by frequent and secret transfers, abate every process commenced against them."

These reasons apply with greater force to the present case. If the corporations of this state could disqualify a judge and obtain a change of the place of trial whenever some relative of the judge within the third degree was or should become a stockholder of such corporation, it might be made very difficult, as against many corporations, to find a judge or a court where the cause to which such corporation was a party could be tried. No great effort of the imagination is necessary to perceive the consequences of such a rule. In many cases it would operate to defeat justice. We are satisfied, therefore, that the subdivision should not be construed so as to include the stockholder as a party where the corporation only is named as such.

The petitioner relies on the decision in Howell v. Budd, 91 Cal. 342, 27 Pac. 747, in support of his position. In that case the sons of the judge were the vendees of certain persons claiming heirship to an estate under an executory contract by which such heirs agreed to convey to the sons an interest in the estate, in consideration of their services as attorneys in establishing the heirship. The decision in the case would settle the question of such heirship. The sons were therefore as much interested in the controversy as the parties themselves. Upon a distribution they would not be improper parties, and would have a right to appear in respect to their personal interests. The general notice of the proceeding to be given to all persons would be notice to them, as well as to every other person who claimed any interest in the estate. In view of this direct interest as compared with the remote and indirect interest of the stockholders of a corporation, and because of the provisions of the section itself above referred to implying the contrary intention in the case of corporations, we do not think this case should be extended to include cases like the one at bar. Our conclusion, therefore, is that Judge Craig was not disqualified to act in the matter by reason of his wife's ownership of stock in the corporation defendant.

[7] We have shown that there is no allegation in the petition to the effect that Judge Craig was himself at any time a stockholder in said corporation. Inasmuch as it may be claimed that his ownership was a matter within his personal knowledge and that he should have taken cognizance thereof at the mere suggestion, it may be proper to present some further considerations on the subject. Upon the hearing in the District Court of Appeal an affidavit of Judge Craig was filed by the respondents, showing that he had not been the owner of any stock in the corporation since the date of June 13, 1917. There is no information obtainable from the record to show that ownership at that date would disqualify him. The cause was submitted, as we have said, upon a demurrer to the petition. The petition does not set forth the complaint in the action pending in the superior court, nor purport to state the substance thereof. No evidence was introduced at the hearing, either in the District Court of Appeal or in this court, as to the character of said action or as to the allegations of the complaint therein. The petitioners in their briefs set forth what purports to be a statement of some of the facts alleged in said complaint. As these facts were not alleged we cannot take notice of them when presented in this manner. It is true that the liability of a stockholder for the debts and liabilities of the corporation is direct and is created as soon as the corporate debt or liability is contracted or incurred (Const., art. 12, § 3), so that, if the liability involved in the action was contracted or incurred prior to the disposition by Judge Craig of his stock, as stated in his affidavit, he might still be interested in the action and be disqualified by subdivision 1 of section 170. But there can be no presumption in this case that such liability did exist at that time, for we have no facts upon which it could be predicated. Hence the contention that he is disqualified by reason of his own interest is not sustained by the allegations or proof.

It may properly be suggested that there is no good reason for further contention in the court below upon this subject. By calling in Judge Curtis, Judge Craig has already indicated his intention not to try the case. If it is improper for him to do so, or to choose the judge, under the actual circumstances of the case, as they may appear, the objection can easily be obviated by requesting the Governor to designate the judge to try the case.

The application for a peremptory writ of prohibition is denied, and the proceeding is dismissed.

MAJORS v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR ALAMEDA COUNTY et al. (S. F. 9025.)

1. Costs 🔑276 — Suit in forma pauperis not stayed on discharge of jury until payment of costs.

In view of earlier statutes and common-law rules, St. 1917, p. 788, declaring that if in a civil case the jury be discharged without a verdict the jury fees shall be paid by the parties who shall have required a jury, and until they are paid no further proceedings shall be allowed, did not require in and for plaintiff suing in forma pauperis to pay the fees of a jury which was discharged, where plaintiff after trial was begun obtained leave to amend the complaint, where there was no vexatious conduct on plaintiff's part.

2. Costs 🔑276 — Rights of plaintiff in suit in forma pauperis are in discretion of court.

Whether one once admitted to sue in forma pauperis should on vexatious conduct, delay, etc., be dispauperized, is for the court to determine in the exercise of its discretion, which discretion should be exercised as in the case of one originally seeking to be admitted to sue in forma pauperis, with a view to confine the privilege most strictly to those who having a substantial right to enforce or preserve are absolutely unable to otherwise proceed.

3. Costs 🔑130—Discretion of court as to suit in forma pauperis should be exercised with utmost care.

On application to sue in forma pauperis, the court should exercise its discretion in granting such relief with the utmost care, to the end that unworthy persons who are neither indigent nor possessed of substantial rights may not enjoy the privilege.

In Bank.

Petition by Ergo A. Majors for a writ of prohibition to be directed against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Alameda, and the Honorable T. W. Harris, Judge thereof. Writ denied.

D. C. Dutton, of Oakland, and H. F. Peart, of San Francisco (Green Majors, of Oakland, of counsel), for petitioner.

Ezra W. Decoto and T. P. Wittschen, both of Oakland, for respondents.

C. A. Linn, of Napa, and Milton T. U'Ren, of San Francisco, for Andrew Martin.

MELVIN, J. When this case was in the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, Division No. 1, Mr. Justice Waste prepared the opinion of the court, which was as follows:

"Application for writ of prohibition prayed to be directed against the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of Alameda, Hon. T. W. Harris, judge thereof, staying proceedings in a civil action therein pending, until plaintiff therein shall have paid the fees of the jurors in the first trial; the jurors having been discharged without finding a verdict.

"Andrew Martin, as plaintiff, commenced an action against the defendant Majors (petitioner here), to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's minor daughter, alleged to have been occasioned by the wrongful acts of said defendant. When the case was at issue and ready for trial, Martin demanded a trial by jury and sought to be allowed to further prosecute the action in forma pauperis. The superior court denied him that right and refused to proceed to trial without prepayment of the fees for the jury, as required by the then existing statutes and the rules of the court.

"On application to the Supreme Court that tribunal issued its peremptory writ of mandate directing the lower court 'immediately upon receipt of the writ to issue an order, in due form of law, granting petitioner leave to prosecute his said suit * * * in forma pauperis * * * without being required to pay any costs.' Martin v. Superior Court, 176 Cal. 289, 168 Pac. 135, L. R. A. 1918B, 313.

"Thereafter, pursuant to the direction of said writ, respondents set the action for trial, a jury was impaneled and sworn, and the trial of the cause proceeded in forma pauperis. During the trial, the jury having been in attendance two days, the plaintiff Martin obtained leave to amend his complaint. Defendant, petitioner here, was given time to answer and the jury was discharged. The fees for the jury were not, and have not been, paid.

"On motion of the plaintiff in the action, and over the objection of the defendant (petitioner here), the lower court has reset the cause and is about to proceed with the trial on the day set. Respondents in their return admit, or allege, the foregoing facts 'and in this connection allege that there is no provision in the statutes of this state or in the law of this state, providing for the payment of jurors serving in civil cases, where the action is being prosecuted by the plaintiff in forma pauperis.'

"In this contention respondents are correct and the action of the trial court must be upheld.

"In opposition to the respondents, petitioner relies upon provisions of the California statutes establishing fees of trial jurors, and decisions of the highest courts in this and other jurisdictions, which he contends by analogy and parity of reasoning support his views. In the most recent legislative enactment on the subject it is provided:

" 'If in any trial in a civil case the jury be for any cause discharged without finding a verdict, the fees of the jury shall be paid by the party who shall have announced that a trial by jury is required, but may be recovered as costs if he afterwards obtain judgment; and until they are paid no further proceedings shall be allowed in the action.' Stats. 1917, pp. 788, 789. The italics are ours for illustration.

"Section 17 of the Act of March 28, 1868 (Stats. 1867–68, p. 436), provides: 'If in any trial, in a civil case, the jury be for any cause discharged without finding a verdict, the fees of the jury shall be paid by the plaintiff, * * * and until they are paid no further proceedings shall be allowed in the action.' This language is almost identical with the provision of the section of the statute of 1917, already quoted by us, and petitioner cites Lukes v. Logan, 66 Cal. 33, 4 Pac. 883, referred to and approved in Fairchild v. King, 102 Cal. 320, at page 323, 36 Pac. 649, and Carpenter v. Jones, 121 Cal. 362, 53 Pac. 842, construing the language of the early statutes quoted, and squarely upholding refusals by trial courts to proceed where fees of jurors have not been paid after nonsuit or disagreement. But counsel for petitioner fails to note the vital distinction between those cases and the case in interest here. In none of the earlier decisions was the question presented as to the rights of the parties in a cause in forma pauperis. Neither did the court in any of these cases consider the vital question of the right of a litigant in a civil case to have the benefit of a jury trial regardless of his financial inability to prepay the fees for such service.

"But the whole question of the rights of a litigant in forma pauperis so recently engaged the attention of the Supreme Court of this state in this very case (Martin v. Superior Court, supra), that we do not need to look elsewhere for authority on which to decide the question presented by the proceeding now before us. 'The fundamental question thus presented,' says the court in its opinion, 'is of the right of the petitioner [Martin] to proceed with the prosecution of his action in the superior court in forma pauperis, and therefore without the payment in advance of the legal fees.' The court points out that this privilege, so far as regards the exemption from court fees, was conceded to litigants at common law, and holds that the power to grant such exemption, in proper cases, now exists in our courts of general jurisdiction without the declaration of express statute.

"Continuing, the court says: 'With the power in our superior courts thus declared, to admit suitors to commence or having commenced to prosecute their actions in forma pauperis in all proper cases, the next consideration is whether or not the Legislature has by its enactments designed to curtail that power. Quite aside from the question as to the power of the Legislature to do this thing, it is obvious that only the plainest declaration of legislative intent would be construed as even an effort to do this thing. We find no such expressed intent. All of the statutes dealing with the payment and prepayment of fees, such as section 4295 of the Political Code, are general in their nature and have to do with the orderly collection and disposition of the fees, payment or prepayment of which is prescribed by law. Neither individually nor collectively are they even susceptible of the construction that the design of the Legislature was to deny to the courts the exercise of their most just and most necessary inherent power. They have applicability to all cases where the court has not, in the exercise of that power, remitted the payment of the fees on behalf of a poor suitor, and in every instance the court's order to this effect is sufficient warrant to every officer charged with the collection of fees to omit the performance of that duty in the specified case.'

"Petitioner seeks to render the decision of the Supreme Court inapplicable by his assertion that in the opinion the aforementioned section of the statute of 1917 (supra) was not referred to, and, so far as the language of the court discloses, was not considered. However, the earlier statutes, containing language so similar as to be almost identical, were before the court and were referred to in the opinion. Furthermore, the statute of 1917 had been passed and was in effect previous to the rendition of the decision, and the decision and the statute must be considered together.

"We fail to see a distinction between the status of a litigant in forma pauperis before a trial by a jury, and the same litigant after a partial trial, and discharge of the jury without finding a verdict. The act of 1917 refers to and regulates only the payment of fees where they can be and are paid by litigants. It nowhere refers to or relates to actions in forma pauperis. It is silent on the subject. We can see in it no declaration of legislative intent to curtail the inherent power of the superior court to admit suitors to commence, or having commenced, to prosecute their actions in forma pauperis in proper cases."

[1] Subsequently, the matter was transferred to this court in order that we might further examine the petitioner's contentions that in view of the peremptory provision whereby the clerk of the superior court was commanded to collect all jury fees each day in advance, the language requiring settlement of unpaid fees as a prerequisite to further proceedings could apply only to persons prosecuting actions in forma pauperis and that the language quoted by Mr. Justice Waste from the statute of 1868, although reproduced in substance in the act of 1917, could apply in the latter statute only to fees earned by jurors in criminal cases. Petitioner calls our attention to the facts that juries in criminal cases are paid by the counties in which the trials take place; that in ordinary civil actions fees must be paid each day in advance; and that the only causes in which jurors remain uncompensated when for any reason they are discharged are actions in which the trial is conducted under an order in forma pauperis. He argues, therefore, that there is no case in which the provision of the statute of 1917 that until the jury fees are paid "no further proceedings shall be allowed in the action" could possibly operate or be at all applicable excepting in civil actions proceeding in forma pauperis. He therefore insists that the statute of 1917 unequivocally applies to the trial of Martin v. Majors, and that, the jury having been discharged without finding a verdict, "no further proceedings shall be allowed in the action" until the jurors are paid.

To this argument respondents answer that for many years the law had been in virtual accord with the quoted section of the act of 1917, yet this court in Martin v. Superior Court announced no exception to the rule that in all stages of a trial a poor suitor shall have all of the benefits of uncompensated service from jurors and court officers.

There was no substantial change in the statutes amendatory of the act of 1868 with reference to the compensation of jurors until the statute of 1917 was adopted. Stats. 1869–70, pp. 148–176; Stats. 1871–72, p. 188. Section 631, subd. 5, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that a trial by jury may be waived in certain actions by the several parties to an issue of fact, "by failing, at the beginning of each day's session, to deposit with the clerk the jury fees and * * * mileage for such day"; but this subdivision (adopted in 1915) throws no light upon the problem presented to the court in the matter at bar. Petitioner declares that there is a wide and fundamental difference between the fee bill of 1868 and its early successors and that of 1917. In the act last framed, while there is a provision for payment of jurors by the county, all of their compensation in civil cases must come from the daily prepayment of the proper fees. By the earlier acts the fees were payable, in civil cases, by the prevailing party, before the entry of the verdict. There was also the provision that, if the sum received by each juror should be found at the end of the term to be less than the legal per diem and mileage, the difference should be paid by the county.

But it is argued by respondent that, inasmuch as actions prosecuted in forma pauperis were not specified in terms by the statute, and because the Legislature was dealing with the general practice in jury cases, the lawmakers only had in mind the situation which might arise in a suit or proceeding in which solvent litigants might be engaged. Respondents, in short, contend that the apparent restricted meaning of the requirement for payment of fees prior to further proceedings after discharge without verdict of a jury arises from unintentional inclusion in a statute adopting a new rule for prepayment of fees in ordinary cases of language which had been applicable to all litigants when used in earlier enactments. It is also asserted on behalf of respondents that in giving to the fee bill the interpretation suggested by petitioner this court would be going contrary to the spirit, if not the letter, of the decision in Martin v. Superior Court. With reference to the point last stated we agree with respondents that a very liberal view of the rights of poor litigants was adopted by this court in the Martin Case. There it was decided that only the plainest declarations of legislative intent would be construed as an effort to curtail the authority of courts given by the common law to admit litigants to sue in forma pauperis. In view of the language of the opinion in Martin v. Superior Court and of an examination of the various fee bills themselves, we are constrained to agree with respondents.

Since the submission of the cause it has been suggested by a member of the court that perhaps the legislators who enacted the statute of 1917 might have had in mind the fact that at common law a vexatious suitor in forma pauperis or one who unnecessarily delayed or otherwise damaged his adversary might be dispaupered and prevented from having further benefit of uncompensated service of jurors. This leads to an inquiry whether or not it is reasonable to suppose that the new matter in the act of 1917 was an attempt automatically and without the intervention of a court to dispauperize any one who had failed of a verdict from the jury first drawn. Such a result might follow the enforcement of the letter of the law of 1917.

Common-law courts, it is true, were jealous of extending the privilege of suing in this form. In Lilly's Practical Register (edition of 1735) p. 851, we are informed that Rolle, Chief Justice, said:

> "That he did not use to admit any one generally to sue in forma pauperis, that is, to sue in all causes, but only to sue so in one cause by virtue of that admittance, 1654. B. S. So that if he had other cause to shew, he must petition again to be admitted to sue in forma pauperis, & sic toties quoties."

The same author in the same article uses the following language:

> "If one that is admitted to sue in forma pauperis, will not proceed according to the rules of the court, but useth delays to vex his adversary, the court will dispauper him. (Mich. 22 Car. B. R.) For the law doth not favour the poor to do injury to others, but to help them to recover their right, where they want ability of themselves to do it."

There was a rule also that if a pauper gave notice of trial and did not proceed he should be dispaupered. A note of this rule is found in 91 Eng. Rep., Full Reprint, 433.

However, the rule seems to have been enforced, generally speaking, only upon some showing of vexatious conduct on the part of the pauper. In Blood v. Lee, reported in volume 95, Eng. Rep., Full Reprint, at page 912, we find the following interesting matter:

> "Wilmot, C. J., cited, from his own manuscript notes, the following cases relating to paupers and costs: Winter v. Slow, Mich. 4 Geo. 2, B. R., was trover by a pauper: at the trial, the plaintiff proved a demand and refusal at the time of serving the writ, which being after the commencement of the action, he became nonsuited; and having brought a second action for the same thing, it was moved that he might pay the costs of the nonsuit in the former action, before he proceeded in the second action; but the court refused to grant the motion, because they thought the plaintiff had not been vexatious. In Taylor v. Lowe, Trin. 7 & 8 Geo. 2, B. R., the plaintiff being a pauper, and having given five or six notices of trial and thereby vexed the defendant, it was moved that he might pay costs of former notices, or be restrained from proceeding to trial; but while the admission to sue in forma pauperis stood they would make no rule about costs, but made a rule to shew cause why he should not be dispaupered, which was made absolute upon an affidavit of service thereof."

In Hullock's Law of Costs (edition of 1796) 213, a case is cited where a single nonsuit made costs at once due, and it was ruled that the pauper might not thereafter proceed without paying costs, or showing, according to the act of Parliament, that he was whipped. The same learned author, at the same page, cites Winter v. Slow, supra, where it appeared that the nonsuit was not upon the merits, but occasioned by a mistake of plaintiff's attorney, and therefore in the court's opinion not vexatious. In Noaks v. Watts, 93 Eng. Rep., Full Reprint, 609, it was decided that a pauper shall not pay costs for not going on to trial, as other plaintiffs do; but if the costs are taxed the court would prevent his being vexatious by obliging him to pay them before going to trial.

It was declared in Doe dem. Leppingwell v. Weake, 2 Smith's (John Prince) Reports, 676, that withdrawing the record at the third day of the assizes, after giving notice of trial, was vexatious conduct meriting dispaupering of the plaintiff, but in that case it was decided that defendants had waived their right to complain.

In Brittain v. Greenville, 93 Eng. Rep. Full Reprint, 1072, the court denied a motion to tax costs after a lessor admitted in forma pauperis had a verdict against him. The purpose was to ground a further motion to stay his proceedings in a second ejectment. The decision seems to be grounded, in part at least, upon the failure of the moving party to proceed in the usual way to dispauper his adversary. It was held, however, that plaintiff's conduct was not vexatious.

In Doe dem. Leppingwell v. Trussell, 6 East 504 (probably a companion to Doe dem. Leppingwell v. Weake, supra), it was found that the plaintiff suing in forma pauperis had caused much delay by twice setting the case for trial and afterwards countermanding the notice, in one instance, before the term, and in the other withdrawing the record on the third day of the assizes. The defendant had incurred above £100 costs in procuring evidence, and his attorney swore that he believed the merits to be in favor of the defendant. The reporter describes the proceedings and their result as follows:

"To shew that the proper course was to move that the party should be dispaupered in case of vexatious delay, 2 Salk. 506; Taylor v. Lowe, 2 Stra. 903; Brittain v. Greenville, 2 Stra. 1122, and 2 Tidd's Practice, 893, were cited. It was contended that the lessor of the plaintiff ought at least to have countermanded his notice, and thereby saved a great part of the expense which the defendant had sustained.

"On this day Lawes shewed cause upon an affidavit, which stated, that the lessor of the plaintiff having about 30 copies of registers to procure, and several witnesses to collect, among whom was an old and infirm man, was unable to get to the assizes in time, and therefore was under the necessity of withdrawing the record.

"The court, however, made the rule absolute for dispaupering the lessor of the plaintiff, but discharged it as to the payment of costs."

Under the heading "Forma Pauperis" in 1 General Index to the English Common-Law Reports (Biddle and McMurtrie Edition of 1882), at page 373, we find the two following notes:

"Amendment without costs not demandable of right. Foster v. Bank, li. 878; 6 Q. B. 878. Withdrawing record to amend must pay costs of the day. Thompson v. Hornby, lviii. 977; 9 Q. B. 978."

In Weston v. Withers, 2 Durnf. & E. 511, it was held that after nonsuit in trespass the court will stay proceedings in a second action between the same parties for the same cause until payment of the costs of nonsuit, notwithstanding the fact that the plaintiff suing in forma pauperis was a prisoner at the time of bringing the second action.

It will be at once evident from the above citations that the common-law courts were not very ready to extend the privileges of a second trial to one suing in forma pauperis if there were circumstances indicating vexatious conduct. It will be also apparent that no very definite nor fixed rule was followed. But even the practice at the common law did not in general dispauperize one who merely failed to obtain a verdict, or who by the action of his counsel in securing a postponement of the cause for correction of pleadings permitted a jury to be discharged before submission of the issues of fact. We cannot justly decide, therefore, that a rule analogous to that for dispaupering litigants at common law was intended by the Legislature of 1917.

Besides, there could be no good reason for requiring a plaintiff excused from paying jury fees at the first trial to pay on a second trial the fees from which he was so excused. Some reason might exist for failing to extend the privilege to a second trial without fees, but that would be accomplished, not by forcing him to pay the charges from which he had been exempted, but by exacting the usual charges for a second trial.

[2] The question whether one once admitted to sue in forma pauperis should, on account of vexatious conduct, delay, etc., be prevented from having further benefit of uncompensated service, is one for the court having jurisdiction in the case or proceeding to determine in the exercise of a wise discretion. Its discretion here, as in the case of one originally seeking to be admitted to sue in forma pauperis, should be exercised with a view to confine the privilege most strictly to those who, having a substantial right to enforce or preserve, are absolutely unable otherwise to so do, and who, once having been admitted to proceed in forma pauperis, diligently pursue a course free from unreasonable delay or vexatious conduct of any kind.

[3] In conclusion, we wish most emphatically to declare our conviction that such discretion should be used with the utmost care, to the end that unworthy persons who are neither indigent nor possessed of substantial rights may not enjoy this privilege.

In re OLSSEN'S ESTATE. (Civ. 2958.)

1. WILLS 🔑130—HOLOGRAPHIC WILLS SUFFICIENTLY DATED BY USING FIGURES.

The figures "4/12/17th" are a sufficient dating for holographic will.

2. WILLS 🔑130—HOLOGRAPHIC WILL CONSISTING OF TWO CLAUSES SUFFICIENT THOUGH ONE IS UNDATED.

A writing containing two clauses, the first dated and the second undated, each clause being signed by testator, and written all at one time by him, held to constitute a single instrument, and not a will and an undated codicil.

3. WILLS 🔑130—INSTRUMENT SUFFICIENTLY INTELLIGIBLE AS HOLOGRAPHIC WILL.

An instrument written and signed by testator, reading, "mod clark I leev hore $2000 more cash mony. My my is cleere i leev hore alle," held sufficiently intelligible to constitute a holographic will.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Jack Olssen, deceased. Petition to probate will by Maude Clark, contested by Otto Stein and Gus Stein, also known as Otto Ottoson and Gus Ottoson. From an order and decree admitting holographic will to probate, contestants appeal. Affirmed.

Ambrose Gherini and Edwin H. Williams, both of San Francisco, D. Edwin Lyons, for appellants.

Samuel M. Shortridge, J. E. Harper, and Cullinan & Hickey, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from an order and decree admitting the olographic will of one Jack Olssen to probate upon the petition of the devisee named therein.

The following is a copy of the document in question:

> "mod clark 351 jones st progfeeld Apa Aparmass 201 I leev hore $2000.00 more cash mony
> "Jack Olssen
> "My my is cleere i leev hore alle
> "Jack Olssen"

The trial court in its findings construed the above document, with the proper spelling ot the words therein, to read as follows:

> "4/12/17th.
> "Maude Clark, 351 Jones street, Brookfield Apartments, Apartment 201, I leave her $2000.00 more, cash money. Jack Olssen.
> "My mind is clear. I leave her all.
> "Jack Olssen."

[1] To this reading the appellants offer no particular objection, but insist that the original document, even with this reading, has not the qualities of an olographic will, and is otherwise too indefinite as to its intent to be given effect. The first arrow of the appellants is aimed at the date of the instrument, but we think this assault is sufficiently met by the decision of the Supreme Court in the matter of the Estate of Chevallier, 159 Cal. 161, 113 Pac. 130, in which the figures "4–14–07" was held to amount to a sufficient dating of an olographic will. The appellant insists that the addition of the letters "th," in connection with the figures at the head of the instrument in question here, renders their meaning uncertain; but we think that this is a hypercriticism, and that no real distinction can be found between the two cases.

The appellants' next contention is that, even if the instrument shall be held to be sufficiently dated and signed, as to the first portion thereof, the closing clause of the document must be regarded as an undated codicil. This question, however, must be determined by the circumstances under which the instrument was drawn, as revealed by the testimony in the case, from which it appears that the testator was, on the date which the document bears, a patient at the St. Francis Hospital in San Francisco, where he died five days later, and that, being then on his deathbed, he was observed by his nurse attempting to write something upon a piece of newspaper, and was asked by her if he would like to have some writing paper, and upon his nodding his head affirmatively she went out and got him a desk pad of writing paper; whereupon he asked her to telephone to the proponent, Maude Clark, which she did within the next 10 or 15 minutes, during which he was writing upon the piece of paper which the nurse identified. He had practically completed such writing when she returned to the room, and folding up the paper, he put it away. Within a half hour thereafter the proponent of this will came to the room of the testator, when he gave her the folded paper, telling her to take care of it, and not lose it, for it meant a whole lot to her. The folded paper, in the precise form in which the said proponent received it, was produced in court.

[2] From these facts we think the trial court was justified in arriving at the conclusion that the instrument in question was written all at one time, and was to be construed as a single instrument expressive of the will of the testator.

[3] As such we are satisfied that the reading thereof adopted by the trial court renders it a sufficiently intelligible and properly executed writing to constitute an olographic will, and hence that the trial court was not in error in admitting same to probate.

The order and decree are affirmed.

SPOTTON v. DYER. (Civ. 2824.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚷704(2)—APPELLANT BY FAILING TO PRESENT EVIDENCE ADMITS FINDINGS CORRECT.

On appeal from order denying motion to vacate judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 663, and to change conclusions of law on the ground that they are not supported by the findings, appellant by failing to present evidence to appellate court concedes that the findings are correct and responsive to the issue.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚷931(2)—FINDINGS ARE TO BE CONSTRUED MOST STRONGLY IN FAVOR OF RESPONDENT.

On appeal from order denying motion to vacate judgment on ground that the conclusions of law are not supported by findings under Code Civ. Proc. § 663, findings are to be construed most strongly in favor of respondent, and any uncertainty is to be resolved against appellant in support of the judgment.

3. BILLS AND NOTES ⚷134—WRITTEN CONTRACT AND NOTE THEREUNDER ARE TO BE CONSTRUED TOGETHER.

Under Civ. Code, § 1642, a written contract and a note, executed contemporaneously therewith as a part of the same transaction, are to be taken together, though neither refers to the other.

4. BILLS AND NOTES 🔑335—TRANSFEREE OF NOTE WITH KNOWLEDGE OF CONDITIONS STANDS IN PLACE OF PAYEE.

Where payment of note was made subject to performance of a condition by collateral written agreement, payee's transferee, who takes note with knowledge of such condition, is in no better position than original payee.

5. BILLS AND NOTES 🔑164 — NOTE WITH STATEMENT OF CONDITIONS THEREIN NONNEGOTIABLE.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 3088, 3092, a statement on face of note that note was not to be paid unless payee performed certain condition would have destroyed negotiability of note.

6. BILLS AND NOTES 🔑164—NOTE PAYABLE ON CONDITION NONNEGOTIABLE IN HANDS OF INDORSEE WITH KNOWLEDGE.

Where note was executed contemporaneously with written agreement and as part of same transaction, a condition limiting payment of note on performance of certain condition by payee, contained in the collateral agreement and not in the note itself, rendered note nonnegotiable in the hands of the payee and his indorsee with knowledge of the condition.

7. BILLS AND NOTES 🔑132—MAKER OF NOTE COULD AVOID PAYMENT ON PAYEE'S NONPERFORMANCE OF CONDITIONS.

Where collateral agreement made payment of note conditional upon performance of certain condition and further provided that maker, if dissatisfied with contract, could rescind before certain date, maker could avoid payment of note because of payee's nonperformance of condition, notwithstanding maker's failure to rescind before specified date.

8. BILLS AND NOTES 🔑113—PAYING ONE INSTALLMENT NOTE NOT WAIVER OF CONDITIONS UNPERFORMED.

The mere fact of paying one of a series of installments conditioned upon the performance of an act by the payee does not constitute a waiver, either of the right to have the act performed, or the correlative right to refuse to make further payments until it is performed.

9. BILLS AND NOTES 🔑132—TIME NOT ESSENCE OF PERFORMANCE OF CONDITION OF CONTRACT.

Where payment of note was made conditional, by collateral agreement, upon payee's construction, by certain date, of certain number of feet of billboard, payee might have performed after such date under Civ. Code, § 1492; time not being of the essence of the condition of the contract.

10. BILLS AND NOTES 🔑113—PAYMENT OF INSTALLMENT NOTE NOT WAIVER OF FUTURE PERFORMANCE OF CONDITION.

Where payment of certain amounts on July 1st and October 1st were made conditional upon payee's performance of certain conditions by June 1st, maker's payment of July 1st installment, notwithstanding payee's failure to perform condition, did not waive maker's right to refuse October payment because of continuing breach.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by E. K. Spotton against Edward F. Dyer. From an order denying a motion to vacate judgment against him and to change conclusions of law on the ground that they are not supported by the findings, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Gavin McNab and R. P. Henshall, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Powell & Dow, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BRITTAIN, J. [1] The plaintiff appeals from an order denying his motion made under the provisions of section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure to vacate a judgment against him and to change the conclusions of law on the ground that they are not supported by the findings. None of the evidence is before the court. In such a case the appellant necessarily concedes that the findings are correct and responsive to the issues.

[2] On April 1, 1914, the two instruments involved in this suit were executed. One was a contract between Charles H. Green, of San Francisco, and Edward F. Dyer, of Cleveland, Ohio, and the other a promissory note, negotiable in form, for $10,000, made by Dyer to Green payable October 1, 1914. Under the terms of the contract, among other things, Green was to complete and transfer to the Green-Dyer Company on or before June 1, 1914, 10,000 lineal feet of billboards in and near the cities of San Jose, Santa Cruz, and Salinas. These billboards constitute "the plants" to which reference is made in the findings. The contract recited the payment of $10,000 by Dyer, coincident with its execution, and bound Dyer to make two other payments of $10,000 each on or before July 1, 1914, and on or before October 1, 1914, "provided, however, that no payment shall be made by said Dyer other than said ten thousand ($10,000) dollars until the said plants shall have been duly and legally transferred to the Green-Dyer Company, as hereinabove required, and until said plants shall have been completed as provided in paragraph nine hereof." The initial $10,000 only having been paid, the proviso applied to the future payments Dyer agreed to make. The proviso was in paragraph 3 of the contract. Paragraph 9 contained the requirement for Green to complete the plants. The lengthy contract was set forth in full in the findings, and in introducing it the court found that the consideration for the execution of the note by Dyer was the execution of the contract by Green. It was further found that the note and contract were concurrent and dependent; executed at the same time, between the same parties, and with reference to the same subject-matter; and "that said note evidences and was intended * * * to evidence the final payment of $10,000 required by paragraph third of said contract to be paid on or before October 1, 1914. That said final payment was evidenced by said note for convenience of collection only, and there was no understanding between the defendant and said Green that the note was to be negotiated." In support of the judgment, any uncertainty in the findings must be resolved against the appellant, and they are to be most strongly construed in favor of the respondent. Gould v. Eaton, 111 Cal. 639, 44 Pac. 319, 52 Am. St. Rep. 201; Breeze v. Brooks, 97 Cal. 72, 31 Pac. 742, 22 L. R. A. 257; Cooley v. Brunswig, 30 Cal. App. 58, 157 Pac. 13.

[3] In neither instrument was there any reference to the other. This fact did not militate against the operation of the rule that several contracts relating to the same matter between the same parties, and made as parts of substantially one transaction, are to be taken together. Civ. Code, § 1642. Paraphrasing this rule and citing Goodwin v. Nickerson, 51 Cal. 166, a leading textwriter says:

> "Where there is a contemporaneous written contract affecting the terms of the note, it is to be construed with the note. * * * Any lawful condition annexed to the note by a collateral written agreement may be enforced." Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, § 156.

In the familiar application of this rule to notes secured by mortgages, frequently one or each of the instruments refers to the other. The rule is not changed where no such reference is made. In the hands of the original payee or of a transferee of the note with knowledge of the collateral agreement, whether or not the note is negotiable in form, it is nonnegotiable in fact. Metropolis, etc., Bank v. Monnier, 169 Cal. 592, 147 Pac. 265.

After the execution of the note and contract and before the maturity of the note, Green, for value, transferred the note to the International Banking Corporation. The court found that prior to and at the time of such transfer, and at all times mentioned in the complaint, the bank had notice and knowledge of the existence of the contract and of all the provisions thereof, and that it took the transfer with such notice and knowledge. After maturity of the note the bank transferred it to the plaintiff, not for value nor in the due course of business, but for the purpose of collection only. At no time after the execution of the contract was the capacity of the billboards in excess of 7,468 lineal feet, Green having failed to increase the plants to the contractual 10,000 lineal feet.

The complaint was in the ordinary form of a suit on the promissory note. The defendant set up the contract, the failure of Green to complete the plants, and the knowledge of the bank. The last finding was that the note had not been paid, "but that by reason of the provisions of the said contract, and the facts herein found in connection therewith, there is nothing due or owing from the defendant on said note." The conclusions of law, each of which is attacked by the appellant, are that the bank and its assignee, the plaintiff, are bound by the provisions of the contract governing the payment of moneys represented by the note; that as to the bank the note was nonnegotiable because of the accompanying contract of which the bank had notice; that under the provisions of the contract the defendant was not required to pay the moneys represented by the note because of the noncompletion of the plants; that there is nothing due, owing, or recoverable from the defendant; and that the defendant is entitled to judgment.

The appellant maintains the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Flood v. Petry, 165 Cal. 309, 132 Pac. 256, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 861, is determinative of this case. It appears from the report of that case that Petry undertook to erect a building for Flood. The contract provided that the final payment, which was to have become due 35 days after completion, should be made partly in cash and the balance by a note payable 18 months thereafter. The note was executed when the contract was signed, and contained the clause:

> "This note is negotiable and payable without defalcation or discount and without any relief or benefit whatever from stay, valuation, appraisement, or homestead exemption laws."

Petry pledged the note to secure a loan from a bank. He failed to perform the building contract. Flood sued him and the bank for cancellation of the note, alleging the bank had notice of the contract. Judgment for Flood was affirmed in the District Court of Appeal, but on hearing in the Supreme Court the judgment was reversed upon the ground that the particular note was an advance payment upon the executory agreement of Petry to complete the building, and, notwithstanding the bank's knowledge of the building contract, Petry's subsequent breach of the executory agreement did not affect Flood's liability to the bank. In reaching this conclusion, as applied to the particular note, great stress was laid upon the statement of negotiability contained in the note. In the main opinion it was said:

> "If Dr. Flood had said to Petry, 'Take this note and, if you like, negotiate it,' the bank, knowing that fact, would have been justified in accepting it for a valuable consideration before maturity and before breach of the executory contract. But he did say substantially the same thing more emphatically than by word of mouth. He wrote it. It was to that extent a waiver of the terms of the building contract and was a payment before performance, upon an executory agreement."

[4-6] In the present case, after the payment of the first $10,000, the contract expressly provided that Dyer was not to pay anything more until the billboards were completed. The court found the bank knew of this condition in the contract when it took the note, and that the note and contract were interdependent. As appears from both the main opinion and the concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Shaw in the Flood Case, the decision was based largely upon the ground that under the circumstances disclosed by the evidence, and by the assurance of negotiability written on the face of the note, Flood was estopped from denying that it was negotiable. In the present case, in the absence of evidence and in consideration of the knowledge of the bank of the express statement in the contract, no element of estoppel appears. Under section 1642 of the Civil Code, the contract of which the bank had notice was the entire contract evidenced by both the formal contract and the note. It was said by Mr. Justice Shaw, in his special concurring opinion in the Flood Case, the note would have been uncollectible had it remained in the hands of Petry. In this case, by reason of the knowledge of the bank of the condition in the contract, it was in no better position than the original payee. If, on the face of the note in the present case, the statement had been made, that it was not to be paid unless Green completed the billboards, it would have destroyed its negotiability. Civ. Code, §§ 3088 and 3092, in effect prior to the amendments of 1917 (St. 1917, p. 1534). A condition, limiting the payment of a note on the happening of a contingency, contained in the collateral agreement and not in the note itself, renders the note nonnegotiable in the hands of the original payee and his indorsee with knowledge of the condition. National Hardware Co. v. Sherwood, 165 Cal. 1, 130 Pac. 881; Smiley v. Watson, 23 Cal. App. 413, 138 Pac. 367. In the Flood Case the bank was protected because the note was negotiable. In this case by reason of the condition in the contract, of which the bank had notice, the note was nonnegotiable in its hands, and in the hands of its assignee for collection after the date of its maturity.

[7] The sixth paragraph of the contract provided that if for any reason Dyer became dissatisfied with his contract with Green, and before April 1, 1915, elected to withdraw, Green should repay to him all moneys theretofore advanced by Dyer under the contract. Upon the assumption that this clause constituted a special right to rescind, it is argued that to relieve Dyer of his obligation to make the October payment he was compelled to rescind the contract, returning to Green everything of value he had received. Under the contract, in addition to completing the plants and repaying Dyer if he elected to withdraw, Green was obligated to do a number of other things not involved in the present action. The contract provided that certain stock of the Green-Dyer Company should be placed in escrow until April 1, 1915, and, if Dyer elected to proceed further under the contract, it should then be equally divided between Green and Dyer. If, on the other hand, Dyer elected to withdraw from the venture, the stock was to remain in the hands of the depositary, and if Green failed to repay Dyer the money he had advanced, the stock was to be delivered to Dyer for his security. If Dyer had rescinded, or if rescission was intended by the sixth paragraph, the result would have been the nullification of this provision for security. To hold that Dyer was compelled to abandon his contractual rights as a prerequisite to his enforcement of them would be absurd. There is no finding that Dyer received anything of value from Green in exchange for the $20,000 he paid, other than the right to stand upon the terms of the contract, and the evidence, if any was adduced on this subject, is not before the court.

[8-10] It is argued that since the plants were to have been completed by June 1, 1914, and Dyer paid the second $10,000 July 1, 1914, he waived Green's breach and could not rely upon it to defeat the October payment. From the findings it does not appear what actuated Dyer to make the July payment. In support of the judgment it may be inferred that the circumstances were such that Dyer did not waive any of his rights. Even though the second payment was voluntary, that alone would not bind him to make the third payment. The mere fact of paying one of a series of installments conditioned upon the performance of an act by the payee does not constitute a waiver either of the right to have the act performed or the correlative right to refuse to make further payments until it is performed. The fact that Dyer was entitled to complete performance before the second payment was made did not relieve Green from the duty to finish the work. Time was not of the essence of this condition of the contract, and Green might have performed after June 1, 1914, Civ. Code, § 1492. Dyer was not obligated to make any payment except the first until the plants were completed. After June 1, 1914, every day's failure on the part of Green to do the work was a breach of the contract, and the fact that Dyer may have waived the breach up to July 1st did not preclude him from refusing to make the October payment because of the continuing breach. Woodard v. Glenwood, etc., Co., 171 Cal. 514, 153 Pac. 951.

It is further argued that, since the bank was not the assignee of the entire contract, Dyer could not offset against its claim

Green's failure to complete the billboards. It does not appear that Dyer is seeking to offset anything against the bank's claim. Under the terms of the contract the October payment never matured. It was not to be made unless Green completed the billboards, and the bank knew this when it took the note.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. NEETENS. (Crim. 470.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 11, 1919.)

1. FALSE PRETENSES 🔑31—INFORMATION INSUFFICIENT SHOWING NO CONNECTION BETWEEN REPRESENTATIONS AND OBTAINING OF THE MONEY.

An information charging that defendant obtained $100 by means of false pretenses as to a conversation with a third person relating to the payment of a mortgage, held defective, not showing or indicating any causal connection between the false representation and the obtaining of the money.

2. FALSE PRETENSES 🔑4—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE STATED.

The elements of the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses consists of a fraudulent representation, defendant's knowledge of the falsity, the making of the representation with intent to deceive the innocent party, and the innocent party's reliance thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, False Pretense.]

3. FALSE PRETENSES 🔑38 — INDICTMENT CHARGING CONVERSATION AS TO PROPOSED RELEASE OF MORTGAGE AND EVIDENCE OF STATEMENT OF RELEASE HAD, CONSTITUTED VARIANCE.

In a prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses, which the information asserted were made with reference to a conversation with a third person as to the payment of a mortgage, and arrangement to release the premises, testimony that defendant stated the mortgagee had released the premises constituted a variance from the averments of the information.

4. FALSE PRETENSES 🔑49(1) — CORROBORATION OF PROSECUTING WITNESS INSUFFICIENT TO SUSTAIN CONVICTION.

In a prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses, where the alleged false representations were wholly oral, testimony of the prosecutor's wife held insufficient corroboration of the prosecutor's testimony to sustain a conviction within Pen. Code, § 1110.

5. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑55—INSTRUCTION AS TO EFFECT OF DRUNKENNESS AS EXCUSING CRIME ERRONEOUS.

In a prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses, an instruction that drunkenness affords no excuse for the commission of a crime, and that evidence of drunkenness can only be considered for the purpose of determining the degree of the crime, is erroneous, not being in accord with Pen. Code, § 22, declaring that whenever the actual existence of any purpose, motive, or intent is necessary to constitute any particular species of crime the jury may consider the fact that accused was intoxicated.

6. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑823(1)—ERRONEOUS INSTRUCTION NOT CURED BY GIVING CORRECT ONE.

An erroneous instruction is not cured by the giving of one correct in law.

BURNETT, J. Appellant was convicted of obtaining money under false pretenses, and he appeals from the judgment, the order denying a motion for a new trial, and the order denying a motion in arrest of judgment.

[1] The information upon which he was convicted charged the offense as follows:

"The said Alexander Neetens did on or about the 24th day of November, A. D. 1918, * * * devise and intend by unlawful ways and means, and by false and fraudulent representations and pretenses to obtain and get into his possession the personal property of one Jakob Hieb, in the manner following, to wit: That the said Alexander Neetens did, at and in the county aforesaid, and on or about the date aforesaid, willfully, unlawfully, knowingly, designedly, falsely, and fraudulently pretend and represent to said Jakob Hieb that he, the said Alexander Neetens, had met one Dan Seyer in the city of Stockton, * * * and had made arrangements with the said Dan Seyer to pay a mortgage which the said Dan Seyer held on the property of one Christina Wagenmann on De Forest avenue, in the city of Lodi, county of San Joaquin, * * * and that he desired to obtain from the said Jakob Hieb the sum of one hundred dollars until 10 o'clock a. m. on November 25, 1918, at which time the said $100 would be paid to the said Jakob Hieb."

Then follows an averment of the falsity of the statement as to said meeting and agreement with Seyer. The information proceeds:

"And the said Jakob Hieb believing said false and fraudulent pretenses and representations so made as aforesaid to be true, and being deceived thereby, was induced by reason of the said false and fraudulent pretenses and representations so made as aforesaid to deliver and pay over to the said Alexander Neetens the sum of $100, * * * and the said defendant then and there, by means of said false and fraudulent pretenses and representations so made as aforesaid, did then and there willfully, unlawfully, knowingly, designedly, and fraudulently receive and obtain from the said Jakob Hieb the said sum of $100, * * * with the intent to cheat and defraud the said Jakob Hieb of the same, and the said defendant did then and there willfully, unlawfully, and fraudulently take and carry away the same."

It is quite apparent that said information is defective, the most serious fault being the absence of any fact showing or indicating any causal connection between the false representation and the loan or transfer of the $100 from Hieb to defendant. From no allegation does it appear that Hieb was interested in said mortgage or its release, and why he should advance money for said payment is left entirely to conjecture. Under the decision of People v. Canfield, 28 Cal. App. 792, 154 Pac. 33, the information herein would be held fatally defective; but the Supreme Court in People v. Griesheimer, 176 Cal. 44, 167 Pac. 521, has taken a different view of this requirement of the rules of pleading, and it may be that the doctrine of that decision is sufficiently flexible and potential to save the information herein.

[2] The case, however, should be reversed, we think, by reason of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the conviction. The elements to be alleged and proven in a charge like this are well known. The fraudulent representations must clearly appear. It must be shown that they were known by the defendant to be false, or were made under circumstances not warranted by the knowledge of the defendant; that they were made with intent to deceive the innocent party; that the person injured relied upon the representation, and that otherwise he would not have parted with his money. People v. Jordan, 66 Cal. 10, 4 Pac. 773, 56 Am. St. Rep. 73.

[3, 4] As to these elements it is well to observe that the only representation as to an existing fact, upon which the charge can possibly be sustained, is that the defendant had met one Dan Seyer, and had made arrangements with him "to pay a mortgage which the said Dan Seyer held on the property of one Christina Wagenmann." It is also apparent that the only important feature of this alleged representation consists of the allegation as to said "arrangement." The circumstance of meeting Dan Seyer is surplusage, or, at least, mere matter of inducement. The vital consideration is that he had made arrangements or had agreed with Seyer to pay a certain mortgage. When we turn to the testimony of Hieb we find that he first related the conversation with defendant without mentioning this representation at all, and the only thing stated by him tending in any manner to support that allegation of the information is found in his answer to this suggestive question: "What, if anything, was said about any conversation with Dan Seyer?" His answer was: "Yes, he said that during the week he had been in talking to Seyer and he had released the house." That "he had released the house" is materially different from the allegation that he "had made arrangements to release" it. The variance seems substantial. Of course, the proof should correspond essentially with the allegation of the pleading. Moreover, if we concede that there is a sufficient correspondence in this respect between the testimony and the information, then there is a failure of proof, because there is no corroboration. Section 1110 of the Penal Code provides:

> "Upon a trial for having, with an intent to cheat or defraud another designedly, by any false pretense, obtained the signature of any person to a written instrument, or having obtained from any person any labor, money, or property, whether real or personal, or valuable thing, the defendant cannot be convicted if the false pretense was expressed in language unaccompanied by a false token or writing, unless the pretense, or some note or memorandum thereof is in writing, subscribed by or in the handwriting of the defendant, or unless the pretense is proven by the testimony of two witnesses, or that of one witness and corroborating circumstances."

It is admitted that the so-called false representation was entirely oral. It is true that another witness testified to said conversation between the defendant and Hieb, namely, the wife of the prosecuting witness. She related the conversation as follows:

> "When Mr. Neetens came over there he asked if he had a little money. Mr. Hieb says: 'Yes; I have got a little, but I need it for paying my taxes.' He said: 'I only want it until to-morrow to pay off the mortgage on Mrs. Wagenmann's house, pay the money to Mr. Seyer, and then I will pay the money back Monday morning at ten o'clock.'"

She was present during the entire interview, and in her testimony is not a word about any representation as to a conversation or arrangement between defendant and Seyer as to said mortgage. It is true that she was not asked the direct question as to whether any such representation was made by defendant, but it is a fair inference from her testimony that no such representation was made. At any rate she failed in this respect to furnish any corroborative evidence, and we find no circumstance in the case supplying the omission.

[5] Again, in his charge the learned trial judge instructed the jury as follows:

> "It is a well settled rule that drunkenness is no excuse for the commission of a crime. Drunkenness forms no defense whatever to the fact of guilt, for when a crime is committed by a party while in a fit of intoxication the law will not allow him to avail himself of his own gross vice and misconduct to shelter himself from the legal consequences of such crime. Evidence of drunkenness can only be considered by the jury for the purpose of determining the degree of the crime."

Such an instruction is erroneous in this class of cases. The authority for the instruction cited by the lower court, namely, People v. Vincent, 95 Cal. 428, 30 Pac. 581, and People v. Methever, 132 Cal. 326, 64 Pac. 481, each involved a charge of murder, which offense is divided into degrees. The offense of obtaining money by false pretenses is capable of no such division, and the principle to be applied is enunciated in People v. Phelan, 93 Cal. 111, 28 Pac. 855. Therein it is said:

> "The intent with which a building is entered being a necessary element to constitute the crime of burglary, it is proper for the jury to take into consideration the fact that the accused was intoxicated at the time, in determining the intent with which he committed the act; and an instruction to the jury to the effect that they could not consider such evidence for any other purpose than that of determining the degree of the crime is prejudicially erroneous, there being no question as to the degree of the crime, the evidence showing without conflict that the building was entered in the nighttime."

In this case, as we have stated, there is no degree of the crime, and the instruction was therefore equivalent to saying that the jury could not consider the evidence of drunkenness for any purpose; whereas, the truth is that "the purpose, motive, and intent of the defendant" were and are involved in the charge, and the correct rule is prescribed in section 22 of the Penal Code as follows:

> "No act committed by a person while in a state of voluntary intoxication is less criminal by reason of his having been in such condition. But whenever the actual existence of any particular purpose, motive, or intent is a necessary element to constitute any particular species or degree of crime, the jury may take into consideration the fact that the accused was intoxicated at the time, in determining the purpose, motive, or intent with which he committed the act."

[6] This instruction was also given by the court, but it did not correct the error for the reason that "an instruction plainly erroneous is not cured by a correct instruction in some other part of the charge." People v. Westlake, 124 Cal. 457, 57 Pac. 467.

There is evidence in the record that the defendant at the time of the alleged offense was under the influence of liquor. Whether it contained more than the much discussed 2¾ per cent. of alcohol we are not advised, but a finding that he was intoxicated would not be unsupported. Therefore it was important that the jury should be correctly instructed as to this feature.

The case for the people is weak, and we think the interests of justice demand a reversal of the verdict. Accordingly the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are reversed.

COMMONWEALTH BONDING & CASUALTY INS. CO. v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO. (Civ. 2921.)

1. STREET RAILROADS 🔑117(28)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF DRIVER OF TRUCK COLLIDING WITH CAR FOR THE JURY.

Whether the driver of a motor truck was guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to cross before defendant's street car, running 20 miles an hour, held for the jury.

2. NEGLIGENCE 🔑68 — ASSUMPTION THAT ANOTHER WILL USE CARE NOT CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Though one may not willfully close his eyes to danger on the assumption that another will act with care, he cannot be deemed negligent when, if a reasonable use of his faculties does not warn him to the contrary, he rests on such assumption.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑930(2)—DEVIATION FROM INSTRUCTIONS APPEARS ONLY WHEN VERDICT NOT SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE.

Only when the evidence does not support the verdict can the appellate court say the instructions, which did not direct a verdict for either party, were not followed.

4. TRIAL 🔑260(1) — INSTRUCTIONS REPETITION OF THOSE GIVEN PROPERLY REFUSED.

Requested instructions sufficiently covered by the instruction given are properly refused, though correct.

5. STREET RAILROADS 🔑118(15) — INSTRUCTION ON ISSUE OF LAST CLEAR CHANCE RAISED BY EVIDENCE, PROPER.

In an action against a street railway company for personal injuries by running its car into a motor truck crossing the track, question of last clear chance held raised by the evidence, and therefore properly instructed on.

6. STREET RAILROADS 🔑98(7)—ATTEMPT TO CROSS BEFORE CAR NOT NECESSARILY CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

A person is not guilty of contributory negligence merely because he attempts to cross a street railway track, where cars may legally run at 20 miles an hour, when a car is approaching.

7. STREET RAILROADS 🔑99(10) — DUTY OF TRUCK DRIVER TO USE ORDINARY CARE BEFORE CROSSING TRACK.

All that is required on any given occasion of a driver of a vehicle in attempting to use a street railway crossing, even where cars may legally run 20 miles an hour, is to exercise ordinary care to observe coming cars through his senses of sight and hearing.

8. STREET RAILROADS ⚷99(7)—CROSSING BEFORE CAR UNDER REASONABLE BELIEF OF SAFETY NOT CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

It is not negligence for an automobile driver to attempt to cross a street railway track, at a point where cars legally may operate at 20 miles an hour, in front of an approaching car such a distance away that an ordinarily prudent person would believe he could cross safely.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; G. W. Nichol, Judge.

Action by the Commonwealth Bonding & Casualty Insurance Company against the Pacific Electric Railway Company. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Karr, R. C. Gortner, E. E. Morris, and A. W. Ashburn, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Haas & Dunnigan and E. B. Drake, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. The plaintiff corporation was the insurer of the Los Angeles Daily Express Company upon its liability to its employés under the workmen's compensation law and brought this action to recover from the defendant Pacific Electric Railway Company for damages caused by the collision of one of the latter's electric street cars with a motor truck of the express company, on which one George L. Makley was riding, and which was driven by a fellow workman, Fenn Hart. Both of these men were employés of the express company. Makley was thrown from the motor car by the collision, and had both legs cut off by the electric car. The plaintiff company, having paid the compensation allowed Makley under the workmen's compensation law, is maintaining this action under its subrogated claim against the electric railway company.

The collision took place in Hollywood, in the city of Los Angeles, at the intersection of Hollywood boulevard, which runs approximately east and west, and Wilton place, a street running north and south. The motor car was proceeding toward the south on Wilton place, and the electric car was going toward the east on the south track of the electric company's double track railway on Hollywood boulevard. The verdict of the jury was in favor of the plaintiff, and awarded damages in the sum of $8,000. Defendant's motion for a new trial was denied, and the appeal is from the judgment upon the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions. The grounds relied on are insufficiency of the evidence and alleged errors of the court in giving and refusing instructions.

The main contention made by appellant is that the evidence establishes contributory negligence. It does not seem to be disputed that the evidence was sufficient to justify the jury in finding that the defendant's motorman was guilty of negligence in driving his car at an excessive and unlawful rate of speed. The speed limit at the place of the accident, under the traffic ordinance of the city of Los Angeles, was 20 miles per hour. It was testified by a number of witnesses that the defendant's car approached the scene of the accident at a rate variously estimated at from 30 to 40 miles per hour. The issue as to liability for damages, therefore, hangs on the question of contributory negligence.

There may be eliminated from this consideration the manner of the approach of the motor truck to the street intersection. The evidence sufficiently discloses that after entering the street intersection both the driver and Makley saw the approaching electric car, and that the motor truck was slowed down and under sufficient control so that it could have been stopped before reaching the track on which the electric car was approaching. The driver of the motor truck and Makley claim that at this point, where they could have stopped in safety, they saw the electric car approaching, at a distance of about 200 feet, at what appeared to them to be a reasonable rate of speed. They were then going at about 8 miles per hour, and were about 20 feet from the car track on which the electric car was approaching. The driver speeded up his motor and attempted to cross in front of the electric car. Then the collision occurred. Makley, testifying as to conditions just as they attempted to cross the car tracks, says:

> "I then looked to the west. When I looked to the west I saw a car about 200 feet down the track toward Taft street. I supposed this car was running at a reasonable rate of speed. I saw the car, of course, and it appeared to be coming at a reasonable rate of speed. It looked that way to me. I continued on across the boulevard. * * * When we got to the westbound track I saw that it was coming at a high rate of speed, and I raised to jump from the truck, and before I could do so the front of the car struck on the front part of the truck and knocked it from under my feet."

The testimony of Fenn Hart, the driver of the truck, as to the situation at this juncture, was as follows:

> "My auto truck at the time I first observed the car that collided with us—the front end of the truck was possibly eight or ten feet from the north rail of the north track; that would put me somewhere around fifteen feet where I was sitting in the car back from the north rail of the north track. * * * When I saw the car it was close to Taft street. I couldn't say how far Taft is, but it is the first street west—it is a block. I couldn't tell how fast the car was moving, but it seemed to be traveling at a reasonable rate of speed. I was going about eight or ten miles an hour at the time; the front end of the automobile truck was eight or ten feet from the first track. I was watching this car practically all the time. When I was north of the north track, possibly eight or ten feet—something like that—I opened up the throttle. When the front end of my truck was between the two tracks, more to the south than the north, I saw that I didn't have time to get across in front of it, and I tried to stop. One of my front wheels passed over the north rail of the south track, and then was when the collision happened. Just before it collided with me I saw it was traveling at least thirty-five miles per hour."

It was shown in evidence that the width between the rails of each of the car tracks was 5 feet, and the distance between the south rail of the north track and the north rail of the south track was 7 feet. Starting with the front of the car 10 feet north of the first track, the motor truck had probably 30 feet to go, besides its own length, before it would clear the approaching electric car. Fifty feet would cover the entire distance, as testified to by these witnesses. As they there saw the situation, the electric car was 200 feet or more distant, approaching at what they supposed was a "reasonable rate of speed." Under the city ordinance that rate might not lawfully exceed 20 miles per hour. If the auto motor's accelerated speed reached even 10 miles per hour, the driver of the motor car could clear the tracks while the electric car at 20 miles per hour covered 100 feet of the intervening space. Of course, there can be no such mathematical accuracy of calculation in such a case, but this estimate would still leave another hundred feet as a margin of safety. They took the chances. Was it negligence, as a matter of law? Or was the jury entitled to determine the question of negligence as one of fact, in view of the conditions shown by the testimony?

[1] The fact that one voluntarily assumes a certain degree of risk is not conclusive of negligence. In these days of rapid transit and congested traffic, every man who crosses a busy street, or drives an automobile, takes chances, and serious ones. The question is, are they greater than is reasonably necessary to meet the ordinary requirements of business, or even pleasure? Where the precise facts under consideration are such as to give rise to an honest difference of opinion between intelligent men, the question is one for the jury. We think this is such a case.

[2] If the jury accepted the testimony of the witnesses for plaintiff, as they fairly could, it is evident that the element of miscalculation on the part of the men on the autotruck was in underestimating the speed of the approaching electric car when they determined to pass in front of it. To what extent were they entitled to rely upon the presumption that the railway company's servants were observing the speed limits, in justification for their mistake? Clearly not to the extent of shutting their eyes and crossing blindly in front of a moving car. But these men did not do that. They used their eyes and exercised their judgment, and thought that the rate of speed was reasonable, and, in view of the distance to be traveled by the electric car, would permit them to cross in safety. This would have been the result if the defendant's car had been traveling within the limits prescribed by law. Under these circumstances we think the jury would be justified in concluding that the men on the truck supplemented their own judgment of the speed of the electric car with the presumption that the law was being obeyed. This they had a right to do Although, as already stated, one may not willfully close his eyes to danger on the assumption that another will act with care and prudence and in observance of the law, yet he cannot be deemed negligent when, if a reasonable use of his faculties does not warn him to the contrary, he rests on such assumption. Harris v. Johnson, 174 Cal. 55, 161 Pac. 1155, L. R. A. 1917C, 477, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 560; Mann v. Scott, 182 Pac. 281; Medlin v. Spazier, 23 Cal. App. 242, 137 Pac. 1078.

[3] Appellant's second assignment of error is that the jury disregarded the instructions of the court. We fail to understand how it is made to appear in this case that the jury disregarded any of the instructions of the court in arriving at its verdict. The instructions did not direct a verdict for the defendant, but left the way open for a verdict for either the one or the other of the parties, according as the jury found upon certain ultimate facts. It is only in the event that the evidence does not support the verdict that we can say that the instructions were not followed.

[4, 5] No useful purpose would be served by discussing all of appellant's exceptions to the rulings of the court in granting and refusing instructions. We are satisfied that the instructions fairly covered all the matters necessary to a correct understanding by the jury of the law of the case. Some of the instructions refused correctly stated the law, but upon points sufficiently covered by the instructions given. It was, for instance, sufficiently pointed out that Makley owed a duty to look out for himself in crossing the car tracks, and might not blindly rely on the driver; and that neither of them could shut their eyes to the dangers from approaching cars, and rest secure in the assumption that the electric cars would approach the crossings in a careful and prudent manner. There was no necessity for the instructions offered and refused relating to the effect of negligence of the Commonwealth Bonding Company and the Los-Angeles Daily Express on the right of plaintiff to recover, from the fact that their only connection with the events of the accident was through the agency of the men in charge of the motor truck; and it was sufficiently pointed out that contributory negligence on their part would defeat a recovery by plaintiff.

We think, also, that the instruction as to the "last clear chance" was not out of place. It might have appeared to the jury, under the evidence, that the occupants of the truck were at fault in attempting to cross the tracks in front of the approaching car; but that after they had placed themselves in a position of danger, which was discovered by them too late to extricate themselves, the defendant, having knowledge of their dangerous situation, might, by the exercise of diligence, still have avoided the accident. It may well be that a motorman, with a better knowledge of the rate of speed at which his car is traveling, may discover the imminent danger of persons attempting to cross the track before they themselves become aware of it; and in such a case, notwithstanding their careless disregard of danger, if he had time to stop or slow up his car his would be the last clear chance.

[6-8] We think instructions 11 and 12 correctly stated the law in declaring that "it cannot be said that a person is guilty of contributory negligence merely because he attempts to cross a street railway when a car is approaching"; that "all that is required on a given occasion of a driver of a vehicle in attempting to use a street railway crossing is to exercise ordinary care of his sense of sight and hearing to observe coming cars"; and that it is not negligence to attempt to cross in front of an approaching street car "if it is at such a distance away that an ordinarily prudent person would believe he could make such crossing in safety, although it may afterwards appear by evidence that a different course of conduct would have been safer on his part." Counsel for appellant, while admitting the correctness of these instructions as applied to street crossings where the speed limit is from 4 to 8 miles an hour, claims that the rule should not apply in localities where the allowed speed is 20 miles an hour. We do not see the force of the distinction. There are, ordinarily, on many lines of street railway, where a speed of 20 miles per hour is permitted, cars passing at such frequent intervals that it is rarely that a car is not approaching a given crossing. It is, of course, in such localities incumbent on one attempting to cross the tracks to take into account this greater rate of speed in determining how far in advance of an approaching car he can prudently attempt to pass. But to say he is guilty of negligence in attempting to cross at all in front of an approaching car would place an intolerable burden and hardship on the traveler by team or automobile. We think the doctrine of Clark v. Bennett, 123 Cal. 275, 55 Pac. 908, Scott v. San Bernardino Traction Co., 152 Cal. 610, 93 Pac. 677, and Campbell v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 137 Cal. 565, 70 Pac. 624, applies to crossings located as was the one under consideration here, as well as to crossings where a slower rate of speed is prescribed, subject to the qualification as to a prudent determination as to the distance of the car to correspond with the different rates of speed.

BROWN v. RIVES et al. (Civ. 2929; L. A. 4874.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 29, 1919. Opinion of Supreme Court Denying Rehearing Sept. 25, 1919.)

1. ACKNOWLEDGMENT ⚷48 — NOTARY TAKING ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF PERSON USING FICTITIOUS NAME NOT LIABLE.

Where one forged deed to fictitious grantee, assumed the fictitious name, and sold the land, a notary, who certified that the forger was "known to be the person whose name is subscribed to the within instrument," was not liable, under Civ. Code, §§ 1185, 1200, and Pol. Code, § 801; the certificate being true as far as the notary was concerned.

On Rehearing in Supreme Court.

2. ACKNOWLEDGMENT ⚷48 — NEGLIGENCE OF NOTARY TAKING ACKNOWLEDGMENT NOT PROXIMATE CAUSE OF DAMAGE TO PURCHASER OF LAND.

Where one forged deed to fictitious person, assumed the fictitious name, and sold the land, negligence of notary in taking the forger's acknowledgment without proper examination, etc., as required by Civ. Code, §§ 1185, 1200, and Pol. Code, § 801, was not the proximate cause of loss to the purchaser.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Action by George W. Brown against E. E. Rives and the American Surety Company of New York. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed in the District Court of Appeal, and rehearing denied in the Supreme Court.

W. N. Goodwin and Goodwin & Morgrage, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Dale H. Parke and Bicksler, Smith & Parke, all of Los Angeles, Walter F. Dunn, of Monrovia, and John P. Dunn, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

THOMAS, J. This is an action against a notary public and his sureties for damages alleged to have resulted from the negligence of the notary. The facts in regard to this case, as we get them from the record here, are as follows:

On May 26, 1916, Martin L. Kelsey and Anna B. Kelsey, his wife, were, and for many years prior thereto had been, and now are, the owners of lots 15, 16, and 17, in block 9, of Van Ness Square, in Los Angeles city, and such ownership was then shown in the proper records of Los Angeles county. Prior to said May 26, 1914, one Leonard C. Canfield conceived a felonious scheme to obtain money by forging the names of Kelsey and his wife and the notarial certificate of their acknowledgments to a deed purporting to convey said property to a fictitious person as grantee, and placing such forged deed of record, and then, assuming the name of such fictitious grantee, to sell said property to such person as he might be able to victimize. In furtherance of this scheme said Canfield forged the names of Kelsey and his wife to a deed purporting to grant said property to a fictitious grantee, designated as Helmer E. Rabild, and attached thereto a forged certificate of acknowledgment of the execution of said deed before W. B. Julian, a notary public of Los Angeles county. This forged deed was recorded in the recorder's office of Los Angeles county on May 27, 1914.

On or about June 10, 1914, said Canfield called plaintiff on the telephone and stated to plaintiff that the person speaking was Helmer E. Rabild, and offered to sell and convey said three lots to plaintiff for $4,750, subject to taxes for the current year. In the same conversation he stated that he would furnish certificates of title issued by the Title Insurance & Trust Company, showing title to said property vested in plaintiff, free from all incumbrances, except taxes and certain building restrictions. Plaintiff accepted this proposition over the telephone, and in the same conversation stated that he would instruct the Title Insurance & Trust Company to pay $4,750 when it could issue its certificates that title to said property appeared from the records of Los Angeles county vested in plaintiff. In furtherance of said scheme Canfield prepared a deed of said property, in which the name of Helmer E. Rabild appeared as grantor, and Geo. W. Brown as grantee, and prevailed upon the assistant cashier of a Monrovia bank to introduce him to defendant E. E. Rives as Helmer E. Rabild, and thereupon defendant Rives, without further evidence or knowledge that the person so introduced was in fact Helmer E. Rabild, attached to said deed a certificate signed by him as notary public of Los Angeles county, and impressed with his notarial seal, reciting that "on this 12th day of June, 1912, before me, E. E. Rives, a notary public in and for said county, personally appeared Helmer E. Rabild, known to me to be the person whose name is subscribed to the within instrument, and acknowledged that he executed the same," and returned said deed, with the above certificate attached, to said Canfield. Canfield then delivered the deed to the Title Insurance & Trust Company, with instructions to record the same, and when it issued its certificates showing title to all of said property to be of record in plaintiff, subject to certain taxes, restrictions, and easements, to send its check, drawn in favor of Helmer E. Rabild, to post office box No. 615, Monrovia, Cal. The Title Insurance & Trust Company filed said deed for record with the county recorder of Los Angeles county, and it was recorded June 24, 1914. Upon the same day said title company issued its certificates of title that the official records of Los Angeles county showed title to each of said lots vested in George W. Brown on June 24, 1914, subject to said taxes, restrictions, and easements, and thereafter, but on the same day, issued its check in favor of Helmer E. Rabild for $4,750, and sent the same by mail, addressed to Helmer E. Rabild, box No. 615, Monrovia, Cal. Said check was thereafter paid by the bank upon which it was drawn, and returned to said title company, indorsed "Helmer E. Rabild." Before said check was drawn by said title company, plaintiff had deposited with it $4,750, with instructions to pay said sum to Helmer E. Rabild when the records of the county of Los Angeles showed the title of each of said lots to be vested in George W. Brown, and it issued its certificates of title to that effect, and the check drawn by said title company and mailed to Helmer E. Rabild, as above stated, represented the $4,750 delivered to it by plaintiff. Neither plaintiff nor the title company ever saw Canfield during the negotiations consummated by the pretended sale, and all communications with him were by telephone or by mail. The lots in question were of the reasonable value of $2,500 each.

When satisfied that the deed recorded May 27, 1914, was a forgery, plaintiff commenced this action to recover from the notary, Rives, and his bondsman, $4,750, resting his claim for damages upon the contention that the certificate of the notary attached to the deed of June 12, 1914, was false in fact, and its falsity the proximate cause of plaintiff's loss. The court found the facts to be substantially as above stated, but concluded therefrom that the certificate complained of was not the proximate cause of the loss, and entered judgment dismissing the action, with costs to defendants. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment on the judgment roll alone.

[1] The findings in this case are very clear and specific. Among other things, the court found as follows:

"The court further finds * * * that at all of the times herein mentioned there existed no such person as Helmer E. Rabild. That the name Helmer E. Rabild was used and designed by the said Leonard C. Canfield to identify some fictitious person, who did not exist, but under whose assumed personality he, the said Leonard C. Canfield, would conduct his negotiations with reference to the sale and transfer of this property to the plaintiff, and that such secret intention on the part of the said Canfield was not known to the defendant Rives. That Helmer E. Rabild was at all times herein mentioned the name assumed by and used by the said Leonard C. Canfield, and by him alone, and that at the time of the execution of the deed to the plaintiff herein, and the acknowledgment thereof before the defendant notary, E. E. Rives, Helmer E. Rabild, in so far as there was any Helmer E. Rabild, did, in the person of said Leonard C. Canfield, appear before the said notary and acknowledge the execution of the instrument as in the notarial certificate stated, and that the certificate of the said notary did truthfully so set forth the fact that Helmer E. Rabild had executed the said instrument."

It therefore conclusively appears that the very individual who signed and acknowledged the deed, and who was referred to therein, regardless of the name under which he had transacted business with others, did actually appear before the notary. This being true, the notarial certificate of acknowledgment spoke the truth, and was not false.

Section 1185 of our Civil Code provides:

> "The acknowledgment of an instrument must not be taken, unless the officer taking it knows or has satisfactory evidence, on the oath or affirmation of a credible witness, that the person making such acknowledgment is the individual who is described in and who executed the instrument; or, if executed by a corporation, that the person making such acknowledgment is the president or secretary of such corporation, or other person who executed it on its behalf."

Section 1200 of the same Code reads as follows:

> "An officer taking proof of the execution of any instrument must, in his certificate indorsed thereon or attached thereto, set forth all the matters required by law to be done or known by him, or proved before him on the proceeding, together with the names of all the witnesses examined before him, their places of residences, respectively, and the substance of their testimony."

Appellant contends that said certificate of acknowledgment is false, in the light of the facts in this case, based upon his understanding of the limitations imposed by our laws upon a notary public in taking and certifying to an acknowledgment of a deed to real property in this state. It will be noticed that the first section above quoted imposes upon the notary the duty of certifying that "the person making such acknowledgment is the individual who is described in and who executed the instrument" (italics ours); not that the person who executed the instrument is the person whom he claims to be, or that the name given is his true name, as manifestly contended for by appellant. This makes all the difference in the world.

In this case Rives, the notary, had never seen Canfield before. Rives, however, was well acquainted with the assistant cashier of the bank at Monrovia, who introduced Canfield to him as Rabild. The assistant cashier knew him by that name, and none other. That was the name he gave when he opened his account at that bank. This is the man, regardless of the fact that his true name was Canfield, who executed the deed, and whose execution thereof passed all the title that stood in the name of Rabild, and acknowledged to the notary, that he executed the same. Under the holding of this court in Anderson v. Aronsohn, 28 Cal. App. Dec. 216,[1] this was sufficient basis for the statement contained in the certificate that the notary knew "that the person making such acknowledgment is the person who is described in and who executed the instrument." The certificate stated the absolute truth, although, according to this record, Canfield was a liar and a forger. Had "Rabild" come to this notary alone, with the deed already signed, accompanied by no one whom the notary knew, and had asked him to acknowledge the same, another question would be before us. In that case we think the "satisfactory evidence," referred to in the section, would have to be received. This latter evidence, however, was not necessary under the facts as disclosed here. We are confronted in this case with a condition, not a theory. Such being true, this court will never knowingly mulct any person for telling the truth and acting honestly.

Our attention is called to the case of Joost v. Craig, 131 Cal. 504, 63 Pac. 840, 82 Am. St. Rep. 374, as supporting appellant's position here. We do not think that case in point. In that case the certificate was, in fact, false. In this case it is true. In that case it was said:

> "If the deed is not genuine, but is forged, the notary and his sureties ought to be held for all damages unless they have taken the precautions expressly required by the statute."

That, we think, is tantamount to saying that if the deed is genuine the notary, or his sureties ought not to be held for any damages, even though they have not taken such precautions. In the case at bar, the deed was genuine. True, it was executed by Canfield under said assumed name—Rabild. Under this assumed name, however, as before stated, he opened his bank account at Monrovia. Under this assumed name he was known to the banker. To him he was Mr. Rabild of Monrovia—the very man mentioned in the body of the deed, and, as appellant urges in his brief, who "signed the name Helmer E. Rabild in the presence of defendant Rives and requested the notary to certify his acknowledgment thereof." This deed was genuine, and the certificate of acknowledgment attached thereto was true. In such case there can be no liability on the part of the notary, under section 801 of the Political Code, or any other statute. As was said in the case of Anderson v. Aronsohn, supra:

[1] Reversed by Supreme Court on rehearing. See 184 Pac. 12.

> "The language of Joost v. Craig, 131 Cal. 504 [63 Pac. 840, 82 Am. St. Rep. 374], clearly recognizes a situation in which a notary may comply with the law and yet be honestly mistaken, and injury result to innocent parties by reason of his mistake, and yet the notary not be liable."

The same is true here. It is further said in the Joost Case:

> "The certificate here gave assurance that the notary knew of his own knowledge, and not upon mere hearsay, that the grantor was Charles A. Anderson of Redwood City. If this certificate was not true, the notary should be held."

The foregoing is tantamount to saying, and we think it does say, by a perfectly rational inference to be deduced therefrom, that if the certificate was true the notary should not be held liable, regardless of whether the information upon which he based such certificate was hearsay or otherwise.

There is no doubt but that the first deed—the alleged deed from Kelsey and wife to "Helmer E. Rabild"—was a forgery. Nor is there room for argument that the second deed—the deed from "Rabild" to Brown, plaintiff here—was genuine. The only trouble with this deed was that it conveyed nothing, the grantor having nothing to convey, for reasons that are obvious. To hold that the notary and his sureties were liable, as contended for by appellant, whenever for some reason there appeared some flaw in the title to the property sought to be conveyed by such deed, or because the grantor in such instrument had no title to convey, and under such circumstances as disclosed by the record here, would be so revolutionary an act on the part of this court that it would cause business to quake to its very foundation. Such certainly cannot be the law. The notary public and his bondsmen are in no sense insurers of the title. It is true that, without the certificate of acknowledgment to the purported deed from Rabild to plaintiff, the deed could not legally have been recorded; and, if not recorded, it follows that the certificate of title thereafter issued could not have shown the title of record in plaintiff. But the fact that the certificate of title did not so show was not because the notary's certificate of acknowledgment was false, as we have already seen. Under these circumstances, if the said certificate of acknowledgment was true, there was no liability. And it was true.

It was urged on the argument, while conceding the legal right to transact business in that way, that no one has the right to adopt a fictitious or assumed name for the purpose of the commission of a crime. This is true. It is also true that if one does commit a crime under such fictitious or assumed name, and causes a second party to suffer damages (as was done by Canfield to plaintiff here), still that fact alone is not the basis, legal or otherwise, for the predication of an action for the recovery of such damages against a third party, who knew absolutely nothing of such fact, and who has acted honestly, and certified correctly, in so far as whatever he did had to do with the case is concerned.

In view of these conclusions, we think no other point urged needs consideration.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; SLOANE, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court Denying Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [2] The application for a hearing in this court, after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District, Division 2, is denied. We base our denial solely upon the fact that it clearly appears that any negligence on the part of the notary, Rives, was not a proximate cause of the injury to plaintiff.

We deem it proper to further point out that in the case of Anderson v. Aronsohn, 28 Cal. App. Dec. 216, which is referred to in the opinion, the decision of the District Court of Appeal was vacated by this court and the cause ordered to a hearing herein, where it is now pending.

All concur.

DILLWOOD v. RIECKS et al. (Civ. 2010.)

1. EVIDENCE 🔑83(4)—ACTION OF BOARD OF COUNTY SUPERVISORS IN PURCHASING LAND—PRESUMPTION.

It must be presumed that in purchasing land the board of supervisors of a county exercised its power to accomplish one or more of the objects contemplated by the authority given by Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 6, empowering boards to purchase land for public pleasure grounds, parks, and other like purposes.

2. COUNTIES 🔑1—POLITICAL SUBDIVISIONS OF STATE—DIFFERENCE FROM MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Counties are political subdivisions of the state for governmental purposes, and not, like municipal corporations, incorporations of the inhabitants of specified regions for purposes of local government.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, County.]

3. Counties 🔑142—Management of agricultural park — Liability for destruction of stallion.

Where a county, pursuant to Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 6, through its board of supervisors purchased land for an agricultural park, and erected stables wherein stalls were rented, such county was not liable for destruction by fire of a stallion kept in a stall, on the ground the acts of the county officers in the management of the park which caused the fire were in a proprietary capacity, not in the exercise of governmental functions.

4. Counties 🔑88—Maintenance of park—Personal liability of officers—Burning of horse.

Where county officers under the direction of the board of supervisors undertook to burn grass in the county's agricultural park, which resulted in the burning of a valuable stallion in the park stables, the officers were liable if they burned the grass, an undertaking discretionary with them, in a negligent manner.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; J. A. Plummer, Judge.

Action by Jennie E. Dillwood against W. H. Riecks and others. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Judgment reversed, and new trial ordered.

Gordon A. Stewart and Lawrence Edwards, both of Stockton, for appellant.

Charles Light and H. C. Stanley, both of Stockton, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to recover damages for the loss of plaintiff's horse, alleged to have perished by fire on June 14, 1916, through the negligence of defendants. The defendants, other than defendant Quail, are sued as members of the board of supervisors of San Joaquin county and as individuals. Defendant Quail is sued as county surveyor and in his individual capacity. It is alleged in the amended complaint that plaintiff is the owner of a stallion named "Ishmael," of the value of $5,000; that on the day above mentioned and some time prior thereto plaintiff "had kept said stallion in a stall at the county fair grounds; that upon said fair grounds there is a race track and stables for the care of horses using said race track."

Paragraph 4 is as follows:

> "That during all the times herein mentioned the said fair grounds was and now is the property of the county of San Joaquin, and was and is managed and controlled by said defendants, and is owned and held by the county for the holding of county fairs, and to be rented from time to time for the holding of exhibitions in motor and horse racing, fairs, and public exhibitions of various kinds, for which a charge is made and collected by the county of San Joaquin from said parties; that the horse stalls on said fair grounds are likewise rented to divers persons to be used by them in the care of horses trained by them on such race track of said fair grounds, and for the use of which horse stalls a charge of one and $^{50}/_{100}$ ($1.50) dollars a month is made for each stall rented as aforesaid; that the said horse 'Ishmael' was on the said 14th day of June, 1916, in a stall on said fair grounds, for the use of which stall said charge of one and $^{50}/_{100}$ ($1.50) dollars was made and collected by the county of San Joaquin; that the said defendants, by their agents and employés, on the 14th day of June, 1916, set fire to and burned the grass, then standing around and near the stall in which plaintiff's horse was then standing, and carelessly and negligently permitted said fire to be communicated with said stall, setting the same on fire, thereby destroying said horse, to the damage of the plaintiff in the sum of five thousand ($5,000) dollars."

It is alleged that the plaintiff duly filed with the board of supervisors a claim for damages for the loss of said horse, which was by the board refused payment. The complaint is verified. A general demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and defendants answered denying most of the averments of the complaint. Defendants—

> "Admit that horse stalls on said fair grounds are rented to divers persons to be used by them in the care of horses trained by them on such race track of said fair grounds, and for the use of which a small charge of $1.50 per month is made for each stall rented as aforesaid, but allege that said sum of $1.50 is used exclusively in keeping up the track used by the occupants of said stalls free of charge, and without profit to the county of San Joaquin."

The cause was tried by the court without a jury. The court made findings as follows:

> "(2) That on the 14th day of June, 1916, plaintiff was the owner of a five year old standard bred pacing stallion named 'Ishmael,' of the alleged value of $5,000; (3) that on said last-named date, and for some time prior thereto, the said plaintiff had kept said stallion in a stall at Agricultural Park, commonly known as the county fair grounds, or race track grounds; that upon said Agricultural Park there is a race track and stalls for the care of horses using said race track; (4) that during all the times herein mentioned the said Agricultural Park was and now is the property of the state of California, and that the board of supervisors of the county of San Joaquin during all of the times herein mentioned did exercise a control over same as the agents of the state of California in a public and governmental capacity, and that the county of San Joaquin rented a stall upon said Agricultural Park to said plaintiff for the rental of $1.50 per month, and that the said stallion 'Ishmael' was in said stall on the 14th day of June, 1916, and that the rent for said stall was paid to the county of San Joaquin by said plaintiff; that the grass standing around and near said stall was on the 14th day of June, 1916, set fire to and burned by certain persons confined in the county jail of San Joaquin county as prisoners acting under the direction of certain employés and officers of the highway maintenance department of the county of San Joaquin, and said county prisoners and employés of the said county of San Joaquin carelessly and negligently permitted said fire to become communicated with said stall, setting the same on fire, and thereby destroying said horse."

As conclusions of law the court found:

"(1) That said board of supervisors had no power or authority to manage and control said Agricultural Park except as agents of the state of California, and had no power or authority whatever to rent said stall to said plaintiff, or to permit said stallion Ishmael to be kept in said stall or in said Agricultural Park; (2) that said plaintiff is not entitled to take anything by said action."

Judgment accordingly passed for defendants, from which plaintiff appealed, and brings the record here on a bill of exceptions.

Appellant specifies the following grounds in support of her contention that the judgment is against law: (1) That, while the evidence shows that plaintiff's horse was destroyed through the carelessness of the employés of the county of San Joaquin, the court held the county not liable; (2) that, while plaintiff's horse was destroyed through the negligence of persons acting under the instructions of certain officers of the county, the court held that such officers were neither liable as officers nor as individuals; (3) that the court failed to find the value of the horse Ishmael.

There is no controversy as to the facts. It was alleged that the county became the owner "by a grant deed conveyed to the county of San Joaquin, during the year 1911, 85.65 acres of land, and being the property commonly known as 'Agricultural Park,' and also as the 'County Fair Grounds,' and being the same property upon which the plaintiff's horse was destroyed by fire." It is alleged in the complaint that these grounds were "managed and controlled by said defendants, and is owned and held by the county for the holding of county fairs, and to be rented from time to time to private parties for the holding of exhibitions in motor and horse racing, fairs and public exhibitions of various kinds."

[1] It appeared that by resolution of the board of supervisors all moneys received for rent should be placed in a fund to be called "Agricultural Park Fund," and was to be used in the care and maintenance of the grounds. The particular purpose for which the board of supervisors made the purchase does not appear. By subdivision 6 of section 4041 of the Political Code the board is given power "to purchase" land for "public pleasure ground, public parks, and other public purposes, * * * and to * * * take care of, manage and control the same." It must be presumed that in purchasing this land the board exercised its power to accomplish one or more of the objects contemplated by the statutory authority given to it. Furthermore, the pleadings and the evidence show that the land has been devoted to public purposes—the holding of "county fairs, exhibitions in motor and horse racing, fairs, and public exhibitions of various kinds." It is not contended that the small charge for the use of the stalls or for the use of the grounds for fairs and exhibitions was for profit or for purposes other than as contributions towards the care and maintenance of the park. It appeared that on the day of the accident defendant French, a member of the board of supervisors, who seems to have had charge of these grounds for the board, gave directions to have the prisoners held in the jail go to the park and burn the dry grass, concededly a proper thing to have done. Section 4041 of the Political Code authorized the board to make such use of "convicted prisoners in the county jail." The burning of the grass was done under the immediate supervision of defendant Quail, who had general charge of the prisoners for all work done by them.

[2] Appellant's principal contention is that the liability of the county is the same as that of a municipal corporation, a city, or town; and, viewed in that light, the county or its officers were liable for the reason that the acts done in the management and care of the park in question were done by the officers in a proprietary capacity, and not in the exercise of governmental functions; citing Chafor v. City of Long Beach, 174 Cal. 478, 163 Pac. 670, L. R. A. 1917E, 685, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 106.

Appellant's major premise, that the legal status of a county is the same as that of a municipal corporation, is not sustained by reason or authority. Law writers and the courts have very clearly pointed out the distinction between the two organizations. The Supreme Court thus dealt with the question in People v. McFadden, 81 Cal. 489, 22 Pac. 851, 15 Am. St. Rep. 66:

"It is clear, therefore, that the Constitution does not hold counties to be municipal corporations, or 'corporations for municipal purposes'; but so far as they are to be regarded as corporations at all they are 'political corporations.' And this is in harmony with the common acceptation of the terms 'municipality' or 'municipal corporation,' as used in the common and written law of both England and America time out of mind. This view is also in harmony with those provisions of the statutes and codes which define counties to be 'bodies politic and corporate,' and also with the decision of this court, made before the adoption of the Constitution, when it declared that a county is not a municipal corporation within the meaning of that term as used in the Political Code."

The following terse statement is found in County of San Mateo v. Coburn, 130 Cal. 636, 63 Pac. 80:

> "A county is a governmental agency or political subdivision of the state, organized for purposes of exercising some functions of the state government, whereas a municipal corporation is an incorporation of the inhabitants of a specified region for purposes of local government."

In Reclamation Dist. No. 1500 v. Superior Court, 171 Cal. 672, 679, 154 Pac. 845, 848, the court said:

> "The counties are governmental agencies of the state, * * * and the property intrusted to their governmental management is public property. The proprietary interest in all such property belongs to the public, and, if there be a legal title in the county, it is a title held in trust for the whole public. [Citing cases.] In the absence of constitutional restrictions, the Legislature has full control of the property held by the counties as agencies of the state, and may dispose of that property without the consent of the county or without compensating it."

In Hersey v. Neilson et al., 47 Mont. 132, 31 Pac. 30, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 963, the authorities will be found collected to the proposition that counties are political subdivisions of the state for governmental purposes. The doctrine is fully stated in Sacramento v. Chambers, 33 Cal. App. 142, 164 Pac. 613. It is also clearly set forth in 7 R. C. L. p. 925.

The Supreme Court of Kansas, in Silver v. Board of Commissioners of Clay County, 76 Kan. 228, 91 Pac. 55, thus states the principle:

> "It is well-established law that a county is an involuntary corporation for governmental purposes, and is in no sense a business corporation; that the powers and obligations of the county are such only as the law prescribes or as arise by necessary implication therefrom. * * * Cities, however, in this state, are municipal corporations, and neither their powers nor obligations are so restricted, and decisions as to their liability for negligence have no application."

Finally, "the several counties, as they now exist, are hereby recognized as legal subdivisions of this state." Const. art. 11, § 1.

[3] It results from the foregoing that the decision in Chafor v. City of Long Beach, 174 Cal. 478, 163 Pac. 670, L. R. A. 1917E, 685, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 106, relied upon by plaintiff, is not controlling where a county is involved. Necessarily, counties being but agencies of the state their functions are exclusively governmental, and are such only as are imparted to them by the state. In conferring power upon the board of supervisors to purchase land for "public pleasure grounds, public parks, and other public purposes and to take care of and manage the same," the purchase is for the benefit of the people of the state, and not exclusively for the people of the county; and, as was said in Reclamation District No. 1500 v. Superior Court, supra, "property so acquired is held by the counties as agencies of the state."

[4] Whether or not the officers connected with the burning of this grass are individually liable presents a more difficult question. In Doeg v. Cook, 126 Cal. 213, 58 Pac. 707, 77 Am. St. Rep. 171, it was said that "the very decided trend of modern decision is to hold such officers liable for acts of nonfeasance, or for the negligent performance of a duty when the duty is plain, when the means and ability to perform it are shown, and when the performance or nonperformance, or the manner of its performance, involves no question of discretion. In short, where the duty is plain and certain, if it be negligently performed, or not performed at all, the officer is liable at the suit of a private individual especially injured thereby." In Taylor v. Manson, 9 Cal. App. 382, 387, 99 Pac. 410, the rule as stated in Doeg v. Cook was applied. In the case of Edwards v. Brockway, 16 Cal. App. 626, 117 Pac. 787, the defendant Brockway was held not liable for the reason that there were no facts showing that Brockway "was guilty of official negligence as superintendent of streets or that he failed and neglected to perform any official duty imposed upon him either by law, ordinance, or order, or regulation of his superiors." In Doeg v. Cook the court quotes approvingly from Shearman and Redfield on Negligence (3d Ed., § 156), where the rule is thus given:

> "The liability of a public officer to an individual for his negligent acts or omissions in the discharge of official duty depends altogether upon the nature of the duty of which the neglect is alleged. Where the duty is absolute, certain, and imperative, involving merely the execution of the set task—in other words, is merely ministerial—he is liable in damages to any one specially injured, either by his omitting to perform the task, or by performing it negligently or unskillfully. On the other hand, where his powers are discretionary, to be exercised or withheld according to his judgment as to what is necessary or proper, he is not liable to any private person for a neglect to exercise those powers, nor for the consequences of a lawful exercise of them, where no corruption or malice can be imputed, and he keeps within the scope of his authority."

The early case of Huffman v. San Joaquin County, 21 Cal. 426, was an action for damages resulting from want of proper repairs to a bridge. The statute at that time devolved upon boards of supervisors the management and control of bridges in their respective counties and upon the road overseers of the county the duty of keeping bridges on public highways in repair. In sustaining a demurrer to the complaint the court said:

> "If any remedy exists for injuries resulting from neglecting to keep such bridges in repair, it must be sought either against the road overseers or supervisors personally."

In Hover v. Barkhoof, 44 N. Y. 113, it was held that one who assumes the duties, and is invested with the powers of a public office, is liable to an individual who sustains special damage by a neglect properly to perform such duties.

Relying upon the distinction made between the discharge of duties plainly and certainly devolved upon the officer and duties which he may or may not perform at his discretion, it is contended that in the present case the duty to burn the grass as a preventive of damage which might otherwise accrue was discretionary and not compulsory, and hence, under the decision in Doeg v. Cook, supra, and the rule as stated by Shearman and Redfield, supra, the defendants are not individually liable.

The cases involving the question are generally cases arising from the neglect to do some act—cases of nonfeasance rather than misfeasance. It seems to us quite clear that where the power to do the act exists, though its performance is left to the discretion of the officer, if he acts in execution of such discretion his liability would be the same as in the discharge of a mandatory duty, and if he performs the act or discharges the duty in a negligent manner he would be liable in an action for damages by a person injured thereby. Whether the duty performed be discretionary or compulsory there is no reason why like consequences should not follow the negligent performance of the duty.

The rule, as stated by Shearman and Redfield and in Doeg v. Cook, has reference more particularly to acts of nonfeasance, where it was entirely discretionary with the officer to do or not to do the act. It is perhaps a debatable question whether or not the duty "to care for, manage, and control" this agricultural park did not impose upon the supervisors a plain and certain duty to burn this dry grass in order to prevent damage to the property itself or to individuals using it, still, having determined that it should be burned and having undertaken to do it, it was their duty to see that the work was not done in a careless and negligent manner, failing in which a liability arose for damages resulting from their negligence.

There was evidence tending to show that the management and care of the park grounds were being exercised by defendant Supervisor French, under direction of the board of supervisors; that the "chain gang," composed of prisoners in the county jail, was placed in the charge and control of defendant Surveyor Quail, when put to work on the highways or elsewhere; that Fred E. Smith was the acting assistant highway maintenance engineer, and was given instruction by defendant Quail to go to the fair grounds and burn the grass; that Engineer Smith communicated these instructions to James McAfee, the guard of the "chain gang," and directed him to take the "chain gang" to the grounds and burn the grass, and that the work was finally done under the immediate direction of McAfee. The court found that the grass was "burned by certain persons confined in the county jail of San Joaquin county as prisoners, acting under the direction of certain employés and officers of the highway maintenance department" of the county, and that through their negligence plaintiff's horse was burned to death. The view taken by the court "that said plaintiff is not entitled to take anything by said action" will account for its failure to make findings of fact as to the defendants' connection with the accident, either as officers of the county or as individuals. The court, doubtless, held, as is now urged as the law by respondents, that no liability of defendants, either as officers or as individuals, was shown. This, we think, was error. There should have been findings of fact showing the acts done by the defendants and each of them, and the circumstances attending the acts. It would then be possible to draw the correct conclusion of law from such acts as to the liability or nonliability of defendants.

The judgment is reserved and a new trial ordered.

BATES et al. v. RANSOME-CRUMMEY CO. et al. (Civ. 2879.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑347(1)—DOCKET OF JUDGMENT ENTRY IMPORTS NOTICE TO ALL PERSONS INTERESTED.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 650, 659, 939, as amended by St. 1915, pp. 201, 205, 207, the time of serving notice of motion for new trial and proposed bill of exceptions depends on service of notice of entry of judgment, while time to appeal begins to run from entry of judgment when docketed, and the docket is a public record importing notice to all parties interested (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 668, 671, 672, 673).

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑345(1)—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL AFTER TIME TO APPEAL DOES NOT EXTEND TIME.

Where no appeal was taken within 60 days after entry and docketing of judgment, and at the expiration of such 60 days no new trial proceedings were pending, the right to appeal was lost, although a motion for a new trial was subsequently filed and overruled, in view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 650, 659, 939, as amended by St. 1915, pp. 207, 201, 205.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑316—STATE APPELLATE PROCEDURE IS WITHIN LEGISLATIVE CONTROL.

The construction of Code Civ. Proc. § 939, as amended by St. 1915, p. 205, as not permitting a motion for new trial filed after time for an appeal from the judgment had expired, to extend the time in which to appeal, is not in violation of Const. U. S. art. 14, § 1, relating to due process.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑345(1)—JUDGMENT FINAL ON FAILURE TO APPEAL OR MOVE FOR NEW TRIAL WITHIN SIXTY DAYS.

The contention that, so long as defendant's right exists to move for new trial or to vacate the judgment, it does not become final, cannot be sustained since under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 659, 939, as amended by St. 1915, pp. 201, 205, upon failure within 60 days after the entry of judgment either to appeal or to commence proceedings for new trial, the judgment becomes final.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; W. A. Beasly, Judge.

Action by Amy Bates and others against the Ransome-Crummey Company and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Appeal dismissed.

R. M. F. Soto, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Beggs & McComish, of San Jose, for respondents.

BRITTAIN, J. Amy Bates and 10 other property owners sued the Ransome-Crummey Company, a corporation, and Louis Lightston, treasurer of the city of San Jose, to quiet title to their respective properties and for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the plaintiffs' properties or asserting any interest therein or lien thereon. Louis Lightston, as treasurer, filed a disclaimer. The Ransome-Crummey Company answered, and by way of cross-complaint sought to establish the lien of a street assessment and the validity of bonds issued to represent the assessments on the respective parcels of land of the plaintiffs. After answer to the cross-complaint, the case was tried, findings responsive to the issues of fact were signed, and as a conclusion of law therefrom the court determined the plaintiffs were entitled to a judgment and decree quieting their titles. The appeal by the defendants is from the judgment entered pursuant to the decision.

At the outset the court is met with the claim on the part of the respondents that the appeal was not taken in time. If this claim is well founded in law, this court has no jurisdiction of the appeal, and cannot consider any error claimed to have been made by the trial court. The jurisdiction of the trial court to render its judgment is not questioned. It has always been held that an appeal from a judgment taken after the time limited by the statute to appeal cannot be considered and must be dismissed. Gray v. Palmer, 28 Cal. 416; Contra Costa v. Soto, 138 Cal. 57, 70 Pac. 1019. A motion for a new trial is a proceeding distinct from that of an appeal. Under a former statute, even after the filing of a stay bond on appeal, the trial court had power pending the appeal to grant a new trial. Knowles v. Thompson, 133 Cal. 245, 65 Pac. 468; Union Collection Co. v. Oliver, 162 Cal. 755, 124 Pac. 435. The result of an order granting a new trial was to set the entire case at large and to give the trial court authority to try the case anew. Miller & Lux v. Enterprise, etc., Co., 169 Cal. 419, 147 Pac. 567.

[1] In 1915 the Legislature amended sections 650, 659, and 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure. St. 1915, pp. 201, 205, 207. Under section 650, when a party desired to have exceptions taken at the trial settled in a bill of exceptions, he might at any time within 10 days after notice of the entry of the judgment, or such further time as might be allowed, serve his proposed bill of exceptions. If he intended to move for a new trial, he was required within 10 days after receiving notice of the entry of the judgment to file with the clerk and serve upon the adverse party a notice of his intention so to move. Code Civ. Proc. § 659. He might appeal from the judgment within 60 days after its entry; but, if proceedings on motion for a new trial were pending, the time to appeal from the judgment was extended for 30 days after the determination of the new trial proceedings. Code Civ. Proc. § 939. Section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure was also amended (St. 1915, p. 209), and the privilege of appealing from a new trial order, except in specific cases of which this is not one, was withdrawn. In summarizing these provisions of the Code, reference has been made only to those relating to cases tried by the court without a jury.

ing directly within 60 days from the entry of the judgment, or, if he desired to move either for a new trial or to vacate the judgment in the trial court, he might do so. If he did so within the 60 days allowed for an appeal, the time within which he might appeal was extended automatically until 30 days after the determination of the new trial proceedings. No such provision for extension of time was made in the statute because of the pendency of proceedings to vacate the judgment on the ground that the conclusions of law were not supported by the findings. The losing party was not required to move for a new trial, until he received notice of the entry of the judgment, unless the record showed he had waived such notice. He was not required to wait, however, until he received the notice of entry, but might have given notice of his intention to move for a new trial at any time after judgment. Of his own motion, therefore, he might have extended the time within which to appeal by serving notice of motion for new trial at any time within the 60-day limitation for appeal, even though he had not received notice of the entry of the judgment. If at the expiration of the 60-day period within which an appeal might be taken, no notice of intention to move for a new trial was given; in other words, if there was no proceeding for a new trial pending, the time to appeal from the judgment elapsed, and the privilege of appealing from the judgment, or of having a new trial order reviewed on appeal, terminated. There is no statutory requirement by which the prevailing party in a suit is required to give notice of the entry of the judgment. Because there is no such provision, the judgment debtor might in effect indefinitely extend the time of appeal by waiting until he was served with notice of the entry of judgment, and might appeal from the judgment at the expiration of 6 months or a year, or, for that matter, 10 years, from its entry, if it should be held that the right of appeal does not terminate at the expiration of 60 days after the entry of judgment, if no proceedings for a new trial are then pending.

In the particular case the findings of fact and conclusions of law were filed October 19, 1915. Judgment was entered November 24, 1915. The 60 days within which an appeal might have been taken expired January 23, 1916. Notice of intention to move for a new trial was dated and presumably served February 21, 1916, or 29 days after the time to appeal from the judgment had expired, without new trial proceedings having been commenced. Motion for new trial was denied April 14, 1916, and notice of appeal was served and filed April 24, 1916, or more than 3 months after the time to appeal had elapsed.

On behalf of the appellants it is argued that under the rule of liberal construction doubtful clauses affecting the right of appeal should be construed in favor of the right. It does not appear that the language of section 939 is doubtful. It provides that the appeal shall be taken within 60 days, but the time is extended if, or as the appellants contend, when, new trial proceedings are pending. In the present case no such proceedings were pending when the time of appeal elapsed.

[3] It is argued that under the construction given to section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is unconstitutional, as in violation of section 1 of article 14 of the Constitution of the United States, because the appellants are deprived of their property without due process of law and are denied equal protection of the laws. Similar contentions have failed to meet the approval of courts. The matters of motions for new trial and appeal are entirely within the control of the Legislature. It might altogether abolish the right to move for a new trial, as it has abolished the privilege of appealing from an order made upon a motion for a new trial. Lancel v. Postlethwaite, 172 Cal. 329, 156 Pac. 486; Woodruff v. Colyear, 172 Cal. 440, 156 Pac. 475.

[4] It is argued, because it is the duty of the plaintiff diligently to prosecute an action to a finality, that so long as the right of the defendant to move for a new trial or to move to vacate the judgment exists, it does not become final; but citation of authority is not necessary to support the statement that for the purposes of appeal the judgment is final under the express terms of the statute as soon as it is entered. When the defendant fails within 60 days after the entry of judgment either to appeal or to commence proceedings for a new trial, the judgment becomes final for all purposes at the expiration of the 60-day period. The matters determined are res judicata, and under the rule of United States v. Throckmorton, 99 U. S. 61, 25 L. Ed. 93. An appeal from such a judgment is not within the provisions of the statute, and vests no jurisdiction in the appellate court.

The appeal is dismissed.

ANDERSON v. ADLER et al. (Civ. 3005.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑110—ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL NOT REVIEWABLE.

St. 1915, p. 209, amending Code of Civ. Proc. § 963, does not allow an appeal from an order denying a motion for new trial, and such an appeal must be dismissed.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT 🔑33—FINDING OF MODIFICATION OF LEASE BY EXECUTED ORAL CONTRACT SUSTAINED BY EVIDENCE.

In an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage given by a tenant to secure payment of rent, a finding that defendants were excused from full performance of lease terms by reason of an executed oral agreement modifying the terms of the original contract held supported by the evidence.

3. CONTRACTS 🔑238(2) — EXECUTED ORAL AGREEMENT IS ONE WHOSE TERMS HAVE BEEN PERFORMED.

Civ. Code, § 1698, provides that "a contract in writing may be altered by a contract in writing, or by an executed oral agreement, and not otherwise," and an "executed agreement" is one the terms of which have been fully performed.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Executed Contract.]

4. CONTRACTS 🔑237(1)—ORAL MODIFICATION OF LEASE BASED ON SUFFICIENT CONSIDERATION.

An agreement adding to the terms of an existing agreement between the same parties, and by which new and onerous terms are imposed upon one of the parties, without any compensating advantage, requires consideration to support it.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by J. M. Anderson against J. R. Adler and others. From judgment for plaintiff for less relief than demanded and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Appeal from order denying motion for new trial dismissed, and judgment affirmed.

Wright, Winnek & McKee, of San Diego, for appellant.

A. J. Morganstern, of San Diego, for respondents.

WASTE, P. J. Plaintiff brought this action to foreclose a chattel mortgage, given to secure the payment of the term rent, and installments, to become due under a lease of of a hotel building in San Diego, alleging the sum of $13,500 to be due and unpaid on account of such rents. The trial court found that the terms of the original lease, as to the amount of the rent therein reserved, had been modified by an executed oral agreement, and entered its decree and judgment in favor of plaintiff foreclosing the mortgage for the sum of $3,333.35, with interest, attorney's fees, and costs.

Upon the entry of this judgment, plaintiff filed a notice of intention to move for a new trial. This proceeding was decided by the court below on June 19, 1916, the court denying said motion. Plaintiff filed notice of appeal, both from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] The amendment of 1915 to section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Stats. 1915, p. 209) does not allow an appeal from an order denying a motion for new trial. So far as that appeal is concerned, it is unauthorized and must be and is dismissed. Gray v. Cotton, 174 Cal. 256, 162 Pac. 1019.

[2] Appellant's contention on appeal is that the court erred, in law and fact, in finding, as it did, that defendants were excused from full performance of the terms of the lease in question by reason of an executed oral agreement materially changing the terms of the original contract.

The lease was for a period of ten years, at a term rental of $150,000, payable in monthly installments of $1,250. The building was to contain approximately 100 rooms, with suitable and sufficient halls, light courts, and light rooms, and a lobby, or entrance, to said building. As part of the consideration for the making of the lease, the lessees were to furnish and equip the building for hotel purposes, and were to give a chattel mortgage, upon the furnishings and equipment, to the amount of $10,000, as security for the term rent, installments of rent, and performance of the other conditions of the lease.

The alleged oral modification may be summarized as follows: Instead of a building containing approximately 100 rooms, the lessor provided one containing only 88 rooms. When the lessees discovered this discrepancy, they refused to go on with the lease, furnish the building, or pay the rent reserved. The lessor then agreed to waive that portion of the lease providing rentals, and agreed with the lessees that if they were unable to pay the rent reserved the lessor would meet the conditions and would waive the clause, or provision, of the lease relating to the payment of rent, and would accept as rental, under such conditions, such a sum of money from time to time as defendants could pay out of the proceeds of the business, and that he would demand only such rental as would enable defendants to make a profit out of the business.

Pursuant to this agreement, so the trial court found, the deal was consummated and the lessees entered into the occupancy and possession of the building, equipped and operated a first-class hotel. They kept the operating expenses as low as possible, and for a number of months paid plaintiff whatever balance remained on hand for receipts, after paying said expenses of operation, and cost of keeping up the equipment. The plaintiff received and accepted said balances as and in full satisfaction of all rentals due from defendants from February, 1914, to, and including, the 24th day of September, 1914.

Upon these findings the court based its conclusion and judgment that the defendants had paid the rent of the premises for the months of February to September 24, 1914, and gave judgment for the plaintiff for the amount due by way of rent from the last-named date to December 15, 1914, at which time plaintiff re-entered the premises. It is conceded that the rent was not paid according to the terms of the lease, and that but for the alleged modification of the lease and chattel mortgage the rent for the months just specified was not paid.

The findings of the trial court, which we have just briefly summarized, indicate that there was an executed oral modification of the written agreement of lease, and, so far as this contention is concerned, it only remains to determine whether or not the evidence supports the findings. Without stating the testimony, we are of the opinion that it does. While the testimony of the plaintiff tends to strongly negative the evidence on the part of the defendants bearing on the alleged oral modification of the lease, in another sense it gives color and support to defendants' claim. He admits the giving of rebates on the rent for a period of months, and for the period from February to September, in the year 1914, accepted and credited as rent many small sums, in explanation of which fact he testified he had agreed that when defendants collected the money they would turn it in in weekly payments, instead of paying in advance at the first of the month. But, whatever conflict may have arisen in the evidence, and the credibility to be given to the respective parties and their witnesses, was for the trial court to determine.

[3] "A contract in writing may be altered by a contract in writing, or by an executed oral agreement, and not otherwise." Civ. Code, § 1698. An "executed agreement" is one the terms of which have been fully performed. Henehan v. Hart, 127 Cal. 656, 657, 60 Pac. 426.

When therefore the trial court, on sufficient evidence, found the existence of an executed oral contract modifying the terms of the original lease as to the rent, and further found that it had been fully performed, it finally settled the issues of this case. The cases cited by appellant on this subject deal with executory and not executed contracts.

[4] There can be no doubt of the principle, contended for by the appellant, that an agreement adding to the terms of an existing agreement between the same parties, and by which new and onerous terms are imposed, upon one of the parties, without any compensating advantage, requires consideration to support it. But this, of course, may consist either in a new consideration, or in some favorable modification of the original contract. Main Street, etc., Co. v. L. A. Traction Co., 129 Cal. 301, 305, 61 Pac. 937. The evidence in this case, on which the court based its findings, shows that the oral agreement which became executed was, by both parties to the lease, regarded as a most favorable modification of the original contract, by the lessor much more preferable than having an empty hotel on his hands, and by the lessees as affording them an opportunity to make a profit out of the venture.

There is nothing in the contention of appellant that the executed oral agreement, proved in this case, for the purpose of altering the previously written lease, does not require to be done, or suffer, something not required to be done, or suffered, by the terms of the writing.

In re MARSHALL'S ESTATE. (Civ. 2960.)

1. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION 🔑1 — TAXATION 🔑858—STATUTE OF SUCCESSION DETERMINES HEIRSHIP AND LIABILITY FOR TAX.

Under California law the right of heirship in an intestate's estate is founded on the statute of succession, and such statute must be looked to, to measure the rights and obligations of a person as heir of a decedent's estate for the purposes of fixing the inheritance tax due the state.

2. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION 🔑14—HUSBAND AND WIFE 🔑274(1)—INHERITANCE OF STEPDAUGHTER ON DEATH OF STEPFATHER INTESTATE.

Under Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8, a stepdaughter succeeded to the title to any estate vested in her stepfather at the time of his death, he having died intestate, so far as such estate consisted of community property of his predeceased spouse, the daughter's mother, and himself, or of separate property which he had inherited from such predeceased spouse.

3. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION 🔑14—SOURCE OF TITLE MATERIAL IN DETERMINING HEIRS OF INTESTATE WIDOWER.

The source of the title of a widower who has died intestate, whether or not from his predeceased wife, is immaterial, so far as the extent of his estate in his property is concerned; but the source of his title is material in establishing the identity of his heirs, as a stepdaughter, under Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8.

4. Taxation ⚿875(1), 886½ — Stepdaughter taking as heir of stepfather liable for inheritance tax.

The stepdaughter of a widower, who dies intestate, leaving property which had been either community property or separate property of his deceased spouse, and which he had inherited, under Civ. Code, § 1401, as it existed prior to the amendment of 1919, which property, under section 1386, subd. 8, goes to the stepdaughter, takes as an heir of her stepfather, and as a stranger to him, and must pay a 5 per cent. inheritance tax on the balance left after her exemption of $500, as provided in Inheritance Tax Act, § 4, subd. 4, and section 6, subd. 5.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Thomas E. Marshall, deceased. From an order determining the amount of the inheritance tax due the state from Marjorie O'Neill, sole heir, there is an appeal. Order reversed, and trial court directed to everrule objections to the report of the inheritance tax appraiser, and to make its order confirming report and fixing tax.

Robert A. Waring, J. Paul Miller, Jas. Atteridge, and Adrian C. Stanton, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

Haven & Athearn, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BARDIN, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from an order determining the amount of inheritance tax due the state of California from Marjorie O'Neill, the respondent herein, and sole heir of the estate.

There is no controversy about the facts of the case, and, so far as they are pertinent to this appeal, may be briefly stated as follows: Thomas E. Marshall died intestate, leaving as his entire estate property which had either been the community property of himself and his predeceased spouse, Delia Marshall, or property which had formerly been the separate property of such predeceased spouse, and which he had inherited upon her demise. Marshall and his spouse left no issue of their bodies, but Delia Marshall left an only child, named Marjorie O'Neill. This child was never adopted by Thomas E. Marshall, nor did he ever stand in the mutually acknowledged relation of a parent to such child, and she is not a grandchild of Thomas E. Marshall, and is a stranger in blood to him.

The sole question involved in this appeal is this: Is Marjorie O'Neill entitled to the exemption of $10,000 provided for by subdivision 2 of section 6 of the Inheritance Tax Act, chapter 589 of the Statutes of 1917, and to the 1 per cent. rate on the balance of her inheritance as provided by subdivision 1 of section 4 of said act, or is she entitled to an exemption of $500 only, as provided in subdivision 5 of section 6 of the same act, and required to pay a tax of 5 per cent. on the balance of her inheritance, as provided in subdivision 4 of section 4 thereof? In other words, is the amount of the inheritance tax to be paid by Marjorie O'Neill to be determined upon the theory that she takes from Delia Marshall, or from Thomas E. Marshall, and as a stranger to his blood?

[1-3] It is fundamental that under our law the right of heirship in an intestate's estate is founded upon the statute of succession, and it is to that statute that we must look in order to measure the rights and obligations of Marjorie O'Neill as an heir of the estate of Thomas E. Marshall. It is clear from the facts that, under the provisions of subdivision 8 of section 1386 of the Civil Code, considered in connection with the introductory portion of the section, Marjorie O'Neill succeeded to, and there must be distributed to her, the title to any estate vested in Thomas E. Marshall at the time of his death; he having died intestate, so far as such estate consisted of community property of his predeceased spouse and himself, or of separate property which he had inherited from such predeceased spouse. Respondent's title to such property would, of necessity, be derived from the estate of Thomas E. Marshall, for under section 1401 of the Civil Code, as it existed prior to the amendment of 1919, it was provided that "upon the death of the wife, the entire community property, without administration, belongs to the surviving husband." Mr. Marshall became the absolute owner of the community property from the moment of the death of his wife. It was never any part of his deceased wife's estate. Estate of Klumpke, 167 Cal. 415, 139 Pac. 1062. And the title to the common property having passed absolutely to the present intestate, as well also such of the separate estate of his predeceased spouse, as was set out in the report of the inheritance tax appraiser, then whatever title would, by virtue of subdivision 8 of section 1386 of the Civil Code pass to Marjorie O'Neill must go directly to her from the estate of Thomas E. Marshall. The source of his title is immaterial so far as the extent of his estate in such property is concerned; but the source of his title would be material in establishing the identity of his heirs under subdivision 8 of the section last referred to. The respondent's relationship to her deceased mother would be the determining factor in establishing her status as an heir of Thomas E. Marshall; but the title to the property she is entitled to receive by reason of that status would not relate back for its origin, to her mother. It would come directly to her from her stepfather. She would take as the heir of Marshall. Estate of Watts, 175 Pac. 415.

It was the view of this court in the case of Wright v. Rohr, 182 Pac. 469, in which a petition for hearing in the Supreme Court was denied, that subdivision 8 of section 1386 of the Civil Code establishes a rule of succession applicable in the specified contingencies, and did not create a limitation upon the power of the surviving holder of community property to convey such property, and the subdivision of the section referred to fully recognized the right of the owner to dispose of such property either by gift inter vivos, or by last will and testament. And this court previously expressed the same views in the case of Veirs v. Roberts, 179 Pac. 689, in which it was unsuccessfully contended by the appellants that proceeds of the community property held by a widow should be regarded as held in trust for the issue of her predeceased spouse and herself, and that under the provisions of section 1386 of the Civil Code she had no legal right to make a transfer of the property.

[4] Since Marjorie O'Neill takes as an heir of Marshall, and her inheritance consists of property to which he had the full and unconditional title, there seems no escape from the conclusion that she takes as a stranger to him and that she should, therefore, be compelled to pay the greater tax. Not only do we believe our conclusion in this case to be in entire harmony with the previous decisions of this court, to which reference has already been made, but also to be in full accord with the opinion of the Supreme Court, as to the effect of subdivisoin 8 of section 1386 of the Civil Code, as expressed in Estate of Brady, 171 Cal. 1, 151 Pac. 275.

It follows, then, that the order of the trial court, modifying the report of the inheritance tax appraiser, should be reversed, and the trial court be directed to overrule the objections to said report, and make its order confirming said report and fixing the tax as therein provided. It is so ordered.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

BURKE v. NORTON et al. (Civ. 2965.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT 🔑198—RE-ENTRY BY LESSOR RELEASING LESSEE FROM FUTURE ACCRUING RENTS.

The retaking of the premises by the lessor releases the lessee from subsequently accruing rents, unless the lease expressly provides otherwise, as in a provision that for failure to observe covenants or conditions the lessor shall have the right to enter and at his option terminate the lease.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT 🔑103(2)—DECLARATION OF FORFEITURE OF LEASE PROVIDING FOR RE-ENTRY IN ACTION FOR RENT ERRONEOUS.

Where a landlord, by lease providing that for breach of condition he might re-enter and at his option terminate the lease for the lessee's failure to pay, brought action for the rent, the trial court improperly declared forfeiture of the lease, which also provided that all the remedies given the lessor were cumulative.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT 🔑184(2)—SECURITY DEPOSITS APPLICABLE TO JUDGMENT FOR ARREARS OF RENT.

In view of the terms of the lease, held, that a $5,000 security deposit made by the lessees was intended to be applied to any arrears of rent, so that the trial court in an action therefor properly ordered the deposit applied to satisfaction of the judgment.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1153—MODIFICATION OF ERRONEOUS JUDGMENT BY APPELLATE COURT.

Where the trial court fully ascertained the rights of the parties and erred merely by entering an erroneous judgment, the duty of the appellate court is to modify the judgment so as to finally settle the controversy.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by Carleton F. Burke against I. H. Norton and others. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Newlin & Ashburn, of Los Angeles (Eugene D. Williams, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Haas & Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

THOMAS, J. This is an action brought to recover rent, attorney's fees, damages, and restoration of the premises held by the defendants, I. H. Norton, H. Joe Isaacs, and M. M. Norton, under a certain lease entered into by them with the plaintiff on July 12, 1912, for a period of seven years and three months, commencing October 1, 1912, and ending December 31, 1919, at a total rental of $179,925 payable in certain installments. The defendants entered into possession of the premises, and either themselves, or by subtenant, remained in possession thereof until the filing of the suit.

Rent for the months of June, July, and August, 1915, amounting in all to $5,520, was not paid when due, or at all. On July 27, 1915, the plaintiff caused to be served on defendants a notice requiring that within 20 days they pay said rent or surrender the possession of the premises; and also caused to be served upon defendants another notice, in similar terms, except that it was required that within 3 days they pay said rent or surrender possession of the premises. The defendants did neither. Thereafter, and on August 20, 1915, this action was filed. Default of all the defendants, except the three above named, with whom the lease was made, having been regularly entered, and said defendants having answered, trial was had, and judgment rendered for plaintiff in the sum of $5,770, including $250 attorney's fees. The judgment also provided:

> "That the said judgment is subject to a credit of $5,000, and subject to another credit of $175."

It also contained the further provision:

> "That the agreement of lease entered into between the plaintiff and the defendants, I. H. Norton, H. Joe Isaacs, and M. M. Norton on the 5th day of July, 1912, be forfeited by the defendants and terminated as of date of August 31, 1915."

With the two last-quoted provisions plaintiff is dissatisfied, and because thereof appeals from the said judgment, and the whole thereof.

Appellant urges two points for reversal of the judgment here:

> (1) That "the court erred in declaring a forfeiture of the lease"; and (2) that "the court erred in ordering that the sum of $5,000 (held by plaintiff as security for the performance of the conditions of the lease, and to be applied in payment of rent reserved for the last two months of the lease) should be applied in satisfaction of the judgment."

The appeal is by the alternative method. The record consists only of the transcriptions of the clerk and reporter, and appellant's opening brief. The points submitted to us, therefore, are purely questions of law. Did the trial court err?

Appellant concedes that in certain cases such forfeiture of the term is properly declared as part of the judgment, but insists that, under the terms of the lease here involved, no forfeiture was worked by the bringing of the unlawful detainer suit; and that in the absence of an election by plaintiff to declare a forfeiture, and a prayer for a decree to that effect, none occurred or could properly be adjudged. In this action the complaint did not demand a forfeiture of the lease, nor was the question of forfeiture at all within the issues as made by the pleadings.

By the lease it was provided that—

> "It is further expressly understood and agreed that each and all of the provisions of the lease are conditions precedent, to be faithfully and fully performed by said lessees to entitle them, or any of them to continue in possession of said premises; and if the said lessees shall fail to pay the rental aforesaid when the same becomes due and payable, or if they fail to keep, observe or perform any other covenant, condition or obligation of this lease on their part to be kept or performed, the lessor shall have the right to enter into possession of the demised premises and to remove all persons and property therefrom, and, at his option, to terminate this lease. It is further understood that each and all of the remedies given to the lessor hereunder are cumulative; and that the exercise of one right or remedy by the lessors shall not impair his right to any other remedy; and the lessees hereby waive all claim for damages that may be caused by the lessor in re-entering and taking possession of said premises as herein provided, and all claims for damages that may result from the destruction or injury of or to said premises or buildings thereby, and all claims for damages to, or loss of such property belonging to the lessees or any of them, or any other person, firm or corporation as may be in or upon the premises at the time of such reentering."

Did the trial court treat the phrases we have italicized in the provisions of the lease quoted above as having no force or effect? If so, what was the reason? Confronted with these provisions in the lease, can it be successfully maintained that the entry into possession and the removal of all persons and property from the leased premises—assuming such to have been done—would terminate the lease, without some other act on the part of the lessor indicating his election to avail himself of "his option to terminate the lease"? Do the provisions of section 791 of the Civil Code, under which this action was brought, manifest any intention to affect, limit, or control in any respect the terms or provisions of such a lease as the one involved in the case at bar? Is it not a question of construction to be arrived at from the language of the lease, as to whether it was the intention of the parties that a re-entry, by virtue of legal proceedings or otherwise, should of itself constitute an election to declare a forfeiture of the term? The answers to the foregoing questions are, we think, obvious.

To affirm the judgment of the trial court would, it seems to us, be tantamount to saying that the bringing of such an action as this constitutes a conclusive election to declare a forfeiture, and hence that the provisions of the lease involved here, which are quoted above, are rendered nugatory for the reason that the landlord is deprived of any expeditious or efficacious remedy for carrying out the terms of the lease as written. This we do not understand to be the law. Are the provisions referred to obnoxious to equity or to public policy? We think not. We are of the opinion that the construction placed upon the lease by the trial court converts the lease into something other and different than the parties themselves intended. The entry by plaintiff here was an entry "by virtue of the expressed provisions of said lease," and is perfectly good, unless such entry is prohibited by some law to which our attention has not been called.

[1, 2] As we understand it, the rule is that—

erwise." Watson v. Merrill, 136 Fed. 359, 69 C. C. A. 185, 69 L. R. A. 719; Grommes v. St. Paul Trust Co., 147 Ill. 634, 35 N. E. 820, 37 Am. St. Rep. 248; 1 Taylor on Landlord and Tenant (8th Ed.) §§ 377, 378; 2 Wood on Landlord and Tenant (2d Ed.) § 477.

A very complete and, we think, a fair discussion of the subject is contained in the second case just cited. The court in that case, among other things, said:

> "There is nothing illegal or improper in an agreement that the obligation of the tenant to pay all the rent to the end of the term shall remain, notwithstanding there has been a re-entry for default; and, if the parties choose to make such an agreement, we see no reason why it should not be held valid as against both the tenant and his sureties."

We think this language is applicable to the case at bar. To hold otherwise, it seems to us, would be to place a lessee in a position to retain the premises without the payment of rent, and to compel the lessor to rely wholly upon the financial responsibility of the lessee and seek his rent from month to month by action, or to wholly terminate the lease, either of which would be less advantageous to the landlord than the right to re-enter and, if necessary, to relet the premises, looking to the lessee for only that portion of the rental reserved which represents the difference between what the landlord could obtain from any person upon such reletting and the total monthly rental. We do not hesitate to say that a construction which would thus permit a lessee to determine his own liability is, as we understand them, repugnant to the decisions of this state. Belloc v. Davis, 38 Cal. 242; Wilcoxson v. Stitt, 65 Cal. 596, 4 Pac. 629, 52 Am. Rep. 310; Smith v. Mohn, 87 Cal. 489, 25 Pac. 696; Banbury v. Arnold, 91 Cal. 606, 27 Pac. 934; Freeman v. Griswold, 4 Cal. Unrep. 256, 34 Pac. 327; North Stockton, etc., v. Fischer, 138 Cal. 100, 70 Pac. 1082, 71 Pac. 438; Central Oil Co. v. Southern Refining Co., 154 Cal. 165, 97 Pac. 177; Reed v. Hickey, 13 Cal. App. 136, 109 Pac. 38; Harron v. Cutting, 19 Cal. App. 780, 127 Pac. 827.

From what we have said, it follows that the court erred in declaring a forfeiture of the lease.

It is urged by appellant that, there having been no forfeiture of the lease presented by the issues as framed by the pleadings, and none demanded by the plaintiff, and further that the bringing of this action did not constitute a termination of the term or of the lease, and that hence there was no forfeiture of the lease, it follows that the court erred in ordering the application of the sum of $5,000, held by appellant under the terms of the lease, to the settlement of the judgment, because by such action the plaintiff was deprived of a valuable security, to which he was entitled under the specific terms of the lease. With this contention we are unable to agree. By clause 19 of the lease referred to, it is provided that—

> "It is hereby mutually covenanted and agreed that said lessees have paid to said lessor the sum of five thousand ($5,000.00) dollars as security for the faithful performance by said lessees of each and all of the terms and covenants and conditions herein contained on the part of said lessees to be kept and performed, and that said sum of five thousand ($5,000.00) dollars shall be held by said lessor as security for said faithful performance by said lessees, and that in the event that said lessees shall fail to keep and perform each and all of the terms and covenants and conditions herein contained, on their part to be kept and performed, said five thousand ($5,000.00) dollars, or such proportion thereof as may be necessary shall be retained by said lessor and applied [italics ours] by him on account of the damages sustained by reason of the failure of said lessees to faithfully perform any of the conditions herein contained on their part to be performed. But notwithstanding the retention of said sum of five thousand ($5,000.00) dollars by said lessor, said lessor shall have all and every action, right, remedy, claim and demand against said lessees for all damages sustained by him in excess of the sum of five thousand ($5,000.00) dollars, up to the sum of twenty-five thousand ($25,000.00) dollars by reason and on account of the failure of said lessees to perform the covenants herein contained on their part to be performed, but that in no event shall said lessor be entitled to ask for, demand, claim or receive from said lessees any sum or amount in excess of the sum of twenty-five thousand ($25,000.00) dollars by reason or on account of any damage sustained by said lessor by or through the failure of said lessees to live up to, abide by or perform any of the terms, covenants or agreements herein contained on their part to be performed."

[3] For this, we think, it conclusively appears that the money so held by plaintiff was to be applied in just such a contingency as has arisen here. This being true, the learned trial court was correct in ordering the same applied to the satisfaction of the judgment.

[4] The practice in this state, from the very earliest time, has been to modify a judgment in the appellate tribunal so as to finally settle the controversy, when the rights of the parties appear from the record to be fully ascertained. Persse v. Cole, 1 Cal. 369; Fox v. Hale, etc., Co., 122 Cal. 219, 54 Pac. 731. In the case at bar, we think it conclusively appears that the rights of the parties have been fully ascertained, and that the trial court simply erred by the entering of an erroneous judgment. Hence it seems clear that our present duty is to modify the judgment so as to finally settle this controversy, and render another trial unnecessary.

It is therefore ordered that the clause denominated "3" of the judgment entered herein, which reads as follows, "That the agreement of lease entered into between the plaintiff and defendants I. H. Norton, H. Joe Isaacs and M. M. Norton, on the 5th day of July, 1912, be forfeited by the defendants and terminated as of date August 31, 1915," be, and the same is hereby, stricken out, and, as so modified, that the judgment be, and the same is hereby, affirmed; and that appellant shall recover his costs of appeal herein.

HIGHLAND PARK INV. CO. v. LIST et al. (Civ. 3035.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 19, 1919. Rehearing Denied Sept. 18, 1919; Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 16, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1097(1)—DECISION ON FORMER APPEAL AS LAW OF CASE.

A decision of the appellate court on former appeal in full accord with the authorities establishes the law of the case.

2. CORPORATIONS 🔑317(2)—UNDER NO DUTY TO EXAMINE RECORD TO DISCOVER DIRECTOR'S FRAUD IN SALE TO IT.

There was no duty resting on a corporation intending to purchase lots, or upon any of its members, to examine the public records of a county to determine whether a director had purchased the lots from the owner to resell to the company at a profit, or to suspect the director was intending thus to perpetrate a fraud.

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS 🔑55(1)—FRAUD ON CORPORATION WAS CONSUMMATED WHEN CONVEYANCE TO IT WAS MADE BY DIRECTOR.

As respects the statute of limitations, fraud of corporation's director, consisting in obtaining a secret profit by purchasing lots and selling them to corporation at an advance, was consummated when the conveyance of the lots was made by the director and his wife to the corporation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by the Highland Park Investment Company against R. D. List and others. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Goodrich & Martinson and Tobias R. Archer, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Meserve & Meserve and Paul H. McPherrin, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, after the second trial, the case having once before been before the appellate court. Highland Park Inv. Co. v. List, 27 Cal. App. 761, 151 Pac. 162.

The action was brought to recover a sum of money alleged to have been secured by appellant R. D. List as a secret profit upon a sale of certain lots of land to plaintiff corporation. The facts are fully and succinctly stated in the opinion of the court on the former appeal, and do not need to be repeated.

"The directors of a corporation hold a fiduciary relation to the stockholders, and have been intrusted by them with the management of the corporate property for the common benefit and advantage of each and every stockholder, and by their acceptance of this office they preclude themselves from doing any act or engaging in any transaction in which their private interest will conflict with the duty they owe to the stockholders, and from making any use of their power or of the corporate property for their own advantage. * * * For the reason that it is against public policy to permit persons occupying fiduciary relations to be placed in such a position that the influence of selfish motives may be a temptation so great as to overpower their duty and lead to a betrayal of their trust, the rule is unyielding that a trustee shall not, under any circumstances, be allowed to have any dealings in the trust property with himself, or acquire any interest therein. Courts will not permit any investigation into the fairness or unfairness of the transaction, or allow the trustee to show that the dealing was for the best interest of the beneficiary, but will set the transaction aside, at the mere option of the cestui que trust." Wickersham v. Crittenden, 93 Cal. 17, 29, 28 Pac. 788, 790; Sims v. Petaluma Gaslight Co., 131 Cal. 659, 63 Pac. 1011; Pacific Vinegar Works v. Smith, 145 Cal. 352, 366-367, 78 Pac. 550, 104 Am. St. Rep. 42.

"It is well settled that any secret profit obtained by the president or a director of a corporation by reason of any violation or disregard by him of any obligations incident to the fiduciary or quasi trust relations that he occupies toward the corporation and its stockholders cannot be retained by him but must be accounted for to the corporation. * * * It is universally held as a consequence of this doctrine that he may not on behalf of the corporation contract with himself as an individual, which of course includes contracting with others with whom he has an interest, without the full knowledge and approval of the corporation." Western States Life Ins. Co. v. Lockwood, 166 Cal. 185, 190, 196, 135 Pac. 496, 498.

[1] The decision of the appellate court on the former appeal is in full accord with these authorities, and establishes the law of this case, with which, on the facts before us, we are in full accord.

When the decision of the lower court in the first trial of the case was reversed on appeal (Highland Park Inv. Co. v. List, supra), it was on the ground, solely, as we read the decision, that one of the essential findings of fact was not sustained by the evidence. That finding of fact was, in substance, that, prior to August 25, 1908, the date of the meeting of the directors of the plaintiff corporation, authorizing the purchasing of the Withington lots, appellant R. D. List learned that the directors of the corporation would vote for the purchase of said lots for the price of $8,000, and that thereupon, without disclosing the fact to his fellow directors, List purchased the lots, taking the title in his wife's name at a less price, and, without disclosing to the corporation that he had so purchased them, completed the transaction for transfer at the price of $8,000, to the corporation, thereby reaping a profit of $3,326.

The judgment sought and recovered in the case, and based on the findings made at the first trial, was not one of rescission. The corporation elected to retain what it had received from List, and to secure from him the profits which he had made on the sale of the land.

Considering the findings, and the judgment entered in the case, the appellate court said:

> "There is no doubt but that such a judgment would have been proper were it shown that while the board of directors, of which List was one, was negotiating for the purchase of this property, List secretly obtained title thereto and thereupon resold the property to the company, making a profit thereon. The evidence as it is set out in the transcript does not show that the directors had taken up the matter of the purchase of these particular lots prior to the meeting of August 27, 1908. It appeared without dispute that List had purchased the lots five days prior to this time. None of the witnesses, directors, and stockholders of plaintiff corporation, testified to having talked with List regarding the desire of the corporation to purchase the lots prior to the day upon which the directors' meeting was held at which the resolution authorizing the purchase was adopted. Upon this state of the evidence, the legal situation presented is no different than had it appeared that List had become the owner of the lots 30 or 90 days, or more, prior to the 27th day of August. * * * The facts and circumstances shown in evidence do not support the findings as to the essential matters indicated herein." Highland Park Inv. Co. v. List, supra.

The judgment recovered in the lower court on the first trial and again on the second trial, from which judgment this appeal is taken, was the proper form for a judgment in such a case. "The plaintiff corporation was simply seeking to recover such secret profits as were made by one of its officers in a transaction wherein he was forbidden to make any such secret profits, and which profits, in view of the rules we have discussed, belonged to the corporation." Western States Life Ins. Co. v. Lockwood, supra; Ex-Mission Land & Water Co. v. Flash, 97 Cal. 636, 32 Pac. 600.

On the retrial, the judgment in which is the basis of this appeal, the plaintiff introduced evidence curing the defect in the first trial, pointed out by the court of appeal, and the record now amply shows that List, prior to August 27, 1908, the date on which he purchased the lots, had knowledge that the corporation desired and intended to purchase the property. The finding of the trial court to that effect is fully supported by the evidence.

[2] The trial court found that the fraud practiced by defendant R. D. List on the plaintiff corporation was not discovered by any of its officers or directors until the month of April, 1909. There is ample evidence to sustain this finding, and the finding itself does not appear to be attacked except upon the theory that the recording of the deed from Withington to List on August 27, 1908, gave notice to the corporation of the fraud. There was no duty resting upon the corporation, or any of its members, on August 27th, to examine the public record of Los Angeles county, nor to anticipate nor to suspect that List would, or even that he was intending to, perpetrate fraud upon the corporation.

> "Where no duty is imposed by law upon a person to make inquiry, and where under the circumstances 'a prudent man' would not be put upon inquiry, the mere fact that means of knowledge are open to a plaintiff, and he has not availed himself of them, does not bebar him from relief when thereafter he shall make actual discovery. The circumstances must be such that the inquiry becomes a duty and the failure to make it a negligent omission. Bank of Mendocino v. Baker, 82 Cal. 114 [22 Pac. 1037, 6 L. R. A. 883]; Prouty v. Devin, 118 Cal. 258 [50 Pac. 380]. In this case, though means of information were open to the plaintiff, it does not appear that there was any duty devolving upon him to make use of them. Nothing had occurred to excite his suspicion, or to put him upon inquiry, and for these reasons, under the facts of this case, we think the finding of the court sufficient and sufficiently supported by the evidence." Tarke v. Bingham, 123 Cal. 166, 55 Pac. 760.

[3] The fraud was consummated by the execution and delivery of the deed by List and wife to the corporation on the 31st day of August, 1908, assuming that it was delivered on the date of its execution and acknowledgment. The present action was commenced on August 31, 1911. It was therefore brought within the statutory time of three years, even though the corporation had knowledge from the date of the consummation of the fraud. There is no merit in the appeal. We do not feel it necessary to further discuss the matters raised in the supplemental briefs filed by the appellants.

McNULTY v. LAWLEY et al. (Civ. 2794.)

1. TURNPIKES AND TOLL ROADS 🔑19—RIGHT OF TOLL ROAD OWNERS TO TAKE MATERIAL FROM SERVIENT LAND.

The owners of a toll road over another's land had the right to grade their road, as reasonably necessary or appropriate, and perhaps the right to use material for filling or surfacing other portions of the road, but no right to take material from the land, even within right of way, without regard to grading operations on the land, but to be hauled miles away, as well as to points on other roads.

2. TURNPIKES AND TOLL ROADS 🔑15—RIGHT OF WAY GIVES RIGHT OF PASSAGE, NOT OWNERSHIP OF SOIL.

An easement of toll road owners for highway purposes over the land of another is for passage only, with necessary incidental powers and privileges to grade the way and repair and maintain it; such incidental powers and privileges giving the owners, holders of the easement, no right of ownership in the soil.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑932(1)—PRESUMPTION FAVORING JUDGMENT BELOW BY ACCOUNTING FOR SMALLNESS.

In a landowner's action to recover from the owners of a toll road over the land for rock taken from a quarry and for damages, it must be presumed in favor of the judgment for much less than the landowner claimed that the jury made proper allowance for rock used in grading operations by defendant road owners.

4. TURNPIKES AND TOLL ROADS 🔑26½—IMMATERIALITY OF PROCEEDINGS ESTABLISHING AND ABANDONING ROAD IN SUIT AGAINST TOLL ROAD OWNERS.

In an action by a land and quarry owner against the proprietors of a toll road to recover for rock improperly taken, in view of the toll road owners' mistaken theory of the law, rejection of proffered evidence of proceedings of the supervisors in establishing and abandoning an old road was not erroneous; proceedings affecting the old road at a different place having no tendency to prove the width of the right of way past the quarry, while the width of the road was immaterial anyway.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1058(1)—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE AS HARMLESS.

The exclusion of evidence tending to prove for defendants a point of fact as to which their witnesses testified was harmless.

6. EVIDENCE 🔑113(19)—ASSESSMENT ROLLS AS EVIDENCE OF VALUE OF LAND.

In an action by a landowner against proprietors of a toll road to recover for rock taken from the land and for damages from the taking, the assessment rolls of several successive years were not admissible for defendants as original evidence to prove the value of plaintiff's property.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; R. H. Latimer, Judge.

Action by Delia McNulty against Harry B. Lawley and Charles A. Lawley. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

John T. York, of Napa, for appellants.

Aitken, Glensor & Clewe, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BRITTAIN, J. The defendants appeal from a judgment for $779, entered upon the verdict of a jury, in a suit for the value of rock taken from the plaintiff's quarry, and for damages for injury to the land by reason of the taking. The appellants contend that the trial court committed error in rejecting certain evidence and in giving certain instructions concerning their rights as the proprietors of a toll road running over the plaintiff's land and by or through the quarry in question.

Through the plaintiff's land runs a stream, from the left bank of which rose a steep hill in which the quarry was opened. The toll road hugs the bank of the stream, and was graded and used at that point to a width of some 20 feet. The quarry has an opening of about 370 feet along the road. Its floor is substantially level with the road, and, roughly speaking, forms the segment of a circle having a depth at the center of about 70 feet from the nearest edge of the traveled portion of the road to the base of the quarry face. From the base to the top of the quarry, at its deepest central part, the height is about 100 feet, and at the ends of the quarry the height is perhaps 30 feet.

[1] The defendants claimed to be entitled to a right of way for the toll road 66 feet wide, up to a line some 46 to 48 feet further from the creek than the inside line of the traveled and graded way. They also claimed, and here claim as a matter of law, the right to take rock from any part of the right of way. If the appellants' second contention is not correct, their first contention is immaterial. Even though the proper boundaries of the defendants' right of way included the entire quarry, they had no right to take rock which, but for the easement, belonged to the plaintiff. They had the unquestionable right to grade their road in such manner as was reasonably necessary or appropriate for its use, and perhaps the further right to use the material so separated from the land for filling or surfacing other portions of their road. They had no right to take material from plaintiff's soil, even within the boundaries of the right of way, without regard to grading operations on the plaintiff's land, but to be hauled, as some of it was, to points on the toll road miles away from the plaintiff's land, as well as to points on other roads, public and private. As well might they have claimed the right to operate for their own benefit a gold mine on any portion of the right of way.

[2] The easement for highway purposes is for passage only over the land, with necessary incidental powers and privileges to grade the way and to repair and maintain it upon or adjacent to the lands of the respective abutting owners. These incidental powers and privileges give the holders of the easement no right of ownership in the soil. Lord Mansfield said the rule was express "that the king has nothing but the passage for himself and his people; but the freehold and all profits belong to the owner of the soil." Goodtitle v. Alker, 1 Burr. 143. Material may be taken from the highway for the purpose of building or repairing the same in front of the adjoining land, or for bringing it down to grade, but the taking of such material, not for the improvement of the highway at the point from which they are taken, but merely for use in improving other portions thereof, is unjustifiable. 13 R. C. L. Highways, § 112. The text in Ruling Case Law is amply supported by authority. In two cases cited by respondent the facts were substantially the same as in this case, and the rule was applied. Dist. of Columbia v. Robinson, 180 U. S. 92, 21 Sup. Ct. 283, 45 L. Ed. 440; Smith v. City of Rome, 19 Ga. 89, 63 Am. Dec. 298. In this state the broad general principles underlying the rule have been discussed in a number of cases. Wright v. Austin, 143 Cal. 236, 76 Pac. 1023, 65 L. R. A. 949, 101 Am. St. Rep. 97; North Fork, etc., Co. v. Edwards, 121 Cal. 662, 54 Pac. 69; Burris v. People's Ditch Co., 104 Cal. 248, 37 Pac. 922. The authorities relied upon by the appellants on this branch of the case, when carefully examined, tend rather to support the argument of the respondent, and do not overcome the rule applied by the Supreme Court of the United States and recognized in this state.

[3, 4] There was some evidence on the part of the defendants that a part of the rock taken was from the ends of the quarry for the purpose of widening and straightening the road. On the other hand, the plaintiff's evidence was that a great portion of the rock was taken from the main quarry face, which was outside of the right of way claimed by the appellants. The jury visited the quarry. The verdict was for much less than the plaintiff claimed. It must be presumed in favor of the judgment that the jury made proper allowance for any grading operations. Even though the main quarry face had been within the claimed right of way, it was not nor could it be claimed the quarrying at that point was in furtherance of grading operations. The rock taken was not used by the defendants on that part of their road located on the plaintiff's land. Under these circumstances, and following the rules laid down in the foregoing authorities, the actual location of the inner boundary of the right of way was immaterial. There was no error, in view of the defendants' mistaken theory of the law, in rejecting the proffered evidence of proceedings of the supervisors in establishing and abandoning an old road.

[5] The rejection of this evidence was correct for other reasons. A county road, 66 feet wide, had been laid out and constructed, at least in part. It was abandoned in order that the defendants' predecessor might utilize such parts of it in the construction of his toll road as he desired. He was not compelled to nor did he utilize it either for its full length or its full width. The county road never ran across the plaintiff's land, and did not pass the quarry. The toll road is largely in the mountains, and was constructed, as at the plaintiff's place, of such a width as the proprietary owners of the easement deemed necessary to accommodate the mountain traffic. It was maintained at this point at a width of 18 or 20 feet for over 40 years. Proceedings affecting the old county road at a different place had no tendency to prove the width of the right of way past the plaintiff's quarry. Moreover, witnesses of the defendants testified in regard to their claims to a right of way 66 feet wide. If it could be held that there was technical error in excluding the evidence, the defendants were not injured. In such a case the judgment would not be disturbed. Estate of Wineteer, 176 Cal. 28, 167 Pac. 516; Code Civ. Proc. § 475.

The instructions of which complaint is made by the appellants were in accord with what has been said of the law regarding the use of material in the highway. In view of the law, they were perhaps more favorable to the appellants than they were entitled to have.

[6] The plaintiff testified concerning the value of the rock taken. On cross-examination she testified that she did not know for what her property was assessed. On behalf of the defendants it was sought to introduce the assessment rolls of several successive years. The offer was properly rejected. The assessment rolls would not have contradicted the plaintiff's evidence, and they were not admissible as original evidence of value. The only case cited by the appellants on this subject supports the action of the trial court. Central Pac., etc., Co. v. Feldman, 152 Cal. 303, 92 Pac. 849.

The judgment is affirmed.

McCLENDON v. HEISINGER et al.

(Civ. 2899.)

1. Evidence 🔑441(12)—Parol evidence varying written guaranty of note inadmissible.

In action on guaranty of a note indorsed on its back, any conversation regarding plaintiff payee's agreement that, if the five defendants would sign the guaranty, plaintiff would stand his pro rata share of any loss that might be occasioned to them, held inadmissible as varying the writing.

2. Guaranty 🔑87 — Failure to plead fraud as defense to action on guaranty waiver thereof.

In an action on guaranty of a note indorsed on its back, where defendants have not pleaded fraud by plaintiff in procuring their guaranty by an oral agreement to bear his pro rata share of any loss that might be occasioned to them by it, they cannot rely on the defense.

3. Frauds, statute of 🔑20—Oral contract of guaranty of debt of another invalid.

If plaintiff payee of a note had made to defendant an oral agreement to bear his pro rata share of any resulting loss to them as guarantors, such agreement would have amounted to nothing more than a contract of guaranty of the debt of another, which would not have been enforceable unless in writing.

4. Set-Off and counterclaim 🔑24—Agreement to share in loss of guarantors not enforceable until payment by them.

Where plaintiff, payee of a note, agreed that if defendants would guaranty it he would stand his pro rata share of any loss occasioned to them, in the absence of allegation and proof that defendants have suffered any loss they cannot rely on plaintiff's agreement as a counterclaim against his cause of action on the guaranty, having no existing cause of action, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 438, as it would not accrue until their liability had matured by actual payment.

5. Guaranty 🔑49 — Release of guarantors by impairment or suspension of creditor's rights against principal.

The consent of plaintiff, payee of a corporate note, as director of the corporation, to the transfer of its assets to a trustee for creditors, did not constitute an act impairing or suspending plaintiff's rights or remedies against the company to release other directors from liability on their guaranty of the note, under Civ. Code, § 2819.

HAVEN, J. Action on a contract of guaranty. Plaintiff and defendants were the directors of the California Rochdale Company, a corporation. Defendants guaranteed the payment to plaintiff of a promissory note of said company in the sum of $5,000, which amount was subsequently reduced by payments made thereon to $4,132.20, the amount sued for herein. The contract of guaranty was written on the back of the note, and was signed by the five defendants contemporaneously with the execution of the note. After the maturity of the note the California Rochdale Company transferred all of its assets to a trustee for the benefit of its creditors. Subsequently a settlement was effected with some of the creditors, leaving the corporation indebted to the plaintiff and to certain other creditors. Thereafter, with the consent of the corporation and of such remaining creditors, and with the consent of the defendant Heisinger, said trustee transferred the assets then remaining in his hands to a committee of three, consisting of the plaintiff, the defendant Heisinger, and the defendant Bennett, which transfer was found to have been made in trust for the benefit of such remaining creditors. The trial court rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff and against defendants, all of the defendants having defaulted except Heisinger and Bice, from which judgment the nondefaulting defendants prosecute this appeal.

The defenses of each of the defendants were: First, that he had signed the contract of guaranty in reliance upon a prior agreement of plaintiff to the effect that, if the five defendants would sign the same, plaintiff would stand his pro rata share of any loss that might be occasioned to them by reason thereof; second, that, without the consent of the guarantors, plaintiff had released the maker of the note from all liability thereon; and, third, that after the execution of the contract of guaranty, the California Rochdale Company, with the consent of the plaintiff, but without the consent of the guarantors, transferred all of its assets to one Smith as trustee for the benefit of its creditors, and that thereafter the plaintiff without the consent or knowledge of the guarantors, executed a waiver in writing of all his rights as holder of the note to participate in the assets of said corporation. At the close of the trial the court granted plaintiff's motion to strike out the testimony of certain witnesses by which defendants attempted to prove an oral agreement between plaintiff and defendants that plaintiff would stand his pro rata share of any loss that might be suffered by them by reason of said guaranty, hereinabove referred to in the first defense, and in accordance with the remaining evidence found that no such agreement had been made.

[1, 2] We cannot agree with appellants' contention that this ruling was erroneous. If there was any conversation regarding such an agreement, it was inadmissible, as the contract sued upon was in writing, was complete in itself, and superseded all negotiations or conversations which preceded or accompanied its execution. Appellants do not attempt to dispute the well-established rule that parol evidence is inadmissible to vary the terms of a written instrument. They argue, however, that plaintiff is estopped from enforcing his contract of guaranty because of the oral agreement which they claim he entered into; that, if he made such oral agreement without intention of fulfilling it, it constituted fraud in the procurement of the contract of guaranty, which would preclude its enforcement. There is no merit in this contention. Fraud as a defense must be pleaded and proved. This defendants have not done.

[3, 4] Appellants further claim that the introduction of parol testimony to establish this oral agreement was not an attempt to vary the terms of a written contract, but that it evidenced another collateral agreement, which constituted a part of the consideration for the execution of the contract of guaranty. If such an agreement were made, it would have amounted to nothing more than a contract of guaranty of the debt of another, which would not have been enforceable unless in writing. The cases cited by appellants do not bear out their contention in this regard. Nor would such an agreement constitute a counterclaim against plaintiff's cause of action, as claimed by appellants, for the reason that the agreement pleaded and attempted to be proved was to "stand his pro rata share of any loss that might be occasioned said defendant by reason of his becoming the guarantor of said note." The record contains no allegation nor proof that appellants have as yet suffered any loss by reason of their guaranty. They had therefore, no "existing" cause of action against plaintiff under such alleged agreement, as is required by section 438 of the Code of Civil Procedure. A cause of action upon contract is not "existing," within the meaning of the above section, until a liability upon such contract has matured. Provident Mutual Building Loan Association v. Davis, 143 Cal. 253, 76 Pac. 1034. No loss would be occasioned to defendants within the meaning of the alleged agreement until actual payment was made by them. Even recovery of judgment against them would not have given rise to a matured right of action in their favor against the plaintiff. Oaks v. Scheifferly, 74 Cal. 478, 16 Pac. 252.

[5] The trial court found that "the plaintiff did not at any time * * * release the California Rochdale Company from liability on the note referred to in said complaint or from any part of its liability on said note." Appellants' contention that plaintiff released the corporation "or its representative, Smith," from its obligation upon the note, is unwarranted. Smith was the trustee for the creditors. The California Rochdale Company passed a resolution authorizing and directing defendant Heisinger, president of the corporation, upon acceptance of a certain compromise settlement by a majority in number and amount of its merchandise creditors, to deliver to said Smith a copy of said resolution, "which is hereby constituted an authority and instruction to H. L. Smith to retransfer to F. A. Bennett, S. L. Heisinger, and W. J. McClendon, or their nominees, all of the assets heretofore transferred to him by the California Rochdale Company." Plaintiff and Heisinger, as creditors of said corporation, each executed a release to Smith for all claims and demands which he "has or may have against said H. L. Smith on account of the aforesaid transfer of assets, and does hereby consent that said H. L. Smith may transfer said assets and property" to said parties. This release does not purport to be a release of the corporation, or any one else, from any obligation under the note in suit, nor a waiver by plaintiff of any rights thereunder. This is the only release in evidence. Reliance is placed upon section 2819 of the Civil Code, which provides that—

> "A guarantor is exonerated, except so far as he may be indemnified by the principal, if by any act of the creditor, without the consent of the guarantor, the original obligation of the principal is altered in any respect, or the remedies or rights of the creditor against the principal, in respect thereto, in any way impaired or suspended."

It is not contended that the original obligation was altered in any respect. The consent of plaintiff, as a director of the corporation, to the transfer of the assets of said corporation for the benefit of creditors, did not constitute an act impairing or suspending the remedies or rights of plaintiff against the corporation. In this connection appellants rely on the well-established rule that "a payee, who voluntarily releases the lien on property which he holds as security for the payment of his note, exonerates the guarantor thereon." The note in suit, however, was unsecured. By his consent to the transfer of the corporate assets to a trustee, plaintiff neither released any security for his note nor extended the time of payment.

The judgment is affirmed.

PACIFIC MFG. CO. v. RASMUSSEN et al. (Civ. 2887.)

1. Mechanics' liens 🔑309—Variance between notice of completion of building and actual date immaterial.

Appellants in a mechanic's lien foreclosure action may not complain that a notice specified the date of completion of a building as December 19th, whereas the court found the date was really December 24th, since Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, then permitted notice within 10 days after completion, and appellants did not file their lien claim within such time after December 24th, and they were not injured.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)—Findings on conflicting evidence not reviewed.

Where the evidence to support findings of trial court is scant, but conflicting, the findings will not be disturbed.

3. Mechanics' liens 🔑281(2)—Evidence sufficient to show acceptance of work on specific date.

In consolidated actions for foreclosure of mechanics' liens, evidence held sufficient to support the findings of the trial court in relation to the acceptance of the work of both painter and plasterer as of a specific date.

4. Mechanics' liens 🔑132(4)—Claim invalid for failure to file notice within time limited.

Where claimants did not file their notices of mechanics' liens, either within the time limited after the notice of completion or within the time limited after the completion of their original contracts, their liens are not valid, because of failure to comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 1187.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Everett J. Brown, Judge.

Consolidated mechanics' lien actions, in which the Pacific Manufacturing Company, a corporation, and others, were plaintiffs, and C. H. Rasmussen and others were defendants. From the judgment rendered, Eric Petersen and H. W. Lassen appeal. Affirmed.

Carl F. Wood, and L. D. Manning, of Oakland, for appellants.

W. B. Rinehart, of Oakland, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by Eric Petersen and H. W. Lassen, two of the plaintiffs in a consolidated action to foreclose mechanics' liens, first, from that portion of the decision of the trial court holding that the sum of $4,150, found to be the unpaid balance owing from Court Livermore, No. 77, Foresters of America, the owner of the building upon which the work was performed, to the defendant Rasmussen, the contractor, was payable to defendant Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank of Livermore under an assignment, and that such sum was not subject to payment of the amounts found to be due appellants for labor and materials used in the construction of the building; and, second, from that portion of the decision and judgment denying appellants a lien against the land on which the building was constructed. The amounts of the appellants' claims were determined by the findings and judgment ordered in their favor for such amounts against the contractor, Rasmussen.

On May 6, 1914, Court Livermore, through its building committee, entered into an agreement in writing with Rasmussen, as contractor, for the erection of a building on a lot in Livermore, Alameda county. The contract price was to be something over $14,000, payable in monthly installments during the progress of the work, in sums equal to 75 per cent. of the value of the work done up to the date of payment, the remaining 25 per cent. to be paid 35 days after final completion of the work. The court found that upon the completion of the work there was due the contractor the sum of $4,150, which had previously been assigned by him to the defendant Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank to secure a note of the contractor, which note was given for money advanced by the bank and used in the erection of the building. The causes of action stated in the complaint of appellant Petersen include a number of claims assigned to said appellant by other lien claimants, which will be considered later.

Appellants contend that a valid notice of completion was never filed by the owner, and that therefore it is precluded from maintaining any defense based upon the ground that the liens were not filed in time, under the provisions of section 1187, Code of Civil Procedure. The facts involved in this determination are that on December 19, 1914, Court Livermore occupied the building, which was substantially completed at that time, but there remained unfinished at that time the exterior painting and a small amount of plastering and concrete work, of the value of about $4.30. The court found that such occupation and use of the building by Court Livermore, on and after the 19th day of December, 1914, was open and notorious and well known to all of the parties plaintiff and defendant in this action, including all of the lien claimants in the consolidated actions. The court found that the contractor, Rasmussen, completed the construction of said building on the 24th day of December, 1914, and that said building was accepted by said owner on said 24th day of December, and a notice of completion and acceptance thereof was duly filed and recorded in the office of the county recorder of Alameda county on said 24th day of December, 1914, and that all of the parties to this action and all of the lien claimants mentioned therein, except Robert Howden, had knowledge of the completion of said building on and after the actual date of completion thereof as found by the court, to wit, the 24th day of December, 1914.

[1] The notice of completion filed and recorded on December 24th specified the date of completion as of December 19th, and the appellants' objection is that, as the court found said date of completion was really December 24th, the notice should have so stated, and that, as it stated that the completion date was December 19th, instead of December 24th, said notice is fatally defective, as not being in conformity with the statute. Section 1187, Code of Civil Procedure, as it stood at the time of this notice, provided that the owner may within 10 days after completion of any contract file for record in the office of the county recorder a notice setting forth the date when the same was completed, together with his name, etc. While it may be true that if the lien claimants had relied upon this notice of completion as filed, and had filed their claims within the 30 days allowed after the time stated in the notice as the date of completion, the owner would have been estopped to deny that such date, so stated, was not the actual date of completion—in the present case, the claimants and their assignors neither filed their claims within 30 days of the date stated in the notice, nor within 30 days from December 24th, the date found by the court to have been the actual date of completion and the date upon which the notice was filed and recorded. They are, therefore, not injured and in no position to complain.

The court also found that on the 24th day of December, 1914, it was agreed and understood by and between plaintiff Petersen and defendant Rasmussen and said Court Livermore that the work and contract of said plaintiff Petersen should be and the same was accepted on said date, omitting therefrom the aforesaid concrete work, amounting to $4.30, which it was agreed between the parties aforesaid, on said day, might be performed at such time thereafter as would be proper and convenient for said Petersen, and that as to said last-mentioned work no time of performance was agreed upon and no time of payment fixed; that the performance of same was, by said agreement between the said parties, eliminated from the contract of said plaintiff Petersen, and a new contract made with relation thereto as aforesaid, wherein and whereby it was agreed that Petersen might perform the same and should receive therefor when performed the sum of $4.30, the same to be paid by defendant Rasmussen, and that the said Court Livermore did not agree to pay the same.

[2] With reference to the other work remaining unfinished on December 24th—i. e., the exterior painting, contracted to be done by Morrill & Walters, assignors of Petersen—the court found that said contract was accepted as fully performed by said Rasmussen and the said Court Livermore on the 24th day of December, 1914, for all the purposes of the completion of said building; that on the said 24th day of December, 1914, it was agreed and understood between Morrill & Walters, Rasmussen, and said Court Livermore that the work and contract of said Morrill & Walters should be and the same was on said day accepted, omitting therefrom the aforesaid unfinished portion of said work, amounting in value to the sum of $153, which it was agreed between the parties might be performed at such time thereafter as would be proper and convenient; and that the performance of the same was by agreement between the parties eliminated from the contract of Morrill & Walters and a new contract made with relation thereto.

[3] Appellants contend that there is no evidence to warrant the above findings that new contracts were entered into between the parties for the completion of the cement work and painting work, and that the original contracts for such work were accepted as completed by the owner as of December 24th. It is true the evidence to warrant these findings is scant; but there is a conflict in the evidence, and, if there is any evidence from which these findings could be made, they are not subject to review here. We find in the record the agreement signed by Morrill & Walters, the painters, and also signed by Rasmussen, the contractor, on or about December 24th, which reads:

> "We hereby agree that the value of the unfinished painting work on the Foresters' Hall on Saturday, December 19, 1914, as compared with the entire contract price for this painting, amounts to $153; in other words, our total contract for painting amounts to $654, and painting work completed December 19, 1914, amounts to $500, and as above noted the unfinished work amounts to $153."

A similar agreement was signed by Petersen in relation to the unfinished portion of the plastering and concrete work, amounting to $4.30. In relation to these two agreements we have the testimony of Rasmussen, the contractor, that, when these agreements were signed, Rasmussen showed to Mr. Walters and to Mr. Petersen, respectively, a letter from the architect, explaining that he wanted to have the building accepted to meet all legal requirements, and requesting an estimate of and agreement concerning the unfinished portion of the work, which letter is a part of the record here; that Walters was with Rasmussen when the agreement was presented to Petersen; that the letter from the architect was shown to Petersen, and that it was explained to him, as it had been to Mr. Walters, that the owner wanted to have the building accepted, and that the painting might be completed when the weather permitted. We think this evidence is sufficient to support the findings of the trial court in relation to the acceptance of the work of both the painter and plasterer as of December 24th.

[4] Under the findings it therefore appears that neither the plaintiff Petersen nor his assignor, Morrill & Walters, have valid liens under the provisions of section 1187, Code of Civil Procedure. They did not file their notice of lien, either within the time limited after the notice of completion, or in the time limited after the completion of their original contracts. Under the findings of the trial court, this is also true of the lien of the appellant Lassen, and of the various lien claimants whose claims were assigned to Petersen.

MINES AND MINERALS ⚷97—EMPLOYÉS NOT HAVING INTEREST IN MINE, PAID FOR ORE PRODUCED, NOT PARTNERS.

Where mine owner made oral agreement with certain number of its employés giving them the right to open up abandoned tunnel, agreeing to pay them at specified rate for ore delivered to it, and furnishing them with tools wherewith to do work, the employés were not "mining partners" under Civ. Code, §§ 2511, 2512, 2516, not having any interest in or right to possession of the mine, and the contract being merely one of employment.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Mining Partnership.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by A. Michalek against the New Almaden Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

David M. Burnett, of San Jose, and John J. O'Toole, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Arnold C. Lackenbach, R. Porter Ashe, and Roland Becsey, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

HAVEN, J. Plaintiff sued as the assignee of five individuals, who are alleged to have been the members of a mining partnership, for the recovery of the reasonable value of work and labor performed by said assignors under a license for the working of the mining property of defendant. The license was granted by oral agreement between defendant and seven persons, of whom one had died and three others had withdrawn from the partnership prior to the assignment to plaintiff, thus leaving but three of the original licensees who joined in the assignment. The other two assignors are alleged to have become members of the partnership after the acquirement by it of the license. The defendant pleaded a defect of parties plaintiff, both by demurrer and answer; and also pleaded in abatement of plaintiff's cause of action that, if any partnership existed among the plaintiff's assignors, it was a general and not a mining partnership, which transacted its business under a designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners, and that no certificate had ever been filed or published by such partnership, as required by sections 2466 to 2469 of the Civil Code. Defendant further contended that if the partnership was a general one the entire partnership claim was not assigned to plaintiff. These defenses were valid unless a mining partnership existed. Plaintiff alleged such a partnership. Both parties assumed that it was essential to plaintiff's recovery to allege and prove the existence of a mining partnership, and the jury was so instructed. The vital question involved in the appeal is whether or not a mining partnership existed among plaintiff's assignors by reason of the relations among themselves, or between them and the defendant. There is no conflict in the testimony as to the facts, which may be summarized as follows:

The defendant is the owner of a quicksilver mining property in Santa Clara county. The persons who are alleged to have formed the mining partnership had been working as miners upon this property. In December, 1915, one of such miners, who acted as the spokesman for his associates, approached the foreman of the mine and stated that he and some others of the miners had gone into an abandoned tunnel from another part of the mine and discovered a lot of quicksilver metal there, which they wanted to get out; that the only way to do so would be to open up that tunnel; and that he and six others desired to go into partnership and try to open it up. The foreman referred the miner to his superior officer, the general manager of the mine. At a subsequent interview between the manager, the foreman, and the spokesman for the alleged partners, the foreman advised the manager of the desire of the miners to obtain the privilege referred to, and an oral arrangement was then entered into between the general manager and the miners whereby it was agreed that the miners should have the privilege of opening up the tunnel referred to, and "to take out the ore and deliver it to the company for one and a half years after the completion of the tunnel," for which the company was to pay them at the rate of $6 per ton for each one per cent. of quicksilver in the ore delivered by them to defendant at the mouth of the tunnel; that the defendant would furnish them with all the necessary mining tools and supplies for the purpose of opening the tunnel, but that they were to furnish their own board. The miners were to receive nothing in the way of wages, but were to do the work upon their own account. The property to be worked was the property of the defendant. There was no agreement that the miners were to acquire any interest in the mine, nor in the ore when it was taken out; but they were to deliver it to the defendant and to receive compensation for their work at the rate above specified. They were not bound to work any specified length of time, but could stop whenever they found that they would not get enough compensation out of the ore to satisfy them. There was no writing evidencing the contract. The record contains evidence to the effect that the licensees were referred to among themselves and by the employés of defendant as partners, and were generally recognized as such. This is no proof, however, of the existence of the peculiar character of partnership necessary for the successful maintenance of plaintiff's cause of action.

The court instructed the jury that their verdict must be for the defendant, unless they found the existence of a mining partnership, and that the work performed by plaintiff's assignors was so performed by them as a mining copartnership and not as individuals. In definition of a "mining partnership" and its attributes the court read to the jury sections 2511, 2512, and 2516 of the Civil Code. The jury found a verdict in favor of plaintiff, from which the defendant appeals, urging that the verdict is not supported by the evidence. Defendant's motion for a new trial was based, among other things, upon the same ground, and was denied by the trial court.

The facts above recited do not prove the existence of a mining partnership. Under the sections of the Civil Code above referred to and the authorities in which the nature of such a partnership has been considered, the ownership of an interest in a mine, or the right to the possession thereof, or an option to purchase the same, is a prerequisite for the existence of such a partnership. Under section 2511 of the Civil Code:

> "A mining partnership exists when two or more persons who own or acquire a mining claim for the purpose of working it and extracting the mineral therefrom actually engage in working the same."

Under this definition, the ownership or acquirement of a mining claim, or of at least an interest therein, and the actual engagement in working such a claim, are both essential before a mining partnership can be said to exist. A mining partnership exists by reason of the joint interest of the partners in a mining claim. In the case at bar the alleged partners had no such interest when the alleged partnership was formed, nor did they subsequently acquire any. Their contract amounted to nothing more than the privilege of working upon a mine in which they neither had nor were to acquire any interest. It was a contract of employment.

Respondent relies upon certain authorities which hold that the ownership of a mining claim in fee is not necessary for the existence of a mining partnership, and that such partnership "can be formed either to prospect for and locate mines, or to work mines belonging to other persons or to any or all of the individual members." 27 Cyc. 756. An examination of the cases cited by the text-writers discloses that the mining partnerships there involved were decreed by reason of the existence in the partners of some interest in the property, or of a right of possession in their own right, as distinguished from that of the owner. The recent case of Harper v. Sloan, 177 Cal. 174, 169 Pac. 1043, 181 Pac. 775, is cited by respondent, and is an example of similar cases. In that case the plaintiff acquired, under his contract, the privilege of purchasing the property, and conveyed to his associates a portion of that right. Such a contract vests in the holder thereof an equitable or contingent interest in the property itself. In Crowley v. Genesee Mining Co., 55 Cal. 273, the court construed a contract by which the plaintiff was employed to work in a mine belonging to defendant for the purpose of taking out what is known as "tribute rock," and delivering it at the defendant's quartz mine, to be crushed at its mill free of cost or expense to the plaintiff, and as compensation for his services one-half of the gross proceeds of each crushing was to be paid to the plaintiff. That contract was held to be a "contract of employment under section 1965, Civil Code." In Hudepohl v. Liberty Hill Consolidated Mining & Water Co., 80 Cal. 553, 558, 22 Pac. 339, 340, a written contract was executed by the superintendent of a mining company to plaintiff and an associate, which contract stated that the mining company leased to the plaintiff and his associate "the right and privilege to work and mine" certain mining property; that the company was to make improvements necessary for commencing and carrying on the work; and that the other parties were to work and mine the ground and receive one-half of all the gross products as compensation. In construing that contract the court said:

> "Such a contract does not create the relation of landlord and tenant, but fixes a rule of compensation for services rendered. It is, in all its essential features, a contract for labor to be performed, and to be paid for by a share of the profits realized from such labor."

It was admitted upon the trial by the attorney for respondent that the contract here involved evidenced a license and not a lease. In Wheeler v. West, 71 Cal. 126, 128, 11 Pac. 871, 873, an oral contract was involved, under which defendants were to enter and work a certain portion of the mine as they saw fit and to exercise their own discretion whether they worked it or not. That contract was held to convey to defendants a mere license and not a lease. In distinguishing the legal rights of a licensee from those of a tenant under a lease, the court used the following language:

> "There is a broad distinction between a lease of a mine, under which the lessee enters into possession and takes an estate in the property, and a license to work the same mine. In the latter case the licensee has no permanent interest, property, or estate in the land itself, but only in the proceeds, and in such proceeds not as realty, but as personal property, and his possession, like that of an individual under a contract with the owner of land to cut timber or harvest a crop of potatoes thereon for a share of the proceeds, is the possession of the owner"—quoted to the same effect in Shaw v. Caldwell, 16 Cal. App. 7, 115 Pac. 941.

De Haro v. United States, 5 Wall. 599, 627, 18 L. Ed. 681, announces the same doctrine.

The verdict was not supported by the evidence in that no mining partnership was proved. Under the facts disclosed by the record, the doctrine of estoppel relied upon by respondent can have no application.

The judgment is reversed.

ROSENTHAL v. SILVEIRA. (Civ. 2666.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑85—EVIDENCE INSUFFICIENT TO SHOW ACCEPTANCE OF QUITCLAIM DEED BY VENDOR AND RESCISSION.

Where purchaser served quitclaim deed, releasing his interest in the land, upon vendor who was unable to read or understand the English language, and vendor within two days handed deed to his lawyer, who returned it to purchaser as soon as he could ascertain proper address, there was no acceptance of deed or acquiescence by vendor in rescission of contract.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑123—EVIDENCE SHOWING ASSIGNMENT OF INTEREST BY PURCHASER BEFORE ATTEMPT TO RESCIND.

In purchaser's action to rescind, involving issue of whether third parties, to whom purchaser had transferred interests in the contract prior to purchaser's attempt to rescind, had abandoned their rights, thereby enabling purchaser to revest vendor with title free from any cloud created by the contract, finding that, at time of purchaser's attempt to rescind, such other persons had no interest in the contract, held against weight of evidence.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑883 — APPELLANT ESTOPPED ON APPEAL TO OBJECT TO CONSIDERATION OF DEED.

Where substance of deed and date book and page of its recordation were read into the record during the trial, and the existence of the deed appeared to have been considered before lower court by all parties, plaintiff was estopped on appeal from objecting to consideration of deed, though deed itself had not been admitted in evidence.

4. DEEDS 🔑121 — VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑116—TENDER OF QUITCLAIM DEED INSUFFICIENT AS A RECONVEYANCE TO VENDOR.

Where purchaser made quitclaim of the property to third party, a subsequent quitclaim deed served upon vendor by purchaser was insufficient as a tender of reconveyance, since it failed to revest vendor with title freed from the cloud created by contract of sale, for a quitclaim deed conveys no more than present interest of grantor.

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑55—SALE OF TRACT AND CONVEYANCES OF PARTS THEREOF A SEPARABLE CONTRACT.

Contract for sale of large tract of land, requiring vendor to convey one or more acres upon payment of certain price per acre, was a divisible and separable contract, such that full performance of one part might be made by both parties without affecting the subsequent performance or right of performance as to remainder.

6. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑145—RIGHT TO CONVEYANCE OF PROPORTIONAL NUMBER OF ACRES UPON MAKING INITIAL PAYMENT.

Where contract for sale of certain tract of land, at certain price, to be paid within certain time, provided for conveyance of one or more acres upon payment of certain price per acre, purchaser was not entitled to conveyance of proportional number of acres for initial payment made upon execution of contract; such payment being a general payment on price of tract as an entirety.

7. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑334(6) — DEFAULT BY VENDOR IN CONVEYANCE OF PORTIONS OF TRACT SOLD NOT AFFECTING ENTIRE CONTRACT.

Where contract provided for sale of tract of land at certain price to be paid at, or, at purchaser's option, before specified date, and required vendor to convey one or more acres upon purchaser's payment of a specified price per acre, vendor's refusal to convey certain number of acres upon tender of required amount, before purchaser had exercised option by paying or tendering total purchase price, was not a default by vendor of the entire contract, but was mere refusal to carry out a portion thereof not entitling purchaser to recover initial payment made upon execution of the contract.

8. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑118—VENDEE IN DEFAULT IN FAILING TO PAY OR TENDER VENDOR TAXES ADVANCED.

Where contract required purchaser to pay taxes, but it was subsequently agreed that vendor should pay taxes and that amount due therefor should thereafter be adjusted between the parties, purchaser did not fully perform under the contract without paying or offering to pay taxes advanced by vendor, though vendor never requested payment.

9. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑79—NEITHER PARTY COULD SUE ON CONTRACT WITHOUT PERFORMANCE OF CONDITIONS.

Where land contract provided for payment of purchase price within certain period and interest and taxes by purchaser and for conveyance by vendor of one or more acres upon payment of certain price per acre, neither party could maintain action thereon without first performing all the conditions previously to be performed by him.

10. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑107 — EVIDENCE SHOWING NO EQUITABLE GROUND FOR RESCISSION BY VENDEE.

Where vendor, who was unable to read English language, refused to sign deed conveying certain number of acres upon payment of certain price, under contract requiring him to so do, without first consulting his attorney, and where purchaser, taking advantage of such refusal, immediately served notice to rescind and quitclaim deed upon vendor, and filed suit to rescind before vendor's attorney could return quitclaim deed, and where interest payment was soon due, and purchaser was at such time indebted to vendor for taxes, there was no equitable grounds for rescission on part of purchaser.

Action by Cerf Rosenthal against Joseph C. Silveira. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

F. I. Lemos, of Hayward, and Rose & Silverstein and Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, all of Oakland, for appellant.

A. C. Aiken, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. Appeal from a judgment, rendered in favor of plaintiff and respondent, for the sum of $8,257.75, together with costs and disbursements, ordering that plaintiff have a lien upon the real property involved in the action to the amount of the judgment, and canceling and annulling a contract, wherein plaintiff agreed to purchase from defendant, and defendant agreed to sell, the real property described in the pleadings. The judgment of the court below is for the return of the payments made by plaintiff on the purchase price of the land, and interest, on the theory that there was a rescission of the contract.

Plaintiff in the case is an experienced real estate operator and engineer by profession. He bought the property for subdivision purposes. He understands perfectly the English language. Defendant is a Portuguese farmer, unable at all to read or write the English language, and understanding it at best but imperfectly.

The property in question was part of the farm owned and cultivated by the defendant. The contract provided for the sale of the property for the sum of $30,000, $5,000 of which amount was paid on execution of the contract. The balance of $25,000 was payable at any time within four years from date. The contract also provided that all taxes on the property, which became due after June 30, 1913, were to be paid by plaintiff, who was also obligated to pay interest on the deferred payments at 6 per cent., net, per annum, payable semiannually; the contract not stating whether such interest payments were to be paid in advance or otherwise. Under the terms of the agreement, plaintiff was given the right to a conveyance of one or more acres of the land, upon the payment of $300, or $500, per acre, according to the location of the property; but no definite time was stated when or under what conditions such conveyances should be made. Time was made the essence of the contract.

Plaintiff took possession of the property, built roads therein, destroying some of the fruit trees in so doing, and plotted out the property for subdivision purposes.

The tract, being part of defendant's entire acreage, was assessed in one amount for 1913–14. Rather than allow the tax to go delinquent, and after his attention had been called to the matter by the tax collector, he paid taxes on the whole tract for the year 1913 when they became due. After settlement as to the amount due, plaintiff repaid to defendant his pro rata share, as required by the agreement. Plaintiff also paid all installments of interest to and including July 2, 1914. Taxes for the year 1914–15 became due October, 1914, and were again paid by the defendant. No adjustment or pro rata payment by the plaintiff had been had when the purported rescissison took place, on December 29, 1914, nor had the interest on the contract been paid, subsequent to July 2 of that year.

After entering into possession of the tract, plaintiff, on February 6, 1914, made a quitclaim deed of the property to the Clarabelle

Realty Company, and this deed was recorded. Plaintiff also entered into a contract, without the knowledge of defendant, to sell 2½ acres of the tract to a German, whose name was unknown to defendant. No money was paid on this contract, and the purchaser appears to have never entered into possession. The plaintiff, through the realty company, entered into a written agreement, in escrow, with S. G. and Clara F. Brown, for the purchase of five acres of the real property. Brown entered into possession. No money was paid to defendant under either the contract with the unknown purchaser, or with Brown, and neither contract was recorded.

On December 29, 1914, in the evening, after defendant was in bed, plaintiff, accompanied by a Mr. Atthol, called upon the defendant at his residence, near Hayward, and requested defendant to sign a deed conveying 16⅔ acres of the premises, explaining to defendant that it was in consideration of the $5,000 theretofore paid and credited on the purchase price at the time of the execution of the contract. Defendant refused to execute the deed. Thereupon plaintiff tendered to defendant the further sum of $300 and demanded that he sign a conveyance of a certain one acre of the land to the party Atthol, as provided in the contract. Defendant also refused to accept the $300 or to execute the conveyance demanded.

The evidence is conflicting as to just what occurred at this meeting. The plaintiff testified that the defendant positively refused to execute any further deeds until the remainder of the purchase price, amounting to $25,000, had been paid. The defendant testified that he merely explained to the plaintiff that he did not understand the matter, and requested that the execution of the deeds be postponed until the next day, when he could consult his attorney; that his only refusal to comply with plaintiff's demand occurred when he was pressed by plaintiff to sign the deeds, and finally said, "No, I sign nothing to-night, until I see my lawyer." While the trial court, with the witnesses before it, was satisfied with, and accepted, plaintiff's version of the occurrence, and what subsequently transpired, and found that defendant's conduct amounted to a rescisssion of the contract, we cannot but feel that there is much in the whole line of action of the plaintiff on the occasion of that visit, and immediately thereafter, which lends vivid color to the contention of the appellant that—

> "The purpose of this visit by Rosenthal and Atthol was to inveigle Mr. Silveira into some sort of a technical default, so as to enable plaintiff and his successors in interest to evade carrying out of the contract of purchase."

On the very next day following the visit to defendant, at Hayward, plaintiff signed, and sent by a messenger to defendant, who personally received it, a notice of rescission and cancellation of the contract of sale, based on the alleged refusal of defendant to execute deeds for certain portions of the tract, and for false statements and alleged misrepresentations to various prospective purchasers. We pause here to note that nowhere in the record does it appear that any false statements, or misrepresentations, were ever made by defendant, or by any one in his behalf, in the premises. The notice was accompanied by a quitclaim, executed by the plaintiff and his wife to defendant and his wife, which deed released and quitclaimed the entire tract. It contained a recital that it was "made for the purpose of releasing all interests of the" makers "by reason of" the contract of sale between the parties. The plaintiff did not in this notice, or at any other time, offer to pay, or tender, to defendant the taxes accrued on the property, and paid by defendant, for the year 1914, or the interest on the contract which accrued after July 2d of that year.

Defendant could not read the documents thus served on him, but within a day and a half, or two days, he handed them to his attorney. The latter, acting for defendant, as quickly as he could ascertain the proper address, returned the quitclaim deed to plaintiff. This was on January 4, 1915, and but five days after its receipt by defendant. In a letter accompanying the returned deed, defendant, through his attorney, denied refusing to execute any deeds, and the making of any false statements concerning the matters at issue, and stated his willingness to comply with the terms, covenants, and conditions mentioned in the contract of sale, and demanded payment of the unpaid interest, amounting to $750, and settlement for the taxes as therein provided. He offered further to make a deed to plaintiff of all the property covered by the contract upon being paid the full amount of the purchase price. Plaintiff had, however, immediately after executing the quitclaim deed, brought this action for rescission, and return of the amounts paid, alleging the delivery of the deed to defendant, of which fact his attorney notified the attorney for defendant, inclosing the deed, and refusing to entertain its return to plaintiff. Defendant's attorney offered in reply to hold the quitclaim deed for Rosenthal, but that offer was refused, plaintiff's counsel stating that the return was absolute and that the action would be tried as the facts existed at the time it was filed. There the matter rested.

[1] On the foregoing facts we cannot find warrant for accepting the trial court's finding that the defendant "accepted" the quitclaim deed. It is true there was a manual delivery of the document to Silveira, who was unable, by reason of his illiteracy, to read it. He promptly handed the document to his lawyer, who returned it to Rosenthal, only to learn that that party had, with precipitous haste, filed an action based on the alleged delivery of the deed, and would stand upon whatever advantage he had gained thereby. We are unable to find acceptance or acquiescence in this line of action. Neither do we share the view of appellant that on the foregoing facts defendant must be held to have made no objection to the tender of the quitclaim deed by plaintiff.

[2] The lower court found that—

> "Neither the Browns, nor Clarabelle Realty Company, nor any other person, other than plaintiff, had any right or title in or to said contract of sale, or to possession of said tract, or any portion thereof on December 30, 1914, when it was offered back to defendant, and the contract released to him by the quitclaim deed."

This finding is contrary to the evidence. The contract between the realty company and the Browns, for the purchase of five acres of the tract, was entered into in May, 1914, and the papers were placed in escrow in the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank in Oakland. The sum of $500, and a deed to a certain lot, as part of the purchase price for the acreage, were handed to the bank with written escrow instructions, signed by the Clarabelle Realty Company and by the Browns. The latter went into immediate possession, and, according to the evidence, as we read the uncontradicted record, were in possession at the date of the attempted rescission by plaintiff. They apparently had no thought of abandoning their contract until the plaintiff in person went to them and asked to be released from the contract. In spite of the effort of the plaintiff, in the lower court, to fix the date of the alleged surrender of possession by the Browns as being prior to December 30th, the record fails to substantiate the finding of the court. On the contrary, the record does show that it was not until January 15th, following the filing of the action, that the escrow was ended. On that day, under written instructions bearing the same date, and signed by the Clarabelle Realty Company by its proper officers, the bank redelivered to Mrs. Brown the $500 theretofore paid and the deed, given as part of the same purchase price for the five-acre tract. Furthermore, the Browns left their furniture in a building on the tract and some of it was still there at the time of the trial. No quitclaim deed from the Browns, or any release by them of plaintiff, or the Clarabelle Realty Company, other than the receipt for the $500, and "all papers in connection with above escrow," appear in the record.

Again, there is nothing in the record by which it may be determined that the party, whose name is unknown, but referred to as the "German," had no right or title in the property, as vendee of the Clarabelle Realty Company.

[3] As before stated, on February 6, 1914, plaintiff made a quitclaim deed of the property in question to the Clarabelle Realty Company, which deed was duly recorded in the office of the county recorder of Alameda county. While this deed, by some inadvertence, possibly, does not appear to have been actually admitted in evidence, its existence and the fact of its execution appear to have been considered before the court by all parties. Its substance, and the date and book and page of its recordation, were read into the record by counsel during the trial. On this statement of counsel the court made its finding. Plaintiff is therefore estopped from objecting to the deed now being considered in evidence. Baker v. Eilers Music Co., 175 Cal. 652, 166 Pac. 1006. It was under this quitclaim deed and right of ownership in the contract of sale thereby conveyed that the contracts between the realty company and the Browns, and the unnamed German, were made. No reconveyance of the property was ever made by the realty company to plaintiff or defendant until during the trial, two years, and more, after the filing of the action. The lower court's finding in that regard is as follows:

> "Defendant at the time of the tender and receipt by him of the quitclaim deed, executed by plaintiff, did not state any objection to the form or substance of such tender, nor until at the trial, when the fact of the record of the deed to the Clarabelle Realty Company was raised. Plaintiff thereupon tendered to defendant a duly executed and acknowledged deed of said Clarabelle Realty Company, dated January 18, 1916, conveying to plaintiff the said record title, which defendant thereupon refused to accept."

[4] It thus appears from the evidence, and from the court's finding, that, when Rosenthal and wife quitclaimed to defendant and wife the property covered by the contract of sale, the quitclaim deed, so tendered, conveyed nothing to defendant. "A quitclaim deed * * * purports to convey and does convey, no more than the present interest of the grantor, and does not operate to pass an interest after acquired." Ann. Cas. 1913C, 368. Rosenthal had already conveyed to the Clarabelle Realty Company, by deed of record, all his interest and right in the property. His quitclaim deed to defendant, therefore, did not revest the defendant with the title to the property freed from the cloud created by the contract of sale. The right to whatever claim or demand might be asserted thereunder was legally vested in the realty company, at the time the action was commenced. The finding of the court last quoted, therefore, is contrary to, and inconsistent with, its earlier recital that the Clarabelle Realty Company had no right or title in the contract of sale, or possession of the land, when plaintiff offered it back to defendant, and the contract was released to him by the quitclaim deed of Rosenthal and wife, on December 30, 1914.

[5, 6] The contract of sale between plaintiff and defendant was a divisible and separable one. It was such a contract that full performance of one part might be made by both parties without affecting the subsequent performance, or right of performance, as to the remainder. The cash payment of $5,000, made by plaintiff to defendant upon the execution and delivery of the agreement of sale, was nothing more than "a general payment on the price of the tract as an entirety, required in order to provide a margin sufficient to safeguard the seller against loss, from the conveyance of one or more lots upon the subsequent payment" of the required amount per acre. San Diego Construction Co. v. Mannix, 175 Cal. 548, 166 Pac. 325. A reading of the plain terms of the contract forbids any other construction. The defendant was therefore right in his refusal to execute the deed for the 16⅔ acres of land, first demanded by the plaintiff on the occasion of the visit to Hayward on the evening of December 29th.

[7] The agreement was to convey the entire tract for the total sum of $30,000. Five thousand dollars was paid as the initial payment, the balance to be paid at any time, at the option of the plaintiff (the vendee), within four years, together with interest and taxes. At the time of the attempted rescission by plaintiff, and even at the date of the trial, the time of payment of the balance of the purchase price had not yet elapsed. There could not, therefore, have been any default as to the entire contract without the exercise by plaintiff of his option, and the tender or payment by him of the balance of the unpaid purchase price, interest, and taxes. There was not, therefore, any abandonment by defendant of the whole contract, but at most a refusal on his part to carry out that portion of the agreement which provided for the conveyance of a single acre, or more, on payment of $300 for each acre so conveyed. Plaintiff was therefore not entitled to recover any part of the initial payment of $5,000, which the lower court included in its judgment. San Diego Construction Co. v. Mannix, supra. In that respect, therefore, the judgment was erroneous.

[8] We are of the further opinion, also, that plaintiff was not entitled to any judgment. The lower court found that—

> "At all times plaintiff has performed each and every obligation agreed by him to be performed in and by the terms of the said agreement of sale."

This finding is not supported by the evidence. Plaintiff was by the terms of the contract required to pay the taxes on the property he agreed to purchase, from the date of June 30, 1913. The part sold to plaintiff was a part of the larger tract owned by defendant. When the taxes for the fiscal year 1913–14 were levied on the tract in question, they were included in the tax of the larger parcel. Plaintiff did not pay his proportionate share, and rather than have the tax go delinquent, with added penalties to pay, defendant paid the whole amount. It was not until much time elapsed, and considerable correspondence on behalf of defendant through his banker, that he was able to collect the amount from plaintiff. The following year the same procedure was followed by the county assessor in regard to the levy of the tax on the property in question. Defendant was again compelled to pay the tax on the property. At the time of the alleged rescission on December 30, 1914, plaintiff had not repaid his proportionate amount thereof to defendant. He never paid the amount, and never tendered or offered to pay it. Even if it be true, as found by the lower court, in that connection, on the sharply conflicting evidence, that, at the time of the settlement between the parties for the 1913–14 taxes paid by defendant, it was agreed between them "that on the succeeding year of 1914–15, said Silveira should pay the total taxes in similar manner, and that the parties should thereafter meet and arrive at a pro rata adjustment of the amount between themselves, and that, pursuant to said agreement, said Silveira paid the said total taxes for 1914–15, but said parties never met to apportion the amount to be paid by each, and that Silveira never requested repayment of the amount so paid by him," the fact remains that plaintiff, at the time he was seeking to put defendant in technical default in the matter, was indebted to him for the amount of the taxes so advanced. He never repaid or offered to repay the amount, and the court's finding in the matter does not present any legal or equitable ground for his refusing so to do.

In yet another particular the finding of the court, as to full performance of the contract by the plaintiff, is not sustained. As the contract did not provide when the semiannual payment of interest should be made, it was payable at the end of each semiannual rest. Plaintiff paid his interest in full to July 2, 1914. Consequently, when, on December 30th of that year, he served his notice of rescission and cancellation and the quitclaim deed, interest on the contract had accrued for the entire period of six months, less four days. When the action to recover the amount of the purchase price paid, and to rescind the contract, was commenced, the interest for the six months last preceding, amounting to the sum of $750, was due.

[9] Respondent seeks to avoid the issue of failure to pay, or tender the amount of the taxes, and interest, by reliance upon the fact that when he produced and tendered the $300 for the Atthol deed, defendant made no objection, either to the amount of the tender, or to the form of the offer, and that no objection was made to the quitclaim deed, or to the offer of rescission. As defendant very promptly returned the deed (although it was remailed to his attorney after suit brought), and as promptly made a counter demand for the payment of the unpaid taxes and interest, we are not impressed with plaintiff's argument. Under the agreement between plaintiff and defendant, neither could maintain an action thereon against the other without having performed all the conditions previously to be performed by him. Concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Harrison in Glock v. Howard, 123 Cal. 19, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17.

[10] We see nothing in the record of this case which will warrant us in holding that plaintiff was in any manner excused, or released, from the full performance of the obligations imposed on him by the terms of the severable contract of sale. The effort of plaintiff to rescind the contract just before the semiannual payment of interest became due, and after his pro rata of taxes was past due, coupled with his personal activity in securing from the Browns a release from their contract on which they had paid a considerable amount, and with which they do not appear to have been dissatisfied, taken in connection with all the facts and circumstances surrounding the attempt to secure the execution by the illiterate defendant of the two deeds on the evening of December 30th, followed, as it was, by the precipitous haste in tendering the quitclaim deed and the immediate filing of the action in rescission—all these matters are to us indicia that defendant's characterization of plaintiff's action was correct, and that he is not in court with hands so clean, or intention so far removed from guile, as to entitle him, on the showing made, to the judgment he has secured. We find nothing in the record indicating a rescission of the contract of sale by mutual consent of the parties, and the plaintiff has not shown equitable grounds entitling him to such right in equity. Glock v. Howard, supra.

Other matters are called to our attention on this appeal; but, in view of the conclusion reached, we do not deem them worthy of consideration.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

(181 Cal. 315)

PEOPLE v. TOM WOO et al. (Cr. 2247.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1160 — VERDICT WILL NOT BE SET ASIDE IF SUPPORTED BY SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

It is the function of the jury in the first instance, and of trial court after verdict, to determine what facts are established by the evidence, and before a verdict, which has been approved by the trial court, can be set aside on appeal, on the ground of insufficiency of evidence, it must clearly appear that there is no substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached.

2. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑562 — EVIDENCE MUST SHOW CRIME COMMITTED BY PERSONS CHARGED.

To sustain a conviction there must be proof that the offense charged was committed, and, second, that it was perpetrated by the person or persons accused.

3. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1159(2) — ASSUMPTIONS AS TO SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE ON APPEAL.

Where the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a conviction was attacked on appeal, the appellate court must assume in favor of the verdict the existence of every fact which the jury could have deduced from the evidence, and determine whether such facts are sufficient to support the verdict.

4. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑552(1), 554—EVIDENCE INSUFFICIENT TO SUSTAIN CONVICTION.

Neither mere opportunity to commit a crime nor perjured testimony are sufficient to support verdict of guilty; nor are false statements or suspicious circumstances sufficient.

5. HOMICIDE 🔑253(1) — EVIDENCE SUFFICIENT TO SUSTAIN CONVICTION OF MURDER IN FIRST DEGREE.

Evidence, when considered as a whole, held sufficient to sustain a conviction of murder in the first degree.

6. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑308—PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE IS DISPUTABLE AND MOTIVE TENDS TO OVERTHROW SAME.

There is a presumption of innocence in favor of the person accused of crime, but this presumption is disputable, and may be overcome by other evidence, and the presence of a motive is evidence of guilt tending to rebut the presumption, while the absence of a motive tends to support the presumption of innocence.

7. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑22—EVIDENCE OF MOTIVE NOT ESSENTIAL TO CONVICTION.

While the absence of a motive tends to support the presumption of innocence, proof of motive is not essential to convict of a crime, where the other evidence established its perpetration.

8. WITNESSES 🔑389—DEFENDANTS MAY BE IMPEACHED BY EVIDENCE OF EXTRAJUDICIAL STATEMENTS.

Where the testimony of defendants, who were charged with murder, as to their movements on the afternoon of the crime, was clearly contradictory of extrajudicial statements as to their movements imputed to them, and defendants on cross-examination neither admitted nor denied the statements, it was competent for the prosecution to impeach them by proof of such statements.

9. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑763, 764(13)—INSTRUCTION ON CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE NOT OBJECTIONABLE AS ON WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for homicide, where circumstantial evidence was relied on, an instruction that the evidence was legal and competent, and if of such character as to exclude every reasonable hypothesis other than guilt the jury should convict, is not objectionable, as tantamount to telling the jury that the evidence was sufficient.

10. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑763, 764(13) — INSTRUCTION ON CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE NOT OBJECTIONABLE AS URGING CONVICTION.

Where the evidence in a homicide case was circumstantial, instructions that because of conditions circumstantial evidence had to be relied upon, that the jury should examine the evidence, and that if the circumstances proved beyond a reasonable doubt led to a conclusion of guilt, and such conclusion pointed to guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, the jury should so find, notwithstanding that testimony of eyewitnesses might be more satisfactory, are not objectionable as exhorting the jury to convict and excusing the evidence.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; Ernest Weyand, Judge.

Tom Woo and Wong Gow were convicted of murder in the first degree, and from the judgment of conviction and order denying new trial they appeal. Affirmed.

W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, Frank Freeman, of Willows, and Seth Millington, of Colusa, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John H. Riordan and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Attys. Gen., and Alva King, of Colusa, for the People.

LAWLOR, J. The defendants were charged with the murder of one Ah Moy on August 29, 1917, near the town of Grimes, in Colusa county. They were jointly tried and convicted of murder in the first degree, with the punishment fixed at life imprisonment. A motion for a new trial was interposed and denied, whereupon the court pronounced judgment and sentence in accordance with the verdict. The appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying the motion for a new trial.

The judgment and order were reversed by the District Court of Appeal for the Third Appellate District, on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict. Mr. Presiding Justice Chipman delivered the opinion of the court, which was concurred in by Mr. Justice Hart, who filed a separate opinion. Mr. Justice Burnett, in a separate opinion, dissented. The Attorney General petitioned for a hearing herein, and it was granted, because we were not satisfied that the judgment and order should have been reversed. The opinion of the Presiding Justice fully and fairly states the evidence and we shall therefore adopt that portion thereof and make it a part of this opinion. It reads as follows:

"A public highway runs from the town of Colusa to the town of Grimes, about 13 miles southerly. About one mile north of Grimes, a byroad, called Morris lane, intersects this highway, coming in from the west. On August 29, 1917, between the hours of 5 and 6 o'clock p. m., deceased, Ah Moy, a Chinaman, was shot on his way from Grimes to the Morris ranch, where he had been working as cook for several years. It was his habit after the noonday meal to go to Grimes, about 3 miles distant, on his bicycle to spend the afternoon with his countrymen, returning in time to prepare the evening meal. His course took him along Morris lane, to and along the Colusa-Grimes highway, to the town of Grimes. All that was shown of his movements on the day of his death was that he left the Morris ranch about 1 o'clock p. m., and was found dead in the Morris lane shortly after 6 o'clock p. m., lying in the road about 200 yards from its intersection with said highway. Apparently he had been shot through the head while going west, and fell with his bicycle across the road. There was no evidence of any struggle, or indications of resistance on his part, or of personal conflict between him and his assailant, nor was there evidence indicating robbery. He had been shot, and apparently had fallen dead from his wheel, and lay where he had fallen without moving, as was testified to by Coroner McNary, who also testified that the wound was not probed and that there was no autopsy; that the course of the bullet was from a point above the left ear and out almost back of the right ear, but he could not say on which side of his head the bullet entered. He spoke of another wound on the left cheek bone, which he discovered after washing the face. This wound was not described, and it did not appear whether or not it was a gunshot wound. He also testified that the face was powder-burned, but he gave no description of the markings. The coroner swore in a jury on the spot from among the assembled neighbors, and after verdict rendered he put the body in a basket and took it to Colusa. This inquest was held at the scene of the homicide about the hour of 10, the night of August 29th.

"Wong Gow, one of the defendants, had lived in and around Colusa for many years. Tom Woo, the other defendant, had formerly lived in and around Oroville, and more recently, for some months, at Colusa. At the time of the homicide they had a lease of some broom corn land across the river from Colusa a mile or two distant. Their claim and their testimony was that about 1 o'clock of the 29th day of August they left the garage in Colusa in an automobile belonging to Tom Woo, and drove across the river on the Colusa bridge and spent the afternoon of that day on the east side of the river, returning to Colusa shortly before 6 o'clock; that they had supper about 6 p. m.; that Wong Gow went to Williams to hire help for harvesting their broom corn, and Tom Woo spent the evening reading the newspapers; that Wong Gow returned the next morning, and, learning that the sheriff wanted him, he went to the office of the latter and was there arrested. Tom Woo had been taken in custody at his sleeping room about 11 o'clock the night of August 29th and was in jail when Wong Gow returned from Williams.

"Witness Londsen testified that he sold to Tom Woo the automobile he was using; that he, the witness, on the evening of August 29th, had gone to the post office for his mail and some stamps 'and was talking to Mr. Kline'; that it was shortly before 6 o'clock and the post office closed at 6; that he saw Tom Woo driving the car into the garage at that time, and his recollection was that no one was with him in the car.

"Witness Kline testified that he was standing at the post office, 10 or 15 minutes before the office closed on August 29th, talking with Londsen, and saw Tom Woo driving his car into the garage; that he was acquainted with him, and had sold him the car through Londsen's agency.

"Two witnesses were called in rebuttal by the prosecution, who testified that the general reputation of Londsen in the community for truth, honesty, and integrity was bad.

"There was evidence, introduced by the prosecution, that defendants were seen and identified, both as to their persons and the automobile they were driving, at different points along the Colusa-Grimes highway and at different hours after 2 o'clock p. m. of August 29th. Some of the witnesses speak of a third man as one of the party in the automobile at some of the points where they were seen. This third man is not accounted for, and it is not shown that a third man was with the defendants when they arrived at Colusa. We will endeavor to present the evidence as shown by the record.

"Witness Charles Dunning was hauling hay in the vicinity and north of the Morris lane on the afternoon of August 29th. He testified to having seen the defendants and a third man about 2 o'clock 'in Gene Vann's field' near a grove of trees about a mile north of Morris lane. He testified that an Overland automobile was standing by the roadside near this grove. 'It was an old car—Overland car; the top was loose and shaken down some on the right-hand side.' He returned with a load of hay about 4 o'clock, and saw them again 'pretty near at the same place. One of them was in the machine, and the other was standing near the machine. They didn't seem to be doing anything in particular. There was a third man, who was in or near the grove at the time. I should judge I was about a quarter of a mile from them when I saw them first, and this last time I was about 20 feet from them.' After unloading his hay he returned, passing over the same road, and going after another load of hay. He testified that he saw the defendants sitting in the car in the county road not far from where he first saw them; this was, as he testified, 'about a quarter to 5'; he went on to the Cole place for another load of hay, and returned 'something after 5 o'clock—I don't know the exact time,' and he saw 'the car over in the Cole field, but didn't see the defendants'; it had been moved farther down the road, pretty near the corner that leads to Morris. He was asked to point on the map 'where they had moved down to.' The witness indicated a point he thought '150 yards from that corner. Q. And how long did they remain there in the neighborhood? A. I could not say. I observed them there about 5 or 10 minutes and saw no more of them. Q. Approximately what time was that? A. Something after 5 o'clock—I don't know the exact time.'

"Witness Mahan testified that he left Grimes in an automobile 15 minutes before 5 o'clock p. m., August 29th; that he passed an automobile standing in the Colusa-Grimes road about 300 yards north of the junction of the Morris lane; that he saw two men with the car, one of whom he afterwards identified as Wong Gow; that he was on the first seat, and the other man was working on the engine, whom he could not identify. He saw no third man. Neither of these witnesses had personally known or had ever seen either of the defendants. Both of them testified to having based their identification upon such notice as they took of them passing them on the highway.

"Witness Staap, on the 29th day of August, was residing in the town of Sycamore, which is about 6 miles north of Grimes and 5 miles north of the Morris lane. He testified that he saw the defendants and a third man in an automobile traveling past his residence on the Colusa-Grimes road between 12 and 2 o'clock of that day, in the afternoon, going toward Grimes, and that about 15 minutes before sunset he saw them passing on the road towards Colusa. The sun set on that day at 6:37 p. m. He testified that the automobile in which they were traveling was the same as the one he afterwards identified in the garage at Colusa, which belonged to Tom Woo, 'by the top being smashed in.' He testified that he was standing in his dooryard about 75 or 80 feet from the road; that he had never seen either of the parties before; that there was nothing to attract his attention to them particularly; that the third man was on the back seat, and the two defendants on the front seat; that it was not unusual to see automobiles passing; that the third man was dressed the same as the others, whose clothing he described. He was asked if he could not identify the third man, if he saw him again, as easily as he could the others, and answered he 'could not say as to that'; that the only way he had to identify the machine was by the top—'it was sagged down. Q. Is it not a fact that you have seen many machines about that time—that was similar—had similar tops? A. Yes.' He described the third man as being 'a little taller' than the other two and 'a little more broad-shouldered. Q. Well, isn't it a fact, if you met that man on the street now, you would not recognize him? A. Probably I would not. Q. You had just as good a look at him as at the other two? A. Yes, sir. * * * Q. When was it you made up your mind that they were the same ones in the automobile that day? What caused you to come to that conclusion? A. They looked like the same men that I saw in the car. * * * Is there not a greater similarity between two or three Chinamen than the same number of white men? A. Yes; I think so. Q. Now, Mr. Staap, is it not a fact that you heard of the killing of Ah Moy and remembered seeing three Chinamen pass by your place there twice and come up the road here, and you thought they were the ones in the machine? A. Yes, sir. Q. But at that time—at the preliminary and now—the best you can say would be that you noticed the similarity, and you think they were the same men? A. I think they were the men in the machine that I saw.'

"Witness Heryford testified that he was employed as a jitney driver and lived at Colusa; that on August 29th he left Colusa in a Ford machine about 6 o'clock p. m. 'going to the sugar camp this side of Grimes'; that he met defendants traveling in an Overland machine going north toward Colusa, defendant Wong Gow driving; that he had seen Tom Woo around town for the past six months and 'had seen him driving that machine before,' and that it was his machine, and is the same the sheriff took into custody, and is an exhibit in the case; that where he met defendants was about 3 miles north of Grimes; that there were three men in the machine, 'two on the front seat and one behind'; that he had known Wong Gow for two or three years. On cross-examination he testified that 'it must have been half past 6' when he met defendants, as he left Colusa about 6 and it took him about half an hour to reach the point where he met defendants; that they were traveling at 25 or 30 miles an hour, and he at about the same rate. His attention was called to his testimony at a former trial, at which time he testified that he recognized only one man, Tom Woo, and that two were in the rear seat. 'Q. Did you testify that way at that time? A. Yes, sir. Q. Was that correct? A. I guess it was. * * * Q. Why did you say this time you recognized two men in the machine, and say at the preliminary examination that you recognized one man? A. I forgot, I guess.'

"The foregoing comprises the direct testimony tending to establish the fact that defendants were in the vicinity where the homicide occurred during the afternoon of August 29th. It does not definitely appear at what time deceased met his death. Witness Morris, at whose ranch he worked, testified that he (witness) left his house at about the hour of 4 o'clock on August 29th, going by the Morris lane road; that he saw an automobile in the lane approaching him, but it turned around some distance from him, and proceeded down the lane to the Colusa-Grimes road and turned north; that there were three men in it, but he did not know whether they were Chinamen or white men; that he drove on in his automobile to Grimes, where he remained an hour or more, and about 5 o'clock left Grimes, returning to his home by the same road; that he saw an automobile up the Colusa road, beyond the junction of the Morris lane; it was not moving and there were three men with it; one had got out; the machine was faced north; he thought it might be the same he had seen before, but it was too far away to tell much about it; he went on home, and at 6 o'clock received notice by telephone of Ah Moy's death.

"Witness Simpkins, a laborer on the Morris ranch, left the ranch by automobile, as he testified, by the Morris lane road on his way to Colusa; that about 6 o'clock p. m. he found the body of the deceased in the Morris lane; he walked around the body, saw that the man was dead, and went to Grimes, and notified Morris, and telephoned the coroner at Colusa, went on to Colusa and returned with the coroner to where the body lay.

"Witness Beckley testified that on August 29th he was living at Grimes, 'about three-fourths of a mile in an arrow line from the junction of the Morris lane with the Grimes-Colusa road. On the 29th day of August, 1917, between a quarter to 6 o'clock and 6 o'clock p. m. I heard a couple of gunshots. I was walking, and I heard one shot, and then I took about one step, when I heard another. They were pretty close together. They sounded from up the Morris road.'

"The testimony is next addressed to certain facts and circumstances discovered at and near the place where the body was found. Soon after witness Simpkins discovered the body, it became known in the vicinity, and a number of neighbors came to the scene in automobiles. When Simpkins first was at the place and walked around the body, he saw no tracks that attracted his attention. Later, when he returned with the coroner, he testified, as did others, to a man's track traceable from the body to a point easterly towards the Colusa-Grimes road about '30 steps' distant from the body, and where an automobile coming into the Morris lane had turned around and gone back to the Colusa-Grimes road. These tracks were not traceable beyond where this turn was made, and there were no corresponding or other tracks traceable to the body. Some one of the numerous persons congregated there discovered these tracks and drew a circle around two or three of them to preserve their identity. Witnesses testified to following these tracks from the place where the body had lain to the point where an automobile had turned around, and that these tracks grew wider apart as they approached the automobile, the inference being that whoever made them quickened his footsteps after leaving the body.

"Sheriff Stanton took into his possession Tom Woo's automobile on the morning of August 30th. He testified that he took it to the scene of the homicide that morning and had it driven along the Morris lane near to the point where the automobile had turned, above referred to; he backed and made a turn as nearly parallel as he could with the tracks found in the road. He was asked how the two sets of tracks compared and answered, 'They are identical.' He also took three measurements of the footprints leading away from where the body of the deceased had lain—one of them a footprint that had 'been circled around,' and two not thus preserved. He found a stick by the roadside, and marked on it the length of the footprint and length and width of the heel. He later took from his feet the shoes Wong Gow was wearing. He was not permitted to answer the question as to how his measurements marked on the stick corresponded with the measurements of the shoes, but the broken pieces of the stick and the shoes were admitted as exhibits. On cross-examination he explained that the dust was an inch or two deep and 'was a dust that would leave a distinct track.' His method of procedure is thus described: 'Q. Then, when you measured the other tracks, you guessed as to whether they were the same or not? A. I measured them about the same, as I recall. I just got the length and width of them—as you have stated, I would have to guess at it, to a certain degree or extent; that is, by pushing it down and then getting it, by laying it where the impression was made. Q. Well, by finding the length of it and taking this here (indicating the stick) you got the first impression? A. Yes, sir. Q. And then laid it on top of the dust and guessed as to what would be the width of the heel of the track? A. Yes; you can get it correctly, if you have to guess. Yes, I guess I did. Q. Oh, did you say the dust, it was much deeper at the point where you made the first impression than the last? A. That would be a guess, too. Q. Now, then, you did the same way in getting the width of the heel? A. Yes, sir. Q. And the length of the heel? A. Yes, sir. Well, I don't know whether I did or not, but I presume—you see, I used my knife there in marking it (indicating a place on the stick). Q. After getting the length of the heel, you would set it down in measuring the full length of the shoe? A. I guess I did that. Q. But you don't recall now just what part of the performance you did do? A. No. Q. In other words, you guessed the best way you could? A. Yes, sir. Q. If dirt fell into the tracks, or if anything moved the dirt, you would still have to make a greater guess, as to length, or how much dirt fell in? A. It might be. Q. And that was true? A. I presume so. Q. It doesn't make very much difference in the width of the shoe to make a difference in the tracks, does it? A. No.' He testified that the footprints he measured were probably 15 steps—45 or 50 feet—from where the body had lain. 'Q. And all tracks between those two points were all obliterated? A. I didn't find any. Q. You were looking for them? A. Yes.' He testified that he did not take Tom Woo's shoes or measure them, 'because he didn't have any on when arrested.'

Referring to Wong Gow's shoes, he testified that he thought he measured them by the stick before he took them off his feet. 'Q. Well, after you took them off, did you take them down and fit them into the tracks? A. No. Q. Why? A. I didn't think it would be possible to get an accurate impression, from the tracks—that the tracks by that time would have been obliterated. Q. They were all right when you made the measurements? A. Yes; but there was a great deal of travel on the road there. It would be of no use. Q. Didn't you try to find out whether it would be of any use or not? A. No.'

"There was no evidence tending to show whence the person came who made these tracks; there were no tracks traceable from any point to the body. There was evidence that on the north side of the Morris lane at that point the weeds next to the fence and near the traveled part of the road were 2 or 3 feet high. We presume the purpose of this evidence was to show that a man might have concealed himself in this cover and have shot the deceased from that point. There was also evidence that the tracks of an automobile similar to those described by Sheriff Stanton were seen some distance west, where an automobile had apparently made a similar turn, as if having gone into and out of the Morris lane. There was evidence that the automobile tracks referred to by the sheriff could be traced easterly and to the junction with the Colusa-Grimes road, where they apparently turned north toward Colusa, but were then obliterated. Several persons witnessed the experiments made by Sheriff Stanton with Tom Woo's automobile. The witnesses did not agree as to the kind and condition of the tires on the machine making the tracks. Witness Ainger testified: 'The two front tires were plain tread, and the two rear tires non-skid.' Witness Clip was asked whether he noted the impressions or markings by the tires of the automobile making this turn. 'Q. What kind were they? A. The left tire had holes in the tire marking the road. Q. Was that the front or rear? A. Hind tire. Q. And how about the right hind tire? A. Well, it left a kind of flat mark—the same as a wagon, only had triangles on it. Q. How about the front tire? A. It was smooth tire.' Witness Miller testified that he noticed particularly the markings on the ground. 'Q. What were they? A. One was an old tire and the other a new. Q. Which was which? A. The left one was a new one and the right was an old one.' Witness Stanton thus described the tires which made the tracks: 'The two front tires were smooth tread; the right hind tire was a Savage grip tire, and was worn pretty smooth. The left hind wheel made a distinct tread; a track like it was practically a new tire.' Our attention has not been called to any description in the record of the tires on the Tom Woo car. It was made an exhibit, and the jury visited the garage where it had been kept. Sheriff Stanton testified that it was in the same condition as when taken into his possession."

[1] 1. The principal question on this appeal is whether the evidence is sufficient to justify the verdict against the appellants. It is the position of their counsel:

"That giving to the testimony introduced on behalf of the prosecution all the weight to which it can be in any way entitled, the case falls short of proving the guilt of the defendants to that degree of certainty which is required."

In passing upon this question we will not attempt to determine the weight of the evidence, but will decide only whether upon the face of the evidence it can be held that sufficient facts could not have been found by the jury to warrant the inference of guilt. For it is the function of the jury in the first instance, and of the trial court after verdict, to determine what facts are established by the evidence, and before the verdict of the jury, which has been approved by the trial court, can be set aside on appeal upon the ground we are discussing, it must be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached in the court below.

[2] The determination of a charge in a criminal case involves proof of two distinct propositions: First, that the offense charged was committed; and, second, that it was perpetrated by the person or persons accused thereof. In this case there can be no doubt of the first proposition, for it is clear that Ah Moy was the victim of a cold-blooded assassination, that the details were worked out beforehand, and that the plan was to strike him down as he, according to his daily habit, made his way along Morris lane to the ranch where he was employed to prepare the evening meal.

[3] Did these defendants commit or participate in the commission of the murder? What facts can we say the jury could have resolved from the evidence in order to justify the inference of guilt? We must assume in favor of the verdict the existence of every fact which the jury could have reasonably deduced from the evidence, and then determine whether such facts are sufficient to support the verdict.

[4, 5] Among the more important facts which we must regard as having been found by the jury are the following: That the appellants were seen by several witnesses loitering and waiting in the neighborhood of Morris lane for several hours during the afternoon of August 29th until a short time before the murder took place, and were seen by two witnesses driving along the highway in the Overland at the rate of 25 or 30 miles an hour towards Colusa shortly afterwards; that while on the highway the appellants tried to conceal their identity from the witness Dunning, who passed them four times during the afternoon; that the Overland which figures in the evidence was owned by the defendants, and that it was recognized at different times that afternoon in that vicinity by several witnesses; that the machine which the witness Morris saw about 4 o'clock in Morris lane and the one he observed on the highway at about 5 o'clock were identical, and although Morris' testimony was not definite, the jury upon the entire evidence may have decided that on each occasion it was occupied by appellants; that the turning back of the machine in Morris lane without any apparent reason could have been regarded by the jury as having been done to avoid meeting Morris, and that it was therefore a suspicious circumstance, as may also have been the incident of the automobile making two trips into Morris lane without continuing west either time beyond the spot where the murder was committed; that, since the record does not show what, if any, tests the jury may have made, in connection with the testimony of Sheriff Stanton and the shoes and measuring stick admitted in evidence, touching the footprints traceable from near where the dead body was found to the automobile tracks we would be going outside of our province if we held that the jury could not have found that they were made by Wong Gow, that the alibi was a fabrication, that the appellants gave perjured testimony, and that they suborned witnesses in the attempted corroboration of their alibi. Apart from the perjured testimony, the jury may have found additional support for the inference of guilt in the manner and conduct of the appellants on the witness stand.

It is insisted that the evidence, considered in the light most favorable to the prosecution, shows only two incriminating circumstances having any tendency whatever to connect the appellants with the murder—that they were seen loitering and waiting in the vicinity all afternoon, and that their alibi was fabricated. This position ignores other incriminating facts, which, as we have pointed out, the jury may have found—the attempt of the appellants to hide their identity, the automobile tracks in Morris lane, showing that the car had been driven in there twice, the footprints, the turning back of the machine at the approach of Morris, and being seen on the highway in the automobile going toward Colusa after the murder.

In our opinion the facts which we have indicated could have been found by the jury are sufficient to sustain the verdict. It is the law that neither mere opportunity to commit a crime nor perjured testimony is sufficient to support a verdict of guilty. Nor are false statements nor suspicious circumstances sufficient. It may be conceded that no one of the facts summarized would, if standing alone, be sufficient to uphold the verdict; but, when all the circumstances which the jury may have resolved from the evidence are considered together, it cannot be held on appeal that they are not sufficient to warrant an inference of guilt.

[6, 7] Appellants contend that the evidence is insufficient, particularly because of the absence of proof of motive. It is true the prosecution did not offer such proof. But, as has been declared in many cases, it is not necessary to establish a motive for the perpetration of an offense. A presumption of innocence arises in favor of a person accused of crime. This presumption is disputable, and may be overcome by other evidence. The presence of a motive is evidence tending to prove guilt, for the reason that its tendency is to rebut the presumption of innocence. On the other hand, absence of motive tends to support the presumption of innocence. But the presence or absence of motive is essentially a question of fact, and, like any other fact, is not necessary to be proved, if the crime can otherwise be established by sufficient competent evidence. So, in this case, the absence of proof of motive is a fact to be reckoned on the side of innocence; but, if the proof of guilt is nevertheless sufficient to overthrow the presumption of innocence, the appellants must stand convicted, notwithstanding no motive has been shown.

It is proper to state that in some instances the proof was not complete. For instance, the court did not allow Sheriff Stanton to testify as to whether the shoes of Wong Gow corresponded in size to the measurements of the footprints as they were shown on the stick; the coroner testified that there were powder marks on Ah Moy's face, but the point was not pursued further; and, assuming that the footprints of Wong Gow were traced from the place where Ah Moy was killed to the automobile tracks, it was not shown that there were any footprints leading to the dead body. But, in spite of these discrepancies in the proof, we think the jury nevertheless could have found sufficient facts to be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the appellants were guilty of the murder.

The part which the unidentified third man played in the proceedings that afternoon remains a mystery, and we shall not consider whether he was implicated in the crime, or what effect, if any, the evidence on this point may have had on the jury in reaching the verdict.

[8] 2. It is urged that the court erred in allowing the prosecution to impeach the testimony of the appellants over their objection. They testified on direct examination that they left Colusa at about 1 o'clock, and went to the Jap camp, and remained there until about 6 o'clock. On cross-examination, Tom Woo was asked if he did not, on the evening of the 29th of August, after he was arrested and lodged in the county jail, in a conversation with Deputy Sheriff Crayton, no one else being present, state to Mr. Crayton that he (Tom Woo) went to the garage at about 15 minutes to 12 on that day and tried to get his car; that Mr. Martin was working on the car, and that he fixed it up so it would run, "and you left the garage at about 30 minutes past 12 o'clock, and got to the Jap camp at 1 o'clock? Did you make that statement?" To which question the defendant answered: "I could not remember; maybe

I did." Mr. King, the assistant district attorney, asked of the defendant the further question: "Do you remember, in the fore part of September, a few days after you were arrested, there at the county jail, of having a conversation with Mr. Scoggins, Mr. Crayton, and myself? * * * Do you remember having a conversation with those parties named and yourself?" To which he replied: "Yes, sir; I did." Mr. King then asked the further question: "I will ask you, in the fore part of September, where you were detained in the county jail, yourself, Mr. Scoggins, Mr. Stanton, and myself being present, on that occasion and that place, if in the conversation that occurred there, you didn't state that on the 29th day of August you left Colusa and went to the Jap camp, saw Fuyikawa, and had a talk with him with regard to cutting corn? That you went out in the corn field, and had a talk with him in regard to cutting corn at that time? Did you make that statement then and there, at that time?" To which he replied: "Maybe I did." He was then asked: "If you made that statement, was it true?" And he answered: "I could not say; maybe I did, and maybe I didn't. Of course I don't remember now." Again he was asked: "If you made that statement at that time and place, was that statement true or false?" To which he answered: "I could not say." After the defense rested, Sheriff Stanton and the deputy sheriff testified, over the objection of the appellants, that the statements embraced in the foundation testimony were made by Tom Woo. The point to the objection was that Tom Woo had not as a matter of fact denied on cross-examination that he made the statement; that there was in fact no material inconsistency between the statements sought to be proved and the testimony of the appellants at the trial.

Questions of similar import were put to Wong Gow on cross-examination, with substantially the same result; the witness answering four or five times, "I don't remember," and in one instance saying, "Maybe I did." This was supplemented by a statement: "I was in jail. I was all mixed up." Testimony tending to impeach Wong Gow was allowed over similar objections.

The testimony of the defendants as to their movements that afternoon was clearly contradictory of the extrajudicial statements imputed to them. The inquiry was therefore material, and since it is plain from the record that the statements were neither admitted nor denied, the prosecution was entitled to impeach the appellants. 7 Ency. of Evidence, 71.

[9] 3. Appellants complain that the use of the words "legal and competent," as they appear in the following sentence taken from instruction I, is objectionable:

> "And I will say to you that the evidence which has been received in this case is legal and competent, and if it is, in your mind, of such a character as to exclude every reasonable theory or hypothesis other than that of defendants' guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, then and in that event it should be given the same weight by you as would direct evidence of the fact alleged."

The position of appellants is thus stated:

> "Theoretically, of course, the statement might be defended; but when addressed to a jury of laymen it is trenching upon questions of fact. The mere admission of the testimony in evidence stamps it as competent and legal from a legal standpoint. Then why turn to the jury, and tell them that this flimsy unsubstantial thing called 'circumstantial evidence' as it appears in this case, was 'legal and competent'? To the ordinary jury this was tantamount to saying 'this evidence is sufficient' and you can't get away from it."

We do not think the words "legal and competent" in the sense in which they are employed are objectionable, and clearly they carry no intimation to the jury that the court deemed the evidence, because it was "legal and competent," sufficient to convict. The point to the instruction is that the evidence, circumstantial in its nature, being "legal and competent," that is to say, proper evidence for the jury to consider, if found by the jury to be sufficient "to exclude every reasonable theory or hypothesis other than that of the defendants' guilt beyond a reasonable doubt," it should be accepted and acted upon just as if it were direct evidence having the same probative effect.

[10] It is contended that instructions II, III, and IV are objectionable, in that "they read more like an exhortation, a plea excusing the evidence, and quite nearly beseeching a verdict against the defendants." This criticism is entirely without foundation. Instruction II, after stating that all the evidence was circumstantial, proceeds to explain why, because of the conditions under which crimes are sometimes committed, circumstantial evidence must be relied upon. In instruction III the court directs the jury to carefully examine the evidence, and determine what circumstances have been proved to their satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt, and then to consider what conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendants should be drawn therefrom, and if such conclusion point to guilt beyond a reasonable doubt they should so find, "notwithstanding the fact that you might be more fully satisfied if you had the testimony of eyewitnesses." The court further instructed the jury that in cases supported by circumstantial evidence, either in whole or in part, as in cases supported by direct testimony, the jury are required only to be satisfied as to guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Instruction IV is of the same general tenor as the other instructions treating of circumstantial and direct evidence. We think none of them is open to the objections made by appellants.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

MacDERMOT et al. v. GRANT. (S. F. 8420.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 3, 1919. Rehearing Denied Oct. 28, 1919.)

1. Dismissal and nonsuit 🔑7(1)—Motion to dismiss after signing of findings and judgment, but before filing, granted.

An attempted dismissal of the action by three of the plaintiffs, so far as they were concerned, after the findings and judgment had been signed, but before they had been filed, cannot be given effect under any of the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 581, 581a, 581b, authorizing dismissal.

2. Dismissal and nonsuit 🔑7(2)—On trial by court case submitted when taken under advisement.

A case is submitted after the court trying the case without a jury has taken it under advisement at the close of the evidence and argument.

3. Dismissal and nonsuit 🔑16—Consent to dismissal ineffective unless signed by attorney of assenting party.

The written consent to dismissal of the action by plaintiff, referred to in Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 2, is wholly ineffective unless signed by the attorney of record of the consenting party.

4. Dismissal and nonsuit 🔑15—In discretion of trial court to order dismissal.

It is within the discretion of the trial court to order a dismissal in certain cases not expressly indicated in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 581, 581a, and 581b.

5. Dismissal and nonsuit 🔑15—Judgment for one plaintiff after motion by others for dismissal.

In an action on a note, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in giving judgment for the whole sum in favor of a plaintiff despite the attempted dismissal of the action by three plaintiffs, so far as they were concerned, after the findings and judgment had been signed, because the note had been satisfied as to their interests; no legal showing thereof being made.

6. Judgment 🔑18(1)—Duty of court on informal suggestion of partial satisfaction of note in suit.

On a purely informal suggestion of partial satisfaction of the note in suit, the trial court was not bound on its own motion to direct some sort of an accounting between a plaintiff and defendant as virtual assignee of the rights of other plaintiffs, and to enter judgment against defendant only for the amount due the particular plaintiff who had not been paid.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by Louis M. MacDermot and others, substituted as parties plaintiff for Louis M. MacDermot and another, as administrator and administratrix of the estate of Flora B. MacDermot, deceased, against William Grant. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Henry Ach and Henry E. Monroe, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Goodfellow, Eells, Moore & Orrick, of San Francisco, and Schwartz & Powell and Ostrander, Clark & Carey, all of Oakland, for respondents.

LENNON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for the plaintiffs following a trial without a jury in an action on a promissory note owned in common by the plaintiffs Louis MacDermot, Flora Proctor, Mary Crawford, and Alfred MacDermot. The three plaintiffs last named attempted to dismiss the action, so far as they were concerned, after the findings and judgment had been signed but before they had been filed. It is the contention of appellant that the court erred in entering judgment in favor of all of the plaintiffs. The judgment was affirmed by the First Division of the District Court of Appeal for the First Appellate District, Mr. Presiding Justice Waste writing the opinion. The affirmance was correct.

[1] The purported dismissal cannot be given effect under any of the provisions of the Code which expressly authorize a dismissal. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 581, 581a, and 581b. The circumstances here presented clearly exclude the application of any of the provisions of the Code sections in question other than those contained in subdivisions 1, 2, and 4 of section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[2] Subdivision 1 authorizes a dismissal by the plaintiff at any time before the trial. The purported dismissal filed herein was not filed before trial. It is true that in construing a similar section of the Practice Act an early decision defined "trial" as meaning the determination or finding in the case. Hancock Ditch Co. v. Bradford, 13 Cal. 637. It is evident, however, from the concluding portion of the opinion in that case that the court construed the words "before trial" as meaning "before submission," and this is the sense in which they have been construed in subsequent cases. Heinlin v. Castro, 22 Cal. 100, 102; Casey v. Jordan, 68 Cal. 246, 247, 9 Pac. 92, 305; Westbay v. Gray, 116 Cal. 660, 48 Pac. 800; Goldtree v. Spreckels, 135 Cal. 666, 67 Pac. 1091. A case is submitted after the court, trying the case without a jury, has taken the case under advisement, at the close of the evidence and argument. Ætna, etc., Ins. Co. v. Hamilton County, 79 Fed. 575, 25 C. C. A. 94; Warner v. Warner, 83 Kan. 548, 112 Pac. 97; Lawyers', etc., Pub. Co. v. Gordon, 173 Mo. 139, 73 S. W. 155; St. Louis Board of Education v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., 155 Mo. App. 109, 134 S. W. 18.

[3] Under the provisions of subdivision 2, an action may be dismissed by either party upon the written consent of the other. Conceding that an action may be thus dismissed at any time before judgment, the fact remains that in the case at bar no effective written consent on the part of appellant to the attempted dismissal by Flora Proctor, Mary Crawford, and Alfred MacDermot was ever filed. It is true that a stipulation was filed consenting to the dismissal and signed by appellant personally and that oral consent was given by appellant's attorney, who was not, however, his attorney of record. But it is well settled that the written consent referred to in the Code provision now under consideration is wholly ineffective unless it is signed by the attorney of record of the consenting party. Commissioners v. Younger, 29 Cal. 149, 87 Am. Dec. 164, quoted with approval in Boca, etc., Co. v. Superior Court, 150 Cal. 153, 156, 88 Pac. 718.

Subdivision 4 provides for dismissal by the court where the plaintiff abandons the case before final submission. It is unnecessary to discuss the object and scope of this provision, for the reason that the attempted abandonment of the case by the three above-named plaintiffs was, as already noted, made after the final submission of the case.

[4, 5] It is true that it is within the discretion of the trial court to order a dismissal in certain cases not expressly indicated in the Code. Romero v. Snyder, 167 Cal. 216, 138 Pac. 1002; Johnston v. Baker, 167 Cal. 260, 139 Pac. 86. Assuming, without undertaking to decide the point, that, had there been any showing in any proper legal manner, as, for example, by affidavit, that the note had been satisfied as to the interests of the three plaintiffs who sought to dismiss the action, the court might in its discretion have ordered a dismissal, nevertheless the fact remains that no such showing was made. Under these circumstances, it cannot be held that the court abused whatever discretion it may have had in the matter in giving judgment for the whole sum in favor of all of the plaintiffs.

[6] Appellant contends, however, that the attempted dismissal at least placed before the court "evidence" showing that the obligation of appellant had been altered subsequent to the submission of the case, and that it was therefore error for the court to enter judgment solely upon consideration of the evidence received at the trial. The case, however, was not opened to receive evidence at any time subsequent to its submission, and the judgment is not in any sense against the evidence. What appellant really means is, apparently, that, upon the purely informal suggestion of partial satisfaction, the court was bound on its own motion to direct some sort of an accounting between Louis MacDermot and appellant as a virtual assignee of the rights of the other plaintiffs and to enter judgment against appellant only for the amount due to Louis MacDermot. This it was clearly not the duty of the court to do.

Appellant may now make a motion for the entry of partial satisfaction of the judgment, making all of the plaintiffs in the original action parties to the proceeding in order that the fact of his release by the three plaintiffs who sought a dismissal may be determined and in order that the extent of the interest of Louis MacDermot in the note and judgment may be ascertained.

CITY OF MADERA v. BLACK. (Sac. 2659.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1082(2) — IRREGULARITY IN REMOVING CAUSE TO SUPERIOR COURT CANNOT BE FIRST RAISED ON FURTHER APPEAL.

Where the parties appear in the superior court and submit the case without objecting that the court is without jurisdiction because of the irregular manner in which it reached the court from the recorder's court, by appeal instead of certification under Code Civ. Proc. § 838, on appeal subsequently taken to it the Supreme Court will consider the objection of lack of jurisdiction to have been waived so far as possible, and will treat the case as if begun in the superior court, and the parties had appeared without process and submitted the cause on merits.

2. TAXATION 🔑1 — "TAX" INCLUDES EVERY CHARGE ON PERSON OR PROPERTY IMPOSED BY LAW.

A "tax," in the general sense, includes every charge upon persons and property imposed by or under the authority of the Legislature for public purposes.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Tax.]

3. TAXATION 🔑1—"IMPOST" DEFINED.

The word "impost," in its broader sense, means any tax or tribute imposed by authority, and applies as well to a tax on persons as a tax on property.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Imposts.]

4. Courts 🔑125—Sewerage charge a tax, impost, and toll within jurisdiction of superior court.

Sewerage rate or charge levied by ordinance of the city of Madera for use of sewers held a tax, impost, or toll within Const. art. 6, § 5, providing the superior court shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of any case involving the legality of such a charge; a "toll" being a sum of money for the use of something, generally applied to the consideration which is paid for the use of a road, bridge, or the like of a public nature.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Toll.]

5. Courts 🔑487(8) — Recorder's court should certify action to recover sewer tax to superior court.

In an action by the city of Madera in the recorder's court to recover from a sewer user a charge, levied upon him by ordinance, constituting a tax, impost, and toll within Const. art. 6, § 5, providing the superior court shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of a case involving the legality of any such charge, it appearing from the answer that the legality of the charge was involved, the recorder should have certified the papers and transferred the cause to the superior court.

6. Courts 🔑190(½)—Superior court properly assumed jurisdiction of sewerage tax case on appeal from recorder's court.

Where the particular objection that the superior court had no original jurisdiction of the case appealed from the recorder's court was not made when the case reached the superior court, and the case was within its jurisdiction, the superior court properly took jurisdiction and proceeded to determine the case on its merits.

7. Municipal corporations 🔑58 — Language defining powers to be strictly construed.

Language purporting to define the powers of a municipal corporation is to be strictly construed, and any fair, reasonable doubt concerning the existence of a power is to be resolved by the courts against the corporation.

8. Municipal corporations 🔑712—City of sixth class without power to tax sewer users for extension of plant.

A city of the sixth class is without power to lay taxes or tolls on those who may use its sewerage system in order to obtain money to build sewers in other streets for the special benefit of other property owners.

9. Evidence 🔑83(2) — Presumptions that officers intend necessary consequences of official acts.

Persons, even when acting officially, are presumed to intend the necessary consequences of their acts, especially if such consequences are known to them beforehand, so that it must be presumed that the higher rates for use of sewers were imposed by city officials on property owners to accumulate a fund for the general benefit of the city, and thereby enable them to assess a lower rate of tax for general purposes.

10. Municipal corporations 🔑712 — Charge for use of sewer excessive.

Monthly charge of a dollar per dwelling house, with penalty of $10 for failure to pay a charge, imposed by a city of the sixth class for the use of its sewerage system by property owners, held excessive and unreasonable; it having been intended to result in accumulation of a fund for the general benefit of the city enabling it to fix a lower general tax rate.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by the City of Madera against Alex Black. From judgment for plaintiff defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. J. Coghlan, of Madera, for appellant.

F. A. Fee, of Madera, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Madera is a city of the sixth class. In the year 1909 it acquired, and it has ever since maintained, a system of sewers extending through certain of its public streets. Its ordinances required that all dwelling houses situated on lots abutting on a sewered street should be connected with such sewer, and forbade the disposal of sewage in any other manner. The defendant then owned and ever since has owned and occupied a dwelling house on one of said streets, and in compliance with the ordinance he put in the sewer connections and has ever since used the sewer to carry the sewage from his house.

In February, 1914, the city duly adopted an ordinance imposing a "monthly sewage rate or charge for the use of and connection with the sewer;" the rate for each dwelling house occupied by a single family being $1 payable in advance on the first day of each month. On May 16, 1916, it duly adopted another ordinance, the same as the former one, except that it provided that the charge should be deemed a debt due to the city from the persons whose duty it was to pay the same, collectible in a civil action by the city, and that for a failure to pay the charge when due the additional sum of $10 should be added to the charge, as a penalty for the delinquency. The defendant failed to pay the charge for 13 months in succession, beginning June 1, 1915, and ending June 30, 1916.

This action was begun on June 26, 1916, in the recorder's court of Madera, to recover the sum of $13 for the sewer rates or charges due for said 13 months, and $10 for the penalty imposed by the last-mentioned ordinance for the delinquency for June, 1916. The complaint alleged the facts as above stated and set forth said ordinances in full. The defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that the case involved the possession of real property and the legality of a tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, and, consequently, that it fell within the exclusive jurisdiction of the superior court, and the recorder's court was without jurisdiction thereof, under the provisions of the Constitution. Const. art. 6, § 5.

The demurrer was overruled and the defendant filed an elaborate answer, duly verified in which he denied the validity of the said ordinances and of the rates or charges attempted to be imposed thereby, and alleged facts tending to show that the said rates or charges were not reasonable, but were extravagant and exorbitant and were imposed for the purpose of raising revenue to defray the general expenses of the city government. The case was tried and judgment was given for the defendant in the recorder's court. From that judgment the plaintiff appealed to the superior court, where the cause was tried again, resulting in a judgment for the plaintiff in the sum of $13. The defendant appeals from the latter judgment.

Both in the recorder's court and in the superior court the parties agreed upon the facts. In the superior court the agreed statement used in the recorder's court was accepted as true for the purposes of the trial in the superior court and by stipulation the case was submitted thereon, "saving and excepting to each party herein, respectively, all of his or its objections, exceptions and remedies as to questions of law." It does not appear anywhere in the record that in the superior court either party made the specific objection that the superior court was itself without jurisdiction because of the fact that the case had come to it for determination by the process of appeal, instead of by the process of certification by the recorder, as provided by section 838 of the Code of Civil Procedure in cases where it appears by the verified answer of the defendant that the determination of the action will necessarily involve the legality of a tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, or the possession of real property. Upon filing the verified answer in the recorder's court, the defendant there demanded that the case be certified to the superior court as provided in that section, but the demand was refused.

[1] Where, in such a case, the parties appear in the superior court and there submit the case to its determination on the merits, without there making the objection that the superior court is without jurisdiction of the action, because of the aforesaid irregular manner in which it has reached that court, and an appeal is thereafter taken to this court from the judgment given in the superior court, this court will consider the particular objection above noted to have been waived, so far as it is possible for the parties to waive it, and will treat the case as if it had been originally commenced in the superior court and the parties had appeared without process and submitted the cause for decision on the merits. Santa Barbara v. Eldred, 95 Cal. 381, 30 Pac. 562; Hart v. Carnall, etc., Co., 103 Cal. 140, 37 Pac. 196; De Jarnatt v. Marquez, 132 Cal. 700, 64 Pac. 1090. The result in this case is that if we find that the action was of a character originally cognizable exclusively in the superior court, we will consider the appeal on the merits, as if it had been begun in that court; but if we find that it was an action of which the superior court had not original jurisdiction, and consequently one in which an appeal would not lie to the Supreme Court or to the District Court of Appeal, we will dismiss the appeal on the ground that we have no jurisdiction of such attempted appeal. The respondent moves to dismiss the appeal on that ground.

It follows that the first question for our consideration is the one of jurisdiction; that is to say, the question whether the recorder's court or the superior court is the court having original jurisdiction of the case. If we consider that the determination of the case did involve the legality of a tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, or the possession of real property, we will not dismiss the appeal, but will inquire further whether or not the decision of the superior court was correct, and whether the tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, as the case may be, is valid; if we conclude that such legality or possession was not involved, we must dismiss the appeal.

The findings in the superior court state other facts material to the argument of the respondent. In 1908 a private corporation, the Madera Sewerage Company, owned a system of sewers extending over a part of the public streets of the city. The city determined to acquire and construct a sewer system to be operated by the city itself. In pursuance of this plan it issued and sold city bonds amounting to $25,000. In 1909, with the proceeds thereof it purchased the sewer system of the Madera Sewerage Company for $18,000 and with the remainder constructed the required extensions. In November, 1909, it adopted an ordinance imposing monthly charges for the use of and connection with said sewers, upon all persons having property so connected, including the plaintiff as aforesaid; the charges being substantially the same as those fixed in the later ordinances above mentioned. Ever since 1909 it has collected the charges so imposed and placed the money in its treasury to the credit of the fund called the "Sewer Fund." The total amount so received from November, 1909, to July 20, 1916, was $40,734.92. Of this money $21,775 has been transferred to the general fund of the city and expended for general purposes; $8,910 has been transferred to a fund designated as the "Water Fund" and used for the purposes for which that fund was created; and $1,234.37 has been transferred to the "Sewer Bond Redemption and Interest Fund," in which is kept the money raised by general taxes levied as required by law to pay the interest and principal of the bonds aforesaid. The remainder, $8,615.55, has been expended in some manner not specified in the record. It may have been expended for expenses of operating and maintaining the sewer. It also appears that the receipts from sewer rates amounted to $7,253.90 for the year ending June 30, 1915, and to $7,277.85 for the year ending June 30, 1916.

[2-4] A "tax," in the general sense of the word, includes every charge upon persons or property, imposed by or under the authority of the Legislature, for public purposes. Perry v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 350; People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 454. The word "impost," in its broader sense, means "any tax or tribute imposed by authority, and applies as well to a tax on persons as to a tax on merchandise." Smith v. Turner (Passenger Cases) 48 U. S. (7 How.) at page 407, 12 L. Ed. 702. A "toll" is a "sum of money for the use of something, generally applied to the consideration which is paid for the use of a road, bridge, or the like, of a public nature." Bouvier's Dictionary, tit. Toll. The money for which the plaintiff sued was a charge upon persons; it was imposed by the legislative authority of the city of Madera for public purposes, and under these definitions it was a tax; also, it was a tribute or contribution required by legislative authority and to be used for public purposes, and so comes within the definition of the word "impost." It may also be considered as a charge made for the use of the sewer constructed and acquired by the city. If so, it would come within the definition of a toll as fully as would the charge for the use of a public street or road. Such tolls are imposed by or under the sanction of public authority. In this case the charge was directly imposed by the ordinance, and, if it is a toll, it comes within the constitutional provision.

[5, 6] The general purpose of that provision obviously is to give to the sovereign power of the state, whether exercised generally or locally, the protection of having the legality of any exaction of money for public uses or needs cognizable in the first instance in the superior courts alone. In view of this purpose, it is apparent that the words used should be applied in their broadest sense with respect to moneys raised for public purposes or needs. The conclusion necessarily follows that the particular charge here involved comes within the constitutional provision and that any case in which the legality of such a charge is involved is within the exclusive original jurisdiction of the superior court. Upon the filing of the answer it fully appeared that the legality of the charge was involved in the action. The recorder should thereupon have certified the papers and transferred the cause to the superior court. As we have said, the particular objection that the superior court had no jurisdiction was not made when the case reached that court, and, as the case was within its original jurisdiction, the superior court properly took jurisdiction and proceeded to determine the case on its merits. The result is that the motion to dismiss the appeal to this court was not well taken and the same is hereby denied. We find it unnecessary, in this connection, to consider the meaning of the term "municipal fine" as used in the constitutional provision. We proceed to the question whether or not the charge was lawful and valid.

The respondent's main argument is that the charge is not made against property and is not a sum exacted as payment of a license fee for any privilege or right given to the occupants of houses along the sewer, but that it is an ordinary debt owed by the defendant to the plaintiff for services performed by plaintiff for the defendant in carrying away sewage from his premises. There can be no doubt that it is not a charge levied upon property as such. None of the successive ordinances imposing the charge purport to make the same a lien upon property of any description. The respondent cites In re Zhizhuzza, 147 Cal. 328, 81 Pac. 955, in which this court held that an ordinance of the city of Oakland providing that no one should collect garbage from the residents of the city except the city itself, and fixing a sum per month which the residents were required to pay for the services of the city in collecting such garbage, was a valid police regulation for the protection of the public health, which the city, under its charter and under section 11, art. 11, of the Constitution, had the power to make. The ordinance was attacked by the persons who had previously collected garbage from the residents under private contracts. The question whether the charges imposed were in the nature of taxes, imposts, or tolls was not presented or decided. We do not perceive that this case has any bearing upon the question here presented. It does not appear that the ordinance prohibited the residents from themselves carrying away the garbage from their respective residences. Their rights and views concerning the nature of the charge were not involved.

[7] If the argument of the respondent that it is a debt is tenable, it must be upon the theory that the city, in its proprietary capacity, is the owner of the sewer and that it was operating the same in that capacity. This necessarily assumes that the city, by its organic law, was authorized to construct and operate sewers in its proprietary capacity for profit or otherwise, as a private person might do. It is the settled law of this state and the general rule everywhere that—

> "Language purporting to define the powers of a municipal corporation is to be strictly construed, and that any 'fair, reasonable doubt concerning the existence of the power is resolved by the courts against the corporation, and the power is denied.'" 1 Dillon on Municipal Corporations, § 89.

It is declared "as a 'general and undisputed proposition of law,' * * * that 'a municipal corporation possesses and can exercise the following powers and no others: (1) Those granted in express words; (2) those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted; and (3) those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation—not simply convenient, but indispensable." Oro Electric Corp. v. Railroad Commission, 169 Cal. 477, 147 Pac. 122. The court in that case cited Von Schmidt v. Widber, 105 Cal. 151, 38 Pac. 682, and Hyatt v. Williams, 148 Cal. 585, 84 Pac. 41, both of which fully sustain the quotations above made. Similar expressions are found in San Christina, etc., Co. v. San Francisco, 167 Cal. 771, 141 Pac. 384, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 676, Connelly v. San Francisco, 164 Cal. 105, 127 Pac. 834, Redondo Beach v. Cate, 136 Cal. 146, 68 Pac. 586, and Low v. Marysville, 5 Cal. 214.

[8-10] Madera being a city of the sixth class, its powers are defined solely by our statutes. Among those powers we find none authorizing it to acquire, construct, or operate sewers in its proprietary capacity for the purpose of obtaining revenue or profit therefrom. It is given power "to construct, establish, and maintain drains and sewers." Deering's General Laws, p. 1122, § 862, subd. 5. It is also given the power to levy and collect street poll taxes. Id. subd. 7. But this is probably forbidden by section 12, art. 13, of the Constitution, as amended in 1914. It has power to impose dog taxes and ordinary property taxes assessed upon a valuation in the usual manner, and also to license for revenue and regulation of all kinds of business carried on in the city and fix and collect the rates of license tax thereon. Id. subds. 8, 9, 10. It has been held that the power to construct and maintain sewers is possessed by cities, although not expressly conferred by any charter or statute, "as incident to the general and express power to construct and maintain streets." Kramer v. Los Angeles, 147 Cal. 674, 82 Pac. 334; Harter v. Barkley, 158 Cal. 745, 112 Pac. 556. But it is obvious that the power to construct and maintain sewers does not include authority to raise revenue for general purposes by means of a toll or tax for the privilege or right to use the sewer for the purposes for which it was constructed. Such means of raising revenue is so unusual and extraordinary that it cannot be implied from the general grant of power to lay and maintain sewers. In Harter v. Barkley, supra, the court decided that the power to lay and maintain sewers included authority, as incidental thereto, to impose a charge for the privilege of connecting a house with the sewer. It may be that the power to maintain a sewer may carry by implication the additional power to levy a monthly charge to raise money for the repairs and upkeep of such sewer. But the rates here imposed upon the sewer users were obviously for purposes additional to that of paying the expenses of repairs and maintenance. The facts found by the court show this conclusively. Substantially, the same sewer rates have been collected by the city continuously ever since the year 1909. The sum of $40,734.92 has been raised in this manner. More than three-fourths of this sum has been transferred to other funds and used for purposes other than repairs to the sewers and expenses of their maintenance. More than half of it has been paid out for the general expenses of the city government. It is not even made expressly to appear that any of it has been devoted to sewer repairs or maintenance. If any was used for extensions to the sewer system, such use was unlawful, for it cannot be doubted that the city has no power to lay taxes or tolls on those who may use the sewer, in order to obtain money to build sewers in other streets for the special benefit of other persons. The payment of the principal and interest of the bonds issued as aforesaid is to be paid out of money raised by a general tax upon property, as provided in the act authorizing their issuance. Stats. 1901, p. 27, § 7; Stats. 1907, p. 611, § 3. No money raised by sewer rates would be necessary to pay these bonds, or could lawfully be used in that manner. The city trustees must therefore be deemed to have known, long before the sewer rate ordinances of 1914 and 1916, respectively, were adopted, that the rates established were far in excess of the needs for repairs and maintenance. Persons, even when acting officially, are presumed to intend the necessary consequences of their acts, especially if such consequences are known to them beforehand. It must therefore be presumed that the high rates were imposed in order to bring about the known and inevitable result; that is, the accumulation of a fund for the general benefit of the city and thereby enable it to fix a lower rate of taxes for general purposes. That the courts may make such inquiry, see Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 239, 25 Sup. Ct. 18, 49 L. Ed. 169. This would be an unjust discrimination and an unfair burden upon those who used the sewer, and it is clearly beyond any power possessed by the city. It follows that the charges were excessive and unreasonable. They were imposed upon the persons concerned without their consent, and payment was practically compelled by means of penal ordinances authorizing the city officials to remove the sewer connection from any house if the rates were not paid therefor, declaring such house a nuisance and forbidding any person thereafter to occupy the same. A court cannot apportion the charge or ascertain and allow such portion as it might find reasonable, assuming, but not deciding, that the city, under its organic law, is authorized to impose regular charges for such repairs and maintenance. The entire charge must therefore be declared invalid. The judgment of the court below cannot be sustained.

The judgment is reversed.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1002—Verdict on conflicting evidence not disturbed.

A verdict on conflicting evidence cannot be disturbed by the appellate court.

2. Master and servant 🔑243(2)—Agreement as to method of work not known to employé not binding on him.

An agreement as to the manner of doing work by an employer is not binding upon the employé unless the existence of such agreement is brought home to him.

3. Negligence 🔑136(27) — Contributory negligence jury question.

Where a general contractor's employé, standing on the outer end of a plank which he had placed across the elevator shaft, was killed by a fall when the employés of defendant, the contractor installing elevators in the building, moved an elevator so that the ascending counter weight struck the underside of the plank, the question of contributory negligence in being on the plank was for the jury.

4. Negligence 🔑33(2)—Workmen on building under construction not trespassers in elevator shaft.

A general contractor's employé, who places a plank across an elevator shaft for the purpose of doing work necessary for completion of the building, is not a trespasser in the shaft or a mere licensee to whom a contractor installing elevators owes no duty except that of not wantonly injuring him.

5. Master and servant 🔑226(1)—Servant does not assume risk of injury from employer's negligence.

An employé voluntarily putting himself in a place of danger does not thereby necessarily assume the risk of injury from the want of care of his employer.

6. Negligence 🔑65—Assumption of risk by employé of general contractor.

Where a general contractor's employé in doing his work placed a plank across an elevator shaft, he did not assume the risk of injury by the movement of an elevator operated by the employés of defendant, the contractor installing elevators, who did so without investigating his presence on the plank and without warning, although they knew other men were working in the shaft.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by the Fidelity & Casualty Company of New York against the Llewellyn Iron Works. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Bowen & Bailie, Jones & Weller, and J. Crider, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

R. P. Jennings, J. E. Shelton, and Parker & Collier, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. This is an action brought to recover damages for the death of one James F. Goldsmith by the alleged negligence of defendant. The case was tried by the court and a jury, who brought in a verdict against the defendant for the sum of $10,000. The appeal is from the judgment so entered.

The facts, so far as material for our present purpose, are as follows: On July 24, 1914, James F. Goldsmith, the deceased, a painter, was accidentally killed by falling from a plank on which he was working, outside a window on the seventh floor of the Broadway Department Store building, in the city of Los Angeles, then under construction by Mr. Arthur Letts, as owner. Mr. C. B. Weaver was the general contractor in charge of the work, including the painting, and as such was the employer of said Goldsmith. The defendant had a contract for the installation of the elevators in the building, and was engaged in such work at the time of the accident. The elevator hatchways with which this case is concerned were five in number, located along the southerly wall of the building. These hatchways were all within one inclosure, formed by the wall of the building with a window opposite each hatchway on each floor, on the back, and a glassed-in framework on the front, with sliding doors. The glass was in process of installation at the time of the accident. In order to perform any work on the south wall of the building it was necessary for the workmen to reach this wall. This they did by erecting a staging within and extending across the hatchways. Up this wall in each hatchway is a pair of upright guiderails, between which are suspended heavy counterweights, which slide up or down contrary to the action of the elevator cage. One crew of men after another had so erected their staging and performed their work. Among these various workmen were plasterers, who plastered the walls of the shaft; carpenters, who put in the window casings; sheet metal men, who put in the metal window sills; glass workers, who put the glass in the front work; painters, who painted the window frames; and window painters, who stained the window sashes, each of whom, including Goldsmith, was engaged in doing a necessary and essential part of the building. Working simultaneously with these various crews were employés of defendant, engaged in the construction and installation of the elevators. At the time of the accident the only elevator which had been installed by defendant was elevator No. 5, the same being on the extreme right hand of a person looking into the hatchways from the floor space. Prior to the day of the accident, this elevator had been operated and used by defendant's employés for testing the same and for carrying up and down laborers and supplies in connection with defendant's work on this and the other four hatchways, and had been run, on the day of the accident, some four or five hours prior thereto. On the second day after being so employed by said Weaver, deceased went to the seventh story of said building, placed one end of a plank on a sawhorse on the floor space opposite hatchway No. 5, the plank extending over the hatchway between the two upright guiderails already referred to, through the open lower sash of the window on the wall side of the hatchway, and resting on the lower sill of said sash, so that about two feet of the plank projected out of the window and over the alley, seven stories below. On this board, and that particular portion thereof so extending over the alley, as aforesaid, the deceased stood and proceeded to paint. While so employed, and without any previous warning, said elevator descended, and at the same time the said counterweights ascended, striking the plank from the underside, causing deceased to fall therefrom to the alley below, resulting in his death.

The deceased left a widow and a minor child, who made claim for compensation for his death under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) of this state, against Arthur Letts and C. B. Weaver, as his employers, and against the Fidelity & Casualty Company of New York, plaintiff herein, their insurer. The Industrial Accident Commission, accordingly, on March 26, 1915, awarded compensation, and the said Fidelity & Casualty Company of New York, pursuant to the terms of its policy, assumed liability for the entire award, making the payments thereunder. Thereafter, joining Letts and Weaver as plaintiffs, this action was brought by the Fidelity & Casualty Company of New York for general damages, as hereinbefore set forth.

There was a demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled. In its answer defendant denied negligence, alleged one recovery—the award as made by the Industrial Accident Commission—precluding any other; that deceased was a trespasser, and, at most, a mere licensee; charged contributory negligence; and further alleged that the accident was caused by the negligence of the deceased. On the trial, Letts and Weaver were dismissed as plaintiffs. There was a motion for nonsuit, which was denied. There was a motion for a new trial, which was never passed upon by the trial judge, and hence, under section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is deemed denied. The appeal here is from the judgment so entered.

Appellant urges as a basis for a reversal of the judgment: (1) Excessive damages given under the influence of passion or prejudice; (2) insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict; (3) that the verdict is against law; and (4) errors of law occurring at the trial. It also specifies 138 assignments of error.

Referring to the point made as to excessive damages given under the influence of passion or prejudice, suffice it to say that no evidence upon which such statement is based has been called to our attention, and we have failed to find anything in the record from which such an inference could be drawn, or that would justify such a conclusion.

[1] The trial court, after instructing the jury that contributory negligence, if found, would bar recovery, gave certain instructions designated as "P," "Q," and "R." Appellant contends that the verdict of the jury was in "complete disregard of the foregoing instructions, and against the law declared thereby," and urges that "these instructions in effect required a verdict for defendant." Appellant insists, with commendable vigor, that—

> "An examination of the evidence will show that every fact on which these instructions were predicated was shown without conflict, and if so a finding of contributory negligence and a consequent verdict for defendant were inevitable."

There is no doubt but that the instructions referred to were proper, were the facts as shown by the evidence in this case such as contended for by appellant; but, after an examination thereof, we are unable to agree with its statement of such facts. Beyond the pale of successful contradiction, we think, the record shows a very decided conflict on every fact upon which the said instructions were predicated. Upon these conditions there was no disregard by the jury of the court's instructions. There was evidence upon which the said instructions were predicated, and which, if believed by the jury, would have sustained a verdict for defendant; but, the jury having settled that conflict in favor of the plaintiff, this court cannot now disturb the judgment based thereon. Under these circumstances, it is obvious that discussion of the question as to whether instructions given by the court, right or wrong, became the law of the case, is unnecessary.

[2, 3] The next point urged by appellant is that of contributory negligence on the part of deceased. We are not able to agree with it in that contention. For instance, defendant contends that, even if its employés had seen the said plank, they would have no intimation that they might injure any one by moving the car. But we are compelled to conclude that the very fact of the known presence of the plank across the shaft was notice to defendant for further investigation of that fact, and such an investigation would have disclosed the presence of deceased on the outer end thereof, as before stated. It is also contended by defendant that there was an agreement between the employers that workmen should not use the shaft without notifying the foreman of defendant. But assuming such to have been the case, notice of that arrangement must be shown to have been given to deceased. There is not one word of evidence that this was done. The rule is, as we understand it, that an agreement as to the manner of doing work by an employer is not binding upon the employé unless the existence of such is brought home to him. Alabama Midland R. Co. v. McDonald, 112 Ala. 216, 20 South. 472; Brown v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 111 Ala. 275, 19 South. 1001; Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., v. Plunkett, 25 Kan. 188. We are not informed of the existence of any rule of law which made it necessary for decedent to anticipate and guard against negligent acts of defendant. Morgan v. Robinson Co., 157 Cal. 348, 107 Pac. 695, and cases there cited; Herold v. Mathews, 179 Pac. 414. Although by looking up the shaft and seeing the plank, defendant's employés could not see the man, still, in contemplation of law, the man being where he was, was within the shaft, and, as already seen, care and further investigation would have disclosed his position at the place stated. At any rate, we are satisfied that the question as to whether or not deceased was guilty of contributory negligence in being on the outer end of the plank, and as to whether or not his being there was such as to endanger his safety, was one for the jury. McKune v. Santa Clara, etc., Co., 110 Cal. 480, 42 Pac. 980; Seller v. Market Street Ry. Co., 139 Cal. 268, 72 Pac. 1006; Herbert v. S. P. Co., 121 Cal. 227, 53 Pac. 651; Fox v. Oakland, etc., Ry. Co., 118 Cal. 55, 50 Pac. 25, 62 Am. St. Rep. 216; Loftus v. P. E. Ry. Co., 166 Cal. 464, 137 Pac. 34.

[4] Appellant's next contention is that decedent was not its employé, but was the employé of an independent contractor, and that, being such, he was a trespasser in the shaft at the time of the accident, or at the most a mere licensee, to whom defendant owed no duty, except that of not wantonly injuring him. Confronted with the record before us, we think this contention without merit. When we take into consideration the fact that in the construction of a modern business block—and the Broadway Department Store building of Los Angeles is such a block—there are required, including many others, such artisans as plasterers, carpenters, glass men, sheet metal men, and interior finish men, all of whom, according to the evidence here, had necessary work to do on the south wall of this building, and were under contract to do such work, we are at a loss to understand by what line of reasoning a conclusion can be arrived at that the employés of defendant (also just as essential in their part of the construction of such a block) were doing a more necessary work, and a work of such importance that the other contractors and their employés could be treated as trespassers. How any one reading this record, not to say anything of those who saw the witnesses and heard their testimony, would arrive at any other conclusion than that both before and after the time of the ill-fated accident, several workmen were continually engaged in work in the elevator shaft or hatchways, including the one—No.

5—in which was the elevator that caused the accident, that no less than seven men were working in this very hatchway on the day of the accident, and further that this fact was known to defendant during all of said time, we are unable to understand.

[5, 6] Defendant asks what more it could have done than it did for Goldsmith's protection. From the record before us we are justified, we believe, in suggesting that the answer to that inquiry is that it does not appear that anything was done, or any precaution taken by defendant, for the safety of deceased. Indeed, it appears that the things which ordinary prudence would have suggested were omitted. Not even was the presence of the board in the hatchway investigated, nor was the board removed. Notwithstanding the fact that other men than deceased were actually working in this very hatchway at the time, to defendant's knowledge, no warning was given. This in itself constituted negligence which deceased could not anticipate, and which, under the law and the evidence as disclosed here, he did not assume. "The authorities seem clear * * * that an employé voluntarily putting himself in a place of danger does not thereby necessarily assume the risk of injury from the want of care of his employer." Morgan v. Robinson Co., supra.

[7-9] Appellant next urges, throughout some 37 pages of its opening brief, the point that the plaintiff corporation has no legal capacity to sue in this case. It is also urged, among other things, that there is no proof that a lawful claim was made "in conformity with law"; that in the proceedings had before the industrial accident commission under the Workmen's Compensation and Safety Act defendant was not called upon to contest the question as to whether or not the claim was a lawful one, and whether or not a legal liability existed on the employer's part; that, if the award of the commission is made binding and conclusive by the terms of the act, then the provisions are unconstitutional, and, conversely, if the award is not binding, then no foundation was laid for plaintiff's right to sue, because there was no other evidence offered; that the provisions of said act in question violate specific injunctions of the Constitution of this state, and infringe also specific provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States; that the provisions of said act authorize a double satisfaction for the same tort; that the act contains more than one subject; and that the right of subrogation is not expressed in its title. We think, however, that the mere mention of these contentions will serve to make obvious their lack of merit. The constitutionality of the Workmen's Compensation and Safety Act has been upheld by the Supreme Court of this state in the case of Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 686, 151 Pac. 398, and practically all of the foregoing objections decided contrary to the contention of appellant here. The fact that the act does not specifically mention the matter of the subrogation of the employer, or his insurance carrier, to the rights of the injured employé, or, in the case of death, to the rights of the heirs or personal representatives, we think is immaterial. All that the act itself does is to provide that the payment of compensation shall be contingent upon the subrogation of the employer, or his insurance carrier, to the rights of the injured employé. This is a mere incident to the liability, or to the payment of compensation, and is included in the general language of the title of the act, and especially of that portion of the title providing for the creation of a liability. "The right to subrogation" is, we think, included within that portion of the title of the act which reads: "* * * Providing the means and methods of enforcing such liability." "Subrogation," under these conditions, is one of the essential steps necessary to the enforcement of such liability, and embraced within the title of the act. Does not this question of subrogation come within the purview of legitimate inquiry made by any person of ordinary intelligence? Would not such a person naturally be led to ask such questions as the following: What employers are compensated? Under what circumstances? Upon what conditions? What rights, if any, do the employers surrender or acquire by reason of their having to compensate their employés? What are the methods by which the compensation is made to inure to the benefit of the employé? We think the answer to our own query must be in the affirmative; for, certainly all of the foregoing hypothetical questions are, undoubtedly, germane to the purpose expressed in the title. Citations might be multiplied, but the following will, in our opinion, serve to support our present conclusions: In re Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 139 Pac. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706; In re Maginnis, 162 Cal. 200, 121 Pac. 723; Matter of Yun Quong, 159 Cal. 508, 114 Pac. 835, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 969; Anglo-Californian Bank v. Field, 146 Cal. 644, 80 Pac. 1080; Gieske v. County of San Joaquin, 109 Cal. 489, 42 Pac. 446; Kings County v. Johnson, 104 Cal. 198, 37 Pac. 870; People v. Superior Court, 100 Cal. 105, 34 Pac. 492; San Francisco v. Kiernan, 98 Cal. 614, 33 Pac. 720; Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. 633, 29 Pac. 251; Francais v. Somps, 92 Cal. 503, 28 Pac. 592; Davies v. Los Angeles, 86 Cal. 37, 24 Pac. 771; Abeel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 226, 24 Pac. 383; Massachusetts, etc., Co. v. San Francisco, etc., Ry. Co., 178 Pac. 974; Stackpole v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 186 Pac. 354.

Appellant urges next that the court erred in giving certain instructions requested by plaintiffs, and in refusing to give certain other instructions requested by defendant. With this contention we are not able to agree. Having read every instruction given, as well as every requested instruction denied, we are of the opinion: (1) That the instructions given, objection to which is urged by appellant here, were ample, and as favorable to defendant—as disclosed by the record—as they properly could be on the questions presented. This is especially and obviously so, we think, when the instructions objected to are considered with, and in the light of, the other instructions given. (2) As to those denied, some were based upon a view of the case absolutely unsupported by the evidence, and therefore erroneous as a matter of law, while others had already been covered by instructions given at defendant's request, and also by the general instructions given by the court.

The remaining points urged, we think, need not be considered.

In our opinion the evidence is sufficient to support the verdict, and the verdict and judgment based thereon are, and each is, according to law.

Judgment affirmed.

SWALL et al. v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 2932.)

1. Highways 🔑90—Constitutionality of road district improvement act.

The road district improvement act of 1907 held not unconstitutional as not providing an opportunity for a property owner within a district to raise objection concerning the size of the assessment district or the inclusion of his property therein, in view of section 5.

2. Highways 🔑90—Road district act not unconstitutional in not requiring determination of benefits.

The road district improvement act of 1907 held not unconstitutional as failing to make express provision for determining benefits as a condition for including territory within the district.

3. Highways 🔑90—Road district act not unconstitutional in assessing property according to value.

The road district improvement act of 1907 held not unconstitutional in permitting the assessment of property within a district formed under it according to its value, rather than according to benefits conferred.

4. Evidence 🔑83(4)—Presumption of determination of benefits from inclusion of lands in road district.

It will be presumed from the action of a board of county supervisors in including lands in a road improvement district, formed under the road district improvement act of 1907, that the board determined that all the lands included would be benefited.

5. Highways 🔑90—Finding of benefits to land included in road district not reviewed.

When jurisdiction is given to a board to pass on the question of benefits to land from its inclusion in a road improvement district, the courts will not disturb their finding unless there appears a clear abuse of discretion.

6. Highways 🔑90 — Discretion of board as to inclusion of land in improvement district.

The only limitation on the power of a board of supervisors as to the inclusion of land within a road improvement district is that its exercise of discretion must not be arbitrary, and, if the conditions are so unreasonable as to outrage a common sense of fairness, the courts may interfere.

7. Highways 🔑90—Inclusion of land in improvement district not obvious abuse of discretion.

The inclusion of farm lands within a road improvement district, formed under the road district improvement act of 1907, as lands to be benefited by the proposed improvement, held not an obvious abuse of discretion by the board of supervisors of the county.

8. Highways 🔑90—Submission to jurisdiction of board to determine necessity for improvements.

Where owners of farm lands filed no written protest to organization of a road improvement district under road district improvement act of 1907, and made no objection to inclusion of their lands, they must be deemed to have submitted to jurisdiction of supervisors of county in determining necessity for improvements.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by William Swall and another against the County of Los Angeles and others. From judgment of dismissal, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Milton K. Young, of Los Angeles, and W. W. Middlecoff, of Visalia, for appellants.

A. J. Hill, County Counsel, Edward T. Bishop, Deputy County Counsel, and F. C. Austin, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SLOANE, J. The plaintiffs brought this action in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles for the purpose of avoiding a special assessment against their land for the construction of cement curbs and sidewalks under the "Road District Improvement Act of 1907" (St. 1907, p. 806). The defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground of its insufficiency to state a cause of action. The demurrer was sustained, and, plaintiffs declining to amend, judgment of dismissal was rendered. Plaintiffs have appealed on the judgment roll.

The grounds of attack upon the assessment, on which the sufficiency of the complaint depends, are the allegations: (1) That the lands of plaintiffs derive no benefit whatever from the curbs and sidewalks, but that, on the contrary, the lands, being farming lands, are injured by the curbs and sidewalks; (2) that no allowance was made for the difference in benefits which would accrue to the several parcels of land in the district, and that the supervisors particularly disregarded the question of benefits with reference to the properties of the plaintiffs; (3) that the estimated burden of the tax levied and to be levied under the assessments closely approximates the present assessed value of the land, and amounts to confiscation; and (4) that the road district improvement act of 1907 is unconstitutional.

[1-3] Taking up first the question of the constitutionality of the act: Appellant does not very clearly indicate in what respect the provisions of the road district improvement act in question are violative of any constitutional right. He objects that the act nowhere provides an opportunity for an owner of property within a district to raise an objection concerning the size of the assessment district or the inclusion of his property therein. This objection seems to be sufficiently met by section 5 of the act, which provides for a hearing of objections of landowners, and, specifically, that—

> "In the order of the hearing shall be heard such objections as shall be made to the boundaries of the district as set forth in the resolution of intention. Objections to the grades or to the boundaries of the district may be made by an owner of land lying within the district upon the hearing without any written statement of the same."

We do not understand the permission granted by this section to landowners to file written objection to ordering of the work as an entirety, to be a limitation upon filing other objections, but to provide a means by which a majority of the landowners may entirely block further proceedings. Thomas v. Pridham, 171 Cal. 98, 153 Pac. 933. Just what may be included in the objections to the boundaries of the district under section 5 is not indicated, but it might reasonably embrace an objection to the inclusion of specific land on the ground that it was not benefited by the proposed improvement. In denying a rehearing in Thomas v. Pridham, supra, the court says:

> "While the right of protest in writing is limited to owners of record as defined in the section, this limitation does not prevent all interested persons (including those not owners of record) from appearing before the board of supervisors and voicing their objections."

As to the violation of any constitutional right in failing to make express provision for determining benefits as a condition of including territory within the district, the District Court of Appeal, in the case of Hunt v. Manning, 24 Cal. App. 44, 140 Pac. 39, in passing on this precise point, says:

> "The act, it is true, does not provide that in determining the boundaries of the assessment district the board of supervisors shall include only property which it is considered will be benefited by the public work, but attention is called to no authority holding that such a provision is essential to the validity of such a statute. As the power to specially tax in the manner proposed by this act can only be exercised upon the theory that benefits will accrue to the property affected thereby, the presumption of good faith and fair action that accompanies the acts of public officers is entitled to be indulged, and it then must be assumed that the board of supervisors properly considered and determined that all of the property included within the established district would receive benefits from the doing of the work."

Furthermore, it is held in Thomas v. Pridham, supra, that this road district improvement act is not unconstitutional in permitting the assessment of property within the district formed under it according to its value, rather than in accordance with the benefits conferred. This covers all the points raised by appellants on the constitutionality of the act.

[4, 5] The allegation that the property was not benefited by the improvement does not aid the complaint. For the reasons heretofore stated, under the rule laid down in Hunt v. Manning, supra, it will be presumed from the action of the board in including these lands in the district that they determined that all the lands so included would be benefited. And it is well settled that when jurisdiction is given to a board to pass upon the question of benefits, the courts will not disturb their finding, unless there appears a clear and palpable abuse of such discretion. Quoting from Duncan v. Ramish, 142 Cal. 686, 76 Pac. 661, we find this expression of the rule:

> "It is true that local assessments are said to be imposed on the theory that the property adjacent to the improvements receives special benefit therefrom. But this is a matter which is for the determination of the legislative authority of the state, acting through its established agencies for the government of political subdivisions, or directly by the Legislature of the state, as that body may see fit. It is enough for the local property owner that he has a right to be heard before the city council upon the question, by filing a petition of remonstrance, in the proceeding prescribed by law, setting forth his reasons why the improvement should not be made. * * * Stats. 1891, 196; French v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co., 181 U. S. 324 [21 Sup. Ct. 625, 45 L. Ed. 879]; Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 345 [8 Sup. Ct. 921, 31 L. Ed. 763]; Brown v. Drain, 187 U. S. 635 [23 Sup. Ct. 842, 47 L. Ed. 343]. * * * In Brown v. Drain [C. C.] 112 Fed. 582, the plaintiff sued the street superintendent and city treasurer of Los Angeles to obtain a decree declaring invalid the local assessment for a street improvement and to quiet his title to the land assessed. The Circuit Court of the United States in that case held that the offer of the plaintiff to allege and prove that the benefits accruing to his property from the improvements did not exceed $2,000, whereas the assessment was over $5,000, was wholly immaterial, and that these facts would not, if alleged and proven, affect the validity of the proceedings; the position of the court being that the determination of the city council on that subject, under the street work Act, was exclusive. This case was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the decision was affirmed by that court on the authority of French v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co., 181 U. S. 324 [21 Sup. Ct. 625, 45 L. Ed. 879], and the other like cases above cited. * * * The question may therefore be considered as absolutely settled, and the decision in the Norwood Case [172 U. S. 269, 19 Sup. Ct. 187, 43 L. Ed. 443], as thoroughly discredited, although not expressly overruled."

The further allegation of the complaint, that the assessment was levied upon the lands of appellants without reference to any ascertainment of the benefits to be derived by such lands from the improvements, does not entitle them to relief, for the reason that the assessment is authorized under the act in question according to the value of the property, rather than in accordance with the benefits conferred. As already pointed out, the validity of the ad valorem assessment under this road district improvement act is upheld in Thomas v. Pridham, supra. In Emery v. San Francisco Gas Co., 28 Cal. 346, the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Sawyer, says:

> "The result of our investigation is that there is no restriction in our Constitution upon the power of the Legislature to impose assessments to defray the expenses of public improvement in the nature of grading and planking streets, upon the property supposed to be benefited thereby in any district designated by the Legislature, or the proper officers of municipal governments acting under the authority of law, and that it is authorized to apportion the amount to be raised according to value, according to the benefits received, in proportion to frontage or the superficial contents, or to adopt any principle of apportionment that can be referred to the general sovereign right of taxation."

Under the act in question here the ad valorem assessment was provided for.

[6-8] There is one limitation on the power of the supervisors, or whatever board is intrusted with the discretion to form an improvement district and determine the lands to be included therein. The discretion granted is not arbitrary. If the conditions shown by the record, or coming within the judicial knowledge of the court, are so unreasonable as to outrage the common sense of fairness and justice, the courts may interfere. Spring Street Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 170 Cal. 24, 148 Pac. 217, L. R. A. 1918E, 197; Lent v. Tillson, 72 Cal. 404, 429, 14 Pac. 71; Iowa Pipe & Tile Co. v. Callanan, 125 Iowa, 358, 101 N. W. 141, 67 L. R. A. 408, 106 Am. St. Rep. 311, 3 Ann. Cas. 7. An attempt against the will of the owners to curb and sidewalk a remote and unoccupied quarter section of land in the sagebrush, and levy assessments therefor in excess of the value of the property, would be open to attack, irrespective of the closest adherence to the forms of law providing for such "improvement," unless the owners had slept upon their rights and were estopped thereby. Appellants here rely upon some such condition, in alleging in their complaint that their lands are farming lands, used and acquired solely for farming purposes; that only four families are residing thereon; that the construction of the improvements are of no benefit, but a detriment to their property, by reason of impeding ingress and egress to and from the same; and that the aggregate of the assessments will amount to $5,842.70 upon lands, the assessed value of which only amounts to $6,390. It does not, however, appear from the facts pleaded, nor from the record presented, that the surroundings and conditions of these and other lands of the road improvement district in question are such as to show the action of the supervisors an obvious abuse of discretion, in including them in the district as lands to be benefited by the proposed improvement. And, moreover, it does not appear that appellants filed any written protest to the organization of the district, or made any objection to the inclusion of their lands therein. They must be deemed to have submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors in the determination of the necessity for the improvements for which the district was organized. Duncan v. Ramish, supra; United Real Estate, etc., Co. v. Barnes, 159 Cal. 242, 113 Pac. 167; Dillingham v. Welch (Sup.) 178 Pac. 512.

We find nothing in the authorities cited by appellant, in so far as they apply at all to the conditions presented on this appeal, inconsistent with the conclusions indicated in this opinion. The citations to United States Supreme Court decisions, referred to us by appellant in lieu of a closing brief, not previously cited—Myles Salt Co. v. Commissioners, 239 U. S. 478, 36 Sup. Ct. 204, 60 L. Ed. 392, L. R. A. 1918E, 190; Houck v. Little River Drainage District, 239 U. S. 254, 36 Sup. Ct. 58, 60 L. Ed. 266; and Fallbrook Irrigation District v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 17 Sup. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369—go no further than to hold that the courts will review the discretion of the local board to whom authority to act in the premises has been delegated only in the event of palpably arbitrary and plain abuse; as, for example, the inclusion of lands in a drainage or irrigation district which, from their topographical situation, could not be drained or irrigated by the proposed system.

BARR v. BRANSTETTER et al. (Civ. 2003.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑219(2)—FINDINGS NOT OPEN TO ATTACK FOR FIRST TIME ON APPEAL.

In an action involving disputed water rights, where plaintiff, in referring to defendants' ditch, stated that they cleaned it out or repaired it, and that they turned in water, etc., a finding that defendants turned into the ditch more than a certain amount of water and thereby caused the lands of plaintiff to be overflowed, etc., is not open to attack for the first time in the appellate court on ground that plaintiff's testimony that "they" did certain acts did not refer to defendants.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑152(8)—FINDING AS TO AMOUNT OF WATER USED IN IRRIGATION WARRANTED.

Evidence held to warrant a finding that 121.3 inches of water was all that had been used by defendants in the irrigation of their lands.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1011(1)—FINDINGS OF JUDGE ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE CONTROLLING.

In an action tried to the court, findings on conflicting evidence are controlling on appeal.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑152(8) — EVIDENCE SUSTAINING ALLOWANCE OF WATER FOR IRRIGATION.

In an action involving disputes as to water rights and to enjoin defendants from turning into their ditch over plaintiff's lands more than a certain amount of water, findings that the amount allowed defendants was sufficient for the irrigation of their premises, etc., and that they had enlarged the ditch over plaintiff's lands, held warranted.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1071(1)—ALLOWANCE OF WATER SUBJECT TO DEFENDANT'S RIGHTS HARMLESS AS TO HIM.

In an action involving disputed water rights, where defendants were given prior right to a specified amount of water, a finding that plaintiff was entitled to a specified amount of water is not prejudicial to defendants, for plaintiff's rights were made subject to those of defendants.

6. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑143—DEFENDANT CONFINED TO WATER ALLOWANCE REGARDLESS OF SIZE OF DITCH.

Where defendants were entitled to only 121.3 inches of water for irrigation purposes, they were confined to that amount, regardless of the size of their ditch.

7. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑152(7) — EVIDENCE ADMISSIBLE ON QUESTION OF FLOODING PLAINTIFF'S LAND.

In an action involving disputed water rights and to enjoin defendants from diverting into their ditch over plaintiff's lands more than a certain amount of water, evidence that on diversion of a greater amount lands lying lower than those of plaintiff were overflowed, whereupon defendants widened their ditch, held admissible.

8. EVIDENCE 🔑215(1), 272—OF WIDENING OF DITCH TO ACCOMMODATE EXCESSIVE FLOW OF WATER ADMISSIBLE.

In an action involving disputed water rights, a certified copy of an application filed by plaintiff with the state water commission for an increased appropriation of water is not admissible as a declaration by plaintiff against interest; such application merely being an attempt by plaintiff to lawfully obtain a greater amount of water than he was already entitled to, and was not an admission that he had no right to any of the water.

9. DAMAGES 🔑109—MEASURE OF DAMAGES FOR OVERFLOWING LANDS.

In an action involving disputed water rights, where plaintiff sought damages for the flooding of his lands when defendants turned an increased amount of water into their ditch, held, that the measure of damages for the flooding of the lands was not the fair rental value of the property overflowed, but under Civ. Code, § 3333, was an amount which would compensate for all the detriment caused thereby.

10. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑152(11)—ALLOWANCE OF WATER MEASURED UNDER FOUR-INCH HEAD PROPER.

Notwithstanding St. 1901, p. 660, defining a miner's inch, a judgment in an action involving disputed claims to water for irrigation purposes, which allowed defendants 121.3 inches of water measure under a 4-inch pressure, is not open to attack on the ground that defendants, who claimed a greater number of miner's inches, were entitled to a measurement of their water under a 6-inch head.

11. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑179(1)—COMPLAINT TO RESTRAIN FLOWING OF PLAINTIFF'S LAND SUFFICIENT.

A complaint seeking to enjoin defendants from diverting an increased amount of water into their irrigation ditch over plaintiff's lands, which, following Code Civ. Proc. § 426, contained a statement of facts constituting the cause of action in an ordinary concise manner, and which averred that defendants threatened to make enlargements of the ditch, followed by statements as to damage which would result, is not open to attack on the ground that there was no allegation that defendants threatened to make any material enlargement of the ditch.

12. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⚿179(1)—COMPLAINT TO RESTRAIN FLOWING OF PLAINTIFF'S LANDS SHOWING IRREPARABLE DAMAGE.

A complaint seeking to enjoin defendants from increasing the amount of water diverted into their drainage ditch over plaintiff's lands, which alleged that plaintiff's lands would be overflowed and rendered unfit for cultivation, was a sufficient statement of irreparable injury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; James T. Lodge, Judge.

Action by A. J. Barr against Martha E. Branstetter and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Braynard & Kimball, of Redding, for appellants.

Taylor & Tebbe, of Yreka, and Henry McGuinness, of Sisson, for respondent.

HART, J. Plaintiff brought the action to have defendants enjoined from diverting into a certain ditch which crossed plaintiff's lands more than 121 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure and from enlarging said ditch. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff as prayed for in the complaint, except that the amount of water to which defendants were entitled was found to be 121.3 inches measured under a 4-inch pressure. The appeal is by defendants from said judgment.

It was alleged in the complaint, which was filed June 6, 1917, that plaintiff was the owner of 80 acres of land (describing it) in Siskiyou county, upon which he raised crops of hay, fruit and vegetables; "that defendants Martha E. Branstetter, Mary McKenzie, John B. Stuck, and Philip Reed are the owners of a certain water ditch which diverts the waters of Cold creek to the amount of 121 inches measured under a 4-inch pressure over and across the said lands of plaintiff," which said ditch has been used by defendants for diverting said 121 inches of water during the time plaintiff and his predecessors have owned the land; "that during the year last past defendants, disregarding plaintiff's rights, have at times turned into said ditch, where the same crosses the land of plaintiff, more than 121 inches measured under a 4-inch pressure of the waters of said Cold creek, and said waters have overflowed a large portion of plaintiff's lands to such an extent that said lands have been covered with water and have been rendered unfit for cultivation," to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of $300.

Defendants filed an answer and cross-complaint, in which they denied that any more than 25 acres of plaintiff's land was agricultural land or had been cultivated, and alleged that a portion of plaintiff's land was rocky and unfit for cultivation; denied the allegation of the complaint that the four defendants named therein "were limited to the amount of 121 inches" of water, but alleged that they were entitled to 272 miner's inches of water and to divert the same over plaintiff's lands by means of said ditch, and set up adverse possession thereto. Defendants denied the allegation of the complaint which stated that they had turned into the ditch more than 121 inches of water and had thereby overflowed plaintiff's land, but alleged that they were entitled to turn into said ditch 272 miner's inches of water.

The cross-complaint of defendants set up affirmatively the ownership by said defendants of certain lands and the ownership of said Cold creek ditch, and also their right to use 272 miner's inches of water on said lands, which are dry and practically useless without such water; "that the amount of water reasonably necessary for the proper irrigation and development of said lands of said defendants, during the irrigation season of every year, is the whole of the natural flow of said Cold creek at the head of said Cold creek ditch, to wit, 272 miner's inches of water;" that plaintiff's claims to divert waters are wholly without right, and that during two years last past, "by means of dams, ditches, and other obstructions, he has wrongfully, unlawfully, and without right diverted large quantities of water, * * * and permitted his cattle to trample down and obstruct said Cold creek ditch where said ditch crosses his lands," thereby depriving said defendants of the use of said water, to their damage in the sum of $3,000.

[1] 1. Appellants attack several findings of the court as not supported by the evidence, but an examination of the record has convinced us that there is no merit in the contention. Findings 5, 6, and 7 are first referred to. They were to the effect that "defendants have turned into said Cold creek ditch * * * more than 121.3 inches measured under a 4-inch pressure, and thereby caused a portion of the lands of plaintiff * * * to be overflowed and covered with water"; that "defendants continued to turn" water into said ditch "in such quantities as to overflow plaintiff's lands and to damage the same and render said lands unfit for cultivation"; and that "plaintiff was damaged by the acts of defendants in the sum of $100."

The point made by appellant is that there is no evidence that defendants did the acts referred to in said findings. We think, though, that those findings derive sufficient support from the following testimony given by plaintiff:

> "The water was turned in on the 14th day of May, and I always cut the ditch—the head of the ditch was left open at the intake and the water came down and washed over my land. I cut the ditch in one place, where it would run over the high ground and not do any damage, down into the pasture, so it wouldn't damage the property, and as they cleaned it out or repaired it in the spring, when it was time to turn the water in, they always repaired the ditch. Well, it seems as though they turned the water in and didn't clean out the ditch, and I supposed they had their ditch in repair, and the water run there until the 24th of May."

It is true that the plaintiff did not in so many words say the defendants turned the water into the ditch. His language was that they did so. The allegation in the complaint, with which the court was, of course, familiar, was that "defendants * * * have at times turned into said ditch" water, etc. If the court or counsel had entertained any doubt as to whom the witness was referring by his answer, it is reasonable to suppose the uncertainty would have been cleared up at the time. But the defendants at the trial, did not make the objection now urged, and it cannot be made for the first time in this court.

[2] It is next claimed that there is no evidence to support the finding that 121.3 inches of water is all that has been used by defendants for the irrigation of their lands. On direct examination, plaintiff testified that no greater quantity than 121 inches of water ever did run through the ditch. It appeared on his cross-examination that he was not a civil engineer, and that he had had no experience in measuring ditches or the flow of water, and appellants claim that his estimate was a mere guess and entitled to no credence. But the record shows that Harvey J. Sarter, the county surveyor of Siskiyou county, testified that he made surveys and measurements in June and September, 1917, and in April, 1918, and that the water flowing in the ditch on June 1, 1917, was 121.3 inches. This testimony is sufficient to support the finding, and in view of the testimony of the surveyor it becomes immaterial whether plaintiff was or was not qualified to express an opinion upon the subject.

[3, 4] As to the finding that 121.3 inches of water was sufficient for defendants' use, appellants criticize the testimony of the plaintiff and of his witness, Henry B. Ream. It may be conceded that the testimony of these witnesses on this point was of little value. The testimony as to the amount of land cultivated and irrigated by defendants was conflicting, and the court's finding in that regard must control. There was received in evidence a table prepared by the United States Agricultural Weather Bureau showing how many acre-feet of water are considered necessary for irrigation of certain crops on various kinds of soil. Applying the amounts stated in this table to the requirements of defendants' lands, it appeared that 121.3 inches would be about double the necessary amount of water. It was alleged in the answer and cross-complaint that "at the time of the commencement of this action the said Cold creek ditch was, and is, in first-class repair and order as an irrigation ditch." As seen, the action was commenced on June 6, 1917, and the testimony of the surveyor, Sarter, was that when he measured the ditch on June 1st it was full of water and overflowing at points.

Appellants next complain of the finding that the ditch across plaintiff's lands was enlarged, so that its carrying capacity was doubled. There was considerable testimony as to the ditch having been widened; the witnesses varying in their estimates as to the width from 4 to 27 inches. Appellants claim that what they did was merely to clean out the ditch. C. R. Weigel, a witness for defendants, testified that after the ditch had been enlarged, and on June 19, 1917, he made measurements and found that the carrying capacity of the ditch across plaintiff's land was about 272 miner's inches of water. The witness Sarter testified that he found the water in the ditch to be as follows: On June 29, 1917, 162.29 miner's inches; on September 16, 1917, 164.55 miner's inches; on April 28, 1918, 131.47 miner's inches. Sarter testified that when he made these measurements the ditch was not full of water.

[5] As to the finding that plaintiff is the owner of and entitled to 14 miner's inches of water, the plaintiff testified that about 14 years prior to the trial he had constructed a ditch about 2 feet and 8 or 10 inches deep across the corner of his land for about 600 feet; that he had used it every year since, and that when the creek was lowest the ditch contained about 27 inches of water. We cannot perceive how defendants would be injured by the finding. The court gave to them the prior right to 121.3 inches, and whatever amount was awarded to plaintiff was subject to that right.

[6] 2. Appellants claim that the court should have made a finding as to what the carrying capacity of the Cold creek ditch was across the land of plaintiff. In the cross-complaint it was alleged that the carrying capacity of the ditch was 272 miner's inches of water, and testimony was introduced tending to prove the allegation. It is contended that this was a material issue and should have been found upon. We think, however, that the carrying capacity of the ditch was not material. While it may have been capable of carrying 272 inches, the court found, upon what we regard as sufficient evidence, that defendants were entitled to 121.3 inches only; that being the amount that had been used by them for the irrigation of their lands. They were therefore confined to the use of that amount, regardless of what was the size of their ditch.

[7] 3. Over the objection of defendants, plaintiff was permitted to show that, on September 4, 1917, the Cold creek ditch overflowed on the land of one Mose Zelle, and that defendants widened the ditch through Zelle's land from 6 to 18 inches for a distance of 413 feet. Zelle's land is the next farm below that of plaintiff, and between the two tracts there is a fall or drop of about 20 feet. Respondent disclaims any right to damages by reason of the overflow of Zelle's land, but maintains that the testimony was pertinent to show that defendants had turned in so much more water than they had in former years that it could not be carried off Barr's place and into Zelle's without widening the ditch through Zelle's place.

The evidence was properly admitted. There was testimony showing that in former years the ditch through Zelle's land had always carried the water that was turned in it, and there had never been an overflow. It is true that, on cross-examination, Zelle testified that, prior to the overflow, 30 or 40 head of cattle had been pastured on the place and had trampled the ditch; but the damage done by the cattle could have been remedied without widening the ditch to the extent that it was widened. The inference seems irresistible that the widening of the ditch was for the purpose of accommodating the increased flow of water which Sarter testified he found in the ditch on September 16, 1917, 12 days after the overflowing of Zelle's land.

[8] 4. Defendants offered in evidence a certified copy of an application, filed by plaintiff with the state water commission in 1917, showing that construction work would be commenced about May 15, 1917, and that the notice of appropriation was posted before the commencement of the irrigation season of 1917, for the purpose of diverting 40 miner's inches of water from Cold creek. The document was offered as a declaration against interest. Plaintiff objected to its introduction as not being a declaration against interest and the court sustained the objection. Appellants cite 16 Cyc. 954, as follows:

> "Conduct of a party inconsistent with his present contention may tend to show that the latter is an afterthought, and proof of such contention is therefore competent as an admission"

—and contend that under that rule the offered evidence was improperly rejected. To this, respondent replies:

> "An application for water cannot be construed as an admission that the plaintiff had no water right in Cold creek. Any action of the commission would not affect existing rights, and plaintiff or any other party could have a right to make an application for the surplus water of Cold creek or any other creek."

We agree with the position taken by respondent. It is established by the findings of the court that plaintiff was entitled to 14 inches of the water of the creek. His application for 40 inches, or any other amount, could not affect his title to the 14 inches. Nor was the application an admission that he had no right to any of the water. It was simply an attempt legally to secure, if he could, more water than he at that time had. The objection to the admission in evidence of the application was properly sustained.

[9] 5. The plaintiff testified that he had been damaged in the sum of $300 from the overflowing and swamping of his land. Appellants insist that the admission of said testimony was error and that the true measure of damages would be the fair rental value of the ground which was overflowed, citing Crow v. San Joaquin, etc., Irrigation Co., 130 Cal. 309, at pages 314, 315, 62 Pac. 562, 1058. That case was an action for damages arising from a breach of contract, and the Supreme Court stated that the measure of damages was the detriment caused by the breach, as provided in sections 3330 and 3333 of the Civil Code. The citation of section 3330 was probably an error, as there is no such section. It was probably intended to be section 3300, which prescribed the measure of damages for breach of contract. Section 3333 covers the breach of obligation other than contract and provides that it "is the amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could have been anticipated or not."

In the cases of Dennis v. Crocker-Huffman, etc., Co., 6 Cal. App. 58, 91 Pac. 425, and Strecker v. Gaul, 35 Cal. App. 619, 170 Pac. 646, we held that the measure of damages for destruction of growing crops was that laid down by section 3333 of the Civil Code. While the testimony of the plaintiff was not as complete as it should have been as to the value of crops destroyed, he did testify as to potato ground and pasture being rendered useless and alfalfa being "killed out" by the water. The court evidently considered his estimate of $300 damages as too high, for the judgment gave him $100 for this item.

[10] 6. Appellants contend that they "are entitled to a judgment giving them a measurement of their water under a 6-inch head," while the court gave them 121.3 inches of water measure under a 4-inch pressure. Our statute defines a miner's inch of water as follows:

> "The standard miner's inch of water shall be equivalent or equal to one and one-half cubic feet of water per minute, measured through any aperture or orifice." Stats. 1901, p. 660.

Of this statute, we had occasion to say, in Lillis v. Silver Creek, etc., Water Co., 32 Cal. App. 668, 674, 163 Pac. 1040, 1043:

> "This makes the miner's inch equivalent to one-fortieth of a second-foot. Prior to the adoption of the above statute, an inch or miner's inch in this state was defined as the quantity of water passing through an orifice one inch square under a 4-inch pressure, which would make the inch equivalent to one-fiftieth of a cubic foot per second."

In a work entitled "The Theory and Practice of Surveying," by J. B. Johnson, the following is said regarding the miner's inch:

> "This is an arbitrary standard, both as to method and as to volume of water discharged. It rests on the false assumption that the volume discharged is proportional to the area of the orifice under a constant head above the top of the orifice. Its use grew out of the necessities of frontier life in the mining west, and should now be discarded in favor of absolute units. The miner's inch is the quantity of water that will flow through an orifice 1 inch square, under a head of from 4 to 12 inches, according to geographical locality. * * * When the miner's inch can only be defined as a certain number of cubic feet per minute, it is evidently no longer of service and should be abandoned."

In Kinney on Irrigation and Water Rights (2d Ed.) vol. 2, § 890, it is said that in arriving at the quantity of water prescribed by the act of 1901 as constituting a miner's inch, "by computation the head of water must be under a 6-inch pressure."

It will thus be observed that, if the award to defendants had been 121.3 "miner's inches" of water, they would receive approximately 50 per cent. more water than they would if the number of inches were measured under a 4-inch pressure. But water users in the Western states have long been accustomed to measuring their water under the old method, and it is a fixed and ascertainable quantity in California. The plaintiff's surveyor in the present case made all his measurements "under a 4-inch pressure" and the court's award of that amount to defendants must control, though it is quite apparent that in such cases as this it would be advisable that any reference to a miner's inch of water should be "one and one-half cubic feet of water per minute," as a miner's inch is defined by the law, without specifying any particular pressure under which it should be measured.

[11] 7. It is finally contended that defendants' demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained for the following reasons:

> "(1) There is no allegation in the complaint that the defendants threatened to make any material enlargement of the ditch on plaintiff's land. (2) There is no allegation showing how or why the overflow from the ditch on plaintiff's land would cause plaintiff irreparable injury."

As to the first point: The complaint contains "a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action, in ordinary and concise language." Code Civ. Proc. § 426. The allegation therein that defendants threaten "to make enlargements of said ditch" is followed by statements as to the damage which will result to plaintiff in case the enlargements are made, which are sufficient to show that the damage would be serious. Inasmuch as the allegation is that such damage will flow from the "enlargements" previously mentioned, it would seem to be of no consequence that the word "material," as qualifying the "enlargements," should have been omitted.

[12] As to the second point, the appellants cite City Store v. San Jose-Los Gatos, etc., Co., 150 Cal. 277, 280, 88 Pac. 977, 978, and other cases, to the effect that—

> "General allegations of irreparable injury are never sufficient; the facts must be stated from which it will appear that irreparable injury will probably follow."

The complaint before us contains sufficient allegations in this respect. It is therein stated that the overflowing of plaintiff's lands will render the same unfit for cultivation and for raising crops because thereby they will be made too wet for cultivation. In connection with the allegation that said land is agricultural land and that plaintiff for 10 years has cultivated said land and raised crops of hay, fruit, and vegetables thereon, and that the land is valuable for such purposes, nothing further, in our opinion, is required to show that the damage which would probably result to plaintiff from the threatened acts of the defendants would cause him irreparable injury.

The demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled.

The judgment is affirmed.

JIRKU v. BROD. (Civ. 3013.)

1. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION 🔑16—PLAINTIFF MUST PROVE MALICE AND WANT OF PROBABLE CAUSE.

In actions for malicious prosecution, plaintiff to recover must establish not only malice but want of probable cause, and the two elements must concur.

2. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION 🔑71(2)—WHERE EVIDENCE NOT CONFLICTING, WANT OF PROBABLE CAUSE QUESTION FOR COURT.

Where there is no conflict in the testimony in an action for malicious prosecution, the question whether or not the evidence introduced shows a want of probable cause is for the court, and it would be error to submit it to the jury.

3. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION 🔑22—RELIANCE IN GOOD FAITH UPON ADVICE OF COUNSEL AS AFFECTING PROBABLE CAUSE.

Where defendant before instituting a prosecution against plaintiff for criminal libel consulted an attorney at law in good standing, and also an assistant prosecuting attorney, and, upon the advice of each that a prosecution would lie, commenced such prosecution honestly relying on such advice, he acted upon probable cause.

4. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION ⚷18(2)—CIRCULAR PUBLISHED AS CONSTITUTING PROBABLE CAUSE FOR PROSECUTION.

In an action for damages for malicious prosecution of plaintiff for criminal libel, evidence including a circular containing the alleged libelous matter held of itself sufficient to constitute probable cause for the prosecution.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by John Jirku against J. M. Brod. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. R. Holston, of Los Angeles, and S. C. Schaefer, of San Pedro, for appellant.

Hudson P. Hibbard, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. This is an action against defendant for a malicious prosecution, for causing the arrest of the plaintiff upon a criminal charge. At the conclusion of all the testimony in the case, the court, without hearing argument on the evidence, and of its own motion, instructed the jury to return a verdict for the defendant, which the jury did. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, and plaintiff appeals. The action of the court in instructing the jury to return a verdict for the defendant is the only error of which the appellant complains.

Plaintiff published and circulated a statement in the Bohemian language, in which he charged, among other things, that defendant did not speak the truth. The defendant thereupon made complaint before the clerk of the police court of the city of Los Angeles, charging plaintiff with having committed the crime of criminal libel. Plaintiff was arrested and imprisoned for a space of several hours, finally obtaining his release upon giving bail. After due trial in the police court, of the city of Los Angeles, before a jury, plaintiff was acquitted of the charge, and was not further prosecuted.

It appears without contradiction, from the record, that before defendant caused the arrest of plaintiff he consulted a regularly admitted and practicing attorney at law, in good standing. To him defendant made a full, fair, and complete statement of all the facts within his knowledge, in relation to the alleged libel. On the advice of counsel, he further consulted the deputy city prosecutor of the city of Los Angeles, who was intrusted with such matters, and to whom defendant again made a full, fair, and complete statement of all the facts relating to the matter, and submitted the objectionable publication. Defendant was advised by the attorney at law, and by the deputy city prosecutor, and by each of them, that an offense had been committed, and that there was probable cause to believe the plaintiff guilty of the offense, whereupon defendant, acting in entire good faith, believing such advice to be true, appeared before the clerk of the police court, and made the complaint which led to the arrest and trial of plaintiff. In addition to these facts, it also appears that before seeking the advice of the attorney, and of the deputy city prosecutor, defendant believed that the plaintiff had committed, and was guilty of, the crime of criminal libel.

[1] The trial court was therefore justified in directing the jury to return the verdict in favor of the defendant. There was no want of probable cause shown for the arrest of plaintiff. No principle is better established than that in actions for malicious prosecution the plaintiff must, in order to recover, establish, not only malice, but want of probable cause. These two elements are essential, and they must concur, or the action will not lie. Potter v. Seale, 8 Cal. 224; Smith v. Liverpool, etc., Ins. Co., 107 Cal. 432–436, 40 Pac. 540. One of the elements essential to maintain the action not being present, plaintiff had not made out his case.

[2] Where there is no conflict in the testimony, the question whether or not the evidence introduced shows a want of probable cause is for the court to decide. It is error in such cases, where there is no proof of want of probable cause, to submit any question to the jury. Davis v. Pac. Tel. & Tel. Co., 127 Cal. 312, 319, 57 Pac. 764, 59 Pac. 698.

[3] Defendant was entitled to the benefit of the rule announced in the foregoing cases that where one, before instituting such a prosecution, has, in good faith, consulted an attorney at law in good standing, particularly if such attorney be one charged with the prosecution of public offenses, and has stated to him all the facts in the case, and has been thereupon advised by such attorney that a prosecution will lie, and such person has acted honestly on that advice, this, of itself, constitutes probable cause. Johnson v. Southern Pacific Co., 157 Cal. 333, 338, 107 Pac. 611.

[4] Furthermore, the evidence in the case, consisting in part of the circular containing the alleged libelous matter, was of itself sufficient to constitute probable cause for the prosecution.

The judgment is affirmed.

5. TRUSTS 🔑365(2) — FAILURE TO CLAIM TRUST OR ACCOUNTING INSUFFICIENT TO SHOW LACHES.

Where plaintiff and defendant purchased land in defendant's name for which plaintiff borrowed money, that plaintiff made no claim for an accounting or declaration of trust during four years when the relations between the parties were intimate and cordial and consisted of interchanges of courtesies and services, and the property had not increased in value, did not show laches.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Wm. M. Finch, Judge.

Action by Joseph W. Hughes against Charles F. Silva, in which Nellie S. Hughes, as executrix of the plaintiff's last will and testament, was substituted for plaintiff. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, and Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Arthur C. Huston, of Woodland, and Hughes & Bradford, of Sacramento, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in the plaintiff's favor in an action wherein the present plaintiff's predecessor in interest sought to impress a trust in his favor as to several tracts of land lying in what is known as the Sutter Basin, in the county of Sutter, state of California. The particular tract of land as to the proceeds of which the judgment was in plaintiff's favor was known and is described in the record herein as the "Wilcoxson Point ranch," consisting of approximately 2,600 acres of land, and was originally owned by one Jackson Wilcoxson, and upon his death, in the early eighties, became the property of the Wilcoxson Estate. The present plaintiff's predecessor in interest, Joseph W. Hughes, was one of the heirs of said estate, his mother having been a sister of Jackson Wilcoxson, but his interest therein derived from this source was comparatively small, being only a one-ninetieth interest therein. Joseph W. Hughes was in those years an attorney at law in active practice in the city of Sacramento. He was not, however, the attorney for the estate or any of its heirs other than himself, but at times, and as a matter of accommodation, looked after the interests of the heirs in such of the property of the estate as seemed to require attention. Thus it was that in the year 1884 Joseph W. Hughes, for a period of about four months, was upon the Wilcoxson Point ranch looking after the property at the request of certain of the heirs. While there upon that occasion he first met and became well acquainted with Charles F. Silva, the defendant herein, who was then an employé upon the ranch. Some time thereafter said Charles F. Silva came to the said Hughes, who had in the meantime become one of the superior judges of the county of Sacramento, seeking to obtain a contract for the cutting of wood upon the ranch at a dollar a cord stumpage for the wood. Through the offices of Judge Hughes, Silva was able to secure such a contract, and began cutting the wood thereon under this contract. At that time this piece of property was not esteemed of great value, since it was subject to overflow during the major portion of the year, and aside from being occupied largely with timber was mainly usable for pasturage when not under water. During the year which followed the making of the woodcutting contract with Silva, he cut approximately 3,800 cords of wood upon the property, and Judge Hughes and he went together to the ranch to measure the wood which had thus been cut before its removal from the premises. While they were there upon this mission, Silva, according to the testimony of Judge Hughes, proposed to him that they go in together and buy the property from the heirs of the estate for the price of $5 per acre, and pay for it out of the wood which they could cut from it, having the land left as their profit. Judge Hughes was agreeable to this proposition and undertook to present the matter to the rest of the heirs. He preferred, however, not to be known in the transaction because of his interest in the estate. At that time one George H. Wilcoxson, one of the heirs, held a general power of attorney from all the rest of the heirs residing outside of California and representing the bulk of the estate. Judge Hughes either wrote to him or saw him personally and laid Silva's proposition before him. It was substantially to the effect that Silva was willing to pay $5 an acre for the property, or in round figures $13,000. In response to this proposition, George H. Wilcoxson stated he was satisfied the heirs would be willing to sell at that figure, and undertook to lay the matter before them by letter. In a short time he reported to Judge Hughes that he was authorized to sell the property at the price named, but would require a payment of $4,000 in cash. When this was reported to Silva, he agreed to it; but, when the transaction was about ready to be consummated, Silva was unable to raise the full amount of the cash payment required, whereupon Judge Hughes borrowed $1,400 from one Adolphe Jean, giving his note therefor. He also at the same time wrote out a declaration of trust for Silva to sign, declaring that he (Silva) held one-half of the said ranch in trust, first, as security for the payment of the amount of Judge Hughes' loan from Jean, and second, upon its payment to convey one-half of the ranch to Judge Hughes.

Having thus arranged for the initial payment upon the purchase price of the ranch, a conveyance was made by all of the Wilcoxson heirs to Silva, Judge Hughes joining with the rest in this conveyance. Some emphasis is sought to be laid by appellant upon the proposition that a fraud in some sort was perpetrated by Judge Hughes upon the other heirs of the Wilcoxson estate through his concealment from them in the course of this transaction of the fact that he was an interested party with Silva in the purchase of the property. We attach no significance to this suggestion, since it nowhere appears, either that Judge Hughes used any advantage which his position as an heir or otherwise gave him to promote the transaction, apparently with Silva, but really in part with himself, to their injury; nor that the price which Silva offered for the property was not the fair and full value thereof according to the then estimation of the value of similarly situated lands. So far as the record discloses, the Wilcoxson heirs, who were the only parties who could have been injuriously affected by any concealment of Judge Hughes' interest in the transaction with Silva, have never complained, and hence it does not lie in the mouth of Mr. Silva, who jointly with Judge Hughes profited by the transaction, to urge that it was attended with any unfairness on the latter's part. The purchase of the Wilcoxson Point ranch having thus been consummated by the deed to Silva, dated March 15, 1899, the duty of paying the balance of the purchase price devolved apparently upon Silva in accordance with the understanding of the parties that the revenues to be derived from wood to be cut upon the land would suffice to pay its purchase price. Silva went into possession of the property and entered into various activities with respect to it, and also to other properties of like location and quality in the same region. He delivered wood to the river boats, and established a woodyard in Sacramento to which wood he had cut upon this and other properties in which he became interested was brought in launches or barges and there sold. Several years went by. The note which Judge Hughes had made to Adolphe Jean became due and was about to outlaw, when, in the year 1904, a new note was executed by Judge Hughes, and a new declaration of trust, in the main similar in terms to the former trust declaration, was executed by Silva. Several years more went by during which the activities of Silva were being extended in various directions and he was making considerable money, being aptly described by Judge Hughes in his deposition as "an energetic and thriving fellow." When the time arrived, in 1908, for the renewal of the Jean note, it was renewed by Judge Hughes by a writing to that effect upon it; but the declaration of trust was not then reexecuted by Silva. In the year 1911 the Jean note was paid by Silva out of funds which, according to the contention and testimony of Judge Hughes, had been derived by him from the proceeds of the property. During all of these years the relations of the parties continued to be of a friendly and confidential nature. Judge Hughes from time to time rendered legal services of various kinds to Silva in connection with his varied activities, and for which, according to the testimony of the former, he made no charge and received no pay. On the other hand, Silva from time to time, according to his testimony, loaned Judge Hughes money, furnished him wood, and contributed to his election expenses. In the year 1912 the Wilcoxson Point ranch, in common with other like properties in that region, became greatly increased in value by reason of reclamation projects undertaken by the federal and state governments, aided by private enterprise, and looking to the drainage, protection and reclamation of the lands of the Sutter Basin. As a result of this increase in value, Silva was able in the latter year to make a sale of this ranch to the Sutter Basin Company for the sum of $100,128.71. Not long thereafter Judge Hughes sought an accounting with Silva, but being unable to obtain it, began the present suit.

In his complaint herein, filed in December, 1913, Judge Hughes undertook to set forth in a single cause of action his claim that a trust relation had arisen and existed between himself and the defendant Silva in respect to four separate tracts of land, embracing in all 6,263 acres lying in the Sutter Basin, which it was asserted in said complaint had been purchased by the latter pursuant to an understanding and agreement between himself and the defendant that the latter was to hold the legal title thereto but that Hughes was to be the equitable owner of an undivided one-half interest in said lands, and that said defendant had subsequently sold all of said lands for the price of $50 per acre, realizing therefrom the sum of $313,168, or thereabouts, of which said sum the plaintiff was entitled to have an accounting and an equitable division of one-half thereof. The plaintiff subsequently filed an amended complaint amplifying the averments of his original pleading into five separate causes of action. The first of these causes of action related to the lands above referred to as the Wilcoxson Point ranch; the other causes of action had reference to other tracts of land alleged to have been purchased and held by the defendant Silva under a like understanding as that above detailed as to the Wilcoxson Point ranch. The prayer of the plaintiff was for an accounting as to each and all of these properties. The answer of the defendant put in issue all of the material averments of this amended complaint. In the meantime Judge Hughes died, and his widow, as the executrix of his last will and testament, was substituted as the plaintiff herein. Upon the trial of the action the court made its findings sustaining the plaintiff's contention as to the existence of a trust relation as to the Wilcoxson Point ranch, and as the result of an accounting taken as to said property and the proceeds thereof found and decreed that the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant the sum of $45,175.40, as being one-half of the net amount realized by said defendant as the result of his holding, management and disposition of the Wilcoxson Point ranch. As to the tracts of land referred to in the other counts of plaintiff's amended complaint the findings and judgment of the court were in the defendant's favor, and as to these the plaintiff was held entitled to take nothing.

[1] The defendant has appealed from said judgment in so far as the same is in the plaintiff's favor. A voluminous record has been presented upon said appeal. From the large mass of testimony presented by said record the foregoing statement as to the facts of this case has been prepared by us as embracing a summary which is in harmony with the findings of the court and which supports said findings, and which is in turn sustained by the testimony in the case. In so far, therefore, as the argument of the appellant upon this appeal is directed to his contention that the findings and judgment of the trial court are not supported by the evidence in the case, we hold without further discussion that this contention is without merit, in view of the substantial conflict in the testimony of the two original parties as to the facts pertaining to their relation and dealings in respect to the particular tract of land in question during a long series of years.

This brings us to a consideration of the appellant's several contentions as to the law of the case.

[2-4] The first of these is his contention that there is a variance between the plaintiff's amended complaint and the findings herein, in this, that said complaint is predicated upon the averment of an express trust in the lands in question, whereas the findings are predicated upon the fact that the parties engaged in a joint adventure for the purchase of said lands out of which a trust arose by operation of law. We are unable to discover the inconsistency of which the appellant complains. The findings of the court follow in almost their precise language the averments of the plaintiff's amended complaint. They then go further and set forth in hæc verba the two declarations of trust signed by Silva in connection with the loan from Adolphe Jean. That an oral understanding between two parties of the kind in question here may give rise to an enforceable trust in favor of one of them is abundantly supported by a long line of authorities in this state, of which the following are a few: Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 17 Pac. 689, 7 Am. St. Rep. 189; Bradley Co. v. Bradley, 165 Cal. 237, 131 Pac. 750; Younger v. Moore, 155 Cal. 768, 103 Pac. 221; Arnold v. Loomis, 170 Cal. 95, 148 Pac. 518; Lamb v. Lamb, 171 Cal. 577, 153 Pac. 913; Willats v. Bosworth, 33 Cal. App. 710, 166 Pac. 357; and in the case last-cited this court held that such a trust could at the same time be an express and a resulting trust, and that the fact that the trustee of such trust had made a written declaration of trust did not change the character of the trust itself, but merely furnished additional proof of its existence. The criticisms which the appellant herein aims at the two written declarations of trust executed by him in connection with the making and renewal of the plaintiff's note to Adolphe Jean thus lose much of their force; but, apart from this, they are not justified by the terms of these writings taken as a whole, for, while it is true that they were made with express reference to the transaction with Adolphe Jean, they both expressly declare the existence of a trust entitling the plaintiff to an equitable interest in the property in question, and in its proceeds in the event of a sale of such interest in order to pay said note, while the fact that the appellant and not the maker of the Jean note did eventually pay the same in no wise changes the situation, since according to the original understanding of the parties the entire purchase price of the property was to be paid out of itself, and this, according to the finding of the court, was what was actually and eventually done.

[5] The appellant's next contention is that the plaintiff's claim for accounting is barred by laches for the reason that between the years 1909 and 1913 he made no assertion of a claim of interest in the property nor made any demand for an accounting. The evidence abundantly shows, however, that during all these years the relation between the parties was intimate and cordial, consisting of interchanges of courtesies and services, and that down to a short time before the sale of the property its character and value had remained about the same as when it was purchased by them, and hence that there was no reason for a balancing of accounts between them. It was not, in point of fact, until the rather unexpected rise in the values of this and similarly situated property made its advantageous sale a possibility, and until it was actually sold to such advantage, that the occasion for an accounting and settlement between the parties arose; and it was only a short while after this that a demand for an accounting was made and refused and that the present action was instituted. We think the contention that the plaintiff was guilty of laches under these circumstances cannot be sustained.

The other contentions of the appellant herein we find upon a careful examination of the quite elaborate briefs of counsel to be either covered by the point that they are not reviewable because based upon conflicting evidence, or by the other points already discussed, or else that they are not of themselves of sufficient importance to warrant consideration or to justify a reversal of the case.

MATHEWS v. SAVINGS UNION BANK & TRUST CO. (STATE, Intervener).

(Civ. 2807.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑48—CONSTRUCTION FAVORING VALIDITY OF STATUTE.

Unless the language of a statute is express and unmistakable, courts will not attribute to the Legislature the purpose of invading the common right, and violating those fundamental constitutional provisions by which the individual is protected against arbitrary action by government.

2. ESCHEAT 🔑4—RIGHT OF OWNER TO BANK DEPOSIT AS AGAINST STATE AFTER TWENTY YEARS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1269a, 1273, and Bank Act, § 15, as amended in 1915, a bank deposit on which, except for interest, neither deposits nor withdrawals have been made for 20 years, may be taken by the state only in the absence of claim by the true owner or his representative, the limitation period of 20 years being merely jurisdictional, and investing the state treasurer with right to sue for the deposit in the superior court of Sacramento county.

3. ESCHEAT 🔑6—UNTIL SUIT TO ESCHEAT OWNER CAN RECOVER DEPOSIT IN BANK AFTER TWENTY YEARS.

Despite Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1269a, 1273, and Bank Act, § 15, as amended in 1915, until suit is brought by the Attorney General in the superior court of Sacramento county to recover for the state as an escheat a bank deposit on which no deposits or withdrawals have been made for 20 years, the court, having jurisdiction of an action by any one for property withheld by another without right, is open to the owner of the deposit as well after as before the expiration of the 20-year period.

4. PARTIES 🔑47—INTERVENTION MUST NOT RETARD PRINCIPAL SUIT.

An intervention must not retard the principal suit, nor delay the trial of the action, nor change the position of the parties.

5. STATUTES 🔑182—CONSTRUCTION TO AVOID UNCONSTITUTIONALITY AND PROMOTE JUSTICE.

The construction of a statute must be consistent with sound sense and wise policy, and with a view to promote justice.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Mack Mathews, administrator of the estate of William Anderson, deceased, against the Savings Union Bank & Trust Company, wherein the State intervened. From a judgment for the State, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Lovett K. Fraser, of San Francisco, Herbert V. Keeling, of Lakeport, and Ornbaun & Fraser, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank L. Guerena, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the State.

BRITTAIN, J. This appeal concerns the construction of sections 1269a and 1273 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and section 15 of the Bank Act, as they were amended in 1915. They relate to escheats of unclaimed bank deposits. The facts are admitted.

In 1868 William Anderson deposited with the Savings Loan Society Bank of San Francisco, the predecessor of the defendant, $1,500, which with the accumulations of interest grew to $12,525.12 by the 1st of January, 1917. Anderson died at his residence in Lake county in August, 1892. Under the provisions of section 15 of the Bank Act the defendant made report to the state treasurer that for 20 years prior to the 1st day of January, 1917, there had been neither deposit nor withdrawal of funds from the Anderson account, and no claim had been made nor address of the owner of the account filed within the 20-year period. On March 16, 1917, the public administrator of Lake county was granted letters of administration on the estate of Anderson, and on the day following he made demand upon the bank for payment of the deposit account, which being refused the administrator sued the bank at its place of business in San Francisco. The Attorney General intervened on behalf of the state. The judgment was against the plaintiff and in terms declared the money on deposit had escheated on January 1, 1917, nearly 9 months before the judgment was entered.

In this case there is no question of identity involved. The plaintiff, as the administrator of the estate of the depositor, stands in his shoes. His rights in regard to the money in question are neither greater nor less than those of the depositor. If, on December 31, 1916, either the depositor or the administrator of his estate had made demand on the bank, it was obligated to pay, because the money then on deposit rightfully belonged to the depositor or his estate. If payment had been refused, the superior court in San Francisco would have had jurisdiction of a suit against the bank, and upon the admitted facts its judgment must have been in favor of the depositor or his personal representative. Because the demand was not made until after January 1, 1917, the trial court determined, and the Attorney General here argues, that the moneys escheated on that day, that the right of the depositor to the immediate payment no longer existed, and that this result flowed from the amendments of 1915.

[1] So obnoxious to the sense of justice is the suggestion that the state may take for its own use the property of one of its citizens, without compensation and without hearing, that, unless the language of a statute is express and unmistakable, courts will not attribute to the co-ordinate law-making body the purpose of invading the common right and violating those fundamental constitutional provisions by which the individual is protected against arbitrary action on the part of the government. The language of the statutes here in question requires no such interpretation.

Section 1273 of the Code of Civil Procedure and section 15 of the Bank Act are correlative. They deal with bank deposits upon which, except for the accumulation of interest, neither deposits nor withdrawals have been made for a period of 20 years. The Bank Act provides that the moneys in such deposits—

> "which shall have remained unclaimed for more than twenty years * * * and where neither the depositor or any claimant has filed any notice with such bank showing his or her present residence, shall * * * be deposited with the state treasurer after judgment in the manner provided in the Code of Civil Procedure." Stats. 1915, p. 1106.

The general language of the Code section is the same, except that the last phrase reads "shall * * * escheat to the state." Code Civ. Proc. § 1273. The section then provides that, when the Attorney General shall learn of such deposits he shall bring suit in the superior court of Sacramento county, and that upon the trial, "if it be determined that the moneys * * * are unclaimed as hereinabove stated, then the court must render judgment in favor of the state declaring that said moneys have escheated," and commanding the bank to deposit the money with the state treasurer thereafter to be dealt with as other escheated property.

So careful is the state of the rights of its citizens that even after the adjudication, for a period of 5 years, any person not a party or a privy to the escheat judgment may sue the state to recover the money, and this time is extended to infants and persons of unsound mind for a period of one year after the removal of the disability. Code Civ. Proc. § 1272.

[2] In the suit commenced by the Attorney General any claimant may appear and present his claim of ownership. Code Civ. Proc. § 1273. The Attorney General argues that the only adverse claim which could prevail in the suit would be one based on the nonexistence of the very fact on which the suit is based, namely, that no claim had been made within the 20 years of dormancy. If this construction should be adopted, how unreliable would be the guaranty of justice contained in section 15 of the Bank Act, which provides that "any person interested may appear in such action and become a party thereto," and that "the court shall have full and complete jurisdiction over the state, and the said deposits, and of the person of every one having or claiming any interest in the said deposits, or any of them, and shall have full and complete jurisdiction to hear and determine the issues therein, and render the appropriate judgment thereon." This language is most appropriate to provide for a real trial of the claim of interest or ownership, and it is equally inappropriate to provide for a merely formal adjudication of the jurisdictional fact of nondemand for a period of 20 years. Just as the statute provides for a claim of ownership after the judgment, so does it provide for a claim of ownership after the Attorney General sues and before the judgment. Of course, a claim may be made by the owner against the bank at any time before the expiration of the 20 years. There necessarily must elapse a period of time between the expiration of the 20 years and the commencement of the state's suit. What are the rights of the owner of the money during that intermission?

[3] The Attorney General argues that after the expiration of the 20 years no court save that in Sacramento county has jurisdiction to make any order in relation to the deposit. The Bank Act provides that, when summons is issued under section 1273 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the clerk shall also issue a special notice directed to all persons, requiring them to appear within 60 days after the first publication of summons to show cause why the money should not be paid to the state treasurer. This notice must be published with the summons; that is, for a period not less than 4 weeks. Code Civ. Proc. § 1273. Under the Bank Act it is not until the completion of publication that jurisdiction vests in the Sacramento court. The duties of the Attorney General are many; the demands upon his office are great. There may be most cogent reasons for delay in the bringing of suits of this nature. The suit in Sacramento concerning this deposit was not commenced until July 30, 1917, 7 months after the expiration of the 20-year period.

Suppose the depositor had not died, but, returning from a far country, had been delayed by stress of weather, so that a demand which would have been honored on December 31st could not be presented until January 2d; suppose, further, that he was in sickness, that his family was in distress, or that the fund he had thriftily laid by against the day of his dire need alone would save him from the bankruptcy court; and, suppose the bank should pay him what rightfully was his—is it conceivable that the court in Sacramento would require the bank again to pay the amount of the deposit to the state? If the bank should refuse to pay upon such a demand, as it did in this case, would the admitted owner of the deposit be compelled to wait until the Attorney General should find time or be willing to open the door of the Sacramento court, so that he might as a defendant present his claim? Under such a rule he might be driven into bankruptcy, and he and his family become public charges. It would be no answer to say he might by the roundabout method of mandamus force the Attorney General to throw open the door of the Sacramento court. The rule that justice shall not be denied is no more sacred than is that which declares it shall not be delayed. Until suit is brought by the Attorney General in Sacramento county, the court having jurisdiction of an action by any one for property which another without right withholds, is open to the depositor, as well after as before the expiration of the 20-year period. In the exercise of its constitutional jurisdiction (article 6, § 5) the superior court in San Francisco had power to entertain the suit of the plaintiff, and its jurisdiction having attached, it necessarily had power to determine the substantial rights of the parties before it (Hibernia, etc., Soc. v. Lewis, 117 Cal. 577, 47 Pac. 602, 49 Pac. 714; Peck v. Jenness, 7 How. 612, 624, 12 L. Ed. 841).

[4] In the present case, in view of the fact that the enactments of 1915 had received no judicial interpretation, the bank refused to pay, and upon suit being brought submitted itself to the judgment of the court. Under the provisions of 1269a of the Code of Civil Procedure the Attorney General intervened in this action. That section was adopted at the same session of the Legislature at which the amendments under discussion were adopted, and no doubt to protect the interests of the state in the contingency of a claim being made in the interim which must elapse in every instance between the report of the bank and the commencement of the suit in Sacramento county. It provides that whenever the Attorney General is informed that property has escheated or is about to escheat, he may commence an action on behalf of the state to determine its rights to the property "or may intervene on its behalf in any action * * * and contest the rights of any claimant or claimants thereto." The statute does not say that upon his intervention the court in which the action is brought shall be divested of its jurisdiction pending the bringing and determination of another suit. There is no suggestion that any different rules of law shall apply to an intervention under this section of the Code than those which ordinarily control in such cases. It has been broadly stated that the intervener must take the suit as he finds it. A better statement is that the intervention must not retard the principal suit, nor delay the trial of the action, nor change the position of the parties. Hibernia, etc., Soc. v. Churchill, 128 Cal. 634, 61 Pac. 278, 79 Am. St. Rep. 73; Van Gorden v. Ormsby, 55 Iowa, 664, 8 N. W. 625; Boyd v. Heine, 41 La. Ann. 393, 6 South. 714; Mayer v. Stahr, 35 La. Ann. 57; Ragland v. Wisrock, 61 Tex. 391; Cahn v. Ford, 42 La. Ann. 965, 8 South. 477. The fact found by the court that after the commencement of this action the statutory suit was commenced by the Attorney General in Sacramento county had no bearing upon the determination of this case. Jurisdiction having attached, the court should have determined the issue of ownership of the money. Dunphy v. Belden, 57 Cal. 427; Sharon v. Sharon, 84 Cal. 424, 23 Pac. 1100.

[5] What has already been said concerning the question of jurisdiction applies equally to the substantial rights of the parties. A construction of section 1273 of the Code of Civil Procedure and section 15 of the Bank Act by which title to money on deposit would pass to the state absolutely on the expiration of 20 years, without compensation to the owner and without notice and hearing before his property should be taken, would be intolerable. Not only must a statute be construed, if possible, to avoid unconstitutionality, but the construction must be consistent with sound sense and wise policy, and with a view of promoting justice. San Joaquin, etc., Inv. Co. v. Stevinson, 164 Cal. 229, 128 Pac. 924; In re Mitchell, 120 Cal. 386, 52 Pac. 799; Merced Bank v. Casaccia, 103 Cal. 645, 37 Pac. 648.

In the present case the identity and death of the depositor are admitted and the appellant is the administrator of his estate. As the personal representative of the depositor he was entitled to payment of the deposit at any time the admitted facts were established. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1552, 1726, 1732. The facts were established by the findings in this action to which the state was a party. Upon the facts found the plaintiff was entitled to judgment. This conclusion is in consonance with the reasons underlying the decision of the Supreme Court in the somewhat similar case of People v. Roach, 76 Cal. 297, 18 Pac. 407.

The judgment is reversed.

MILLER v. BOYLE, Auditor of City and County of San Francisco. (Civ. 3089.)

1. Municipal Corporations 🔑214(2) — Board of Public Works Can Contract Specially with Architects.

Under its implied powers, the board of public works of the city and county of San Francisco is authorized in its discretion to secure by special contract the services of architects in any special case, as the projection of a schoolhouse, to prepare such plans and specifications as may be needed.

2. Municipal Corporations 🔑236—Board Can Contract with Architect without Calling for Bids.

The board of public works of the city and county of San Francisco was authorized to contract with an architect for the preparation of plans and specifications for a projected school house at the usual rate of compensation for such services in the city without calling for bids and awarding the contract to the lowest bidder.

Application for writ of mandate by J. R. Miller against Thomas F. Boyle, as Auditor of the City and County of San Francisco, etc. On demurrer to the petition. Writ directed to issue.

Cullinan & Hickey, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

George Lull, City Atty., and Maurice T. Dooling, Jr., Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondent.

J. G. De Forest, of San Francisco, amicus curiæ.

WASTE, P. J. This is an application by the petitioner, who is a duly licensed, certified, and authorized architect, for an alternative writ, to be directed to the defendant as auditor of the city and county of San Francisco, requiring him to approve a claim and demand of petitioner for the sum of $1,205.66, alleged to be due as fees for services as architect, rendered the city and county. The claim was properly presented and duly allowed and approved, until it reached the defendant, who declined to audit the same, upon the ground that the petitioner herein was not employed in accordance with the civil service provisions of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco, and that the claim is not for a regular, stated salary, or based on a per diem. He further contends that the contract for the preparation of the plans and specifications of the schoolhouse, and supervision of such construction, should have been let to the lowest bidder, in accordance with the provisions of sections 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18 of chapter 1 of article 6 of the charter. The facts behind the application are admitted to be correctly set forth in the petition. The matter is submitted to this court on questions of law, raised by the demurrer of respondent.

It appears that, by ordinance of the board of supervisors of the city and county, the board of public works is authorized in its discretion, to obtain plans, drawings, specifications, and details for the erection of public buildings for the city and county of San Francisco, to be erected under the supervision and direction of the board of public works, and for that purpose to engage the services of architects, either by selection or by competition. The method of competition in case the architects, for the purposes specified in the ordinance, are selected by competition is to be determined by the same board. Likewise, that board is authorized to pay for the preparation of details, plans, and drawings and necessary supervision of the work of construction a sum which (including the cost of the preparation of the contract, plans, and specifications) shall not exceed 6 per centum of the entire cost of the building to be constructed. The ordinance further authorizes the board of works to enter into contracts with architects for the purpose of engaging the services therein contemplated.

Another provision of the ordinance declares that nothing therein contained shall be deemed, or construed, as preventing the board of public works from appointing a city architect, or such persons as that board may deem necessary, to perform architectural services for the city and county, or to inspect and supervise the construction of public buildings; it being the intent and purpose of the ordinance, so it declares, to place in the discretion of the board of public works the manner and method of obtaining plans and specifications for public buildings, and the supervision of the construction thereof.

The board of education of the city, after proceedings duly and regularly had in that behalf, requested the board of public works to prepare plans and specifications for a certain schoolhouse, to be known as the Jefferson School, and to be constructed in and by the city and county. The board of public works thereupon, by resolution duly adopted, appointed petitioner, the architect, to prepare plans and specifications for such schoolhouse at an estimated cost of construction of approximately $100,000, and in and by said resolution it was provided that the fee of petitioner for such services should be 6 per cent. of the total cost of the construction of the said schoolhouse, and that the services of the petitioner should include the necessary supervision of construction. It was further agreed by and between the board of public works, acting for the city, and petitioner, prior to his entering into his work, that the fee of 6 per cent. should be paid at certain times and amounts, one-fifth of the fee to be paid upon completion and approval of the preliminary studies for the plans and specifications of the schoolhouse. It was likewise agreed that until the actual cost of the construction of the schoolhouse should be ascertained the payments on account of petitioner's fee were to be based on the estimated cost of the construction thereof.

Thereupon, petitioner prepared the preliminary studies for the plans and specifications of said schoolhouse. In the preparation of these studies for the plans and specifications petitioner used his own private office and materials and employed draftsmen and assistants, paying the cost of said materials and the wages of said draftsmen and assistants, out of his private funds. The estimated cost of the construction of the school, when the preliminary studies for its plans and specifications were completed, was $100,471.66. These preliminary studies for the plans and specifications were delivered to, and accepted and approved by, the board of education and the board of public works. Thereupon, petitioner presented, as before stated, to the proper officers of the city and county, his bill and demand, in proper form, for $1,205.66. That claim the auditor refuses to approve.

It appears as a fact in the case that the fee of 6 per cent. of the actual cost of the construction of the Jefferson School is not greater than the compensation paid to architects on similar employment in the city and county, and is the reasonable value of such services petitioner agreed to render. The fee of 6 per cent. and the times and amounts of progress payments, and the mode of payment, are the usual and customary mode, times, and amounts, respectively, of paying architects in the city and county of San Francisco, whether said architects be employed by the said city and county, or by private persons.

The board of public works of the city and county of San Francisco has charge, superintendence, and control, under such ordinances as are from time to time adopted by the supervisors, of the construction of any, and all, public buildings, and structures, under plans duly approved by the various departments, including all schoolhouses, and fire department buildings, and the repair and maintenance of any, and all, buildings and structures owned by the city and county. Charter of the City and County of San Francisco, subd. 6, § 9, c. 1, art. 6. The same board has power to employ such clerks, superintendents, inspectors, engineers, surveyors, deputies, architects, and workmen, as shall be necessary to a proper discharge of their duties under the article of the charter, and to fix their compensation; but no compensation of any of said persons shall be greater than is paid in the case of similar employments. Charter, § 3, c. 1, art. 6. The first question to be decided in this case is whether, by this language of the charter, the board of works is bound to engage architects exclusively as "employés," at stated monthly salaries, or at a given per diem, or whether it may engage an architect by special contract, to prepare plans and specifications at his own time and expense, for a stipulated fee based on the cost of the construction work to be planned and supervised by him.

[1] The board of public works may employ any number of architects, as it employs all needed clerical forces and workmen, necessary to a proper discharge of the duties imposed by the charter. It may also fix their compensation on a monthly basis. Charter, § 1, c. 4, art. 3. Such architects, when thus regularly employed, would, in our judgment, become employés of the city, and subject to the civil service provisions of the charter, except in the case of the city architect, with which case we are not now dealing. However, we do not find anything in the charter provisions, or in the general law, as we understand it, which will prevent the board of public works, in its discretion, securing the services of skillful architects, in any special case, to prepare such plans and specifications as may be needed. When the charter permits a certain result to be accomplished, but does not prescribe the means, any reasonable, or suitable, means may be adopted. A municipal board not only has the powers expressly enumerated in the organic act, but also those implied powers which are necessary to the exercise of the powers expressly granted, except in the instances where such implied power is expressly, or impliedly, prohibited. Harris v. Gibbins, 114 Cal. 418–421, 46 Pac. 292.

The right to employ an architect, and prepare plans and specifications, therefore, was incident to the general power of the city to erect schoolhouses. Dillon on Municipal Corporations, § 701; Spalding v. Chamberlain & Co., 130 Ga. 649, 61 S. E. 533. We find nothing in the charter which makes the employment of architects at a regular fixed salary, or per diem, the exclusive method by which the city might carry out this incidental power. The board of public works, clothed with general authority to construct and acting under the ordinance of the board of supervisors had power to accomplish a certain result, which could not be accomplished by it without the employment of other agencies, to wit, of architects, to prepare the plans and specifications for such erection. In this case, the charter not directly prescribing that such plans and specifications could only be prepared by such architects as might be regularly employed by the board of public works, it must be construed to afford opportunity for the adoption, as was said in Harris v. Gibbons, supra, "of any reasonable, and suitable, means."

[2] The claim of respondent that the contract between the board of public works, and the petitioner, should only have been awarded after compliance with the provisions of the charter, relative to letting contracts to the lowest bidder, has been disposed of adversely to his contention. The same cases also seem to establish that the board of public works, in employing a duly authorized architect, and upon the terms and conditions prevailing in the community, were adopting reasonable and suitable means, these decisions holding that the engagement of an architect to prepare plans and otherwise render services in connection with the erection of city buildings on a percentage basis is not in violation of the provisions of municipal charters requiring a written contract with the lowest and best bidders. "The reasonableness of such construction," said the court in one of these cases, "is most strikingly illustrated in the present case. An architect is an artist. His work requires taste, skill, and technical learning, ability of a high and rare kind. Advertising might bring many bids, but it is beyond peradventure that the lowest bidder would be least capable and most inexperienced and absolutely unacceptable. As well advertise for a lawyer or civil engineer for the city and intrust its vast affairs and important interests to the one who would work for the least money." Cudell v. Cleveland, 16 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. (N. S.) 374; Stratton v. Allegheny Co. et al., 245 Pa. 519, 91 Atl. 894; City of Newport News v. Potter, 122 Fed. 321, 58 C. C. A. 483; City of Houston v. Glover, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 177, 89 S. W. 425.

It being admitted that the terms and conditions of compensation provided in the contract entered into between the petitioner and the city are just and reasonable, and are the usual terms and conditions covering the rendition of similar services in this community, we are of the opinion that the petitioner is entitled to the relief sought.

Petitioner is also invoking the doctrine of estoppel, claiming that the city and county of San Francisco has received the benefit of his labor and expenditure of time and money, and should not now be heard to say that he should not be compensated. In view of the conclusion we have already announced, it is not necessary to rest our decision upon that contention, but we are of the opinion that what we said in a very recent case (Warren Bros. Co. v. Boyle, 183 Pac. 706) does apply to the facts of this case.

Let the writ issue as prayed for.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; BARDIN, Judge pro tem.

REID v. BOYLE, Auditor of City and County of San Francisco. (Civ. 3087.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑220(1)—ARCHITECT NOT EMPLOYÉ OR OFFICER DRAWING MONTHLY SALARY.

City architect exempted from civil service under City and County of San Francisco Charter, art. 13, § 11, subd. a, and appointed by resolution of board of public works to draw plans for and supervise construction of public buildings and improvements when directed to so do by the board, for a compensation specified in resolution, the resolution having been made pursuant to ordinance authorizing such board to obtain plans for erection of public buildings, was not, in the ordinary sense, an employé or officer of the city and was not required to be paid a fixed monthly salary under chapter 4, art. 3, § 1.

Mandamus by John Reid, Jr., against Thomas F. Boyle, as Auditor of the City and County of San Francisco, etc. Writ granted.

Cullinan & Hickey, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

George Lull, City Atty., and Maurice T. Dooling, Jr., Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondent.

J. G. De Forest, of San Francisco, amicus curiæ.

WASTE, P. J. In this proceeding, as was the case in Miller v. Boyle, 184 Pac. 421, this day decided, the petitioner is seeking an alternative writ of mandate directed to the respondent as auditor of the city and county of San Francisco, requiring him to audit a claim in the sum of $180, alleged to be due as architect's fees for the preparation of preliminary studies for plans and specifications for a residence building, for the use of the chief of the fire department of the city and county. The facts are in all particulars, with one essential difference, so similar to those presented in the Miller Case, supra, that we will only state the additional matter in controversy. The two cases were argued and submitted to us for decision upon the facts set forth in the petition, and the law as raised by the demurrer.

After the passage of the ordinance authorizing the board of public works, in its discretion, to obtain plans, drawings, specifications, and details for the erection of public buildings, referred to in the Miller Case, the board of supervisors of the city and county, by resolution regularly adopted, directed the board of public works to prepare plans and specifications for a building, suitable and adapted for residential purposes, for the chief engineer of the fire department of the city, and to submit the same, when so prepared, first to the board of fire commissioners, and then to the board of supervisors for approval and action thereon. Thereafter, by resolution, duly adopted, the board of public works, appointed John Reid, Jr., the petitioner here, city architect. The resolution provides:

> "That the duties of the city architect shall be to prepare plans and specifications for all public buildings, works, or improvements, for which the board of public works shall direct him to prepare such plans and specifications, and to supervise the construction of all public buildings, works, or improvements, the construction of which the board of public works shall direct him to supervise."

The resolution also provides:

> That the compensation of such city architect "shall be six per cent. of the total cost of the construction of the respective public buildings, works, or improvements, plans and specifications of which he shall so prepare, and the construction of which he shall so supervise; provided, however, that if he prepares the plans and specifications, when directed by the board of public works, as aforesaid, but is not directed to, or does not, supervise the construction of any particular public building, work, or improvement, his compensation in preparing such plans and specifications alone shall be four and one-half per cent. of the total cost of the construction of such building, work, or improvement."

The resolution then provides for partial payments as the work progresses, one-fifth of the entire compensation for the entire work to be paid upon the completion of the preliminary studies for plans and specifications for any particular public building. Until the actual cost of construction of any particular building, work, or improvement, shall be ascertained, the payments on account of such compensation of the city architect shall be based upon the estimated cost of the construction.

The resolution recites the authorization and direction to the board of public works, by the board of supervisors, to prepare plans and specifications for the fire chief's house, then directs the city architect to prepare plans and specifications for that building, and superintend its construction, his compensation for such services to be 6 per cent. of the total cost of the building, which total cost is estimated at $20,000. Further direction to prepare plans and specifications for the Galileo high school is contained in the resolution.

Immediately after the adoption of the resolution of the board of works last mentioned, the petitioner accepted such appointment as city architect, upon the terms stated in the said resolution, at once entered upon the performance of his duties as such, and ever since has been, and now is, the duly appointed and acting city architect of the city and county of San Francisco. In the discharge of these duties he thereafter prepared and completed the preliminary studies for plans and specifications of the fire chief's residence, the estimated cost of the construction of which, when said preliminary studies were completed, was found to be $15,000. The preliminary plans were delivered to, and accepted by, the board of public works. One hundred and eighty dollars is the correct amount of the installment of the fee due under the terms of his employment, which, as in the case of Miller v. Boyle, supra, are the identical terms of employment for architects engaged in the general practice of the profession of architecture in the city and county of San Francisco.

Under the provisions of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco (subdivision A, § 11, art. 13), the city architect is exempt from the provisions thereof relating to classification of employés by the civil service commission. The respondent in the instant case makes no contention, therefore, that the civil service provisions of the charter apply to petitioner, but bases his refusal to audit the claim on the ground that it arises out of a fee and compensation of an architect computed upon the cost of the construction of a public building. In other words, as we understand it, respondent's contention is that, under the provisions of the charter, the city architect is an employé of the city under the appointment by the board of public works, and that his compensation must be a fixed salary, payable monthly. He relies upon section 1, c. 4, art. 3, which, in part, reads:

> "The salaries and compensation of all officers, including policemen, and employés of all classes, and of all teachers in public schools, and others employed at fixed wages, shall be payable monthly."

No express provision is made by the charter of the city and county of San Francisco creating the office of city architect. The only reference to such position found in the charter is its enumeration in the list of positions exempted from the civil service provisions. No salary is fixed and no method of compensation is provided. Assuming, therefore, that under its implied powers it created such an office, there still remains the question as to how the compensation attached to the office shall be paid. There seems to be a reasonable analogy between the situation thus presented and the facts existing in the line of cases in which the right has been upheld of city councils and boards of supervisors of counties to employ special assistants, particularly for the rendition of legal services, and to compensate them by a certain amount of the amount recovered in litigation. We are not inclined to hold that the ordinance directing the board of public works, in its discretion, to obtain plans for public buildings of the city and the resolution of the board of public works appointing petitioner city architect can be held to make petitioner thereby an employé, or an officer of the city, in the ordinary sense, or an employment requiring a definite fixed monthly compensation. His duties are to prepare plans and specifications only for such public buildings, works, or improvements as may be directed by the board of public works, and for a compensation already agreed upon and fixed by resolution. Until the board directs performance of the services, and they are performed, no claim arises against the city by virtue of the office. Nothing contained in oral argument, or in the briefs of the parties, causes us to waver in our opinion that, under such circumstances, the board of public works adopted a reasonable and a customary means of availing itself of the services of petitioner. Under the facts of the instant case the question whether or not petitioner holds the position styled "city architect" is a false quantity for consideration.

No reason presents itself to us why the city was not empowered by its charter to enter into the arrangement made with the petitioner. Having done so, through its authorized agency, the board of public works, and petitioner, with his own private organization, having performed his part of the contract, the fruits of which have been accepted by the city, petitioner is entitled to compensation for his work.

If, in the judgment of the board of public works, which has full power and authority over such matters, the employment of petitioner was proper and in accord with the conduct of such business in the community, the compensation agreed upon appearing to be just and reasonable, we see no reason why petitioner is not entitled to have his claim audited.

What we said in the case of Miller v. Boyle, supra, disposes of all other contentions made by the respondent.

Let the writ issue as prayed for.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; BARDIN, Judge pro tem.

DUPES v. DUPES. (Civ. 2951.)

1. Divorce 🔑186 — Dismissal of appeal for contumacy of appealing defendant wife.

In view of the nature of the action, an appeal from a judgment granting a husband divorce and custody of minor children, who were later placed in a children's home by order of court, will not be dismissed because the wife wrongfully secured possession of the minor children and removed them from the jurisdiction.

2. Divorce 🔑184(4, 6, 7)—Trial court exclusive judge of credibility of witnesses.

In a divorce suit, the trial court is the exclusive judge of all questions of credibility of witnesses and weight of evidence, and on appeal will be assumed to have considered all such evidence in the light of such rules laid down by law for the guidance of court and jury.

3. Divorce 🔑184(6) — Decision as to cruelty reversed only when without substantial support in evidence.

Whether acts and conduct constitute such cruelty as warrants granting a divorce is a question of such nature that the conclusion of the trial court is necessarily entitled to great weight, and it is only where it is without any substantial support in evidence that it will be disturbed on appeal.

4. Appeal and error 🔑757(3)—Objection to evidence not reviewable when part objected to not in brief.

Where appellant made no attempt to print in the briefs any portion of the testimony relative to, or having even the most remote bearing on, alleged errors with reference to rulings on matters of evidence, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, the appellate court is under no compulsion to examine a voluminous record with reference to alleged errors in admission of evidence.

5. Divorce 🔑184(12)—Error in admitting evidence as to mother-in-law harmless.

In an action by a husband for divorce on the ground of wife's extreme cruelty, where he maintained that his mother-in-law exercised an immoral control over his wife, held, that error in allowing too wide a latitude in the examination of witnesses relative to the character and conduct of the mother-in-law was harmless; the matter being collateral.

6. DIVORCE 🔑27(14) — WHETHER ABSENCE CONSTITUTES EXTREME CRUELTY.

Whether specific absence of one spouse from the family home without consent of the other constitutes extreme cruelty depends on the facts and circumstances of each particular case.

7. DIVORCE 🔑27(18)—EXTREME CRUELTY IS QUESTION OF FACT.

Whether any particular acts or course of conduct constitutes extreme cruelty, warranting granting of a divorce, is a question of fact to be deduced from the circumstances of each case.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by T. W. Dupes against Eugenia N. Dupes. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

MacKnight & Fitzgerald and P. N. Myers, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. J. Emmons and Chas. N. Sears, both of Bakersfield, and T. C. Gould, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BARDIN, Judge pro tem. The plaintiff instituted an action against the defendant for divorce upon the ground of extreme cruelty. The defendant denied the allegations of cruelty and cross-complained against plaintiff, seeking a decree of divorce upon the grounds of extreme cruelty, habitual intemperance, and willful neglect. Judgment was for the plaintiff, and he was awarded the custody of the two minor children of the parties. Two proceedings have already been disposed of by the higher courts of the state involving the custody of these children. In re Dupes, 31 Cal. App. 698, 161 Pac. 276; Dupes v. Superior Court, 176 Cal. 440, 168 Pac. 888.

[1] Before taking up the consideration of this appeal from the judgment of the lower court upon its merits, it will first be proper to dispose of a motion to dismiss the present appeal because of the claim of respondent that appellant has so interfered with the custody of said children, since taking the appeal, that she has placed herself in contempt of the order of the superior court of the county of Kern, sitting as a juvenile court, and ought not, therefore, be permitted to press her appeal to a conclusion upon its merits. A number of reasons are urged for the dismissal of the appeal, but the only one meriting the particular attention of this court relates to alleged willful and contumacious conduct on the part of the appellant with reference to the custody of the children of the parties to this action.

Briefly, the facts, stated in form of affidavit, surrounding such alleged misconduct of the appellant, which, since they are not denied, may, for the purpose of this discussion, be assumed to be true, are these: Very shortly after the decision in Re Dupes, supra, the juvenile court of Kern county, by its order, caused these unfortunate children to be placed in the custody of the Children's Shelter of the city of Bakersfield; C. P. Badger, truant officer of that county, having direct charge of them, pending the hearing of a petition placed before it to have them declared wards of that court. Leave was given the appellant by the judge of the juvenile court to visit the children on January 17, 1918; but, in violation of the terms of that permission and in contempt of the order of said juvenile court, the appellant took possession of said children and shortly thereafter removed them, it is believed, from the jurisdiction of the state of California, as the whereabouts of defendant and of the two children has ever since been unknown to plaintiff and to said court, although plaintiff has expended a large amount of money and has been very diligent in endeavoring to ascertain their whereabouts.

The point made for the dismissal of the appeal is not different in principle from that urged for the dismissal of three appeals in the case of Vosburg v. Vosburg, 131 Cal. 628, 63 Pac. 1009, and on the authority of that case the motion to dismiss the appeal must be denied. Not only are we guided to this end by the sound logic of that particular case, but also by the analogous case of Johnson v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 578. And we may here add that consideration for the welfare of the minors and of their probable ultimate disposition, as well also the interest the state has in the maintenance of the marital state, require that appeals involving the merits of such actions should not be dismissed, except upon clear authority so to do.

In Deyoe v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 476, 74 Pac. 28, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73, Mr. Justice Angellotti, speaking for the court, said:

> "While an action to obtain a decree dissolving the relation of husband and wife is nominally an action between two parties, the state, because of its interest in maintaining the same, unless good cause for its dissolution exists, is an interested party. It has been said by eminent writers upon the subject that such an action is really a triangular proceeding, in which the husband and the wife and the state are parties."

And in McBlain v. McBlain, 77 Cal. 507, 20 Pac. 61, it is stated that:

> "The parties to the action are not the only people interested in the result thereof. The public has an interest in the result of every suit for divorce, the policy and the letter of the law concur in guarding against collusion and fraud, and it should be the aim of the court to afford the fullest possible hearing in such matters."

The cases cited in support of the motion to dismiss the appeal are from other jurisdictions, and are directed to the contumacious conduct of the husband relative to the payment of money for the prosecution of the wife's cause of action, or for alimony, or such kindred matters. As stated in the note to the case of Brown v. Brown, 22 Wyo. 316, 140 Pac. 829, in 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1119:

> "Some of the courts lay down the rule that the proper remedy for failure * * * to comply with an order of the trial court for the payment of counsel fees, etc., is by dismissal of the appeal or suspension of final judgment" (citing cases).

But other courts have adopted rules analogous to and in support of the principle stated in Vosburg v. Vosburg, supra. See Eastes v. Eastes, 79 Ind. 363; Dwelly v. Dwelly, 46 Me. 377.

[2, 3] Numerous charges of misconduct on the part of the wife are made in plaintiff's complaint, but the principal allegations thereof relate to defendant's departure from the home of plaintiff and defendant with one of their children of very tender years, under peculiar and unwarranted circumstances, the plaintiff not being advised as to her whereabouts or that of the child until her return to Bakersfield after an absence of over four months, and that shortly after her return she suffered a miscarriage by reason of her own willful act, being actuated by the desire to conceal from plaintiff her sinful and adulterous conduct while away from him. The plaintiff also alleged in his complaint that the defendant permitted plaintiff's mother-in-law to exercise an immoral influence and control over her, subverting her morals, undermining her character, and causing her to pursue a course of apparent illicit intimacy with other men.

It will serve no useful purpose to go into a detailed survey of the evidence produced to substantiate the husband's charges, and which the trial court by its findings found to be true, only a portion of which are here referred to. Suffice it to say, in a general way, that the findings are responsive to the pleadings and are sufficiently supported by substantial evidence, and, where necessary, corroborated as required by section 130 of the Civil Code, and that the trial judge was fully warranted in his view of the merits of the case, so far as we can discover from the cold pages of the transcript.

The plaintiff's charge, found to be true, that the wife had suffered a miscarriage by reason of a self-inflicted abortion, giving birth to a fetus of such growth as to preclude the belief that conception had taken place by reason of the accessibility of the plaintiff, was sufficiently corroborated. The probable age of the evacuated fetus was testified to by the surgeon called in to administer to defendant. The husband's testimony of the admission on the part of the wife as to the instrument which she had used, was corroborated by the discovery by a third party of such instrument in defendant's home, which, by the testimony of another physician, was proven to be well suited to the operation complained of.

The following language from the learned author of the opinion in the case of Robinson v. Robinson, 159 Cal. 203, 113 Pac. 155, is relevant to the present case:

> "The trial court was the exclusive judge of all questions of credibility of witnesses and weight of evidence, and must be assumed to have considered all the evidence given in the light of such rules as are laid down by the law for the guidance of court and jury in the determination of questions of fact. It should further be borne in mind that the question whether acts and conduct constitute such cruelty as, under all the circumstances shown, warrants the granting of a divorce, is of such a nature that the conclusion of the trial court is necessarily entitled to great weight, and it is only where it is clear that it is without any substantial support in the evidence that it will be disturbed on appeal."

The defendant has assigned a number of errors claimed to have been committed by the trial court in the admission and exclusion of evidence, and which, it is contended, warrants a reversal of the judgment.

[4] The reporter's transcript of the testimony in this case embraces 852 pages of typewritten matter. No attempt was made to print in the briefs of the appellant any portion of the testimony relative to, or having even the most remote bearing upon, the alleged errors of the court with reference to rulings upon matters of evidence, as required by section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure. While this court does not feel under any compulsion to examine the very voluminous record with reference to these alleged errors referred to in the briefs of appellant, it has, nevertheless, done so under the feeling that the welfare of two children is vitally concerned, and that this is an action in which the state is also an interested party, and that to require counsel now to file a supplement to appellant's brief would be to entail further delay.

[5] After a careful examination of each of such asserted grounds of error, we cannot find error of any substantial weight. We are inclined to believe that there was too wide a departure from the issues of the case permitted in the examination of witnesses relative to the character and conduct of the mother-in-law of plaintiff, but such error, being upon a collateral matter, is of no grave importance.

[6] The court did not commit error in admitting evidence in support of the allegation concerning defendant's departure from the family home. Smith v. Smith, 62 Cal. 466, does not purport to establish a rule of evidence, nor attempt to state a positive rule of law to be applied to other like cases where the conditions are not identical. Whether or not any specific absence of one spouse from the family home, without the knowledge or consent of the other, constitutes extreme cruelty, depends entirely upon facts and circumstances of each particular case. In the instant case, however, the mere absence of the defendant from the family home without plaintiff's consent is not made the basis of his cause of action. That is but a single element in the theory of plaintiff's case.

[7] Whether or not any particular acts or course of conduct constitutes extreme cruelty within the meaning of the law is a question of fact to be deduced from all the circumstances of each case. Barnes v. Barnes, 95 Cal. 171, 30 Pac. 298, 16 L. R. A. 660.

Certain of the findings of the court, beside that already stated, are made the object of attack as not having the proper support in the evidence. Commenting briefly upon these criticisms, we may say that an examination of the record of the case shows such attacks to be without merit. There was sufficient evidence to show that the defendant left her home against the will and over the protest of the plaintiff; that the defendant's mother was an inmate of the home of plaintiff and defendant, and was permitted to exercise an evil influence over her daughter; that in the absence of plaintiff the defendant was in the habit of inviting men who were strangers to plaintiff to the home of plaintiff and defendant; that defendant was in the habit of frequenting dances and associating with persons unknown to plaintiff; and that defendant suffered the miscarriage already referred to in order to conceal from plaintiff her condition of pregnancy for which plaintiff was not responsible. These findings are sustained by the testimony of either the husband with proper corroboration, or by the testimony of other witnesses.

The claim of counsel for defendant that the findings against the truth of certain of the allegations contained in her cross-complaint are not sustained by the evidence may be dismissed with the remark that, since the trial court was the judge of the credibility of the witnesses below, who gave conflicting testimony upon the subject of defendant's allegations, this court cannot now weigh the evidence in order to see where the preponderance of proof lay.

PARK v. ORBISON. (Civ. 3011.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑705(5)—DRIVER OF AUTOMOBILE INJURING PEDESTRIAN NEGLIGENT.

Defendant, who ran plaintiff down at a busy street intersection, held negligent in operating his automobile at a speed in excess of 10 miles an hour while his wind shield was obscured by rain, etc.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑705(2)—DRIVERS OF AUTOMOBILES AND PEDESTRIANS MUST USE ORDINARY CARE TO AVOID INJURY.

While pedestrians walking across busy public streets are required to use ordinary care, drivers of vehicles must also use ordinary care to prevent injuries to pedestrians.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑705(10)—PEDESTRIAN CAN PRESUME THAT OPERATOR OF VEHICLE WILL OBSERVE LAW.

A pedestrian crossing a busy street has the right to presume that a motorist will not approach, either on the wrong side of the street or at an excessive rate of speed, and will endanger him without warning in violation of Vehicle Act 1913, §§ 12, 20, and 22.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑706(7)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF PEDESTRIAN JURY QUESTION.

Plaintiff, a pedestrian, who was run down by a motor vehicle proceeding at an excessive rate of speed on the wrong side of the street, held not contributorily negligent as a matter of law in failing to keep a lookout for vehicles coming from the direction from which the defendant's motor approached, where plaintiff had no reason to anticipate injury; the question of his negligence being one of fact.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑996—FINDINGS OF FACT ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE CONCLUSIVE.

A finding of fact by the trial court on a question from which conflicting inferences might be drawn is conclusive on appeal.

6. TRIAL 🔑90—COUNSEL SHOULD MOVE TO STRIKE OUT OBJECTIONABLE PORTION OF ANSWER.

Where a question was answered without objection, counsel if deeming the answer objectionable, should move to strike out the objectionable portion.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑237(2) — WHERE QUESTION WAS ANSWERED WITHOUT OBJECTION MOTION TO STRIKE NECESSARY TO REVIEW.

Where counsel failed to move to strike objectionable portions of an answer, the question having been answered without objection, the matter is not available in the appellate court though counsel, after the question was answered, made objections.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by Andrew Park against Thomas J. Orbison. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
Wheaton A. Gray, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BARDIN, Judge pro tem. Plaintiff was awarded a judgment for $1,000 for damages suffered by him through the alleged negligent operation of an automobile of the defendant at the intersection of Hill and First streets in the city of Los Angeles. The defendant denied negligence upon his part, and in further defense to the action pleaded affirmatively the contributory negligence of the plaintiff.

The accident took place on the evening of December 16, 1914, at about the hour of 7 o'clock p. m. and at a time when it was dark and stormy. The plaintiff was proceeding eastward on the south side of First street and intended to cross Hill street at its intersection with First street. When he reached the outer edge of the sidewalk and before stepping out into Hill street proper, he looked and listened for approaching vehicles coming from both directions on that street. He was carrying a typewriter in his hands at the time, and lap robe over his shoulders. At about 200 feet to the north of the intersection of the streets referred to, the traffic on Hill street is accommodated by two tunnels, one for the use of a railway and the other for the use of automobiles and pedestrians. Plaintiff testified that he heard the sound of an automobile emerging from the tunnel to the north and coming towards him, and that he saw, near the intersection of Hill and Second streets, which would be to the south and approximately 400 feet distant, the light of an automobile approaching from that direction. Estimating that he had an abundance of time to cross the street without danger from the machine approaching from his right, he continued his journey across Hill street, with his eyes fixed upon the machine approaching from his left, and which was close at hand. At the instant the plaintiff reached the center of Hill street, which at that point is 56 feet wide from curb to curb, he looked to his right, that is, to the south, and saw the flare of the light of the automobile driven by the defendant, and attempted to escape the impending danger by stepping backward. When he first observed this machine it was distant, so plaintiff testified, about 15 or 20 feet and coming rapidly towards him. Plaintiff heard no warning of its approach, and it is not claimed by the defendant that any such warning was given. The effect of its projected light was overcome by the light of cars approaching from the opposite direction. The particular street crossing was well lighted at the time by street lights.

The plaintiff, unable to escape collision, was knocked down and received personal injuries for which, and for loss of earnings by reason thereof, the court awarded him judgment.

The plaintiff, a lawyer and publisher by occupation, stated that he was, at the time of the accident familiar with the terms of the statute regulating the use of motor-driven vehicles upon streets and highways and believed that he was exposed to no danger from any vehicle approaching from the south until he had passed the center of the street.

It may be stated that the automobile tunnel already referred to is situate at the east side of Hill street, the west wall of which projects 23 feet out into the street. By reason of this, all automobiles using this tunnel are accustomed to make the east side of Hill street in the near vicinity of the tunnel, the principally traveled part of that highway, such use extending to about the intersection of First street, of which practice both parties to the action were familiar.

The defendant testified that at the time of the accident he was traveling very slowly and on the right-hand side of the street. The evidence is sharply conflicting upon both these elements. An eyewitness to the accident estimated the speed of defendant's automobile at that time to be at the rate of from 10 to 12 miles per hour, while the plaintiff testified the rate to be from 15 to 20 miles per hour. If the offending machine traveled as far as 400 feet, or substantially that distance, while the plaintiff was walking from the curb to the center of the street, a distance of 28 feet, it follows that the speed of defendant's automobile had, at least immediately previous to the accident, been very rapid. It is very plainly shown by direct and indirect evidence produced at the trial that the defendant was not traveling on his right-hand side of the street as claimed, and that the plaintiff was struck while at a point west of the center of Hill street.

[1] It appears very clear to us that the defendant did not operate his automobile at the time of the accident in a careful and prudent manner and with due regard for the safety of pedestrians. His view of the crossing at the intersecting streets was obscured and obstructed by reason of the condition of his wind shield because of the falling rain, yet, notwithstanding this, he was traveling at a rate of speed in excess of one mile in six minutes. He blindly ran his machine across these intersecting streets where pedestrians might very well be expected to be. He did not see the plaintiff until it was too late to avoid striking him. He sounded no warning of his approach at the street crossing. He was not traveling upon his right-hand side of the street as the statute and common usage required, and there was no obstruction or condition of the street requiring his departure from this rule of the road. The evidence abundantly supports the findings of the trial court as to the defendant's negligence.

[2] It is insisted that the plaintiff should be precluded from recovering in this action for the reason that his conduct clearly established contributory negligence in that it was plaintiff's duty to keep a sharp lookout for the approach of vehicles coming from both directions and at all times and at every point while crossing the street; and that, having seen the lights of automobiles coming from both his left and his right, he should have kept a lookout for both approaching machines, although he had not passed the center line of the street at the time of the accident.

While it is true that pedestrians walking across busy public streets are required to use ordinary care to see that they do not collide with or are run over by vehicles, it is likewise true that the drivers of vehicles must use ordinary care to prevent injury to pedestrians under such circumstances. Brown v. Brashear, 22 Cal. App. 135, 133 Pac. 505; Wiezorek v. Ferris, 176 Cal. 353, 167 Pac. 234.

[3-5] The scene of the accident was in the business section of a populous city. The plaintiff did as a prudent man would have done under like circumstances. He was justified in his belief that he had ample time to at least reach the center of Hill street before there could be any danger coming from his right. He was warranted in believing that any machine approaching from that direction would, as required by law, and in conformity with the customary usage of the street at that particular place by reason of the local conditions well known to both plaintiff and defendant, and already referred to, travel on the east side of Hill street. And he furthermore was entitled to the assurance that the driver of any vehicle approaching from his right would use such care and circumspection as the circumstances required, and that such machine would not approach at an excessive rate of speed nor endanger him without warning. Vehicle Act 1913, §§ 12, 20, and 22; Stats. 1913, c. 326. For the trial court to have held as a matter of law that the plaintiff's conduct was such as to constitute negligence under the circumstances set out would have required the adoption of a standard of care and circumspection on the part of a pedestrian crossing intersecting streets not in accord with the customary use of streets by pedestrians under like circumstances, nor obedient to any rule of law which has been brought to our attention.

The cases of Niosi v. Empire Laundry Co., 117 Cal. 257, 49 Pac. 185, and Brown v. Pacific Electric Railway Co., 167 Cal. 199, 138 Pac. 1005, do not justify the contentions made by appellant on this particular point. The question of whether the conduct of plaintiff, upon the occasion referred to, amounted to negligence or not, is to be determined from the attendant circumstances. He was not bound to look and listen for approaching vehicles when he started across the street, regardless of the circumstances of his environment. There might well be circumstances when to fail to do so would amount to negligence. Mann v. Scott, 182 Pac. 281, decided June 13, 1919. And for like reasons it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that plaintiff was negligent in not keeping a vigilant lookout for approaching machines coming from both directions before he reached the center of the street.

But in the instant case the evidence shows that, whether required by any positive rule of law or not to look and listen for approaching vehicles coming from both directions before crossing the street, the plaintiff did in fact so act. It is true that he did not look to his right again until he reached the center of the street; but, as a reasonably prudent man, he was justified in this conduct by reason of the attendant circumstances. Not only had he estimated that he had ample time to cross the street before he would be liable to any danger from the defendant's automobile on account of its relatively great distance from him when he took up his journey across the street, but he had the right to assume that the driver of that machine would perform his duty and obey the law. Harris v. Johnson, 174 Cal. 55, 161 Pac. 1155, L. R. A. 1917C, 477, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 560; Scott v. San Bernardino Valley, etc., Co., 152 Cal. 604, 93 Pac. 677.

The question of plaintiff's alleged contributory negligence was a question for the trial court, and the following language from the somewhat similar case of Blackwell v. Renwick, 21 Cal. App. 131, 131 Pac. 94, may well be applied to this case:

> "In this case, under the state of the evidence, as we have briefly summarized it, it became the duty of the court to determine the question as to the negligence of the defendant and as to whether plaintiff was, under all of the circumstances shown, guilty of contributory negligence, and with the conclusions thereon made, under the authorities, an appellate court cannot interfere."

[6, 7] There is no merit in the claim that the court committed error in admitting hearsay evidence when it permitted the plaintiff to testify as to the effect attacks of dizziness, stated to have resulted from the injury complained of, had upon his mental feelings. The question was a proper one, and not objected to. In answer to this question it was testified that upon one occasion, a considerable time after the accident, when attacked by dizziness, plaintiff saw a former business associate with a broad smile upon his face, who asked the plaintiff "where he had gotten his drink." Counsel for the defendant was silent until the question had been fully answered, and then said, "We object to that as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial." The claim is now made that a portion of the answer was hearsay and was a conclusion of the witness and too remote in time to be admissible at all. The proper remedy was for counsel for the defendant to have made a motion at the time this testimony was given to strike out the objectionable portion of the answer, if it contained any such matter. People v. Swist, 136 Cal. 520, 69 Pac. 223; People v. Cole, 141 Cal. 88, 74 Pac. 547. Having failed to avail himself of the remedy at hand, defendant may not now complain, even though the objection made at the trial be now subject to amendment so as to include grounds of objection not then stated, which, of course, cannot be granted. The portion of the answer now criticized, while perhaps not directly responsive to the question, was relevant and material to the issue of damages.

BECK et al. v. RANSOME-CRUMMEY CO. et al. (Civ. 2880.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 14, 1919. Rehear-Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 9, 1919.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑290(1)—ASSESSMENT FOR IMPROVEMENTS INVALID WHERE LOCAL BOARD HAD NO JURISDICTION.

Owner attacking assessment on ground that local board failed to acquire original jurisdiction may rest on the constitutional guaranty that his property may not be taken without due process of law.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑488, 489(5)—WHERE ASSESSMENT VOID, OWNER NEED NOT APPEAL BUT RESIST ENFORCEMENT ON JURISDICTIONAL GROUNDS.

If the invalidity of the initial resolution of intention is apparent on its face, the owner is not required to seek its correction by appeal to the council, but may stand upon his rights whenever an attempt is made to assert any claim based on a void assessment.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑251—DUE PROCESS OF LAW AS A DEFENSE.

Constitutional guaranty against taking of property without due process of law is always and everywhere present to protect the citizen against arbitrary interference with his rights.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑251—"DUE PROCESS OF LAW" DEFINED.

"Due process" of law is the exact equivalent of the "law of the land" as used in the Magna Charta, and, broadly speaking, means that before a man's life, liberty, or property may be taken by the state, he must be given notice of the proceedings which may terminate in the taking, and be given an opportunity to be heard in his own defense, the notice to be a real and reasonable one, and the hearing such as ordinarily or at least reasonably is given in similar cases.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Due Process of Law.]

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑278(1)—PERFORMANCE OF INITIAL STATUTORY ACT NECESSARY TO DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

If the statute requires, as the initial step in the process of depriving a man of his property, the performance of a specifically defined act, that act must be performed substantially, or no jurisdiction exists for further action in that proceeding against him.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑408(1)—ACTS REGARDING SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS TO BE LIBERALLY CONSTRUED.

Legislative acts regarding special assessments for public improvements are to be liberally construed.

7. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑309(1)—SUMMONS NOT IN COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE WANTING IN DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

If any statement expressly required by Code Civ. Proc. § 407, to be made in summons, is entirely omitted, service of summons does not give the court jurisdiction to proceed against the defendant; such service not constituting the notice to defendant essential to due process of law.

8. PROCESS 🔑104—COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE NECESSARY FOR CONSTRUCTIVE SERVICE.

Where constructive service is permitted, the substantial requirements of the statute regarding the matters to be stated in the published notice must be fulfilled.

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑513(7)—BURDEN ON THE STATE TO SHOW NOTICE OF PROCEEDINGS FOR STREET IMPROVEMENT.

The burden is on the state, and those claiming under it adversely to the individual pursuant to proceedings for street improvements under the Vrooman Act, to show that the individual had notice of the proceedings; notice in such case being implied from publication.

10. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS 🔑1—PUBLIC POLICY REQUIRES ENFORCEMENT OF STATUTE.

Statutes of limitations are upheld and enforced regardless of personal hardship because public policy requires it.

11. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑450(1)—FILING OF MAP AND REFERENCE THERETO IN RESOLUTION OF INTENTION MANDATORY.

In street pavement proceedings under Vrooman Act, the filing of map or plat showing territory to be included in assessment district, and the reference thereto in resolution of intention under St. 1913, p. 406, are mandatory and jurisdictional requirements.

12. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⚷289—OMISSION OF STATUTORY REQUIREMENT IN PROCEEDING FOR STREET IMPROVEMENTS RENDERS IT INVALID.

Where a clear statutory requirement is omitted from the initial resolution or process which is the means of imparting notice of proceedings, the rule of liberal construction must yield to the constitutional guaranty of due process of law.

13. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚷321(1)—FINDING THAT RESOLUTION OF INTENTION IS SUFFICIENT CONCLUSIVE.

If, in resolution of intention in improvement proceedings, there is not an entire omission of a statutory requirement, but merely a defect, a court may properly determine there has or has not been a substantial compliance with the statute; the trial court's determination being controlling in absence of abuse of discretion.

14. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚷488, 489(5)—REQUIREMENT FOR FILING MAP OF IMPROVEMENT JURISDICTIONAL.

Owner's failure to object to street improvement proceedings on ground that map or plat was not filed or referred to resolution of intention was not waiver of the objection, under Vrooman Act, § 5½; such requirements affecting jurisdiction to which the statute has no application.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; Beasly, Judge.

Action by Fred Beck and others against the Ransome-Crummey Company and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

R. M. F. Soto, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Louis Oneal and Beggs & McComish, all of San Jose, for respondents.

BRITTAIN, J. Fred Beck, with 32 other property owners of San Jose, obtained a judgment against the Ransome-Crummey Company and the city treasurer of that city quieting the title to their respective lands as against any claim of lien, and enjoining the issuance of bonds, based upon work done by the Ransome-Crummey Company, under proceedings taken by the city council, for paving and otherwise improving north Thirteenth street in San Jose from Santa Clara street to the northerly limits of the city. The defendants appeal. The city treasurer has no personal interest in the controversy.

The appellants do not make any clear and direct attack upon the judgment, except that, the suit being one in equity, the judgment should be reversed on the authority of Coleman v. Spring Construction Co., 182 Pac. 473. The portion of that decision to which reference is made was to the effect that a property owner may not permit public work to be done and thereafter attack the validity of the jurisdictional proceedings leading to the assessment. The statement was unnecessary to the decision of the case, which involved the question of original jurisdiction. Further hearing was denied by the Supreme Court, with an expression of its disapproval of the statement. Coleman v. Spring Construction Co., 182 Pac. 473.

[1, 2] When an assessment is attacked on the ground that the local board failed to acquire original jurisdiction, the owner may rest on the constitutional guaranty that his property may not be taken without due process of law. If jurisdiction is lacking, no equities asserted by the contractor can prevail. Schwiesau v. Mahon, 110 Cal. 543, 42 Pac. 1065; Heft v. Payne, 97 Cal. 108, 31 Pac. 844. If the invalidity of the initial resolution of intention is apparent on its face, the owner is not required to seek its correction by appeal to the council. He may stand upon his rights whenever an attempt is made to assert any claim based on an assessment void on its face. City Security Co. v. Harvey, 176 Cal. 682, 169 Pac. 380. In this case the respondents maintain the resolution of intention was void because it provided for a district assessment and made no reference to a map of the district required to be on file when the resolution was adopted. On each side of this question the usual argument, supported by the usual citation of multitudinous authorities from this and other states, is made.

This court recently had occasion to analyze the able opinion written by Mr. Justice Shaw of the Supreme Court in the leading case of Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 362, 80 Pac. 81. Hearing was granted by the Supreme Court and is now pending in the case in which this analysis was made. Watkinson v. Vaughn, 28 Cal. App. Dec. 657.[1] Reference to the opinion of this court in Watkinson v. Vaughn is not, therefore, in present reliance upon it as an authority, but to avoid incorporating in this opinion a further analysis of Chase v. Trout.

Doubt existing in the minds of public officials and attorneys regarding the application of well-established rules of law has placed upon the property owners of the state and upon those engaged in the business of making public improvements a heavy burden of expense, annoyance, and delay through the litigation which is instituted either by property owners or the contractors in regard to practically every important public improvement. In every such suit the property owner relies on the constitutional guaranty of due process of law. In many, probably in most, of the cases the question of constitutional guaranty has no proper place. In the clear and learned opinion in Chase v. Trout, the principles governing the rule of due process of law in public improvement cases were discussed. Notwithstanding the fact that the decision in that case was rendered in 1905, and has probably been cited in every public improvement case arising in California since that date, the clear statement of the meaning of the constitutional guaranty of due process of law, as applied to such cases, seems to have been misapprehended.

[3-5] It is as impossible to define with precision "due process of law," as it is exactly to define "fraud" or "police power." As applied to different classes of cases, courts, by process of inclusion and exclusion, apply the principles involved in the phrase. The Supreme Court of the United States has said that without the constitutional guaranty the right of private property could not be said to exist in the sense in which it is known to our laws. Ochoa v. Hernandez y Morales, 230 U. S. 139, 33 Sup. Ct. 1033, 57 L. Ed. 1427. The guaranty is always and everywhere present to protect the citizen against arbitrary interference with his rights. Ulman v. Baltimore, 72 Md. 587, 20 Atl. 141, 21 Atl. 709, 11 L. R. A. 224. Due process of law is the exact equivalent of the law of the land as used in the Magna Charta. Murray v. Hoboken L. & I. Co., 18 How. 272, 15 L. Ed. 372. Broadly speaking, it means that, before a man's life or liberty or property may be taken by the state, he must be given notice of the proceedings which may terminate in the taking, and be given an opportunity to be heard in his own defense. It means further that the notice shall be a real and reasonable one, and the hearing such as ordinarily, or at least reasonably, is given in similar cases. Simon v. Craft, 182 U. S. 427, 21 Sup. Ct. 836, 45 L. Ed. 1165; Lent v. Tillson, 140 U. S. 316, 71 Sup. Ct. 825, 35 L. Ed. 419; Turpin v. Lemon, 187 U. S. 51, 23 Sup. Ct. 20, 47 L. Ed. 70; Galpin v. Page, 18 Wall. 350, 21 L. Ed. 959. The law of the land does not necessarily mean simply statutory law, for no state can make everything due process of law, which by its own legislation it declares to be such. Burdick v. People, 149 Ill. 600, 36 N. E. 948, 24 L. R. A. 152, 41 Am. St. Rep. 329. On the other hand, if the statute requires as the initial step in the process of depriving a man of his property the performance of a specifically defined act, unless that act be performed substantially no jurisdiction—power—exists for further action in that proceeding against him.

[6-8] The analogy between the ordinary suit at law and proceedings for the levy of special assessments for public improvements is not exact, but the same broad principles of common right and common sense control the application of the law of the land to the question of jurisdiction in both instances. Legislative acts regarding special assessments for public improvements are to be liberally construed. So, too, are the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. Code Civ. Proc. § 4. Such acts usually prescribe with more or less particularity what the resolution of intention shall contain. The Code of Civil Procedure prescribes what shall be stated in the summons in a civil suit. Code Civ. Proc. § 407. If any statement expressly required by the statute to be made in the summons is entirely omitted, its service does not give the court jurisdiction to proceed against the defendant, because in legal effect he has received no notice at all of the proceeding. The law of the land in such a case has not been obeyed, and the defendant may rely upon the constitutional guaranty. The fact that a former statute may have required fewer or more or different facts to be stated does not change the rule. The requirements of the statute in force at the time the summons is issued must be subtantially obeyed, or its service does not constitute the notice essential to due process of law. A defective summons, which does not meet the requirement of substantial compliance with the statute, may be amended; but in that case notice is not complete and jurisdiction to proceed does not exist until after service of such a summons as the law requires. Because service of an unlawful or void summons is ineffectual to give the defendant notice, he is under no obligation to call its defects to the attention either of the court or the plaintiff. He may safely proceed with his own business as if no suit were pending. If in such a case the court should proceed to judgment, regardless of any change in the defendant's position or of any expenditure or loss sustained by the plaintiff, the defendant's property could not be taken on execution nor would the plaintiff be heard upon a claim that the defendant should have waived the protection of the Constitution. In cases where constructive service is permitted, the substantial requirements of the statute regarding the matters to be stated in the published notice also must be fulfilled. These rules of law relating to the matter of obtaining jurisdiction in a civil action are too familiar to every judge and practicing attorney to require citation of authority. Each essential requirement has its counterpart in the matter of initiating proceedings for charging private property with the cost of local improvements.

[9, 10] In proceedings under the Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 147), there is no provision for personal service. Notice is implied from publication. The notice is the essential thing as distinguished from knowledge. It must be the notice required by the statute, not some other publication. It must be substantially the same in all similar cases.

Otherwise, it would depend upon the personal views of different judges in successive suits, perhaps upon the same assessment, whether or not the original power existed to order the work done. Uniformity in the administration of justice is a substantial right. Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Bennett, 177 Cal. 565, 171 Pac. 304. The burden is on the state and those claiming under it adversely to the individual to show that he has had notice. In the matter of jurisdiction the individual is not required to show that he has not had knowledge. If the contractor in such cases signs a contract in disregard of the law requiring a particular kind of notice to be given, when he has expended his money he is in no worse position than if he disregarded the law concerning limitations of actions and neglected to bring suit on a promissory note within the statutory period. Statutes of limitations are upheld and enforced regardless of personal hardship because public policy requires it. Similarly that broader public policy which protects the individual against encroachment of the state without sanction of law requires that legislative enactments prescribing that certain things must be done to authorize the state to invade private rights must be enforced.

In the present case the common council of San Jose undertook to order the work done under the sanction of the Vrooman Act, which, among other things, provides that under certain circumstances the council may make the expense of a contemplated public improvement chargeable upon a district. The resolution of intention in such a case is required to "describe the said district and refer to a plat or map approved by the city council, which shall indicate by a boundary line the extent of the territory to be included in said assessment district, which plat or map shall be on file in the office of the city engineer before said superintendent of streets shall proceed with the publication and posting of notices of street work, and shall govern for all details as to the extent of the said assessment district." Stats. 1913, p. 406.

[11] The resolution of intention in question on this appeal is incorporated in the findings by a reference to a copy appended to the defendants' answer. It describes the work to be done, declares that in the opinion of the mayor and council the work is of more than ordinary public benefit, and that the costs and expenses are made chargeable to an assessment district which was declared to be the district benefited and which is described with reasonable certainty. It contains no reference to any plat or map approved by the city council, and there is no suggestion in the appellants' brief that such a map as was required by the statute to be on file at the time the resolution was passed was in fact on file. The requirement of the statute is as positive in regard to the reference to the map as that of section 407 of the Code of Civil Procedure that the summons must contain a notice that unless the defendant appears the plaintiff will take judgment or apply to the court for other relief demanded in the complaint. These requirements are mandatory and jurisdictional in the one case as in the other. Cooley, Const. Lim. (7th Ed.) p. 747; 1 Cooley, Taxation (3d Ed.) p. 639; 2 Cooley, Taxation (3d Ed.) p. 1241; Brown, Jurisdiction (2d Ed.) §§ 51, 169a,

[12, 13] Where a clear statutory requirement is omitted from the initial resolution or process which is the means of imparting notice of adverse proceedings, the rule of liberal construction must yield to the constitutional guaranty of due process of law. Courts cannot in a particular case dispense with any element of notice which the Legislature has enacted shall be given in all similar cases. If, either in the summons or in the resolution, there is not an entire omission of a statutory requirement, but merely a defect, a court may properly determine there has or has not been a substantial compliance with the statute dependent upon the facts of the particular case. This necessarily calls for the exercise of that faculty which Mr. Chief Justice White of the Supreme Court of the United States, in discussing the meaning of the word "reasonable" in the Sherman Act (Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209) designated as "practical common sense." Standard Oil Case, 221 U. S. 1, 31 Sup. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734. This judgment of what is a substantial compliance with the statute is to be exercised in the first instance by the trial court. If the case is one where a requirement of the statute has not been entirely disregarded, its determination of the question of substantial compliance ought to be controlling in the absence of an abuse of discretion. In the present case the resolution shows the absence of any reference to the map or plat required by the statute.

[14] On behalf of the appellants it is argued that under section 5½ of the Vrooman Act (added by St. 1909, p. 31) all objections to any act or proceeding prior to the date of notice of award not made in writing within 10 days from the date of the first publication of notice of award of contract shall be deemed to have been waived. By the last clause of section 5½ matters directly affecting the jurisdiction of the council to order the work are excepted expressly from its provisions.

It is next argued that, since the Vrooman Act did not originally require that a map or plat should either be on file or referred to in the resolution, the requirement contained in the act under which these proceedings are taken was not a constitutional prerequisite.

Reference is made to a number of cases with a lengthy quotation from the opinion in Imperial Land Co. v. Imperial Irrigation District, 173 Cal. 660, 161 Pac. 113.

In that case the court construed certain curative provisions of the Bridgford Act (Stats. of 1897, p. 254). The legal effect of this and similar decisions is that, if constitutional prerequisites are met, the rule of due process of law has not been violated. This is simply another way of saying that the rule of due process of law requires reasonable notice of hearing and an opportunity to be heard. It does not determine what reasonable notice is, and no decision of any court of the United States has been cited which holds that anything less than substantial compliance with what the Legislature has determined shall constitute notice meets the constitutional prerequisite. After jurisdiction attaches different principles come into play, and the constitutional guaranty of "due process of law" is rarely involved. This phase of the general subject is discussed in the opinion of Hutchinson Co. v. Coughlin, 184 Pac. 435, No. 2723, filed this day.

The judgment appealed from might be sustained upon other grounds relied upon by respondents, but the lack of jurisdiction to order the work done, which is so plainly apparent by reason of the disregard of the requirement of the Vrooman Act, renders discussion of other questions presented by the briefs improper until their determination becomes necessary in connection with a case where such determination will have controlling force.

HUTCHINSON CO. v. COUGHLIN.
(Civ. 2723.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑251 — PURPOSE OF GUARANTY OF DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

The purpose of the constitutional guaranty that property is not to be taken without due process of law is to exclude arbitrary power from every branch of the government; it being a restraint upon the legislative, executive, and judicial departments.

2. JUDGMENT 🔑660 — CONCLUSIVE WHEN FINAL NOTWITHSTANDING ERROR OF COURT.

After the court acquires jurisdiction of the defendant and subject-matter of a particular case, it may proceed to judgment, and the judgment, if within general power of court and within issues of particular case, is conclusive, when it shall have become final, upon the parties as to all matters adjudged, regardless of any error on part of court.

3. JUDGMENT 🔑441, 460(4), 461(1)—BURDEN OF PROOF IN SETTING ASIDE IN EQUITY FOR FRAUD.

Judgment may be attacked for fraud by a suit in equity in which the burden of both pleading and proving the fraud rests upon complainant.

4. JUDGMENT 🔑660—ATTACK FOR FRAUD OR ARBITRARY ACTION OF COURT.

If there is fraud or arbitrary action in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, either may be shown in a proper proceeding unless the injured party has waived his right by consent to the act or in some other way.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑484(2) — FRAUD OR ARBITRARY ASSESSMENTS MAY BE ATTACKED IN PROPER PROCEEDINGS.

If there is fraud or arbitrary assessment in excess of jurisdiction in levying assessment, owner may attack assessment in proper proceeding; but the right to be heard does not necessarily require a determination in a court proceeding, and may consist of opportunity to present objections to local governing board.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑484(2)—DECISION OF LOCAL GOVERNING BOARD AS TO ASSESSMENTS MAY BE CONCLUSIVE.

Decision of local governing board on objections to assessment, in absence of fraud, or arbitrary action amounting to fraud, may be as conclusive as the judgment of a court in a civil action.

7. FRAUD 🔑50—NEVER PRESUMED.

Fraud is never to be presumed.

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑568(1) — IN ACTION TO FORECLOSE LIEN, NO PRESUMPTION THAT CITY WOULD NOT HAVE CORRECTED ASSESSMENT.

Where owner did not appeal from action of superintendent of streets, who levied the assessment, to city council, it will not be assumed, in contractor's action to foreclose lien, that, if owner had just cause of complaint, the city council would not on appeal have ordered the assessment corrected.

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑488, 489(5) — INVALIDITY OF ASSESSMENT WAIVED BY FAILURE TO OBJECT.

If a property owner, having a right to defend against an erroneous assessment for work ordered after jurisdiction has been established, fails to assert that right in an administrative tribunal, which is vested with power to correct the error, he may not be heard, either as a plaintiff or defendant, in any litigation involving the assessment, to assert its invalidity without showing either fraud or the exercise of arbitrary and harmful power on the part of the administrative tribunal.

10. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑493(6) — CONCLUSIVENESS OF COUNCIL'S APPROVAL OF ASSESSMENT.

An erroneous, arbitrary, or even a fraudulent assessment would not be void, after the council approved it, either actually upon hearing, or impliedly because no protests were made, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 3515, 3516.

11. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑463 — ASSESSMENT EXCEEDING FORMER APPRAISAL NOT NECESSARILY CONFISCATORY.

That an assessment exceeds amount at which property had theretofore been appraised for taxation does not necessarily make assessment confiscatory, since it may be presumed that improvement will so benefit the property as to warrant an increased valuation more than equal to amount of assessment.

12. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑488, 489(5) — FAILURE TO APPEAL TO CITY COUNCIL BARRED ATTACK ON ASSESSMENT ON FORECLOSURE OF LIEN.

Where superintendent of streets had jurisdiction to levy assessment, and where assessment was regular on its face, owner's failure to appeal from assessment to city council precluded her, under Street Improvement Act 1911, § 26 (Stats. 1911, p. 745), from attacking validity of assessment in contractor's action to foreclose lien.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Action by the Hutchinson Company against Margaret Fay Coughlin. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Walter J. Thompson and Henry F. Marshall, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, for respondent.

BRITTAIN, J. The defendant appeals from a judgment foreclosing the lien of a street assessment on her four lots in Oakland.

The assessment proceedings were under the Street Improvement Act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730) as originally adopted. The work was grading, curbing, macadamizing, and guttering one block on Brooklyn avenue, between Lake Shore boulevard and Newton avenue, one block on Wesley avenue, between Lake Shore boulevard and Newton avenue, and the crossing formed by the intersection of Brooklyn, Newton, and Wesley avenues, in the city of Oakland. Newton avenue and Lake Shore boulevard are approximately parallel, and Brooklyn avenue connects them, running at right angles to Newton avenue. Wesley avenue runs diagonally across an imaginary square, two sides of which are formed by the lines of Newton avenue and Brooklyn avenue, extended, the other sides being represented by lines parallel to the two extended lines. The crossing formed by the intersection of the three avenues is represented by the triangle formed between the sides of Newton avenue and Brooklyn avenue, extended, and the lower diagonal side of Wesley avenue. The total cost of the work, with expenses, was $5,400.50, of which $1,630.90 represented the cost of the work on the block on Brooklyn avenue; $1,795.99, the cost of the work on the block on Newton avenue; and $1,855.28, the cost of the work on the crossing.

In the resolution of intention to do the work it was declared that it was of more than local or ordinary public benefit and that the expense should be chargeable upon a district. The district included seven entire blocks and parts of four other blocks. The blocks were not uniform in size nor shape. No part of the district extended across Lake Shore boulevard. The work done was in the southwest corner of the district, the improved portions of Brooklyn avenue and Wesley avenue abutting on the westerly boundary of the district. In the entire district there were 162 lots, of which 23 or 24 fronted on the work. Many of the lots, by reason of the diagonal direction of Wesley avenue, were small and of irregular shapes. Four of the lots of full size and rectangular in shape belong to the appellant. Two of them face Lake Shore boulevard and two of them face Wesley avenue. They extend lengthwise on both sides of the entire block of Brooklyn avenue, which was improved. The appellant's two lots fronting on Wesley avenue also abutted on the crossing.

After the work was done the assessment was made, and the appellant's lots were assessed, respectively, $419.96, $509.69, $442.19, and $576.27, aggregating $1,948.11. Of the 162 lots in the district, only 4, those belonging to the appellant, were assessed for more than $276; 27 for sums between $10 and $100; the remainder for sums under $10, of which 40 were assessed for but one cent apiece. The appellant claims the assessment is void, and to show its invalidity relies upon three propositions: First, that the district established by the resolution was ignored and disregarded by the superintendent of streets, who, it is claimed, in excess of his jurisdiction, imposed a frontage system of assessment; secondly, that the assessment appears on its face to be without uniformity and regardless of benefit; and, lastly, that the assessment upon each of the appellant's four lots is confiscatory.

The complaint is in the ordinary form in such cases. In her answer the defendant denied the essential allegations of the complaint and set forth the assessment, alleging that it "was without reference to, disproportionate to, irrespective of and contrary to any or all benefits received or to be received by each of said lots or portions thereof," and that "said purported assessment was and is disproportionately, unequally, and unjustly placed upon the various lots or portions of lots or subdivisions of land mentioned in said diagram and purported assessment, without regard to the district declared to be benefited in said resolution of intention of the city council and that said assessment was and is without uniformity and is confiscatory, and void." The findings negatived the appellant's allegations of fact, and support the conclusions of law.

While the usual number of cases is cited in the appellant's briefs, her reliance is chiefly placed upon the decision of the Supreme Court in Spring Street Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 170 Cal. 24, 148 Pac. 217, L. R. A. 1918E, 197. In that case in declaring an assessment void a statement of Mr. Justice Redfield of the Supreme Court of Vermont was quoted as follows:

> "We have no doubt that a local assessment may so transcend the limits of equality and reason that its exaction would cease to be a tax, or contribution to a common burden, and become extortion and confiscation. In that case, it would be the duty of the court to protect the citizen from robbery under color of a better name." Allen v. Drew, 44 Vt. 174.

In the Los Angeles Case it appeared that the city of Los Angeles having determined to widen one of its streets, condemnation proceedings were prosecuted to judgment to take a strip five feet wide from the lots fronting on either side of the street. The judgment in favor of the lot owners aggregated something over $226,000, of which $20,000 was awarded to the owner of one lot, which may be designated the Hamberger lot. Under the Los Angeles charter the duty of levying the assessment for the cost of the improvement rested in the board of public works. In its original assessment it charged the remainder of the Hamberger lot with $12,794.10. Protests against the assessment having been made, the city council adopted a recommendation of its street committee that the assessments on the lots fronting on the widened street should be the same in amount as that allowed in the condemnation proceedings, and that surplus costs of the improvement should be levied in accordance with the front-foot rule upon all the lots in the assessment district. The board of public works was directed to make a new assessment, which it did in accordance with the recommendation of the committee. In transmitting the new assessment the board of public works expressed its opinion that the original assessment was correct, and called attention to the fact that under the new method certain lots which received the larger benefits than others were assessed for the smaller amounts. Protests against the second assessment were overruled by the council. The court determined that the reassessment was not even a quasi judicial act of the board intrusted with the duty of making the assessment. The defense was that the property owners had had their day in court before the city council, and the action of the council in overruling their protests, in the absence of fraud, should be held conclusive. Citing Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 350, 80 Pac. 81, and other cases in the opinion, the Supreme Court said:

> The record "furnishes convincing evidence that the assessment was ordered prepared without the slightest exercise of judicial discretion, and so unwarrantedly, arbitrarily, and unjustly, as to work a confiscation of the property and to be, therefore, in no legal sense an assessment at all." Spring Street Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 170 Cal. 32, 148 Pac. 220, L. R. A. 1918E, 197.

[1] In neither the briefs in this case, nor in the opinion in the Los Angeles Case, is the phrase "due process of law" used. The facts in the Los Angeles Case and the language used by the Supreme Court clearly show that the determination was based upon the rule that property of the individual shall not be taken without due process of law. The purpose of the constitutional guaranty is to exclude arbitrary power from every branch of the government. It is a restraint upon the legislative, executive, and judicial departments. State v. Guilbert, 56 Ohio St. 575, 47 N. E. 551, 38 L. R. A. 519, 60 Am. St. Rep. 756; Ulman v. Baltimore, 72 Md. 587, 20 Atl. 141, 21 Atl. 709, 11 L. R. A. 224; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 17 Sup. Ct. 581, 41 L. Ed. 979. In the Los Angeles Case the property owners were within the constitutional guaranty.

In the case of Beck et al. v. Ransome-Crummey Co. (No. 2880) 184 Pac. 431, the decision in which is filed coincidentally with this in discussing the application of the rule of due process of law, this court, for the purpose of illustration only, referred to the analogy between the steps necessary for a municipal corporation to acquire jurisdiction to order the performance of public work, the cost of which is to be made chargeable upon private property, and the steps necessary to be taken to vest jurisdiction in a court to proceed to hear and determine a civil cause. In considering the question of the erroneous, arbitrary, or fraudulent exercise of jurisdiction, the analogy is no less illustrative of the principles involved.

[2, 3] After the court acquires jurisdiction of the defendant and subject-matter of a particular case, it may proceed to judgment. So long as the judgment is one within the general power of the court extending over all similar cases, and within the issues of the particular case, the judgment, when it shall have become final, is conclusive upon the parties and in regard to all matters adjudged, regardless of any error on the part of the court. It may be attacked for fraud by a suit in equity in which the burden of both pleading and proving the fraud rests upon the complainant. U. S. v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61, 25 L. Ed. 93; Patterson v. Colorado, 205 U. S. 454, 27 Sup. Ct. 556, 51 L. Ed. 879, 10 Ann. Cas. 689; Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 16 Sup. Ct. 80, 40 L. Ed. 91.

[4, 5] If there is fraud, or arbitrary action in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, either may be shown in a proper proceeding, unless the injured party has waived his rights by consent to the act or in some other way. These rules apply as well to assessment proceedings as to judgments of courts.

[6-8] The guaranty of the right to be heard does not necessarily require a determination in a court proceeding. The individual may by fully protected by an opportunity given to present to the local governing body his objections to an assessment such as is involved in this case. Its decision, in the absence of fraud, or arbitrary action amounting to fraud, may be as conclusive as the judgment of a court in a civil action. Lambert v. Bates, 137 Cal. 676, 70 Pac. 777. In the Los Angeles Case an appeal was made to the council, and its action in sustaining the assessment which it had procured to be made was so gross and arbitrary an action as to amount to fraud. In the present case the appellant did not appeal from the action of the superintendent of streets, who levied the assessment, to the city council. Fraud is never to be presumed. It cannot be assumed that if the defendant had just cause of complaint the council would not upon appeal have ordered the assessment corrected. In the Los Angeles Case the assessment was made without any exercise of official discretion, and the council arbitrarily refused to protect the property owner. In this case the discretion of the superintendent of streets was exercised, perhaps erroneously; but the property owner did not seek the protection of the council. In effect, she permitted a default judgment to be entered against her by a tribunal having jurisdiction of her cause.

On the trial, over the objection of the plaintiff, evidence was received showing that the appellant's four lots were assessed for taxes in the aggregate of $1,650. Evidence was also introduced showing that the superintendent of streets levied the assessment upon the lots by the exercise of a discretion in a manner which may have been erroneous but which involved the examination and determination of the comparative benefits he believed would flow to the respective lots by reason of the work. This examination and determination was essentially judicial in its nature. If either his method or conclusions were erroneous, the statute furnished a means for the property owners to protect themselves. At any time within 30 days after the date of the warrant issued upon the making of the assessment, the owners aggrieved may in writing, state their objections to the assessments. Thereafter, and upon notice, the council is required to hear such objections and may remedy and correct any of the acts or determinations of the superintendent of streets, confirm, amend, set aside, alter, modify, or correct the assessment in such manner as to it shall seem just, directing the superintendent of streets to correct the warrant, assessment, or diagram in any particular or to make and issue a new warrant, assessment, or diagram to conform to the decision of the council. All decisions and determinations of the council upon notice and hearing in this regard are made final and conclusive upon all persons entitled to appeal under the provisions of the section as to all errors and irregularities which the council might have avoided or remedied or which it can then remedy. The section continues:

> "No assessment, warrant, diagram or affidavit of demand and nonpayment, after the issue of the same, and no proceedings prior to the assessment, shall be held invalid by any court for any error, informality, or other defect in the same," where the resolution of intention shall have been passed and posted in such manner as to give the council jurisdiction to order the work to be done. Street Improvement Act of 1911, § 26; Stats. 1911, p. 745.

If an appeal to the council had been made and it had fraudulently or arbitrarily affirmed an erroneous assessment or had refused the property owner a hearing, the courts would have been open for a direct attack on the action of the council, or on suit being brought to enforce the assessment, the rule in the Los Angeles Case might have been applied. In this case it does not appear from the face of the assessment that it was void, or not in entire accord with the law. It was sought to show by the evidence on the trial that the superintendent of streets erred in his judgment. This evidence would have been proper and might have been conclusive upon an appeal to the council. The fact that it was relied upon here shows the assessment was not void on its face, else it would have been unnecessary in support of the appellant's position. The case is akin to one where a collateral attack is made on a judgment regular on its face. If in a suit in ejectment the court should give such a judgment as could only be given in a suit in unlawful detainer, the judgment would be void because of matters appearing on the face of the record. If, in such a case, a judgment was entered regular on its face, after it became final it could not be invalidated by evidence that the court had mistaken the facts or misapplied the law.

[9, 10] The defaulting defendant in a civil action, after his property has been taken on execution of a judgment regular on its face and rendered after jurisdiction had been perfected, could not be heard in a federal court to say the taking was in violation of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States regarding due process of law. To support such a suit it would be necessary for the plaintiff to allege and prove that he was not in default, and that the judgment was invalid by reason of fraud or such a gross abuse of judicial power apparent on the face of the record as to amount to fraud. Similarly, if a property owner, having a right to defend against an erroneous assessment for work ordered after jurisdiction has been established, fails to assert that right in an administrative tribunal which is vested with power to correct the error, he may not be heard, either as a plaintiff or defendant, in any litigation involving the assessment, to assert its invalidity, without showing either fraud or the exercise of arbitrary and harmful power on the part of the administrative tribunal. As the violation of the law by a referee to take evidence would not invalidate a judgment entered by a court on his report, neither would an erroneous, arbitrary, or even a fraudulent assessment render it void after the council approved it, either actually upon hearing or impliedly, because no protests were made. The failure to protest to the council in the one case has the same effect as the failure to object to the referee's report in the other. The law helps those who are vigilant. Silence under such circumstances amounts to a consent to the act. Civ. Code, §§ 3515, 3516. It is possible a case may arise where an appeal to the council from the nature of things might be futile and the assessment void, as, for instance, if an assessment should be levied to pay for work not included within the resolution, or to pay for work which had never been done, but no such conditions confront the court in this case.

[11, 12] The mere fact that the amount assessed against the appellant's four lots, situated as they are, exceeded the amount at which they had theretofore been appraised for taxation, does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that the assessment was confiscatory. In support of the regularity and honesty of the action of the municipal authorities and of the judgment of the trial court, it might well be presumed that the improvement in the block, in which the appellant's four lots occupied the entire frontage on both sides of the street, and the improvement in the crossing, upon which two of the appellant's corner lots abutted, so benefited them as to warrant an increased valuation more than equal to the amount of the assessment to be placed upon them. It is not necessary for the determination of this appeal to rest the decision upon any inferences in support of the judgment. The appellant, by reason of her failure to appeal to the local council for the correction of the assessment, neither pleaded nor proved facts sufficient to warrant a judgment in her behalf. Because of this failure of both pleading and proof in the matter essential to support a judgment adverse to the assessment, the evidence concerning the method in which the superintendent of streets exercised the function intrusted to him the evidence in regard to the assessed valuation for taxation purposes of the appellant's lots had no considerable weight.

MURPHY v. BRIDGE et al. (Civ. 2810.)

1. Judgment ⚷661—Effect of grant of new trial on conclusiveness.

A judgment, in an action brought by a third person against plaintiff and defendant's predecessor, which found in accordance with the claim of defendant's predecessor that he was the sole and exclusive owner of the property, where set aside on motion for new trial by the third person, is not a conclusive adjudication in favor of plaintiff's predecessor and against his codefendant therein, plaintiff now, even though plaintiff did not move for new trial or contest the predecessor's claim of exclusive ownership; it appearing that the order granting the new trial was general.

2. New trial ⚷163(2) — Grant opens up case as to all parties.

An order granting a new trial which is general in its terms ordinarily opens up the entire case as to all parties, regardless of the fact that some of them may not have moved for a new trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Stanley A. Smith, Judge.

Action by Ella M. Murphy against Arthur F. Bridge and May E. Bridge as administrators, etc., and May E. Bridge individually. From a decree for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Haven & Athearn, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Edward C. Harrison and Maurice E. Harrison, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an interlocutory decree adjudging plaintiff to be the owner of the real property described in the complaint subject only to a lien of defendant, May E. Bridge, for the unpaid balance of a certain debt. The suit is one in equity, brought by plaintiff against Arthur F. Bridge and May E. Bridge, as administrators with the will annexed of F. W. Bridge, deceased, and May E. Bridge, individually, to have it adjudged that the legal title to the property in dispute was held by F. W. Bridge in his lifetime in trust and as security for the debt of Herman Murphy, husband of plaintiff, to F. W. Bridge.

The complaint alleges that the debt has been practically all paid, and the prayer is that plaintiff be adjudged to be the owner in fee of the property, subject only to the lien of any unpaid balance upon the debt, and that an accounting be had to ascertain such balance, if any. Judgment went for plaintiff in conformity with her prayer. Defendants moved for a new trial, which motion was denied. From the interlocutory decree defendants have appealed.

The record title to the property in dispute is now in defendant May E. Bridge, as the successor in interest of F. W. Bridge, deceased, having been distributed to her under a decree of partial distribution in the estate of F. W. Bridge, deceased. The only ground upon which a reversal of the judgment is sought is the action of the trial court in rejecting as evidence the judgment roll in an action entitled "Miller v. Murphy," in which action it is claimed the rights of the parties to the property in dispute have been definitely settled, and that the judgment rendered therein is res adjudicata in the instant case.

The suit of Miller v. Murphy was one brought by the plaintiff therein against Ella M. Murphy and Herman Murphy, her husband, and F. W. Bridge and others, as defendants, to have it determined that the title to the property here involved was held by F. W. Bridge subordinate to and subject to the claim of such plaintiff. In that action plaintiff herein and F. W. Bridge answered, denying generally all the allegations of the complaint. Defendant Bridge, in his answer, further alleged that he was the sole owner of the property, and prayed that it be adjudged that neither Miller nor defendants, Herman Murphy or Ella M. Murphy, had any interest therein. The court, after a trial of that case, found that defendant F. W. Bridge was the owner of the property, and that he did not hold the same subject to any claim of the plaintiff whatsoever, and that none of the other defendants had any right, title, or interest in the property. Accordingly it was adjudged and decreed that defendant F. W. Bridge was the owner thereof. Thereafter the plaintiff Miller moved for a new trial, which motion was granted. Plaintiff herein, Ella M. Murphy, made no such motion, nor did she appeal from the judgment. Beyond question the judgment was the one she desired, for the record herein discloses the fact that she and her husband co-operated with Bridge in procuring it. It is the appellant's contention that as between defendant F. W. Bridge and his codefendant, Ella M. Murphy, the judgment in the suit of Miller v. Murphy became final, and that the judgment definitely determined the status of the property involved as between them, for the reason that the subject-matter in that case was the same as the subject-matter of the instant case, and that therefore the judgment rendered therein is res adjudicata in the case at bar.

This contention presents two questions: First, was the judgment as originally rendered in Miller v. Murphy an adjudication upon the claim of the plaintiff in this case? and, second, if it was, did the granting of a new trial in that case have the effect of entirely vacating the judgment as such an adjudication?

[1, 2] The principles involved in the first question, namely, whether or not the pleadings in Miller v. Murphy raised an issue which was or could have been litigated between the parties hereto, or whether or not they were adverse parties within the meaning of that term, are questions we do not deem it necessary to discuss or determine, for we are of the opinion that the order granting a new trial in Miller v. Murphy vacated and terminated the judgment rendered therein.

The order granting the new trial was general in its terms. The effect of such an order, generally speaking, is to open up the entire case as to all the parties regardless of the fact that some of them may not have moved for a new trial. 1 Hayne on New Trial and Appeal, § 167; Kent v. Williams, 146 Cal. 3, 79 Pac. 527; Joost v. Dore, 27 Cal. App. 729, 151 Pac. 29.

It is appellants' contention, however, that the rule applies only where the judgment is such that it could not be set aside as to one without being set aside as to all, and that the rule has no application where the judgment is severable. Conceding this to be true, no such situation is here presented. The motion for a new trial and the order granting the same were both general in terms. The judgment was predicated upon the issues tendered between the plaintiff and all the defendants, and was rendered against all of them; and the subsequent order, general in its terms, granting a new trial, vacated the entire judgment, and had the effect of placing the parties in the position they held before any trial had taken place. Undoubtedly, the parties herein could have litigated, under appropriate pleadings in the Miller Case, the rights here involved, but no such relief was sought by them; they contenting themselves in that case with defeating the claim of the plaintiff therein.

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WILLIAMS. (Cr. 852.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1023(8)—MOTION IN ARREST OF JUDGMENT NOT APPEALABLE.

Order denying motion in arrest of judgment is not appealable.

2. WITNESSES 🔑387—MAY BE QUESTIONED ON CROSS-EXAMINATION AS TO TESTIMONY AT PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION.

In prosecution for larceny where defendant was charged with having stolen pocketbook of prosecuting witness while sharing his room over night, prosecuting witness, having testified on direct examination that he had asked defendant when defendant entered the room during night to turn on the light and having denied on cross-examination that defendant had turned on light without having been asked to do so, was properly asked on cross-examination if he had stated during preliminary examination that he had asked defendant to turn on the light.

3. WITNESSES 🔑270(3)—CROSS-EXAMINATION LIMITED TO MATERIAL EVIDENCE.

In prosecution for larceny committed while defendant was sharing prosecuting witness' room overnight, where prosecuting witness had testified that he had told defendant that he would be unable to keep him overnight, as he was going to have company, cross-examination, as to whom such company was, was immaterial.

4. WITNESSES 🔑388(2)—CROSS-EXAMINATION FOR IMPEACHMENT, WITHOUT FIRST LAYING PREDICATE, ERROR.

In prosecution for larceny committed while defendant was sharing room of prosecuting witness overnight, where prosecuting witness had testified as to what had taken place during night, and had testified on cross-examination that he had made no effort to hold defendant a prisoner, he was properly asked, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2048, if he had not told proprietor of the hotel that he had held defendant until arrival of police, without first laying predicate under section 2052.

5. WITNESSES 🔑388(2)—IMPEACHING TESTIMONY, WITHOUT PREDICATE PROPERLY STRICKEN.

Testimony of witness that prosecuting witness had made a statement to him inconsistent with testimony of prosecuting witness during trial was properly stricken, where the proper predicate had not been laid for such impeachment by examining prosecuting witness relative thereto under Code Civ. Proc. § 2052.

6. WITNESSES 🔑387—LATITUDE GIVEN IN CROSS-EXAMINATION OF COMPLAINING WITNESS.

The utmost latitude compatible with rules of evidence should have been permitted in the cross-examination of complaining witness as to inconsistent statements.

7. LARCENY 🔑65—EVIDENCE SUFFICIENT TO SUSTAIN CONVICTION OF PETIT LARCENY.

In prosecution for larceny committed by stealing prosecuting witness' pocketbook while sharing prosecuting witness' room overnight, evidence held to sustain conviction of petit larceny.

8. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1186(4)—ERROR IN RULINGS ON EVIDENCE HARMLESS WHERE EVIDENCE OTHERWISE FULLY SUFFICIENT.

In prosecution for larceny committed by stealing prosecuting witness' pocketbook during nighttime while sharing his room, where prosecuting witness had testified that he had not held defendant a prisoner until arrival of police, court's refusal to permit witness to testify during cross-examination whether he had made a statement inconsistent with such testimony was not reversible error, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, where evidence was amply sufficient to warrant conviction; a miscarriage of justice not having resulted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

A. W. Williams was convicted of petit larceny, and from judgment of conviction, and from order denying motion for a new trial, and from order denying motion in arrest of judgment, he appeals. Judgment and order denying new trial affirmed.

Fred J. Rogers and F. M. Fulstone, both of Fresno, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., and R. L. Chamberlain, of Sacramento, for the People.

BARDIN, Judge pro tem. The defendant was informed against for the crime of grand larceny. Upon his trial he was convicted of petit larceny, and, having suffered a previous conviction of felony, which he confessed on arraignment, was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison at San Quentin. He now appeals from the judgment of conviction and an order denying his motion for a new trial, and also from an order denying his motion in arrest of judgment.

[1] It will be unnecessary to comment further upon the attempted appeal from the order denying defendant's motion in arrest of judgment than to say that there is no authority for such appeal. People v. Matuszewski, 138 Cal. 533, 71 Pac. 701; People v. Mullen, 7 Cal. App. 547, 94 Pac. 867.

No claim is made by the defendant that the verdict of the jury is not supported by the evidence; the grounds urged for the reversal of the judgment and order denying a new trial being that the trial court erred in its rulings upon the admissibility of evidence upon three separate occasions, thereby committing error of such substantial weight as to entitle the defendant to a reversal of the judgment rendered against him, and to have this cause remanded for a new trial.

The information alleges that the crime was committed on or about January 2, 1919. The errors complained of arose during the cross-examination of the complaining witness, Walker, who testified substantially as follows: That he became acquainted with the defendant about the middle of December, 1918, while both were in the employ of Wells Fargo & Co. at Fresno, Cal. That about the 1st day of January, 1919, Walker stated to the defendant that he was making arrangements to go to Texas and intended going to the bank to withdraw some money. That shortly prior to the alleged theft defendant heard a third party state to Walker that he would pay him some money the following day, and that on January 2d, the day of the commission of the offense, the defendant inquired whether this money had been paid, to which inquiry, however, the prosecuting witness answered in the negative. Walker further testified that on the afternoon and evening of January 2d the prosecuting witness and the defendant drank intoxicating liquors together, but were not intoxicated, and that night went to Walker's room in the Clark Hotel to pass the night, although at that time the defendant had lodgings at another hotel.

The testimony of Walker further shows that shortly after reaching the latter's room they retired for the night, both occupying the same bed; that when Walker disrobed he felt in his trousers pocket and ascertained that his pocketbook was there, folded his trousers, and left them on a suitcase near the head of his bed. At 5 o'clock that afternoon his pocketbook contained a $50 Liberty Bond, a $20 bill and a $5 bill in currency of the United States, after which time its contents had not been disturbed.

Before retiring Walker locked the door of the bedroom, placed the key on the table, directing the defendant's attention to the fact, should he desire to go to the lavatory. Walker was awakened at 5 minutes to 2 o'clock a. m. of that night by the defendant unlocking the door from outside of the room. Williams stepped inside the room and stated that he had been to the toilet, which was but two or three doors away and in the same hall way. He was fully dressed at the time. Walker then noticed that his trousers had been disarranged and had been moved from the suitcase, and he thereupon discovered that his pocketbook and its contents were gone.

Walker further testified that he and the defendant remained in the room during the balance of the night, the defendant undressing and again retiring, while he (Walker) did not again retire. Shortly before 7 o'clock of the morning of January 3d, one Keith, a fellow roomer at the Clark Hotel, came to Walker's room, and was informed of the larceny of Walker's property. Keith stated to Williams that he had seen him down on H Street a little after 12 o'clock, which Williams then admitted was true.

[2] It was testified by Walker, on direct examination, that when the defendant returned to the room about 2 o'clock a. m., under the circumstances already related, he was asked by Walker to switch on the light. On cross-examination the question was asked if it was not the fact that, when the defendant entered the room at the time referred to, he switched on the light without being asked by the witness so to do, to which question the witness answered in the negative. This question then followed:

> "Did you state at the preliminary that you asked him to turn on the light?"

The district attorney objected to the question as immaterial. The question was a proper one and the objection should have been overruled. People v. Hart, 153 Cal. 261, 94 Pac. 1042; People v. Webber, 26 Cal. App. 413, 147 Pac. 102. And it must be assumed that such ruling would have immediately followed had not counsel for the defendant been apparently diverted from his purpose of making the above inquiry, for, instead of taking the ruling of the court upon the objection, he asked another and different question of the witness before the court had ruled upon the objection, thus in effect withdrawing the previous question.

During the direct examination of the prosecuting witness this testimony was given:

> "Q. Was there anything said about where he would stay all night that night? (referring to the night in question). A. Oh, I told him that —he had stayed there the night before—I told him, I says, 'I can't keep you over to-night,' I says, 'I'm going to have company.'"

[3] Referring to this testimony counsel for the defendant on cross-examination propounded the question which follows, which question was objected to as immaterial and the objection properly sustained:

> "Now just tell us who that party was and give us an opportunity to subpœna them right now."

The truth or falsity of that statement would shed no light upon the issues before the court. In fact, if the statement was a pure fabrication, then it would seem to militate more against the defendant than be of benefit to him, for, it would, to some extent, demonstrate the desire in the prosecuting witness' mind to rid himself of the company of the defendant.

We pass now to the consideration of the last objection complained of. This objection is predicated upon the court's refusal to permit the prosecuting witness to answer another of the questions directed to the prosecuting witness on cross-examination. That witness had testified that he had made no effort to make the defendant a prisoner in his room prior to the arrival of the peace officers. These proceedings then took place:

> "Q. Is it not a fact that you told Mr. Beebe, the proprietor of the Mayer Hotel, where Mr. Williams stopped, a few days after the 2d, that you found this man in your room, and that you held him at the end of a gun in the corner of the room until the police came?
> "Mr. Beaumont: Well, we object to that as irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, and not proper cross-examination, and an attempt to impeach the witness on a collateral and immaterial matter, and that the question is not properly founded for impeachment.
> "The Court: The objection is sustained. I think it is immaterial.
> "Mr. Rogers: If we call Mr. Beebe, will we be prevented from asking whether or not Mr. Walker made this statement to him—that he found him in the room and held him at the end of a gun until the police came?
> "The Court: The chances are you will, if it is objected to."

Mr. Beebe was subsequently called as a witness for the defendant, and testified that the statement above referred to was in fact made by the prosecuting witness; but his testimony was, upon motion of the district attorney, stricken from the record, although the jury was not admonished to disregard it.

[4] The record discloses that during the direct examination of the prosecuting witness he went into a detailed account of what happened in his room from the time the defendant returned there until morning, and during which time the defendant and the prosecuting witness were together alone. It was proper to make full inquiry upon cross-examination as to any facts which had been referred to in the direct examination. Section 2048, Code Civ. Proc. And, having testified on cross-examination that he made no effort to hold the defendant a prisoner under the circumstances referred to, it was proper to ascertain whether or not the witness had made previous inconsistent statements, not only upon that subject, but also relative to the events that occurred in the room and partially detailed upon his direct examination. And it was proper to endeavor to discover that fact from the witness himself, and without the necessity of first laying the predicate referred to in section 2052 of the Code of Civil Procedure. People v. Jones, 160 Cal. 358, 117 Pac. 176; People v. Ho Kim You, 24 Cal. App. 451, 141 Pac. 950; People v. Webber, 26 Cal. App. 413, 147 Pac. 102; Wigmore on Evidence, § 1023.

[5, 6] The court did not commit error in striking out the testimony of Mr. Beebe, the witness called for impeachment. It was received over the objection of the district attorney, and was not properly founded for impeachment, as required by section 2052 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But the trial court was in error in sustaining the objection of the district attorney to the question directed to the complaining witness relative to the alleged contradictory statement made to Mr. Beebe. The utmost latitude compatible with our rules of evidence should have been permitted in the cross-examination of that witness. The record shows other instances where the cross-examination was held, within boundaries more restricted than is usual under circumstances where the guilt of the defendant depends to a considerable extent, not only upon indirect evidence, but also upon the credibility of a single witness.

[7, 8] A survey of the whole record of the case, however, which discloses ample testimony to warrant the conviction of the defendant, compels the conclusion that the error complained of has not resulted in a miscarriage of justice. The case seems to be one for the application of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution of the state. It appears from the record that the defendant had been unduly inquisitive about the receipt of money by the complaining witness shortly before the commission of the offense. On the night of January 2d he had pressed himself into companionship with Walker for the night, although he had lodgings at another hotel. Without arousing Walker from his slumber, the defendant stealthily arose at about midnight, fully dressed himself, and went down upon the streets of Fresno, and was observed by two witnesses in front of the hotel where he had permanent lodgings. He returned to the room of the prosecuting witness, unlocked the door from the outside, entered, locked the door again, and stated to Walker that he had been to the toilet. Subsequently, and in the presence of the officers, he admitted having made this false statement to Walker. Confronted with a witness who had seen him down on the street, he offered in explanation of such act that he had gone from Walker's room down upon the street to get a drink. He denied having any money in his possession, other than $15 in currency and a few dollars in silver. It was only after a very careful search that a $20 bill in currency was found concealed on the inside of his hatband. The Liberty Bond was not found.

The defendant did not take the stand, but sought to prove by other witnesses that Walker had been imbibing intoxicating liquors quite freely on the afternoon and evening in question, and that he had been consorting with a woman of questionable morals, and that he might have lost his money through her handiwork, rather than by any act of the defendant. The testimony intended to sustain such a theory, while redolent of days before the advent of the redlight abatement act, and of war-time prohibition, is weak and unconvincing, and in our estimate is entitled to no more weight than that given it by the jury and trial court.

The defendant's conduct, his admissions, his highly incriminatory deceptions, coupled with the testimony of the witnesses for the prosecution, justify the conclusion reached by the jury, and make this a proper place to apply the section of the Constitution referred to.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

JOHNSON v. NELSON et al. (Civ. 3004.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 2, 1919.)

1. Motions ⚿64—Dissimilar motion not res judicata of subsequent motion.

A premature motion to set aside sheriff's return is not res judicata of a motion to set aside, made after return had been made.

2. Motions ⚿64—Doctrine of res judicata not applicable.

The doctrine of res judicata does not apply to motions, but their renewal is in the discretion of the court.

3. Appeal and error ⚿1032(1) — Objections that other defendants had no notice of motion not available to appellants.

Defendants in mortgage foreclosure may not complain of granting of motion to set aside sheriff's return of sale, over their objection that other defendants had not had notice of the motion; it not being made to appear what interest the other defendants had in the case, or how objectors were injured by the others not being served.

4. Mortgages ⚿502—Setting aside return to order of sale.

The trial court, having control of its process, on knowledge that the sheriff, as its officer, had made an equivocal and unsatisfactory return on the order of sale, and that it was unsatisfied, could, ex parte, set aside the return and direct a new order of sale to be issued and executed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Peter Johnson against Hedvig Nelson and others. From an order after judgment, certain defendants appeal. Affirmed.

John F. Poole and Wm. Lewis, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Chas. J. Kelly and D. A. Stuart, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from an order made after final judgment setting aside a sheriff's return of sale for the foreclosure of a mortgage and directing a new order of sale to be issued. The facts are undisputed and are as follows:

The mortgage was duly foreclosed, and a decree of sale of the mortgaged premises made and entered, and an order of sale duly issued thereon and placed in the hands of the sheriff for execution. On the day on which the sale was advertised to take place the plaintiff and also one of his attorneys were present at the time and place of sale; the plaintiff personally made a bid of an amount somewhat less than the total sum then due. His attorney also on his behalf made a bid of the total sum due. There were no other bidders. A misunderstanding arose between the sheriff and the plaintiff as to the sum actually bid; the sheriff insisting that he had struck off the property for the amount of the plaintiff's personal bid. Thereupon, and before the sheriff had made any return of sale, the plaintiff moved the court for an order vacating and setting aside the sale. When this motion came on for hearing, the sheriff not yet having made his return of sale, the court denied the motion. Thereafter the sheriff made his return of sale, which, while reciting the fact that the property was sold, returned the order of sale as wholly unsatisfied. Thereupon the plaintiff moved the court to set aside this return of sale and direct a new order of sale to be issued. Upon the hearing of this motion the court granted the same, and from its order to that effect this appeal has been taken.

[1, 2] The first point urged by the appellants is that the trial court had no jurisdiction to make the order appealed from, for the reason that the first order of said court denying the plaintiff's motion to vacate the sheriff's return of sale rendered the matter res adjudicata, and hence the court had no power to grant the plaintiff's second motion to set aside the return of sale. The point is utterly without merit for two reasons: First, that the two motions are dissimilar in the important respect that at the time the plaintiff's first motion was made no return of sale had yet been made by the sheriff, and the motion was therefore premature and doubtless was denied for that reason, while said return of sale was on file when the second motion was made, presenting an entirely different situation to the trial court; and the second reason why the point is without merit is that under the settled practice in this state the doctrine of res adjudicata does not apply to motions, the matter of their renewal being in the discretion of the trial court. Ford v. Doyle, 44 Cal. 635; Bowers v. Cherokee Bob, 46 Cal. 279; Johnston v. Brown, 115 Cal. 694, 47 Pac. 686; Gay v. Gay, 146 Cal. 237, 79 Pac. 885.

[3] The next contention of the appellants is that the court was in error in granting the motion in question because all of the proper parties to the action had not been served with notice of the motion. This appeal has been taken by a number of persons other than the original mortgagor and main defendant in the action. The record before us does not contain any of the pleadings or proceedings in the case prior to the making and entry of the decree of foreclosure, and we have therefore no means of knowing, except from the terms of said decree, who the defendants in the action were, or what issues were presented by them, or in what way any of them may have been interested in the proceedings in the case subsequent to the entry of the decree of foreclosure and issuance of the order of sale. The record before us, however, discloses that a number of these appealing defendants appeared upon the hearing of said motion to set aside the sheriff's return of sale, and at that time made no objection that they themselves had not been duly served with notice of said motion, and only objected because some other unnamed and unidentified defendants had not been served with such notice. The only evidence offered in support of said objection was the original notice of trial of the cause, which showed that there were quite a number of defendants who had at that time been served with such notice; but as to what interest they may have had in the case, particularly after the final decree of foreclosure, we are left entirely in the dark. In a word, it is nowhere made to appear how these defendants have been injuriously affected by the fact that some defendants other than themselves, and whose interest is not disclosed, were not served with notice of the motion to set aside the sheriff's return of sale.

[4] In addition to the foregoing considerations the fact that trial courts have control of their process, and that the trial court in this particular case, upon having brought to its attention the fact that the sheriff, as its officer, had made an equivocal and unsatisfactory return upon the order of sale which had been issued to him, and that the same was unsatisfied, would have had full power ex parte to set aside such return and direct a new order of sale to be issued and executed, brings this case perilously near the point of being a frivolous appeal.

No error appearing upon the face of the record before us, the order is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; BARDIN, Judge pro tem.

DRAKE v. TUCKER et ux. (Civ. 2891.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟹156(4) — RESERVATION IN DEED CONSTRUED TO INCLUDE ONLY WATER ACTUALLY USED BY GRANTOR.

Deed reserving to grantors the amount of water of stream formerly "held, used, or claimed" by former owner held to reserve only portion of the water actually taken and used by former owner.

2. PARTITION ⟹8 — EXECUTION OF TWO DEEDS BY TENANTS IN COMMON TO EACH OTHER PART OF SAME TRANSACTION.

Where children, to whom father had deeded property as tenants in common, partitioned land between themselves by two deeds, executed as part of same transaction, one of the deeds, in being construed, will be taken in connection with the other.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟹44—USE FOR IRRIGATION NOT TO INTERFERE WITH RIGHTS OF LOWER OWNER.

Upper owner has no right, by use of water for irrigation purposes, to deprive lower owner of sufficient water for his domestic purposes.

⟹For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

4. Waters and water courses 🔑42—Reasonable use of water by upper owner.

What is a reasonable use of water by upper proprietor depends upon all the facts and circumstances in the case.

5. Waters and water courses 🔑78 — Rights of lower riparian owner to divert water from upper owner.

Riparian proprietor is entitled only to the water after it reaches his land in its natural flow, and if in the natural flow of the stream there is insufficient water conducted to lower owner's land for his uses, he has not, as a riparian owner merely, the right to go on the land of an upper owner and divert the water from there.

6. Waters and water courses 🔑152(11)—Adjudication of water rights between two owners not affecting rights of lower owner.

Adjudication of water rights between upper and lower riparian owners does not affect rights of other lower owners not parties to the action.

7. Waters and water courses 🔑152(11)—Adjudication of water rights under deed from upper to lower owner.

Where upper owner's deed to lower owner gave lower owner right to divert water at point on upper owner's land after upper owner had used the amount of water "held, used, or claimed" by a former owner of both lands, court, after awarding upper owner's successor in interest water used by former owner, and after allowing lower owner water for domestic uses, properly divided the water for irrigation purposes in proportion to acreage held by each.

8. Appeal and error 🔑1073(1)—Error in holding certain land of upper owner not riparian harmless.

In action involving water rights of upper and lower owners, holding that certain land of upper owner was nonriparian, if error, was not prejudicial to upper owner, where a greater quantity of similar land of lower owner was likewise held to be nonriparian, and where the water was divided in proportion to acreage of riparian land.

9. Evidence 🔑448—Parol testimony inadmissible to vary written instrument.

Written instruments, which are not ambiguous, may not be varied by parol testimony.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; A. B. McKenzie, Judge.

Action by Harry Clyde Drake against Charles L. Tucker and wife. From the judgment rendered, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Clarence N. Riggins, of Napa, for appellant.

John T. York and Percy S. King, both of Napa, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment of the superior court in and for Napa county, dividing the waters of Ritchie creek between the plaintiff and the defendants. The principal question presented to this court is as to the construction of certain deeds in the record. The facts surrounding the execution of said deeds are briefly as follows. From 1867 to 1905 George W. Tucker, the father of the defendant Charles L. Tucker, owned 146 acres of land situated along Ritchie creek, a map of which land is in evidence in this action. During a part of this time he sold about 3,000 gallons per day of the water of said creek to the county, and in addition used what he required thereof for domestic purposes in and about his house and barn. In 1905 he deeded his property to his children, who held it as tenants in common. One of the children died shortly thereafter, and the remaining children partitioned the land among themselves by two deeds, which it is conceded were executed as a part of the same transaction, and which deeds are the key to the solution of the controversy here. In the first deed from Charles L. Tucker, one of the respondents here, and George H. Tucker, to their sisters, Lila J. Eachus and Martha A. Culver, a portion of the land was conveyed, which has since by mesne conveyances become the property of the plaintiff. This land is higher on the stream than the defendants' land. The deed conveying it contains a clause granting to plaintiff's predecessors the right to the amount of water diverted by George W. Tucker at a point in Ritchie creek specified therein. At the same time another deed was executed by Eachus, Culver, and George H. Tucker to Charles L. Tucker, respondent, conveying an undivided three-quarter interest in the portion of the land now owned by defendant and containing a clause granting to said Charles L. Tucker the right to divert water from a point specified and situated upon the land now held by the plaintiff, after the amount formerly diverted by George W. Tucker had been reserved. Defendant has maintained this point of diversion up to the time of the action. Plaintiff has resided on his land for about four years and has diverted water from a point below defendant's said point of diversion until May, 1917, when plaintiff placed a 5-inch pipe in the stream above defendant's point of diversion and diverted substantially all the water of the stream, so that the defendant was deprived of water necessary for domestic and irrigation purposes. Defendant removed the pipe line of plaintiff so placed, and plaintiff sought an injunction.

The clauses in the deeds upon which plaintiff and appellant bases his claim were construed by the trial court in a manner which is in accordance with our own conclusions Defendant contends that as a riparian owner he is entitled to his proportion of the water except as that right is modified by the deeds. The first deed, in which Charles L. and George H. Tucker are the grantors, and Lila J. Eachus and Martha A. Culver, plaintiff's predecessors in title, are the grantees, conveys:

> "All of the water right acquired, or the right to divert the waters of Ritchie creek acquired by George Tucker, the grantor of all the parties to this instrument, at any time in connection with the above-described tract, or in connection with any other tract of which the foregoing tract was a part, and which said water is now diverted at a point in Ritchie creek southwest of the most southerly point of the above-described land."

The second deed, in which Lila J. Eachus, Martha C. Culver and George H. Tucker are grantors, and Charles L. Tucker, the defendant, is the grantee, contains the following language:

> "Granting to the said Charles L. Tucker the right to divert water from Ritchie creek at a point about 450 feet southwest of the main county road, and below the point where F. Salmina & Co. now divert water from said creek; it being understood and agreed that Charles L. Tucker shall only have the right and privilege of using and diverting the overflow from Ritchie creek after Lila J. Eachus and Martha A. Culver, or either of them, have used all of the water formerly held, used, or claimed by George Tucker, the former owner of the 146-acre tract this day divided among the parties hereto, they may desire for any and all purposes, upon the land this day deeded to them, and after said F. Salmina & Co. has used its share of said water; and it is understood and agreed that no right, title, or interest in any water right of said George Tucker, or any water right acquired since said property was granted to the parties hereto is hereby granted."

This deed reserves to the grantors only the amount of water formerly "held, used, or claimed" by George Tucker. The court admitted evidence of the amount of water used by George Tucker, and found that the amount was about 3,000 gallons per day sold to the county, and sufficient water for his domestic uses about his home and barn, and the court therefore allowed the plaintiff such amounts before allowing the defendant any water at all, and after such amounts were taken by the plaintiff, if any water remained, the court allowed the defendant sufficient water for his domestic uses and divided the balance, if any, between the plaintiff and defendant for irrigation in the proportion that the acreage of each bore to the entire acreage of the riparian land. The decisions are to the effect that in running water there can be no absolute ownership; that riparian rights do not mean ownership in any special portion of the water of a stream until such water is actually taken and used. Kidd v. Laird, 15 Cal. 161, 179, 76 Am. Dec. 472; Eddy v. Simpson, 3 Cal. 249, 252, 58 Am. Dec. 408; Palmer v. R. R. Com., 167 Cal. 163, 168, 138 Pac. 997; Farnham on Waters and Water Rights, vol. 2, pp. 1565, 1566.

[1, 2] In view of these decisions, the language of the deed is clear. George W. Tucker "held, used, and claimed" only the portion of the water actually taken and used by him, which amount was found by the court upon substantial evidence. The deed from Charles L. Tucker by which appellant claims the grantor deeded away his riparian rights must be construed in connection with the deed to him, as both are admittedly a part of the same transaction. We think the language of that deed bears out the construction placed upon it by the court. The deed contains a specification of the exact water conveyed by it in the words:

> "And which said water is now diverted at a point in Ritchie creek southwest of the most southerly point of the above described land."

The evidence regarding the amount of water diverted at that point at the time the deeds were executed is in harmony with the judgment. As the deeds merely reserved to the plaintiff's predecessors such amounts of water as the court found were used by George Tucker—the rights in the remainder of the water of the creek, as between the plaintiff and the defendant, are governed by the law applicable to riparian owners.

[3] In answer to appellant's contention that he is entitled to use the water for irrigation on his land before the defendant is entitled to any water at all for domestic or other uses, we quote the language found in the decision in the case of Alta Land & Water Co. v. Hancock, 85 Cal. 219 at page 230, 24 Pac. 645 at page 647, 20 Am. St. Rep. 217, at page 224:

> "So far, the right of a riparian proprietor to the use of water for purposes of irrigation at all has been assumed, rather than determined, and has been properly regarded as among the last, though perhaps not the least important, of his riparian rights; one that must be always held in subordination to the rights of all other riparian proprietors to the use of water for the supply of the natural wants of man and beast, extended to the occupants of each and every tract held as an entirety, bordering upon the stream, whatever its extent. These natural wants supplied and protected the right to a reasonable use of the surplus water by the riparian proprietor, in common with others in like situation, for purposes of irrigation, has been acknowledged and recognized, but it cannot be extended even by implication."

See, also, Smith v. Corbit, 116 Cal. 587, 48 Pac. 725; Learned v. Tangeman et al., 65 Cal. 334, 4 Pac. 191.

[4] What is a reasonable use depends upon all the facts and circumstances of the case. Ferrea v. Knipe, 28 Cal. 341, 87 Am. Dec. 128; Union Mills, etc., Co. v. Ferris, 2 Sawy. 176, Fed. Cas. No. 14,371; Dilling v. Murray, 6 Ind. 324, 63 Am. Dec. 385; Elliot v. Fitchburg R. R. Co., 10 Cush. (Mass.) 191, at pages 193, 194, 57 Am. Dec. 85; Timm v. Bear, 29 Wis. 254, 265. The court here heard evidence upon the needs of the parties, the nature of the land, the volume of the stream, and its variation in this respect at different seasons, and we think properly decided that it would be an unreasonable use of the water under all the facts and circumstances for the plaintiff to use it for irrigation before the domestic uses of the defendant had been satisfied. The court, therefore, after reserving to the plaintiff the amount reserved to him by the deeds, allowed him water for his domestic uses, and then allowed to the defendant water for his domestic uses before allowing the plaintiff any water for irrigation. After the domestic uses of the defendant were satisfied, then the water was divided between the plaintiff and defendant for irrigation, having regard to the number of acres of riparian land owned by each. The case seems to fall within the rule announced in the case of Evans v. Merriweather, 3 Scam. (Ill.) 492, 38 Am. Dec. 106, where it is said that a riparian owner may use the whole of the stream, if it is necessary to satisfy his natural wants. He may consume all the water for his domestic purposes, including water for his stock, but if he desires to use it for irrigation or manufactures, and there be a lower proprietor to whom its use is essential to supply his natural wants, or for his stock, he must use the water so as to leave enough for such lower proprietor. Where the stream is small, and does not furnish more than sufficient to answer the natural wants of the different proprietors living on it, none of the proprietors can use the water for either irrigation or manufacture.

[5] It is not contended that the land of the defendant is nonriparian land. As a riparian proprietor, he is entitled, it is true, only to the water after it reaches his land in its natural flow, and if in the natural flow of the stream there is insufficient water conducted to defendant's land for his uses, he has not, as a riparian owner merely, the right to go on the land of an upper proprietor and divert the water from there. Anaheim Union Water Co. v. Fuller, 150 Cal. at page 332, 88 Pac. 978, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062. A riparian proprietor's title to the water begins only when it reaches his land. Hargrave v. Cook, 108 Cal. 72, 41 Pac. 18, 30 L. R. A. 390. But, in the present case, defendant does not rely upon his riparian right for the privilege of going upon plaintiff's land and diverting the water. The deed to him from plaintiff's predecessor in interest has facilitated the enjoyment of his riparian rights, and by virtue of the contract between the parties, as contained in said deed, defendant is given the right to divert water from Ritchie creek at a certain point on plaintiff's land, after plaintiff has used for any purpose he may desire the amount of water "held, used, or claimed by George Tucker," the former owner, which amount has been found by the court and saved to the plaintiff.

[6, 7] With respect to the fractional division of the water for purposes of irrigation, there is no evidence before the court as to whether or not there are yet other lower riparian owners; but, if there are, of course, the rights of such owners are not affected by this judgment. As between the parties hereto, the division seems to us proper and reasonable, and if there are other parties who have yet independent rights, in a proper proceeding the rights of the riparian proprietors now before the court may be declared to be subject to such rights of such third parties, but such adjudication would not change the relative rights of the parties hereto as between each other

[8] Appellant objects to the holding of the trial court that certain land which was owned by the plaintiff, but was divided from his main tract and from Ritchie creek by a strip of land used for the operation of an electric railroad was nonriparian land. The fee to the strip of land occupied by the railroad had been granted to said company by plaintiff's predecessor in title. It becomes unnecessary for us to pass upon this question of law, because, as pointed out by the respondent, this ruling was not injurious to the plaintiff, for the reason that the court held that the land of both the plaintiff and defendant lying north of said railroad was nonriparian, and, as shown by the map, more of the defendant's land was thus held to be nonriparian than of the plaintiff. As the water was divided in proportion to the acreage of riparian land held by each, after reserving certain amounts to the plaintiff, the plaintiff would have received less water had the court held this strip of land to be riparian.

[9] Appellant objects that he was not allowed to introduce evidence of the negotiations and understandings of the parties to the deeds at the time they were executed. The rule is, of course, beyond dispute that when written instruments are not ambiguous, they may not be varied by parol testimony. The plaintiff himself admits that he does not consider these instruments ambiguous, but relies upon certain language used by the court in the course of the trial which he contends shows that the court considered these instruments ambiguous. The answer to this contention is that, in arriving at its judgment, the court did not treat the instruments as ambiguous, but construed them without the aid of parol evidence, and this court finds that construction to be correct. It cannot be held, therefore, that these instruments are ambiguous, requiring the aid of parol testimony for their interpretation.

GREENE v. MOORE. (Civ. 2983.)

1. Bankruptcy ⚷277—Action for benefit of estate in discretion of trustee.

The trustee in bankruptcy, and not a creditor or any number of creditors, is the sole judge of when or whether to bring actions in the interest and for the benefit of the estate, and, in the absence of an alleged abuse of discretion with which he is invested, he is not subject to the dictation or control of the creditors of the estate.

2. Bankruptcy ⚷20(1) — Jurisdiction of federal court exclusive.

The jurisdiction of the federal court over the assets of a bankrupt and over the actions of the trustee in bankruptcy is exclusive, and the state courts have no jurisdiction over either during the pendency of the proceedings; the remedy of a creditor in such a case being by application to the federal court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by A. W. Greene, as a creditor of R. B. Tolmie, etc., against William H. Moore, Jr., as trustee in bankruptcy of R. B. Tolmie, a bankrupt. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John A. Wallis, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bowen & Bailie, Norman A. Bailie, and Frederick W. Lake, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant after an order sustaining his demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint without leave to amend.

The action is one brought by the plaintiff as one of the creditors of one R. B. Tolmie, a bankrupt, the plaintiff purporting to bring said action on behalf of himself and many other creditors of said bankrupt, though who or how many of these creditors there are, or by what authority the plaintiff assumes to represent them, is not made to appear. The complaint alleges that the proceedings in bankruptcy of said Tolmie are pending in the United States District Court of the Southern District of California, wherein the said Tolmie has been duly adjudicated a bankrupt, and wherein the defendant herein has been and still is the duly appointed, qualified, and acting trustee of the estate of said bankrupt. The complaint further alleges that the plaintiff herein has demanded of such trustee that he commence a certain action against certain parties who are alleged to have seized and sold certain property of said bankrupt, and for the value of which said parties are alleged to be liable to said estate; that the defendant as such trustee has refused to commence said action, by which refusal the plaintiff and the other parties whom he assumes to represent have been damaged in the sum of $862.27, for which sum he prays judgment against said trustee.

The defendant demurred to this complaint upon two main grounds: First, that said complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; second, that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject of the action. The court sustained this demurrer generally without leave to amend.

[1] We are of the opinion that the judgment of the trial court rendered after making said order was proper for both of the reasons urged in said demurrer. The complaint failed utterly to show any abuse of the discretion with which the trustees of bankrupts are invested with respect to the bringing of actions in the interest and for the benefit of the estate. He and not a creditor or any number of creditors is the sole judge of the matter of when or whether to bring such actions; and, in the absence of an alleged abuse of the discretion with which he is invested, he is not subject to the dictation or control of the creditors of the estate. In re Baird (D. C.) 112 Fed. 960; In re Columbia Iron Works (D. C.) 142 Fed. 234; Remington on Bankruptcy, § 900. There being no averment in the complaint herein showing any abuse of this discretion, it failed to state a cause of action.

[2] But the order of the court in sustaining said demurrer without leave to amend is sustainable for another and stronger reason. The proceedings in bankruptcy were pending in the federal court at the time this action was commenced, and the defendant herein was then and still is the duly appointed officer of that court. The jurisdiction of the federal court over the assets of said bankrupt and over the actions of said trustee is exclusive, and the state courts have no jurisdiction over either during the pendency there of said proceedings. In re Watts, 190 U. S. 1, 23 Sup. Ct. 718, 47 L. Ed. 933; In re Anderson (D. C.) 23 Fed. 482; White v. Schloerb, 178 U. S. 542, 20 Sup. Ct. 1007, 44 L. Ed. 1183. None of the cases cited by the appellant hold to the contrary. The remedy of a creditor in such a case as this is complete; he may apply to the federal court for relief from any neglect or refusal of the trustee to perform his duty, and the court upon a proper showing will compel him to proceed or remove him for his disobedience or neglect of duty. The exclusive jurisdiction to thus control its officer rests with said court. It follows that the order of the trial court sustaining the defendant's demurrer without leave to amend was proper.

SIMPSON et ux. v. SMITH. (Civ. 2156.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE 🔑156—EXTINGUISHMENT OF PRIOR NOTE OF HUSBAND AS CONSIDERATION FOR WIFE'S NOTE.

Where husband executed a note and handed it to defendant wife for her signature and she several days after maturity of note affixed her signature thereto and returned the note to her husband, who thereafter delivered it to plaintiffs with the understanding that it replace a prior note made by the husband before his marriage to defendant, there was a sufficient consideration to support defendant's promise to pay.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑931(1), 1010(1)—FINDINGS BASED ON SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE NOT DISTURBED.

Every intendment should be indulged in favor of the findings of a trial court, and the findings not overthrown on appeal unless it clearly appears that the conclusions reached are without the support of substantial evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Estep, Judge.

Action by M. L. Simpson and wife against Elsie Smith. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Judgment reversed, and new trial ordered.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, for appellants.

Weinmann, Wood & Cunha, of Alameda, for respondent.

BARDIN, Judge pro tem. Plaintiffs, who are husband and wife, brought this action to recover a judgment for the balance due of the principal and interest of a promissory note made by the defendant and her husband, E. S. Smith, since deceased, dated April 20. 1912, and payable one day after date "to M. L. Simpson or S. E. Simpson." The defendant, who had judgment below, denies liability upon two grounds: (1) That there was no consideration for the promise of the defendant; and (2) that the signature of defendant to said note was procured under duress and through the undue influence of plaintiffs and the husband of the defendant.

The court found, in effect, among other facts, that the defendant did not, for value received, execute to the plaintiffs the promissory note sued upon; that the defendant had never received any consideration of any nature whatsoever for signing said promissory note; that there was no consideration for defendant signing said note; and "that no detriment of any kind or nature was suffered by the plaintiffs * * * or either of them by reason of said instrument."

The affirmative allegations contained in defendant's answer relative to the charge that plaintiffs procured the defendant's signature to the note in question through duress and undue influence were adopted by the trial court in its findings as true, yet there is no evidence whatever in the record which sustains such findings. They are so clearly unsupported by the evidence that they were probably made through inadvertence.

From a review of the evidence adduced at the trial, and which was believed by the trial court to warrant the finding that there was no consideration for the promise of defendant contained in the promissory note sued upon, we discover the following germane and uncontradicted facts:

[1] The note in suit was the outgrowth of the demands of plaintiff M. L. Simpson for the payment of a prior promissory note, then due and unpaid, made by the husband of defendant and presumably payable, as stated in respondent's brief, to both plaintiffs. The prior note was made previous to defendant's marriage, and the consideration therefor had passed solely to the said husband of defendant and she was not obligated in any manner under it. Under pressure of plaintiff M. L. Simpson for payment of the first note, or that its payment be secured, the note in suit was drawn, dated, and signed by the husband of defendant, and he thereupon handed the note to defendant for her signature. Several days later, and after its maturity, she affixed her signature to the face of the note and returned it to her husband, who thereafter delivered it to the plaintiffs with the understanding that it replace the first note.

It does not appear from the evidence that the defendant participated directly in the arrangement whereby the antecedent debt was discharged by the execution of the new note, other than by signing the note in suit and delivering it to her husband. Some two years thereafter the present action was begun to enforce the payment of the balance due and unpaid on the note last executed.

It is contended by the defendant that, since the note in suit was not delivered until after its maturity, it became, in legal effect, a demand note which the parties might sue upon as soon as delivered; and that therefore no detriment or prejudice was suffered by the plaintiffs, for there could be no enforceable forbearance to sue under the circumstances; and that, since the element of forbearance to sue was not present, there was no consideration for the promise of the defendant.

But this theory eliminates the real consideration for the execution of the note in suit. The consideration for the signature of the defendant to such note is not grounded upon the forbearance of either of plaintiffs to sue upon an antecedent debt, but, instead, upon the extinguishment of the prior note of the husband of defendant. The relinquishment of all rights under that note constituted such a detriment and prejudice to the rights of the plaintiffs as to provide a sufficient consideration to support the promise of the defendant to pay the note sued upon. Stroud v. Thomas, 139 Cal. 274, 72 Pac. 1008, 96 Am. St. Rep. 111; Lyon v. Robertson, 6 Cal. Unrep. 390, 59 Pac. 990; Hobson v. Hassett, 76 Cal. 203, 18 Pac. 320, 9 Am. St. Rep. 193; Miller & Lux v. Dunlap, 28 Cal. App. 313, 152 Pac. 309; section 1605, Civ. Code.

In Stroud v. Thomas, supra, the court used the following language:

> "The contention of the appellant that a preexisting debt is not a sufficient consideration for the execution of a note, so far as the sureties thereon are concerned, where the obligation for the pre-existing debt is canceled upon the delivery of the new note, does not merit discussion. It is well settled that such a consideration is sufficient as a foundation for the promise of the sureties, as well as that of the principals."

Counsel for the respondent places undue reliance upon the cases of Westphal v. Nevills, 92 Cal. 545, 28 Pac. 678, and Whelan v. Swain, 132 Cal. 389, 64 Pac. 560. We perceive nothing in those cases contained which is in disagreement with the views herein expressed. In Westphal v. Nevills, supra, it was held that the detriment to the plaintiff by reason of time given to make payment of an antecedent debt was sufficient consideration to support the promise of the appellant. The effect of the relinquishment of rights under an antecedent note or debt was not involved. And, in the case of Whelan v. Swain, supra, the consideration supporting a promissory note was based not only upon a forbearance to sue, but also because "the old note was surrendered."

[2] While we are aware that every intendment should be indulged in favor of the findings of a trial court, and that they should not be overthrown on appeal unless it clearly appears that the conclusions reached are without the support of substantial evidence, yet in this particular case it clearly appears, from the uncontradicted testimony adduced at the trial, that the consideration for the signature of the defendant to the note sued upon was the relinquishment by plaintiffs of rights under the prior note referred to.

The findings of the trial court to the effect that there was no consideration for the execution of the note in suit by the defendant is without sufficient support in the evidence. The resulting judgment cannot, therefore, be upheld.

Judgment reversed, and a new trial ordered.

Pledgee of corporate stock had right to compel company to cause nature of transaction to be so entered on its books as to show names of pledgor and pledgee, number or designation of shares, and date of transfer.

3. CORPORATIONS 🔑122 — BONA FIDE PURCHASER FOR VALUE OF STOCK.

One who purchases corporate stock at a sale under his own judgment, without actual or constructive notice of alleged defects in title thereof, is a bona fide purchaser for value; the rule as to a bona fide purchaser applying to sales of corporate stock.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by the American Trust & Banking Company against the Union Security Company, in which L. P. Lowe intervened. Judgment for the intervener, and the plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Gray, Barker & Bowen and Donald Barker, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Swanwick & Donnelly, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. Plaintiff brought this action against the Union Security Company, seeking to compel defendant to enter a transfer of certain shares of its own stock upon its books, showing ownership therein in plaintiff, and to issue to plaintiff a certificate therefor. From the chronological statement of the facts it appears that one Brown, the owner of 70 shares of the capital stock of defendant, Union Security Company, indorsed a certificate of this stock, and delivered it to the plaintiff as a pledge and security for an obligation held by plaintiff against the corporation, of which Brown was president. Plaintiff took no steps to have the records of the Union Security Company show the transfer, or its interest in the said stock as pledgee, until long after the rights of intervener and cross-complainant Lowe had attached to said stock as hereinafter stated.

After the delivery of the stock certificate and pledge, one Randall commenced an action in the superior court of Los Angeles county against Brown, and caused an attachment to be regularly issued and levied upon the said 70 shares of stock, then standing in the name of Brown on the books of the Union Security Company. Judgment was entered in this action in favor of Randall against Brown, and execution upon the said judgment was issued and levied upon the said 70 shares of stock still standing in Brown's name on the books of the company. The sheriff of Los Angeles county duly sold said stock to Randall in satisfaction of his judgment, and delivered a certificate of sale thereof in regular form. Randall had no notice or knowledge of plaintiff's equities in the stock until long after his purchase at the execution sale in satisfaction of the judgment against Brown and receipt of the certificate of sale from the sheriff. He promptly presented this certificate to the Union Security Company, and demanded transfer of the said 70 shares in his name on the books of the company. As the company had no knowledge of any adverse interest in or claim to the stock, it issued to Randall a certificate for 70 shares of its capital stock, in lieu of said certificate, standing on its books in the name of Brown. Randall thereafter indorsed and delivered said certificate of stock to Lowe, the intervener, who also took the same without notice.

Some time thereafter the certificate of stock which Brown had delivered as a pledge to plaintiff was sold and assigned to plaintiff in satisfaction of the debt for which it was held as security. Plaintiff presented the certificate, with the assignment thereof to the Union Security Company, and demanded the transfer of such shares be made to defendant upon the books of said company. The Union Security Company refused to comply with the demand, and plaintiff commenced this action to compel it to do so. L. P. Lowe intervened in the action, and by cross-complaint against plaintiff and defendant alleged, in substance, the foregoing facts, which at the trial were stipulated as the facts of the case. Judgment was entered in favor of Lowe, adjudging him to be the owner of the stock. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, which was denied, and now appeals from the judgment.

[1] Succinctly stated, the question for the court on this appeal is whether or not a bona fide purchaser at an execution sale of stock standing in the name of a judgment debtor on the books of the corporation is protected in the purchase against a prior pledgee holding a certificate evidencing said stock as security for an antecedent indebtedness of the judgment creditor. The lower court answered this question, we believe correctly, in the affirmative.

[2] When plaintiff acquired the stock in question in pledge from Brown, it had a right to compel the Union Security Company to cause the nature of the transaction to be so entered upon its books as to show the names of the pledgor and the pledgee, the number or designation of the shares, and the date of the transfer. Spreckels v. Nevada Bank, 113 Cal. 272, 277, 45 Pac. 329, 331 (33 L. R. A. 459, 54 Am. St. Rep. 348). As was said in that case:

> "All this may be done to the full protection of the pledgee's rights without the surrender of the certificates, their cancellation, and the issuance to him of new ones, and, when done, the pledgee would be fully protected against a subsequent purchaser, who would be charged with the constructive notice which the entries upon the books of the corporation import; and, upon the other hand, there would be preserved to the pledgor all the rights incident to his ownership under the pledge."

Section 324 of the Civil Code provides that shares of stock may be transferred by indorsement and delivery of the certificate, but that such transfer is not valid, except between the parties thereto, until same is so entered upon the books of the corporation as to show the names of the parties, by and to whom transferred, the number or designation of the shares, and the date of the transfer. It has been determined by the decisions of the Supreme Court of this state, interpreting these provisions, that even without entry upon the books of the corporation such a transfer is valid as against all but innocent purchasers and transferees in good faith, for value, and without notice. Actual notice to such an intending purchaser by one having a prior claim upon the stock, even though his claim be not noted in the books of the corporation, is sufficient. Spreckels v. Nevada Bank, supra, and cases cited. In the case at bar the subsequent purchaser at the execution sale had no actual notice, nor constructive notice, which the entries on the books of the corporation, referred to in the decision just quoted, would have imported. We are of the opinion, therefore, that plaintiff omitted to take an ordinary business precaution as well as to perform its duty when it failed to cause a proper entry of the transaction between itself and defendant's pledgor, Brown, to be entered upon the books of the Union Security Company for its protection, as the section of the Code referred to contemplated.

Lowe, as the purchaser at the execution sale under his judgment, without notice of the previous assignment of the 70 shares of stock to the plaintiff, took the stock discharged of the plaintiff's lien (Farmers' National Gold Bank v. Wilson, 58 Cal. 600), and was entitled to have the certificate of such shares reissued to him as such purchaser (West Coast Safety Faucet Co. v. Wulff, 133 Cal. 315, 316, 65 Pac. 622, 85 Am. St. Rep. 171).

[3] Lowe, purchasing the stock at a sale under his own judgment, without actual or constructive notice of alleged defects in the title thereof, was a bona fide purchaser for value. Cady v. Purser, 131 Cal. 552, 559, 63 Pac. 844, 82 Am. St. Rep. 391; Foorman v. Wallace, 75 Cal. 552, 17 Pac. 680; Hunter v. Watson, 12 Cal. 377, 73 Am. Dec. 543. The rule as to a bona fide purchaser, applies to sales of corporate stock. Anglo-California Bank v. Grangers' Bank, 63 Cal. 359; Winter v. Belmont Mining Co., 53 Cal. 428. Within the rule announced intervener Lowe was a bona fide purchaser in good faith, for value, without notice.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. Landlord and tenant ⚷184(2)—Right of lessee to deposit with landlord on termination of lease.

Where money was deposited by a lessee as security for payment of rent, the lessee is entitled, on termination of the lease, to a return of the sum deposited less the amount of rent due and unpaid at the time of termination; but, if the sum was paid by the lessee as a bonus to induce the lessor to make the lease, the lessee is not entitled to recover back any part of the bonus on cancellation of the lease by the lessor for justifiable cause.

2. Landlord and tenant ⚷184(2)—Recovery by lessee of deposit made with landlord.

Assignee of the lessee held not entitled to recover a payment of $300 made by the lessee on execution of the lease, it appearing that the lease was terminated because of the breach of covenant as to payment of rent; the provision as to repayment excepting termination of the lease for lessee's breach of contract.

3. Landlord and tenant ⚷188(1)—Right of tenant to make repairs and charge to landlord.

Where a lease provided that the landlord should repair defects in the premises which should appear in the first year after completion and that the lessee waived all rights to make repairs at the expense of the lessor, as provided in Civ. Code, § 1942, held, that the lessee could not justify refusal to pay rent because the lessor refused during the third year after completion of the premises to make repairs, which repairs were then made by the lessee.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Fannie Slater Curtis against Ella H. Arnold. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. H. Countryman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Burrell G. White and John Ralph Wilson, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment, and asks for a review of the order denying a motion for a new trial. The controversy involves the sum of $3,000, on deposit under the terms of a written lease dated March 7, 1910, between defendant, as lessor, and Charles Loeffler, as lessee. The interests and rights of the lessee have been transferred to plaintiff.

The first paragraph of the lease reads as follows:

> "For and in consideration of the sum of three thousand dollars ($3,000) gold coin of the United States of America, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, Ella H. Arnold, of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, agrees to make and enter into, and does hereby make and enter into, to and with Charles Loeffler of the same place the following lease, upon the terms and conditions herein specified, to wit."

Then follows an ordinary lease made and entered into between the parties, under the terms of which the lessor agrees to erect a certain five-story, class C, building in accordance with plans and specifications therein particularly referred to, for a period of 10 years, from and after the date of completion of the building, at the total rental, or sum, of $102,500, in monthly payments (the first month's rent being free) of $875 per month, for the first five years of the lease, and $925 for the next four years and seven months of the term. Nothing is said in the lease as to the amount of rent to be paid by the lessor for the last five months of the term.

It was expressly covenanted in the lease that the lessor should, at her own cost and expense, keep the roof and exterior of the premises in good order, condition, and repair during the term of the lease, and should likewise, at her own cost and expense, repair or cause to be repaired any defects in the premises which should appear during the first 12 months after the completion and acceptance of said building, if the defects resulted from the settling of the walls, shrinkage of timbers, defective plumbing, or other defects due to construction.

It was further stipulated in the lease that, otherwise than as above stated, the lessor, after taking possession of the premises, should keep and maintain the interior of the same in good order, condition, and repair during his occupancy; the injury thereto or destruction thereof by the act of God or the elements or other cause beyond the control of the lessee being excepted. The lessee expressly waived all rights to make repairs of said premises at the expense of the lessor, as provided in section 1942 of the Civil Code of the State of California.

A further stipulation in the lease is:

> "That in the event of the determination of this lease prior to the expiration of the ten year term hereby demised, for any reason or cause, except a breach of covenant by the lessee, the lessor will pay to the lessee the sum of three thousand ($3,000) dollars in gold coin of the United States of America, together with interest thereon from the date of the completion of said building, at the rate of four (4%) per cent. per annum, compounded annually, provided however, that if such termination shall occur during the last five months of said term, the amount so payable shall be reduced at the rate of nine hundred and twenty-five ($925) dollars per month for each of said months as shall have expired prior to said termination. It is understood and agreed that this lease shall not be assigned without the written consent of the lessor. It is understood that if the lessee shall in all respects fully comply with the terms, conditions and covenants of this lease, he shall have the use of the above described premises, herein leased for the last five months of the term herein named and provided, free of rent, and said free rent is conditioned upon the full compliance with the performance of all conditions and covenants of this lease by said lessee both before and during the said last five months hereof."

The building was completed, and possession taken by the lessee, on or about the 31st day of December, 1910. The rent for the month of September, 1914, was not paid. Defendant served on plaintiff a notice, requiring him to pay the rent within three days or deliver possession of the premises. Plaintiff moved out of the premises within the period given, and defendant, in writing, accepted the keys and possession of the leased property.

[1] During plaintiff's occupancy of the house, certain structural defects in the building developed, and plaintiff, after calling the attention of the defendant to these matters, expended certain sums of money in making repairs. Plaintiff brought this action for the recovery of the $3,000, and interest, paid by her assignor to defendant, under the provision of the lease that has been referred to. Defendant filed an answer and cross-complaint for the amount of the rent for the month of September, 1914. Plaintiff, in answer to the cross-complaint, asserted the right to offset the claim for the rent for that month by the sum of money she expended in making the repairs to the premises hereinbefore and hereinafter referred to. At the trial defendant dismissed her cross-complaint, leaving as the only issue to be tried by the court the question of the right of plaintiff to recover the $3,000. The court eventually held that by the failure of plaintiff to pay the rent in cash for September, 1914, she had so violated the covenants of the lease that, under its terms, she was not entitled to recover that amount, and gave judgment for defendant. The decision of the main issue of the case, to wit, the right of the plaintiff to recover the sum of $3,000, turns upon the determination of the status of that fund now in the hands of defendant. Appellant steadfastly maintains that the amount was deposited with the lessor as security for the performance of the covenants of the lease; that, therefore it was not forfeited to the lessor by reason of the failure on the part of the lessee to pay the rent accrued for September, 1914. She relies upon Green v. Frahm, 176 Cal. 259, 168 Pac. 114, and Rez v. Summers, 34 Cal. App. 527, 168 Pac. 156. Defendant claims that it was paid to defendant by the original lessee as an additional consideration, or bonus, as an inducement to defendant to make the lease. If either of these claims finds support in the pleadings or evidence, the decision of the case presents but little difficulty. If the money was deposited as security for the payment by the lessee of the rent, it is clear that upon the termination of the lease the plaintiff would be entitled to a return of the sum deposited, less the amount of rent due and unpaid at the time of the termination. Green v. Frahm, supra; Rez v. Summers, supra; Caesar v. Rubinson, 174 N. Y. 492, 67 N. E. 58; Michaels v. Fishel, 169 N. Y. 381, 62 N. E. 425; Galbraith v. Wood, 124 Minn. 210, 213, 144 N. W. 945, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1034, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 609. If the $3,000 was paid by the lessee as a bonus, as an independent consideration, to induce defendant to make the lease, it is equally clear that a cancellation of the lease by the landlord for any cause which justifies the act would not entitle plaintiff to receive back any part of the sum so paid, in the absence of some stipulation in the lease requiring her to do so. Galbraith v. Wood, 124 Minn. 210, 214, 144 N. W. 945, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1034, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 609; Dutton v. Christie, 63 Wash. 372, 115 Pac. 856.

[2] In the first of the cases relied upon by appellant, Green v. Frahm, the language of the lease is that—

> "Cohn hereby deposits with Frahm the sum of three thousand dollars, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, said sum of three thousand dollars to be retained by Frahm as a guaranty that Cohn will pay the rent as herein provided, and in the manner herein specified, and will keep and perform each and every covenant > herein contained to be performed by Cohn, and in the event of the failure of Cohn to pay the rent or to keep or perform any of the covenants herein contained to be performed by Cohn, then and in that event, the said sum of three thousand dollars shall become forfeited unto Frahm. On the other hand, should Cohn pay the rent herein reserved, then and in that event the said sum of three thousand dollars shall be returned to Cohn at the end of the term hereinbefore created, or at any sooner determination thereof. Frahm agrees to pay Cohn four per cent. interest on the sum of three thousand dollars, to be paid annually."

Another clause provided that, in case of any termination of the lease through any fraud or neglect of Cohn, then the $3,000 reserved should be repaid to him with interest. Cohn defaulted in payment of rent. Frahm instituted proceedings in unlawful detainer against him, and, upon obtaining judgment, was put into possession of the property. Cohn, by his assignee, began an action against Frahm to recover the $3,000, which, in pursuance of the terms of the lease, had been deposited by Cohn with Frahm at the time of the execution thereof. The judgment was for plaintiff, and Frahm appealed. The Supreme Court held that the above-quoted provision of the lease naturally divided itself into two parts: One, a provision that the $3,000 deposited with Frahm was to be a guaranty for performance by Cohn of the covenants of the lease, including the payments of rent; the other that, in the event of the failure of Cohn to perform any of said covenants, the said money should become forfeited to Frahm, that the provision for a forfeiture upon the failure of Cohn to pay the rent was either a penalty, or a provision that the $3,000 was to be liquidated damages for the breach of the covenants, and in either aspect the provision was void. Green v. Frahm, supra. The other part of the clause, providing for the deposit of the $3,000 as a security for the payment of rent, was held by the Supreme Court to be for a legal purpose, and in all respects valid and enforceable, and that Frahm had a legal right, in case of the failure of Cohn to pay rent, to retain the $3,000 and apply it on the rent until the same was exhausted; that he did not choose to do this, however, but immediately began proceedings for the restitution of the premises, and the recovery of the rent due, and had succeeded in obtaining judgment for both, also for cancellation of the lease; that, under these circumstances, he must be admitted to have repudiated the security, and to have waived the right to retain the $3,000 as security for the payment of rent subsequently accruing; that the sum as deposited was to be considered as money held by Frahm as bailee, for the use of Cohn, and due demand having been made for its return, the plaintiff was entitled to recover. In Rez v. Summers, also relied upon by appellant, the court found:

> "That the sum of $800 was received by the lessor as being in full payment for the rent for the last two months of the term. But the payment was not absolute and unconditional, since it was also agreed that in certain contingencies this money would be returned to the lessee, and in that part of the contract the $800 was referred to as 'security.'"

In neither of the foregoing cases were the facts similar to those of the case at bar. In the instant case, for and in consideration of the sum of $3,000, the receipt of which was acknowledged by the lessor, she agreed to make and enter into the lease to plaintiff's assignor.

This, to our mind, brings the case squarely within the ruling of Ramish v. Workman, 33 Cal. App. 19, 164 Pac. 26, and Dutton v. Christie, supra. In the first of these cases the provision of the lease was that the lessees would pay to the lessor, as a further consideration for the lease, in addition to the rent therein reserved, the sum of $7,200, receipt of which was acknowledged by the lessor. There was a further proviso that if the lessees should pay the rent reserved, when same became due under the lease, and should well and truly perform and observe all the covenants and agreements contained in the lease on their part to be performed during the first nine years, seven months, and twelve days, and the lease should not be terminated by the re-entry of the lessor as in the lease provided, within that period, the lessor should credit said sum of $7,200 so paid by the lessees upon the last four months and eighteen days' rent due under the lease. After taking possession under the lease, the lessees made default and were evicted. The lessor also commenced an action to recover rent for the period during which the premises were held and occupied by the lessees. The defendants, by answer and cross-complaint, set up the deposit of $7,200, made as hereinbefore indicated, and prayed for its return. Judgment went for the plaintiff, and the defendants appealed, insisting, as does the appellant here, that, notwithstanding the plain language in which the provision of the lease is couched, "the meaning of which, to our minds," said the appellate court, "admits of no controversy," the payment of $7,200 should be construed as security for the payment of the rent reserved during the time ending with their eviction, and any damages sustained by plaintiff; that, when the landlord elected to evict defendants from the premises for nonpayment of rent, he waived all claims to the fund except in so far as it was necessary to apply it in payment of rent then due and accrued. In its decision the court said:

> "As stated in Dutton v. Christie, 63 Wash. 373, 115 Pac. 857, where a similar question was involved: 'We cannot agree with this contention without in effect writing a new contract for the parties.' Clearly, the $7,200 was paid for a ten-year lease of the premises, upon the conditions and terms specified therein. Defendants parted with the money, not as a penalty or as security, but as a payment the consideration for which was the execution of the lease on the part of plaintiff. The title thereto passed absolutely to the lessor, unaffected by the fact that he agreed, upon the performance of certain conditions by defendants, to give them credit therefor. The conditions were never performed by defendants, and hence they could have no claim to the fund. The authorities which appellants cite in support of their contention all appear to have been cases where the deposit was made with the lessor upon the execution of the lease as security for the payment of the rent, and in such cases, upon the lessor evicting the tenants, it is uniformly held that he cannot assert claim to the amount so deposited, over and above rent due, with damages sustained. The cases cited by appellants involve deposits made as 'a guaranty,' 'as indemnity,' as 'a penalty,' 'for security,' etc., and hence are readily distinguished from the case at bar. This view finds full support in the case of Dutton v. Christie, 63 Wash. 373, 115 Pac. 857.

"The provisions of the lease in question hereinbefore quoted should be interpreted in accordance with the plain import of the language used, and thus construed it is clear that the parties intended the $7,200 to be in the nature of a bonus or additional consideration paid the lessor as an inducement to make the lease upon the terms and conditions therein contained; and, as stated, the fact that upon the performance of all the covenants and agreements contained in the lease to be performed by the lessees during the first nine years, seven months, and twelve days of the term thereof, he promised in effect to release them from the payment of rent at the rate of $1,500 per month for the last four months and eighteen days of the term so demised, furnishes no reason for appellants' contention."

A rehearing of this case was denied by the Supreme Court.

The facts in Dutton v. Christie, supra, are very similar to those under consideration here. The respondent in that case let to the appellants certain premises in the city of Seattle, for the period of five years, under a written lease by which it is provided that the rental of the premises should be $750 every month in advance. It was stated in the first paragraph of the lease that it was made "in consideration of the covenants of the second parties (appellants) hereinafter set forth, and of the sum of fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500) now paid to the first party by the second parties, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged." In a subsequent paragraph of the lease it was stated that the "above payment of fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500) now made snall, in the event of the full and faithful performance of this contract by the second parties, be credited in payment of rent for the last two months of said term; but otherwise said payment this day made shall belong to first party as a part of the consideration to them for the execution of this lease." The lessees defaulting, the lessor brought an action to recover the unpaid rent. Judgment was rendered against the lessees who appealed claiming that the judgment should have been in their favor for the difference between the advance payment of $1,500 and the amount of the unpaid rent, earnestly insisting that the $1,500 so paid in advance was merely intended as a deposit in the nature of a penalty for any failure on their part to carry out the terms of the lease.

"We cannot agree with this contention," said the Supreme Court of Washington, "without in effect writing a new contract for the parties. In the beginning of the lease the parties have declared that the lease is given in consideration of the covenants of the second parties and of the payment of $1,500. The lease was certainly a legally sufficient consideration for the payment. If there had been no further mention of this money, there could be no question of the respondent's ownership of it. Does the added stipulation that this payment shall, in the event of full performance of the contract by the second parties, 'be credited in payment of the rent for the last two months of said term; but otherwise said payment this day shall belong to the first parties as a part of the consideration to them for the execution of this lease,' change the nature of this payment from consideration to penalty? We think not. It is declared to be a part of the consideration in the beginning, and this clause reiterates the same thing. In both instances the ownership of the respondent therein is affirmed. This is not changed by his agreement to apply this sum in payment of the rent for the last two months of the terms in the event of the appellants fully performing their contract. It was only by that performance that they could assert any claim upon this money. They must earn it."

"Provision is sometimes made in a lease for the payment in advance of the rents of the last or later periods of the lease, and such a provision has been held not to be a security merely for the lessee's performance of his agreements in the lease, but purely a payment of rent in advance, and therefore may be retained by the lessor though he terminates the lease for the default of the lessee as provided for in the lease." 16 R. C. L. 931.

A case bearing directly on this phase of the question which we are now considering is Galbraith v. Wood, supra, where the Supreme Court of Minnesota was called upon to determine the status of a payment made upon the execution of a lease under circumstances not far dissimilar from the facts in the case at bar. At the time of the execution of the lease there considered, the lessee agreed to pay the lessor the sum of $20,000 "as an advance payment on the rent," which advance he agreed to keep good during the first five years of the lease, with the privilege of reducing the rent at the rate of $6,666.66 per year for the third, fourth, and fifth years of the term. On motion of defendants the lower court dismissed the action brought by the assignee in bankruptcy of the lessee, after default of the latter, to recover the money so deposited, and in which it was contended that the fund was but a guaranty for the payment of rent to be made by the lessees during the terms of the lease. On appeal the higher court held that the claim of plaintiff that the money was deposited as security was not sustained by the pleadings or evidence, and also found a lack of anything in the pleadings or evidence to support its claim that the money was paid as a bonus or independent consideration to induce the making of the lease. It was decided that it was no more than an advance payment of rent, and affirmed the ruling of the lower court.

It requires but a short mathematical calculation to demonstrate that it would be improper to hold that the $3,000 fund under consideration here may be regarded as an advance payment for the rent of the leased premises for the last five months of the term, which was for the full period of ten years, at the agreed monthly rental of $875 per month for the first five years (no rent being charged for the first month), and $925 for four years and seven months. The credited rent is the exact amount specified in the lease, to wit, $102,500. At the rate of $925 per month, the rent for the last five months of the term, for which no rent is otherwise provided, would aggregate $4,625. The sum of $3,000 at four per cent. per annum, compounded annually for ten years, the term of the lease, would approximate just about that amount. Furthermore, the stipulation in the lease that the lessor will repay to the lessee the sum of $3,000, with interest, on the date of the completion of the building, is effective only in the event of the termination of the lease prior to the expiration of the ten-year term thereby demised, for any reason or cause, except a breach of covenant by the lessee (the italics are ours), and the stipulation further provides that if such termination shall occur during the last five months of said term the amount so repayable shall be reduced at the rate of $925 per month, for each of said months as shall have expired prior to said termination.

From the facts of the present case, and our review of the foregoing authorities, we reach the conclusion that plaintiff in this action is not entitled to recover any portion of the fund of $3,000 paid at the time of the execution of the lease. If the money be regarded as given in consideration of the covenants of the lease when paid, the title thereto passed to the lessor (Ramish v. Workman, supra; Dutton v. Christie, supra); if it is to be regarded merely as an advance payment of rent, the lessor is entitled to retain it (Galbraith v. Wood, supra—see, also, citations under this case found in 50 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1034, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 609, 613).

An examination of the authorities cited by appellant bearing on this point of the case, and its allied questions, discloses that they were dealing with instances in which the money sought to be recovered was deposited as security for the payment of rent, and the performance of the conditions and covenants of the lease, and, in our view, they are not in point as applied to the lease we are called upon to construe in this case.

[3] Appellant also asks for a reversal of the judgment in the case at bar upon the contention that defendant, upon the terms of the lease, had agreed to make repairs which we have before referred to, and had failed and refused to do so; and that, as they were made by plaintiff, she had a right to recoup her losses of money in making such repairs from the rent of the premises as it became due. The stipulation of the lease, however, is that the lessor, at her own cost and expense, shall repair, or cause to be repaired, any defects in said premises due to construction which shall appear during the first 12 months after the completion and acceptance of said building. The building was completed and accepted on or about the 31st day of December, 1910, and no notice of any defects was given until January, 1913. By the terms of the lease, therefore, the lessor was not obligated to make such repairs. As to other work claimed by plaintiff to have been done by her in repairing the building, it appears not to have been performed until nearly one year and five months after the completion of the building. Plaintiff contends that she was called upon to make certain necessary repairs during her occupancy of the building, which it was the duty of the defendant to make.

> "If it be assumed that under ordinary circumstances the defendants should be credited with such an expenditure as a payment on account of the rent, provided such expenditure was not greater than one month's rent of the premises, in view of the provisions of section 1942 of the Civil Code, the complete answer to any such claim in this case is to be found in the provisions of the lease, whereby the lessee 'hereby waives all rights to make repairs of said premises at the expense of the lessor as provided in section 1942 of the Civil Code of the State of California.'" Arnold v. Krigbaum, 169 Cal. 147, 146 Pac. 424, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 370.

It follows, therefore, that the action of the trial court in striking out much of plaintiff's evidence, and in refusing to admit other evidence relative to these repairs, was proper. The court was correct in its action in denying the motion for a new trial.

The judgment is affirmed.

ROGERS BROS. CO. et al. v. BECK et al.
(Civ. 2997.)

1. EVIDENCE 🔑366(1) — IDENTIFICATION OF OFFICIAL RECORDS SUFFICIENT.

In action to foreclose street assessment lien, testimony of employé of city clerk, who identified records containing assessment, warrant, and diagram of street superintendent, and who testified that such records were official records kept in city clerk's office, was sufficient foundation for introduction of such records in evidence without identification thereof by city clerk himself.

2. PLEADING 🔑122—DENIAL OF CORPORATE EXISTENCE ON INFORMATION AND BELIEF INSUFFICIENT.

Denial of allegation of corporate existence of a domestic corporation on information and belief held an insufficient denial amounting to an admission of the alleged fact.

3. PLEADING 🔑258(4)—REFUSAL OF AMENDMENT OF ANSWER AT CLOSE OF PLAINTIFFS' TESTIMONY PROPER.

Refusal to permit amendment to answer after plaintiffs had fully presented their case was proper, where no sufficient reason for delay was given.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑681 — RECORD NOT SHOWING PROPOSED AMENDMENT, REFUSAL NOT REVIEWABLE.

Court's refusal to permit amendment of answer after introduction of plaintiffs' testimony will not be considered on appeal, where the record does not embrace copy of proposed amended answer; the court on appeal having no means of determining whether amendment should have been permitted.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑562(1) — FRAUD NO DEFENSE TO ACTION TO FORECLOSE STREET ASSESSMENT.

In action to foreclose street assessment lien, unfairness or fraud relating solely to the progress of the work is no defense; such matters being subject to correction by appeal to city council, whose decision is conclusive on parties entitled to take such appeal.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑690(1)—RECORD NOT CONTAINING PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO ANSWER.

Question whether court erred in rejection of certain evidence which appellants claimed would have been admissible under amended answer which trial court rejected will not be considered on appeal, where proposed amended answer was not in the record; the court being unable to determine whether rejected testimony was within issues presented by such amended answer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; W. H. Thomas, Judge.

Action by the Rogers Bros. Company and others against John H. Beck and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Jas. E. O'Keefe and C. H. Van Winkle, both of San Diego, for appellants.

Crouch & Crouch, of San Diego, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment based upon a verdict in the plaintiffs' favor in an action to establish and foreclose the lien of a street assessment.

[1] The appellants make several points upon appeal. The first of these consists in their contention that the trial court erred in overruling their objection to the introduction in evidence of the assessment, diagram, and warrant of the street superintendent upon the ground that no proper foundation had been laid for their introduction. The plaintiffs have produced a witness who testified that he was one of the employés of the city clerk of the city of Imperial, in which said street improvement work had been done, and who in that capacity produced and fully identified the records containing the assessment, warrant, and diagram of the street superintendent of the city, and who further testified that these were to his knowledge part of the official records of said street superintendent's office, and that the said records were kept in the city clerk's office. This testimony was entirely sufficient to furnish the requisite foundation for the introduction in evidence of these records. It is not necessary for the legal custodian of a public record in every case to be present in court to identify it. This may be done by any witness who can speak from his own knowledge in identifying the documents as the official records of the office from which they are produced, as such, and hence the ruling of the court was proper in admitting the assessment, diagram, and warrant in question in evidence.

[2] The next contention of appellants requiring attention is that the offered proof of the fact that the plaintiffs, Rogers Bros. Company and O. & C. Construction Company, were corporations was insufficient, but this objection is without merit, for the reason that the corporate existence and character of these two plaintiffs were alleged to be that of corporations organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California. The defendants' denial of these averments was based on the want of information and belief upon the subject. This was an insufficient denial, and amounted to an admission of the alleged fact; hence no evidence was required to prove these averments of the plaintiffs' complaint. Bartlett Estate Co. v. Fraser, 11 Cal. App. 373, 105 Pac. 130; Mulcahy v. Buckley, 100 Cal. 487, 35 Pac. 144; Mullally v. Townsend, 119 Cal. 47, 50 Pac. 1066.

[3, 4] The next contention of the appellants is that the trial court committed an abuse of discretion in refusing the defendants leave to file an amended answer during the progress of the trial of the case. This action was commenced on January 3, 1915; the answer of the defendants was filed on March 5, 1915; the cause came on for trial on January 17, 1916. The amended answer was not proffered for filing until the trial of the cause had proceeded up to the point where the plaintiffs had fully put in their case. No sufficient reason was given for the defendants' delay in seeking to amend their answer, and this of itself would have been a sufficient ground for the court's refusal to permit the same to be filed. But aside from this the record herein does not embrace a copy of the proposed amended answer, and this court has no means of knowing its contents, and hence cannot determine whether or not the trial court should in any event have permitted it to be filed, nor whether its refusal to do so was error.

[5] The next contention of the appellants is that the trial court was in error in sustaining the objection of the plaintiffs to questions asked or proofs offered by the defendants in an endeavor to show fraud in the doing of the public work upon which the assessment in question is predicated. In so far as these questions asked or proof offered were based upon the averments of the original answer of the defendants herein we are satisfied that no foundation is therein laid for the introduction of such evidence, since the only unfairness or fraud therein alleged relates solely to the progress of the work, and has reference to matters which are properly the subject of correction by appeal to the city council, whose decision, in the absence of fraud on the part of said council or its members in the hearing of said appeal or the rendition of such decision, is final and conclusive upon the parties entitled to take said appeal. Girvin v. Simon, 116 Cal. 604, 48 Pac. 720; McLaughlin v. Knobloch, 161 Cal. 676, 120 Pac. 27; Lambert v. Bates, 137 Cal. 676, 70 Pac. 777.

[6] In so far as the appellants' contention as to the existence of fraud on the part of the city council or its members in the hearing or determination of said appeal is concerned, it may be stated that possibly such an issue was presented by the amended answer which the defendants vainly sought to file; but since the said amended answer has not been embraced in the record before us we are unable to say whether such an issue was so tendered, and hence cannot determine whether the court was in error in its refusal to admit such offered proofs.

No question being presented, the judgment is affirmed.

MOTT v. WRIGHT et al. KING v. SAME. MacSWAIN et al. v. SAME. (Civ. 2007.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 26, 1919. On Petition for Rehearing, Sept. 25, 1919; Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court, Oct. 23, 1919.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS 🔑281(2)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE TO SHOW DATE OF COMPLETION OF BUILDING.

In an action to foreclose mechanics' liens, evidence of owner that work or labor ceased on building on a certain day, and that last work necessary to be done on the building to complete the contract was performed on that date, and that the building was then completed, and nothing more was to be done thereon, was sufficient evidence on which to base a finding that the building was completed on that date.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS 🔑132(9) — CONSTRUCTIVE COMPLETION OF BUILDING BY CESSATION OF LABOR.

Cessation from labor by reason of actual completion of a building contract is not the cessation of labor, which, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, relating to filing of claim, itself constitutes a constructive completion of the building or contract.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1011(1)—FINDINGS OF FACT ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE CONCLUSIVE.

The District Court of Appeal is concluded by the findings of the trial court on conflicting evidence.

4. MECHANICS' LIENS 🔑132(7)—COMPLETION OF BUILDING—"TRIVIAL IMPERFECTION."

Where the papering of a building had been completed, and the owner later informed the paper hanger that there was a defect in the papering in a hallway, and requested him to repaper the defective part, and the work of repapering required only about two hours, such defect amounted to only a "trivial imperfection" in the work, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, relating to the time from which right of lien claimants to file their liens begins to run.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Trivial Imperfection.]

5. MECHANICS' LIENS 🔑132(7) — TIME FOR FILING LIEN FIXED BY SUBSTANTIAL COMPLETION.

All that Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, requires to fix the time from which the right of lien claimants to file their liens begins to run, is that there be, so far as actual completion is concerned, a substantial completion.

6. MECHANICS' LIENS 🔑132(4, 9)—TIME FOR FILING LIEN AS GOVERNED BY ACTUAL AND CONSTRUCTIVE COMPLETION.

The rule under Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, as to the 120-day period after cessation of labor within which a lien claimant may file a lien does not apply where there is an actual completion, and the 90-day provision applies, not only to cases of actual completion, but also to those of constructive completion, including completion, by cessation from labor, for in such case there is no completion until there has been a cessation of labor for the period of 30 days, after which the lien claimant has 90 days within which to file his lien by virtue of estoppel because of owner's failure to file notice of cessation from labor.

7. MECHANICS' LIENS 🔑279—OCCUPATION OF BUILDING INSUFFICIENT TO SHOW ITS COMPLETION.

Where the owner of a building never ceased occupying the building at any time pending the reconstruction or alteration thereof, except during the brief time when building was in course of removal from one parcel of land to another, there was not such an occupation or use, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, as raised a conclusive presumption of completion.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Occupation.]

8. CONTRACTS 🔑186(2)—NO PRIVITY OF CONTRACT BETWEEN OWNER AND EMPLOYÉS OF BUILDING CONTRACTOR.

Where a person contracts to construct a building for a certain price, and employs labor and purchases material for such work, there is no privity of contract between the owner and the employés and the materialmen.

9. CONTRACTS 🔑186(2) — OWNER OF BUILDING NOT PERSONALLY LIABLE TO EMPLOYÉS OF CONTRACTOR AND MATERIALMEN.

Where a contract is let for the construction of a building for a certain amount, and the contractor employs labor and purchases material, the owner of the building is not personally liable to the employés of the contractor and the materialmen, unless it is shown that there exists a contract, express or implied, as a contractual privity, between the owner and such persons, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 1192.

10. WORK AND LABOR 🔑22—IN ACTION TO FORECLOSE MECHANIC'S LIEN, COMPLAINT INSUFFICIENT AS ON QUANTUM MERUIT.

In an action to foreclose mechanics' liens, complaint alleging that materials and labor were "of the reasonable value of" certain amounts held not to state cause of action against the owner in the form of a quantum meruit; it being alleged that the labor and materials were furnished in pursuance of the contract between the contractor and the owner, and were furnished at the instance of the contractor.

On Petition for Rehearing.

11. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑835(2)—NEW POINT RAISED ON REHEARING NOT REVIEWABLE.

A new point raised in a petition for rehearing need not be considered.

12. MECHANICS' LIENS 🔑280(6) — CONTRACT TO REMOVE BUILDING TO OTHER LOT AND RECONSTRUCT SEVERABLE.

Where a contract was entered into whereby a contractor was to remove a building from one parcel of land to another, and certain work was to be done on the parcel from which the building was removed, owner to pay the absolute cost of such work, and no more, and the building was to be altered and reconstructed on the lot where removed to, the contract was severable, and those furnishing labor and material on the land where the building was reconstructed were not entitled to show the date of the last work done on the land from which the building had been removed, in order to show when the contract was completed, as to the work to be done on the land where the building was moved to; purpose being to show that a lien was filed in time.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Consolidated actions by Philip F. Mott, and by Chester E. King, and by A. R. MacSwain and E. W. MacSwain, copartners doing business under the style of Sacramento Builders' Supply Company, against Frank E. Wright and Frank P. Williams. From a judgment for plaintiffs for part of the relief demanded, they appeal. Affirmed.

W. A. Gett and Johnson & Lemmon, all of Sacramento, for appellants.

Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, for respondents.

HART, J. The actions were brought to enforce mechanics' liens and were consolidated for trial. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiffs against Frank P. Williams, the contractor, and in favor of Frank E. Wright, the owner, for his costs, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to liens upon the premises described in the complaints. The appeal is by plaintiffs from the judgment.

The owner, defendant Wright, entered into a contract with the contractor, defendant Williams, for the removal of a cottage from Eleventh and O streets, in the city of Sacramento, to Twenty-Fourth and L streets, in said city, and for the raising of said cottage and constructing flats underneath the same. The liens in question are sought to be enforced against the lot on Twenty-Fourth and L streets. Work started on the flats about the middle of February, 1915, and continued without cessation until the 12th day of May, 1915. From about March the owner occupied the upper portion of the building, and later on tenants occupied the flats.

It was found by the court that defendant Wright entered into a contract with defendant Williams, "which said contract was never recorded in the office of the county recorder of Sacramento county," under which said contractor agreed to construct said building; that no notice of completion of said building or contract and no notice of cessation of labor were recorded; "that the said building and said contract were completed on the 12th day of May, 1915; that subsequent to said 12th day of May, 1915, the plaintiff Chester E. King repapered a portion of the hallway of the building located on said premises; that the papering of said hallway had been completed by said plaintiff Chester E. King prior to the 12th day of May, 1915, but said papering was defectively done by said plaintiff Chester E. King, whereby it became necessary for him to repaper a portion of said hallway; that the cost of repapering said hallway subsequent to the said 12th day of May, 1915, was the sum of $2.40; that the condition of said hallway subsequent to the 12th day of May, 1915, was a trivial imperfection in said work, and was not such as would prevent filing of liens; that the cost of said repapering said hallway was trivial in comparison with the cost of the work and improvements that were done under said contract."

The liens which are sought to be enforced were filed, respectively, August 12, 15, and 18, 1915. The complaints alleged the completion of the work on June 1st.

It is strenuously argued by appellants that the finding that the building was actually completed on May 12, 1915, is unsupported by the evidence. The contractor testified that the last work he did was about May 28th or June 1st; Mott, the plumber, said that he went to the building on June 2d to fix a water pipe; and King, the painter and paper hanger, testified that he worked personally on the building about the 14th or 15th of May, and that in the week ending May 29th one man worked there. King produced his "labor book," showing the following entries:

"May 15. Bert Renner. $2.50. May 29. Pape. $2.00."

The last item was explained to have been for repairing in the hall where the plaster had burned through the paper. It was also explained that the men working for Mr. King turned in their time cards every Saturday, showing the time they had worked during the week; that the time cards were destroyed, and the total paid each man entered in the labor book at the week end. Consequently the item of May 15th covered work that may have been performed on any day between the 10th and 15th, both inclusive, and the work shown by the item of May 29th may have been done on any day between the 17th and 29th, both inclusive.

The testimony on behalf of respondent on this point was as follows: M. F. Trebilcox testified that the two lower flats were rented to tenants who took possession on April 1st. Mr. Dunn, one of the tenants, testified that he took possession on April 7th of the east lower flat; that at the time it was finished and ready for occupancy and there were no mechanics working in the building after that except, he believed, some painters were working on the garage, and he did not think they had finished upstairs; he thought the west flat was also finished; that some carpenters were working "for maybe a week or more." Defendant Wright testified that he moved into the building the 1st of March; that labor ceased on May 12th, and at that time there was no further work to be done on the property, either the upper part or the lower flats. Mr. Wright's wife corroborated his testimony.

The discussion to follow will be the better understood by first reproducing herein the provisions of section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure pertinent to the points advanced here by the appellants. Said section provides that every person save the original contractor—

> "claiming the benefit of this chapter [on the enforcement of liens of mechanics, laborers and materialmen], within thirty days after he has ceased to labor or has ceased to furnish materials, or both, or at his option, within thirty days after the completion of the original contract, if any, under which he was employed, must file for record * * * a claim of lien. * * *"

The said section further provides:

> "Any trivial imperfection in the said work, or in the completion of any contract by any lien claimant, or in the construction of any buildings," etc., "shall not be deemed such a lack of completion as to prevent the filing of any lien; and, in all cases, any of the following shall be deemed equivalent to a completion for all the purposes of this chapter: The occupation or use of a building, improvement, or structure, by the owner, or his representative; or the acceptance by said owner or said agent, of said building, improvement, or structure, or cessation from labor for thirty days upon any contract or upon any building, improvement or structure or the alteration, addition to, or repair thereof; the filing of the notice hereinafter provided for. The owner may within ten days after completion of any contract, or within forty days after cessation from labor thereon, file for record in the office of the county recorder of the county where the property is situated, a notice setting forth the date when the same was completed, or on which cessation from labor occurred, together with his name and the nature of his title, and a description of the property sufficient for identification, which notice shall be verified by himself or some other person on his behalf. * * * In case such notice be not so filed, then the said owner and all persons deraigning title from or claiming any interest through him shall be estopped in any proceedings for the foreclosure of any lien provided for in this chapter from maintaining any defense therein based on the ground that said lien was not filed within the time provided in this chapter: Provided, that all claims of lien must be filed within ninety days after the completion of any building, improvement or structure, or the alteration, addition or repair thereto."

[1, 2] The appellants insist that the evidence without conflict shows that there was not an actual completion of the building under the contract on the 12th day of May, 1915, but that there was only a constructive completion by cessation of labor on said day. But in this they are mistaken. Wright, the owner, testified, it is true, that work or labor ceased on the building on the 12th day of May, 1915. He also testified, as seen, and Mrs. Wright corroborated him, that the last work necessary to be done on the building to complete the contract was performed on the 12th day of May, and that the building was then completed, and nothing more was to be done thereon. Of course, that testimony was the equivalent of testimony that the contract was completed, and from it the trial court was justified in so finding, if it believed the testimony, as obviously it did. Manifestly there must have been a cessation of labor when the building was completed according to the terms of the contract, but the cessation from labor by reason of the actual completion of the contract is not the cessation of labor which, under section 1187, itself constitutes a constructive completion of the building or contract.

[3] There is, it is true, some testimony slightly tending to show that the actual completion occurred at a later date, which would render the liens effective; but this merely raised a conflict in the evidence upon that issue, which the trial court resolved, as it was within its constitutional province to do, in favor of the defendants. This court is, as is well understood, concluded by the findings so made, and must accept as the fact that the building was actually completed according to the terms and requirements of the contract on the 12th day of May, 1915. It follows, therefore, that the appellants filed their claims too late to render them effective or of any force.

[4, 5] As to the work of repapering a portion of the hallway on May 29, 1915, by King, who had the contract for papering the house, the uncontradicted testimony upon that point shows that said work of repapering occurred after King had finished his contract. Wright, the owner of the house, called on King after the building had been in all respects completed, and, informing him that there was a defect in the papering in the hallway, requested him (King) to repaper the defective part, and, as seen, on the 29th day of May King did so. This work of repapering required, according to the testimony, approximately two hours' time. If the testimony of King as to this matter is to be accepted, the defect in the papering was not due to any remissness or lack of proper skill or care on his part in doing the work originally, but to some circumstance or fact subsequently occurring and over which he had no control; and, if this be true, the work of repapering was as far removed from any consideration of the original contract as though the papering had naturally become defective from long use. But, however that may be, it is clear that if the original papering was defectively done, and the repapering was for that reason required to be done, it amounted to a trivial imperfection only in the work, within the meaning of that language in section 1187. All that the statute requires, to fix the time from which the right of lien claimants to file their liens begins to run, is that there be, so far as actual completion is concerned, a substantial completion, and, in this case, the testimony shows that there was such a completion, if, indeed, not more than that. Willamette, etc., Co. v. College Co., 94 Cal. 229, 237, 29 Pac. 629; Harlan v. Stufflebeem, 87 Cal. 508, 25 Pac. 686; Santa Monica L. & M. Co. v. Hege, 119 Cal. 376, 379, 51 Pac. 555; Schindler v. Green, 149 Cal. 752, 754, 87 Pac. 626; Bianchi v. Hughes, 124 Cal. 24, 27, 56 Pac. 610; Joost v. Sullivan, 111 Cal. 286, 292, 43 Pac. 896.

The foregoing, of course, disposes of the proposition earnestly urged by the appellants that the completion was not actual, but by cessation from labor, and that, therefore, they were entitled to file their liens at any time within 120 days from the date of the cessation from labor, and that in that view their liens were seasonably filed under the law. But there is some intimation by appellants in their briefs that the 120 days' limitation applies in all cases of completion, whether actual or statutory, and they cite as supporting that view the cases of Buell v. Brown, 131 Cal. 158, 63 Pac. 167, and Farnham v. Cal., etc., Trust Co., 8 Cal. App. 266, 96 Pac. 788.

[6] In each of these cases the lien claimants relied upon a constructive completion of the contract by cessation from labor, and it was held that where a contract has not been actually completed, but there was a constructive completion by cessation from labor for the period of 30 days, and no notice of such cessation had been filed by the owner with the office of the county recorder, lien claimants have 90 days from and after the expiration of the 30 days of cessation from labor within which to file their liens. In other words, in such case lien claimants relying on completion by cessation from labor are, like those relying on actual completion, limited, as to the time within which they may file their liens, where the owner has failed or neglected within the prescribed period to file with the county recorder a notice of the cessation from labor, to 90 days from the time that there has been a completion by cessation from labor (30 days from and after the time of such cessation) within which to file their liens, or 120 days from the date of the cessation from labor. But, in this case, there was an actual completion, and the rule as to the 120 days' period can have no application where there is an actual completion. The statute plainly provides that all claims of lien must be filed within 90 days after the completion of any building, improvement, etc., and, as a matter of fact, that provision, as above suggested, applies, not only to cases of actual completion but also to those of constructive completion, including completion by cessation from labor, for in the latter case, as is obvious, there is no completion until there has been a cessation from labor for the period of 30 days, from and after which time the lien claimant has, by virtue of the estoppel arising against the owner upon his failure to file with the county recorder notice of the cessation from labor 90 days within which to file his lien.

[7] Counsel for the respondents state in their brief that the appellants claim, for the first time on this appeal, that there was a constructive completion of the contract through occupation and use of the building by the owner. But counsel for appellants make no such contention here. Indeed, in their closing brief they positively declare that there is no ground afforded by the record for any such claim, and in this they are clearly right. The owner never ceased occupying the building at any time pending the reconstruction or alteration thereof, except during the brief time the building was in the course of removal from Eleventh and O streets to Twenty-Fourth and L streets in Sacramento. The lien claimants here involved did all their work after the occupation or use by the owner took place, or while the owner was occupying and using the building. This, quite clearly, is not such an occupation or use as raises a conclusive presumption of completion under the statute. Orlandi v. Gray, 125 Cal. 372, 374, 58 Pac. 15; Boscus v. Waldmann, 31 Cal. App. 245, 255, 160 Pac. 180.

[8-10] It is lastly contended that, because the materials and the labor were furnished with the knowledge and consent of Wright, an implied contract arose between the claimants and Wright, and that, having received the benefit of the labor performed and the materials furnished, Wright ought in equity and good conscience to be held to be personally liable and compelled to pay the appellants their claims. There are two answers to this proposition, viz.:

(1) As the court found, upon sufficient evidence, to be true, the materials and labor were furnished to Williams, the contractor, and, as is necessarily implied from that finding, the materials and the labor were not furnished to Wright. In other words, there was no contract, either express or implied, between the materialmen and the laborers and the owner. There was, therefore, no privity of contract between the defendant Wright and the several lien claimants. Obviously, to sustain an action against Wright, it must be upon the theory that he is personally liable, and to render him personally liable, there must be shown to exist a contract, express or implied, or a contractual privity, between him and those claiming lien.

(2) The complaints, in neither counts thereof, submit any issue as to the reasonable value of the labor and the materials in the form of a common count. It is true that the complaints are in two counts, but in both it is alleged that the labor bestowed upon and the materials furnished for the building were so bestowed and furnished in pursuance of the contract between the contractor and the owner and were bestowed and furnished at the instance of the contractor. There is no allegation in either count of the complaints that the materials were furnished for and the labor done on the building at the direct instance of Frank E. Wright, the owner, or at his instance at all. There is, in short, no attempt to rely upon a common count in the form of a quantum meruit. While the second count in each of the complaints alleges that the materials and the labor were "of the reasonable value of" the respective amounts of the several claims, the right to the enforcement of the payment of said claims is expressly and primarily based upon the contract between Williams and Wright and upon the theory that said materials and labor were furnished and bestowed at the instance of Williams, the contractor.

The case of S. C. L. Co. v. Schmitt, 74 Cal. 625, 626, 16 Pac. 516, was decided when section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure provided that all contracts for work on buildings or other improvements, where the amount agreed to be paid thereunder exceeded $1,000, should be in writing and filed by the owner in the office of the county recorder, in default of which the contract became wholly void, and no recovery could be had thereon, and that in that case the work done and the materials furnished thereunder were to be deemed to have been done and furnished at the personal instance of the owner, and that laborers, mechanics, and materialmen doing work thereon and furnishing materials therefor should have a lien for the value thereof. Answering the argument made in that case that, notwithstanding that no liens were filed for the enforcement of the plaintiff's claim for furnishing materials for a building constructed for the owner by a contractor, a personal judgment for the value of the materials should be entered and enforced against the owner, the Supreme Court said:

> "It is claimed, although no lien exists on the building as to the contractor, and those who may claim under him, and none as to the materialman, that nevertheless, according to section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure, the plaintiff ought to have had a personal judgment against Schmitt, with whom he never had any contract to furnish the building materials. * * * We cannot agree with the appellant in a case where neither the contractor nor the materialman has filed any lien, such as is given them by statute, that under the section, supra, a personal judgment for the value of the materials furnished may be had against the owner of the building, who did not purchase them, and who was under no contract with the materialmen, either express or implied, to pay for them."

See, also, Davies-Henderson L. Co. v. Gottschalk, 81 Cal. 641, 647, 22 Pac. 860; First National Bank v. Perris, 107 Cal. 55, 64, 40 Pac. 45; Marchant v. Hayes, 120 Cal. 137, 139, 52 Pac. 154.

The cases relied upon by appellants as supporting their position that they are entitled to a personal judgment against the owner of the building are Castagnino v. Balletta, 82 Cal. 250, 23 Pac. 127, Acme Lumber Co. v. Wessling, 19 Cal. App. 406, 126 Pac. 167, and Gentle v. Britton, 158 Cal. 328, 111 Pac. 9. But the decisions in those cases proceed upon a very much different state of facts from that with which we are confronted in this case.

In Castagnino v. Balletta the action was by the contractor against the owner, between whom and the former a contract had been entered into for the construction of certain buildings. The complaint declared upon two counts, one being for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, and the other in indebitatus assumpsit, or a common count, founded upon the proposition that the original contract had been departed from in material respects in the construction of the buildings. That is not this case.

In Acme Lumber Co. v. Wessling the action was for the foreclosure of a lien for work done under an oral, and consequently an unrecorded, contract between the contractor and a tenant in possession of the real property upon which the improvement was made. It was made to appear that the owner had knowledge of the improvement being made on his premises, but that he failed to file the notice of nonresponsibility prescribed by section 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it was therefore held that, by virtue of the terms of said section, it was to be presumed that the improvement was constructed or made at the instance of the owner of the premises, and said premises were subject to the lien filed for the materials and labor used in the work of improvement. But it is claimed or intimated that in that case the complaint proceeded upon a quantum meruit against the owner of the premises and that the appellate court held that it was proper to do so. But, even so, that case is not in point here, for the reason that between the plaintiff therein, who was the assignor of the contractor, and the owner, there existed a privity of contract, created by the terms of section 1192.

Gentle v. Britton is another case where section 1192 was applied, the improvement having been made under a contract between the contractor and a party not the real owner of the premises upon which the improvement was made. The conditions pointed out by said section 1192 to render the premises subject to a lien for the labor and materials used in the improvement were found to exist in that case; hence an equitable lien was created on the premises to secure the payment of the value of the labor and materials. It is obvious that section 1192 has no application to the facts of this case.

We have been shown no reason for disturbing the judgment, and it will therefore stand affirmed.

On Petition for Rehearing.

HART, J. Appellants have filed a petition for rehearing, in which several points are raised. The first one is that the contract in question was an entire and not a divisible one. The contract was made by Wright, the owner, with Williams, the contractor, and provided for the erection of a six-flat building upon a lot at Eleventh and O streets, in the city of Sacramento, for the consideration of $9,500. Said contract also contained the following provision:

> "It is hereby agreed that in consideration of receiving the above contract, the party of second part will furnish plans, and superintend the moving and erection of flats under present house, the location to be Twenty-Third and L streets, without commission or consideration; it being understood that this work is to be done at absolute cost to the owner. The cost of remodeling not to exceed $1,800, and moving not to exceed $125. He will also agree to superintend erection of garages and other work on lot which owner may desire under above conditions."

The specific point made is that the work on the O street property was not completed until June 4 or June 12, 1915, which is "the true date from which the tolling of the limitation of time within which liens may be filed is to be computed," and not May 12, 1915, the date of the completion of the work on the L street property.

[11, 12] In neither appellant's opening brief nor in his reply brief is there one word concerning the Eleventh and O streets property. Indeed there seems from the record not to be any occasion for referring to that property, because there is nothing in the pleadings, nothing in the findings, nothing in the evidence, and nothing in the judgment having any reference to the O street property, except incidentally it is mentioned by one of the witnesses. The liens were all filed against the Twenty-Third and L streets property, and there was no issue in the case regarding the O street property. If questions can be raised for the first time in the petition for rehearing, there would never be an end to litigation. It has in many cases been held that, where a case has been decided, a new point raised in appellant's reply brief, or in the petition for rehearing, will not be considered. Buena Vista Oil Co. v. Park Bank of Los Angeles, 180 Pac. 12; Camp v. Boyd, 182 Pac. 60; Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Farnham, 153 Cal. 578, 96 Pac. 9, 126 Am. St. Rep. 129; Flores v. Stone, 21 Cal. App. 105, 131 Pac. 348, 351, 352. However, in this case, we will consider the point raised.

In 13 C. J. p. 563, it is said:

> "If the consideration is single, the contract is entire, but if the consideration is either expressly or by necessary implication apportioned, the contract will be regarded as severable. * * * Where the portion of the contract to be performed by one party consists of several and distinct items, and the price to be paid is apportioned to each item according to the value thereof and not as one unit in a whole or in a part of a round sum, the contract will ordinarily be regarded as severable."

In Elliott on Contracts (volume 4, § 3667) it is said:

> "A building, construction, or working contract is entire, and not divisible, where it is for an entire structure for a stated compensation. * * * If the price is apportioned among the several items, or to the different parts of one item, the contract will generally be construed as severable."

In the case at bar "the price was apportioned to each item according to the value thereof, and not as one unit," and we hold that the contract was not an entire one, but was severable.

As to the remaining points raised in the petition, that "provisions as to trivial imperfections were designed merely to prevent premature filing of liens," and that "slight work after substantial completion, done at request or with consent of owner or subcontractor, extends time for filing liens," we are satisfied with what is said in the main opinion.

The petition for a rehearing will be denied.

NEZIK v. COLE et al. (Civ. 3018.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑373(1)—NECESSITY OF BOND ON APPEAL BY ALTERNATIVE METHOD.

The new and alternative method of taking appeals, provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 941a, 941b, and 941c, enacted in 1907, dispenses with the necessity of an undertaking on appeal, and the fact that a bill of exceptions is prepared in place of the reporter's transcript authorized by section 953a has no bearing on the question; the latter section having to do with the preparation of the record on appeal.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑607(1)—MAKING UP OF RECORD.

An appeal having been properly taken in compliance with either the old or the alternative method, the record may be made up in any way permitted by the Code.

3. CORPORATIONS 🔑594—DISSOLUTION AT EXPIRATION OF TERM OF EXISTENCE.

A corporation is dissolved at the expiration of the term of its corporate existence.

4. CORPORATIONS 🔑594—POWER TO SHORTEN TERM OF EXISTENCE.

A company had power to shorten the term of its corporate existence by an amendment to its articles of incorporation even if the result of such abbreviation amounted to an almost immediate dissolution.

5. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL 🔑39—CONTINUANCE OF ACTION AGAINST REPRESENTATIVE OF DISSOLVED CORPORATION.

If Code Civ. Proc. § 385, providing that an action does not abate at the death or disability of a party if the cause of action survives, is applicable to the case of a corporation on dissolution, it does not authorize the continuance of the action against the corporation itself, but allows the action to be continued only against the representative or successor in interest, brought in on motion.

6. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL 🔑39—CONTINUANCE OF ACTION AGAINST CORPORATION IN NAME OF REPRESENTATIVES AFTER DISSOLUTION.

Despite Civ. Code, § 400, where a corporation was dissolved, during action against it by expiration of the term of its existence, it was necessary, for the action to continue at all, that the company's successors or representatives under section 400 be properly brought in on motion as defendants, as provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 385.

7. CORPORATIONS 🔑630(½)—VOID PROCEEDINGS IN ACTION AGAINST AFTER DISSOLUTION.

After a corporation was dissolved by expiration of the term of its existence, filing of demurrers and answer in its name and on its behalf in an action pending against it were nullities, as the company could no longer be served with process, could not appear, and could not itself admit anything, or authorize any one else to do so for it.

8. CORPORATIONS 🔑630(3) — PROCESS INEFFECTIVE AS TO COMPANY AFTER ITS DISSOLUTION PENDING ACTION AGAINST IT.

After a corporation was dissolved by expiration of the term of its existence, any service, on counsel previously authorized to represent it in a pending action, of plaintiff's notice of motion to file an amended and supplemental complaint, and the notice that such pleading had been filed, and of the time granted the company's directors, substituted as its trustees, within which to plead thereto, were not effectual so far as any interest of defendant company was concerned.

9. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL 🔑39—SUBSTITUTION OF DIRECTORS AS TRUSTEES ON DISSOLUTION OF CORPORATION BY EXPIRATION OF TERM.

After a corporation, pending action against it, had become dissolved by expiration of the term of its existence, if plaintiff intended to secure any judgment enforceable against the company's directors as its trustees, he should have had them substituted as parties in place of the company, under Code Civ. Proc. § 385.

10. PARTIES 🔑61—SUBSTITUTION OF PARTY BY ORDER OF COURT NOT AMENDMENT.

The substitution of one party for another by order of court is not such an amendment of a pleading as is required to be made on notice or to be engrossed, otherwise than to be entered in the minutes of the court.

11. PARTIES 🔑61 — AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT SUBSTITUTING DIRECTORS AS DEFENDANTS AFTER DISSOLUTION.

In action against corporation pending which company was dissolved by expiration of term of existence, notice of motion for permission to file an amended and supplemental complaint substituting the company's directors, as trustees, and the order directing that the proposed amended complaint be filed and made of record, further directing that the new defendants named in the amended complaint have 20 days in which to plead, held a substantial compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 385, operating to bring about the substitution as defendants of the directors as trustees for the defunct company.

12. PARTIES 🔑63—NOTICE TO SUBSTITUTED PARTY.

One substituted in a cause must be duly notified of the fact of his having been made a party before he can be affected by notices or proceedings in the action.

13. JUDGMENT ⚷17(1)—JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT VOID AGAINST SUBSTITUTED DEFENDANTS NOT SERVED.

Default judgment against the individual defendants in an action against a corporation which was dissolved pending action by expiration of the term of its existence, the action being continued by amendment against the company's directors as its trustees, in the absence of service upon or authorized appearance by or on behalf of the individual defendants, was unauthorized and void.

Appeal from Superior Court, Inyo County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by John Nezik against Walter D. Cole and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed, and cause remanded, with directions.

Thomas, Beedy & Lanagan, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Edmon G. Bennett, of Los Angeles, Chas. E. Barrett, of Las Vegas, Nev., and Platt & Sanford, of Carson City, Nev., for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. Appeal from a judgment, entered after default, awarding damages in the sum of $17,688 for personal injuries.

Within the time when an appeal may be taken appellants filed with the clerk of the court in which the judgment was entered a notice stating the appeal from the same and served a similar notice on the attorneys for the adverse party. They did not, however, within five days after service of the notice of appeal, file the undertaking, or, in lieu thereof, make the deposit of money with the clerk as required by sections 940 and 941 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and no waiver of the same was ever made or filed. Neither did appellants, in lieu of preparing and settling a bill of exceptions, pursuant to the provisions of section 650 of the same Code, file with the clerk the notice required by section 953a thereof, requesting that a transcript of the proceedings be made up and prepared.

On the contrary appellants caused to be duly prepared and settled a bill of exceptions, containing the usual statement of the matters occurring at the trial. Respondent moves to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that no undertaking on appeal having been given or deposit in lieu thereof made, this court has no jurisdiction of the cause, for the reason that no appeal has been perfected in the manner or form prescribed by law.

[1, 2] The motion is without merit. The new and alternative method of taking appeals provided by sections 941a, 941b, and 941c of the Code of Civil Procedure, enacted in 1907, dispenses with the necessity of an undertaking. Estate of McPhee, 154 Cal. 385, 97 Pac. 878; Mitchell v. California S. S. Co., 154 Cal. 731, 99 Pac. 202; Union Collection Co. v. Oliver, 162 Cal. 755, 124 Pac. 435; Title Ins., etc., Co. v. Cal. Dev. Co., 168 Cal. 397, 402, 143 Pac. 723. Section 941b provides that the notice of appeal when filed "shall without further action on the part of the appellant transfer the cause for decision and determination to the higher court." "That this appeal was perfected under the new method there can be no question. Appellant filed his notice, and that was all that was required to perfect it." Mitchell v. California, etc., S. S. Co., supra. The fact that a bill of exceptions was prepared in place of the reporter's transcript authorized by section 953a has no bearing upon the question. The latter section has to do with the preparation of the record on appeal. An appeal having been properly taken in compliance with either the old or the alternative method, the record may be made up in any way permitted by the Code. Lang v. Lilley & Thurston, 161 Cal. 295, 119 Pac. 100; Union Collection Co. v. Oliver, supra.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

The original complaint in this action was filed July 8, 1914, against the Pacific Coast Borax Company, then a corporation, incorporated for a period of 50 years from and after July 5, 1912. It was alleged that plaintiff had suffered severe personal injuries by reason of the negligence of defendant in failing on two separate occasions to furnish him a safe place in which to work. After obtaining time by stipulation within which to plead, on September 18, 1914, counsel, who later specially appeared in the action for appellants, filed a general and specific demurrer, purporting to be interposed on behalf of the borax company. At the hearing on demurrer the same counsel orally suggested to the trial court that the corporation defendant had ceased to exist, and moved for a dismissal of the action, which was denied. The demurrer was overruled and an answer was filed on April 26, 1915.

From the answer it appeared that on September 8, 1914, which date was prior to the appearance of the company in the action by proceedings duly taken to that end, the corporation had amended its articles by changing the term for which it was to exist from 50 years to 2 years, 2 months and 7 days from and after the date of its incorporation. In other words, the life of the company had expired on September 12, 1914, 6 days before the demurrer purporting to be on its behalf was filed in this action.

After the service of notice thereof by plaintiff on the attorneys who first made the purported appearance in the action on behalf of the borax company, the court granted permission to plaintiff to file an amended and supplemental complaint, naming as defendants the appellants, who were alleged to be the directors of the Pacific Coast Borax Company prior to and at the time it ceased to exist as a corporation. The amended and supplemental complaint set forth the original causes of action, the facts relating to the termination of the life of the corporation, and that the directors thereof (appellants) had thereby become its trustees, with full power and authority to settle its affairs. The prayer of the amended and supplemental complaint was for recovery "of and from the said defendants" of the amount claimed as damages by reason of the personal injuries. The court ordered that the defendants named therein be given 20 days from the date of service of a copy of the order so fixing the time in which to plead.

No summons or any notice that the appellants so alleged to be directors of the Pacific Coast Borax Company prior to and at the time it ceased to exist had been made defendants in the action was served on the defendants, or either of them, or upon any attorney of record other than upon the attorneys who first appeared and filed the demurrer and thereafter the answer before referred to. Except in the same manner, no service was made of the court's order fixing the time within which defendants might plead to the amended and supplemental complaint.

The defendants not appearing, judgment by default was entered against them in the amount prayed for. Thereupon the defendants, specially appearing by counsel for the purpose, made a motion, supported by affidavits of merit and as to the facts, for an order setting aside the default judgment and all subsequent proceedings. The motion was based on the facts, substantially set forth herein, and the further fact that no one of the defendants was a director of the borax company at the time it ceased to exist. No counter showing was made by the plaintiff. The court denied the motion, and appellants have appealed from the judgment.

[3-5] A corporation is dissolved at the expiration of the term of its corporate existence. Kohl v. Lilienthal, 81 Cal. 378, 386, 20 Pac. 401, 22 Pac. 689, 6 L. R. A. 520. The Pacific Coast Borax Company had power to shorten the term of its corporate existence by an amendment to its articles of incorporation, even if the practical result of such abbreviation amounted to almost an immediate dissolution. Tognazzini v. Jordan, 165 Cal. 19, 130 Pac. 879, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 655. "It is settled beyond question that, except as otherwise provided by statute, the effect of the dissolution of a corporation is to terminate its existence as a legal entity, and render it incapable of suing or being sued as a corporate body, or in its corporate name. It is dead, and can no more be proceeded against as an existing corporation than could a natural person after his death. There is no one who can appear or act for it, and all actions pending against it are abated, and any judgment attempted to be given against it is void." Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., 150 Cal. 575, 580, 89 Pac. 335, 337. Where there is no statute providing for the continuance of the corporation itself after dissolution, for the purpose of settling its affairs, provision is generally made for the doing of this by others. We have such a provision in this state. Section 400 of the Civil Code provides:

> "Unless other persons are appointed by the court, the directors or managers of the affairs of a corporation at the time of its dissolution are trustees of the creditors and stockholders or members of the corporation dissolved, and have full power to settle the affairs of the corporation."

Before the Supreme Court was called upon to construe the provision of the act of the Legislature relating to the forfeiture of charters by corporations for failure to pay license taxes, to which we will shortly refer, section 400 was held to be applicable in all cases of dissolution, whether voluntary or involuntary. Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 365, 24 Pac. 121, 10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192; Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., supra. Construing that section in the last-mentioned case, the court said:

> "There is no statute of this state that authorizes the commencement or continuance of an action against the corporation after its legal death. We have no statute similar to that of several states, providing that in the event of the dissolution of a corporation its existence shall be continued either indefinitely or for a specified time for the settlement of its affairs. Statutes similar to our section 400 of the Civil Code above quoted do not have the effect of continuing the existence of the corporation as cestui que trust, or otherwise, so as to render it capable of defending actions in its corporate name. Thompson on Corporations, § 6739; Clark & Marshall on Private Corporations, § 333; Sturgis v. Vanderbilt, 73 N. Y. 384. If section 385 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing that an action does not abate by the death or any disability of a party, if the cause of action survives, is applicable to the case of a corporation, it does not authorize the continuance of the action against the corporation itself, but allows the action to be continued only against the 'representative or successor in interest,' brought in on motion." McCulloch v. Norwood, 58 N. Y. 562, 568.

See, also, Judson v. Love, 35 Cal. 463.

[6] Respondent, nevertheless, contends that the lower court, having acquired jurisdiction over the defendant and the subject-matter of the action by reason of the service of summons, continued to entertain and hold such jurisdiction, regardless of the fact that subsequent to such jurisdiction attaching the corporation voluntarily ceased to exist, and that, while the directors might properly be substituted as parties defendant, such substitution was not essential to a continuance of the action. He cites three cases as supporting this proposition: Lowe et al. v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 165 Cal. 708, 134 Pac. 190, 192; Brandon v. Umpqua Lumber & Timber Co., 166 Cal. 322, 136 Pac. 62; Turney v. Morrissey, 22 Cal. App. 271, 134 Pac. 335. An important distinction must be made in the consideration of these decisions. Each deals with facts arising under the provisions of the special act of the Legislature relating to the payment of the license tax by corporations and cases of forfeiture under its provisions. By reference to the above statute, and acts amendatory thereof, we find that the provision of section 10a, Act Extra Sess. 1906, p. 25, as amended by section 2, Act 1907 (Stats. 1907, pp. 746, 747), so strongly relied on by respondent, is restricted by the title of the act to "making provision for settling the affairs of corporations where said tax has not been paid," and by the language of the provision itself to "cases of forfeiture under the provisions of this act."

As we read the cases relied on by respondent, they merely determine that, since the amendment of 1907 to the act in question, an action pending against a corporation which has forfeited its charter by reason of failure to pay its license tax shall not abate by reason of the forfeiture, but may be continued and prosecuted or defended in the corporate name, the control and management of the action, so far as the corporate interests are concerned, being in the directors or managers in office at the time of the forfeiture, they being the trustees of the corporation, its stockholders or members. Brandon v. Umpqua Lumber Co., supra. We find nothing in any of said decisions, read in connection with the statute under which the cases arose, which may properly be said to remove this case, and cases like it, from the operation of the well-established general principles so succinctly stated in the authorities from which we have quoted. As was so well pointed out by the Chief Justice in the Crossman Case, supra, section 400 of the Civil Code, already quoted, does not have the effect of continuing the existence of a corporation after dissolution so as to render it capable of defending actions in its corporate name. It was therefore necessary that if the action could continue at all its successors or representatives, under section 400, be properly brought in on motion, as provided in section 385 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[7, 8] Assuming the correctness of the recital in the judgment in this case, that the Pacific Coast Borax Company was regularly served with process, the filing of the demurrers and answer in its name, and purporting to be in its behalf, was a nullity. So far as the dead corporation itself was concerned there could be no admission or estoppel. It could no longer be served with process, could not appear, could not itself admit anything nor authorize any one else to do so for it. It was legally dead. Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., supra. The action of counsel, who may have had authority to represent the defendant company prior to the termination of the period of its legal existence, could not, so far as that party was concerned, vitalize any proceedings taken in the abated action after the corporation ceased to exist. Any subsequent service on them by the plaintiff of the notice of motion to file the amended and supplemental complaint, the notice that such pleading had been filed, and of the time granted the substituted defendants within which to plead thereto, was not effectual, so far as any interest of the defunct corporation was concerned. Deiter v. Kiser, 158 Cal. 259, 262, 110 Pac. 921; Bell v. San Francisco Savings Union, 153 Cal. 64, 69, 94 Pac. 225; Pedlar v. Stroud, 116 Cal. 462, 48 Pac. 371.

[9] Unless, therefore, it can be shown that some other course was followed, the result of which was to properly bring the appellants into the action, after which, by due service or voluntary appearance, they were subjected to the jurisdiction of the court, the respondent will have failed to maintain his position here. From the very nature of things the dissolution or death of the defendant, like the death of any other party to a pending action, could only be brought to the attention of the court on proper suggestion made by some one other than the defunct corporation itself. Combes v. Keyes, 89 Wis. 297, 62 N. W. 89, 27 L. R. A. 369, 46 Am. St. Rep. 839. If the plaintiff intended to secure any judgment in this case, enforceable against these appellants, he should have had them substituted under section 385 of the Code of Civil Procedure as parties in place of the corporation, after the latter had become functus officio. Ex parte Tinkum, 54 Cal. 201, 203.

The notice of motion given by the plaintiff for permission to file the amended and supplemental complaint was based upon the notice itself and upon all the records, pleadings, and files in said action. The verified proposed amended and supplemental complaint was attached to, and by apt reference made a part of, the notice and motion. There was on file in the action the purported answer of the borax company, which was duly verified by one purporting to have been the secretary of the corporation prior to and at the time it ceased to legally exist. It fully appeared in both of these verified pleadings that the defendant corporation was legally dead. It was alleged in the verified proposed amended and supplemental complaint that "immediately prior and at the time of said dissolution" appellants, naming them, "were the duly elected, qualified, and acting board of directors of said corporation, and that they, as such directors are now the legally constituted and authorized trustees, representatives, and successors in interest of said corporation, and trustees of the creditors, stockholders, and members of said corporation, with full power and authority to settle the affairs of said dissolved corporation, and to appear in and defend this action, and as such are true and proper defendants herein."

[10] This notice of motion was not served on any of the appellants personally. It was addressed to the defendant borax company and to the attorneys who had purported to represent it in the earlier proceedings in the action. It was served on these attorneys and on no one else. It seems to be the well-settled rule that the substitution of one party for another by order of court is not such an amendment of a pleading as is required to be made on notice or to be engrossed otherwise than to be entered in the minutes of the court. Kittle v. Bellegarde, 86 Cal. 556, 562, 25 Pac. 55; Taylor v. Western Pacific R. R. Co., 45 Cal. 323, 337.

[11] No record appears in the transcript from which we may gather that a formal order was made and entered in the minutes of the court, either in substance or in hæc verba, substituting the appellants as parties defendant in the place and stead of the borax company. We are of the opinion, however, that the notice of motion and the order of the court directing that the proposed amended and supplemental complaint be filed and made of record in the case, and further directing that the defendants named in said amended and supplemental complaint have and were given 20 days from date of a service of a copy of this order in which to plead thereto, constituted a substantial compliance with section 385, Code of Civil Procedure, and operated to bring about such substitution. Taylor v. Western Pacific, supra; Campbell v. West, 93 Cal. 653, 29 Pac. 219, 645; Ford v. Bushard, 116 Cal. 273, 276, 48 Pac. 119. Furthermore, there is a recital in the judgment regarding the substitution of the defendants which, liberally construed, would show, whether with formality or not, the suggestion of the dissolution of the original defendant and a continuance of the action, or a revival of it, against the appellants. Gregory v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 592.

[12] One substituted in a cause must be duly notified of the fact of his being made a party before he can be affected by notices or proceedings in the action. Judson v. Love, 35 Cal. 463, 469. "A defendant appears in an action when he answers, demurs, or gives the plaintiff written notice of his appearance, or when an attorney gives notice of appearance for him." Section 1014, Code Civ. Proc. None of these things was done in the instant case. The attorneys for the dissolved corporation defendant were never authorized to and never appeared as attorneys of record in the cause for appellants so as to waive service of the amended and supplemental complaint or notice of its filing and of their time to answer. Service on them alone, as we have pointed out, was a nullity after the borax company ceased to exist. Prior to their appearance to move to set aside the default and judgment, which was special for that particular purpose, and in no sense a general appearance in the cause (Powers v. Braly, 75 Cal. 237, 239, 17 Pac. 197), they never appeared in the action for the appellants at all. Proper service of the notice that appellants had been substituted as parties defendant in the action, and of the amended and supplemental complaint, not having been made on the appellants, their rights were not affected by the subsequent proceedings.

[13] It follows, therefore, that as there was no service upon, or authorized appearance by or in behalf of the defendants, the default entered in the action against the appellants was unauthorized, the judgment entered thereon was void, and must be reversed. Linott v. Rowland, 119 Cal. 453, 51 Pac. 687; Hill v. City Cab, etc., Co., 79 Cal. 188, 191, 21 Pac. 728; Altpeter v. Postal Tel. & Cable Co., 26 Cal. App. 705-713, 148 Pac. 241.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the trial court to vacate and set aside the default of the defendants, with permission granted to them to plead to the amended and supplemental complaint, as in the original order therefor provided.

JOHNSON v. RAZEY et al. (L. A. 5251.)

1. MORTGAGES ⚷137, 241—A LIEN AND NOT AN INTEREST IN PROPERTY.

Under Civ. Code, § 2888, a mortgage lien is not an interest in the property, but a mere lien; so that transfer of the mortgage does not transfer title to the mortgaged land.

2. MORTGAGES ⚷235 — SECURITY FOR DEBT AND NOT TRANSFERABLE WITHOUT TRANSFER OF DEBT.

A mortgage being a mere security for debt, is not transferable without transfer of the debt.

3. MORTGAGES ⚷268—KEPT ALIVE TO PROTECT INTEREST OF CREDITOR.

Where mortgage was assigned to a married woman and the mortgaged land deeded to her husband, and they then deeded the land, expressly subject to the mortgage, it will be held not to have merged in the fee; equity keeping it alive where necessary to protect rights of the one to whom the debt is due.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action begun by Arnold Vetter, Anna M. Johnson being substituted as plaintiff, against H. B. Razey and another. From an adverse judgment, defendant C. S. James appeals. Affirmed.

Hammack & Hammack, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles J. Kelly and D. A. Stuart, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The defendant James appeals on the judgment roll from a judgment foreclosing a mortgage. The action was begun by one Arnold Vetter. Before the trial the mortgage was assigned to Anna M. Johnson and she was substituted as plaintiff.

The facts presented by the record are as follows: The defendant Razey, being at the time the owner of the land involved, executed a mortgage thereon to said Vetter to secure a note for $1,500. Default having been made in payment of the note, Vetter began this action to foreclose the mortgage. The defendant James was made a party upon the allegation that he had some interest in the property. After the suit was begun, Razey conveyed the land, subject to the mortgage, to Peter Johnson, who was the husband of said Anna M. Johnson. Thereafter Vetter assigned the mortgage to said Anna M. Johnson. The consideration for this assignment was paid from her separate funds, and the mortgage thereupon became her separate property. The land held by Peter Johnson under his conveyance from Razey must be presumed to have been community property, although the record is silent on the subject. Before the trial Peter Johnson and his said wife, Anna M. Johnson, joined in a deed conveying the land to the defendant James. This deed expressly stated that the land was conveyed to James subject to the said mortgage, suit to foreclose which was then pending. By a supplemental answer James set up these transactions, and he now claims that by reason of the deed from Peter Johnson and wife to James the mortgage became satisfied and he became vested with the entire interest in the property free from all liens and claims thereon of either of the parties to said deed. His theory is that, since the deed purported to convey the fee, it carried with it all lesser interests which she held in the land and liens which she held thereon including this mortgage lien, and that the provision in the deed itself that the grantee took the property subject to the mortgage was of no effect.

[1-3] We cannot agree with this contention. The mortgage belonged to the wife as her separate property. The land belonged to the husband as community property. It does not appear that the wife received any consideration for the conveyance of the land by her husband to James going to her separate estate. As all presumptions must be indulged in support of the judgment and facts which are justly inferable from the facts found must be presumed to exist, we must assume that she joined in the deed because it was a conveyance of community property to which her signature would, under some contingencies, be necessary to give title satisfactory to the purchaser. A mortgage lien is not an interest in the property, but a mere lien thereon. A transfer of the mortgage does not transfer title to the land mortgaged. Civ. Code, § 2888. A mortgage is a mere security for the debt, and it cannot pass without a transfer of the debt. The conveyance of the land and the assignment of the mortgage are distinct transactions, different in character; the intention of one being to convey the title to the land, and of the other to transfer a debt with its securities. Civ. Code, § 2936; Peters v. Jamestown Bridge Co., 5 Cal. 336, 63 Am. Dec. 134. In view of the express reservation in the deed that it was conveyed subject to the mortgage, it is obvious that there was no transfer to James of the debt due to the wife or of the security therefor. Under these circumstances, equity will regard the title to the land and the lien thereon as separate and keep the lien alive for the purpose of protecting the owner of the debt. The principle that equity will keep alive a mortgage lien under circumstances similar to this where it is necessary to do so in order to accomplish justice and protect the rights of the party to whom the debt is due is fully established by our decisions. Davis v. Randall, 117 Cal. 12, 48 Pac. 906; Anglo California Bank v. Field, 146 Cal. 653, 80 Pac. 1080; Rumpp v. Gerkens, 59 Cal. 502; Tolman v. Smith, 85 Cal. 280, 24 Pac. 743. The court did not err in applying these principles and holding that the mortgage still remained effective notwithstanding the conveyance to said defendant.

The judgment is affirmed.

CONTINENTAL CASUALTY CO. v. PILLSBURY et al., State Industrial Accident Commission. (Sac. 2952.)

MASTER AND SERVANT 388—WIFE RECEIVING SEPARATE MAINTENANCE CAN RECOVER UNDER WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

A wife who is not living with her husband, but who is receiving from him money paid pursuant to a decree awarding her separate maintenance, is, within Workmen's Compensation Act, § 14, declaring that a wife shall be conclusively presumed dependent for support upon a husband with whom she was living or for whose support such husband was legally liable, and an award in her favor for his death cannot be defeated on the ground that the legal liability in the act meant the common-law liability defined by Civ. Code, §§ 174, 175, for the decree merely reduced to a definite form the common-law liability of the husband to support her.

In Bank.

Application for writ, by the Continental Casualty Company, directed to A. J. Pillsbury and others, members of and constituting the Industrial Accident Commission, to review an order of the commission awarding compensation to the surviving widow of a deceased workman. Award affirmed.

Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, for petitioner.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

OLNEY, J. One Cox was killed while in the employ of the Sacramento Northern Railroad. No question is made but that the accident resulting in his death occurred under such circumstances that his dependents, if he had any, are entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831). He left a wife, and she petitioned the commission for such compensation, and it was awarded her as wholly dependent upon him. The insurance carrier for the employer thereupon petitioned for and secured an alternative writ from this court to review the award. The sole question is as to whether the decedent's wife was wholly dependent upon him within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

The material provisions of the act are the following portions of section 14:

> "(a) The following shall be conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent for support upon a deceased employé: (1) A wife upon a husband with whom she was living at the time of his death, or for whose support such husband was legally liable at the time of his death. * * * (b) In all other cases, questions of entire or partial dependency and questions as to who constitute dependents and the extent of their dependency shall be determined in accordance with the fact, as the fact may be at the time of the injury of the employé."

The wife was not living with the decedent at the time of his death. In order to support the award of the commission, it must therefore appear either that the decedent was legally liable for her support or that she was in fact wholly dependent upon him. The commission found in favor of the wife on both these issues. As we are of the opinion that the award must be sustained upon the first ground—that is, that her husband at the time of his death was legally liable for her support—there is no necessity for considering the second.

The facts upon the first issue are that the decedent deserted his wife in 1911, and never lived with her afterwards. No proceedings for a divorce were ever brought, but in 1912 his wife filed in Iowa a suit for separate maintenance and secured a decree awarding her such maintenance in the sum of $50 a month. This decree remained in effect until the decedent's death. Pursuant to the decree the decedent sent his wife money from time to time, the amounts averaging about $20 or $25 a month. The position of the insurance carrier is that, by reason of the existence of this maintenance decree, the husband was not legally liable for his wife's support. The mere statement of this position is well-nigh enough of an answer to it. It is rather difficult to see what the maintenance decree means if it does not mean that the husband is legally liable for his wife's support.

The contention of the insurance company is that, when the act speaks of the husband being legally liable for the wife's support,

For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes "the liability therein referred to must necessarily mean the common-law liability defined by sections 174 and 175 of the Civil Code, and cannot mean liability to the wife." (The italics are ours).

Section 175 has nothing to do with the case. It provides that when a wife abandons her husband, or lives apart from him by agreement, he is not liable for her support. Here the wife had not abandoned her husband, nor was she living apart from him by agreement.

Section 174 provides that, if the husband neglects to make adequate provision for the support of his wife, any other person may furnish her with necessaries and recover the reasonable value thereof from the husband. The point is made that by the maintenance decree the husband was relieved from liability to third persons under this section. It is immaterial whether he was or not. The compensation provided by the act is for the benefit of the wife, not for that of her creditors, or of those who may supply her with necessities. It is true that the liability of the husband to persons supplying the wife with necessities where he neglects to provide for her is an incident of the obligation which rests upon him to support her. But it is only an incident, not the main obligation. The incident may be removed, and the main obligation remain wholly unaffected.

There are cited in petitioner's behalf authorities to the effect that, when there has been a divorce a mensa et thoro with a decree of maintenance to the wife, the common-law obligation of the husband is supplanted by the obligation of the decree and the husband's responsibility is measured by the decree. This is true in the sense that the husband's obligation, previously indefinite as to the amount of support or the manner in which it should be provided, is by such a decree made certain by requiring that the obligation be met by paying a certain amount of money, and paying it to the wife. Thereafter the husband's obligation is measured by the decree, but the fundamental obligation continues. The decree is, in fact, a judicial determination of the fact that the obligation exists, although the parties are separated. That an action for maintenance is but an action to enforce the husband's duty to support his wife was decided in Galland v. Galland, 38 Cal. 265.

It follows that at the time of the decedent's death he was legally liable for the support of his wife, and the action of the commission in making its award upon that basis was correct.

NEWELL v. E. B. & A. L. STONE CO.

(S. F. 8482.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⚷85—NOTICE AND CONDUCT NOT AMOUNTING TO RESCISSION BY CONSENT.

Giving of notice of tender of deed to the vendee by the vendor of land, after the vendee was in default in making installment payments, notice being intended as basis to declare a forfeiture, together with the conduct of the parties thereafter, held not to have amounted to a rescission by their mutual consent, to entitle the vendee to demand return of moneys paid.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⚷187—ACCEPTANCE OF OVERDUE PAYMENTS WAIVER OF PROVISION AS TO TIME BEING OF ESSENCE.

The vendor of land, by accepting installment payments after the time specified, waived the provision of the contract with reference to time being of the essence as to such payments, and could not thereafter effectually declare forfeiture of the vendee's right to purchase and of the payments already made, without notice that in the future a strict performance would be required.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⚷107—RIGHT OF PURCHASER, AFTER HIS OWN DEFAULT IN PAYMENTS, TO CLAIM RESCISSION.

The vendee of land, who contracted to pay in installments could not take advantage of his own default in making payments, and claim rescission, when the vendor tendered deed conditionally on payment in full, and in the alternative declared a forfeiture.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by E. W. Newell against the E. B. & A. L. Stone Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

W. F. Williamson, of San Francisco (Ernest L. Brune and Sloss, Ackerman & Bradley, all of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Harding & Monroe, of San Francisco, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. The plaintiff, E. W. Newell, and the defendant corporation, entered into a written contract on April 7, 1913, whereby the former agreed to purchase and the latter to sell certain real property for $9,200. Of this amount the sum of $500 was paid at the date of the agreement. The sum of $1,500 was due August 1, 1913, and the balance was to be paid in monthly installments of at least $200. There was a provision for the monthly payment of interest, time was expressly made of the essence of the agreement, and it was further provided that upon default in the payment of any of the installments the vendor, E. B. & A. L. Stone Company, might at its option, without notice to the vendee, declare the entire principal and interest immediately due.

The vendee failed to pay the first installment of $1,500, due August 1, 1913, but on December 13, 1913, a payment, on account, of something more than $500 was accepted, and thereafter other sums were paid, at various times not specified in the contract, until $2,694.83 had been received by the vendor. On April 28, 1915, the vendor (defendant in this action) served upon plaintiff a notice reciting the terms of the agreement. The notice contains the following statement by way of recital:

> "At all times the undersigned [E. B. & A. L. Stone Company] has stood ready, willing, and able to comply with the terms of said contract, and that it is not the intention of the undersigned in any manner to rescind or abandon said contract, and nothing herein shall be construed to be a consent in any way to a rescission or abandonment of said contract."

Then follow recitals that time is of the essence of the contract, and that default has been made by the vendee, in consequence of which he has abandoned the contract, and the vendor notifies the vendee that, in order to determine that it is the latter's "express intention as purchaser to abandon said contract," a deed to the land is ready and is thereby tendered to the vendee upon payment of the balance of the purchase price, with interest as specified in the agreement, provided the entire balance should be paid immediately upon receipt of the notice. The closing words of the notice are as follows:

> "Unless said entire balance shall be paid immediately as aforesaid, the undersigned, in accordance with the terms of said contract, hereby declares that it shall be relieved from all obligations in law or equity to convey the property hereinbefore described, or any part thereof, and that you shall forfeit all right thereto under this contract, and all rights to any and all moneys paid thereon, which shall be deemed payments for the right to have the option to purchase said property, and none of the same shall be returned, and the undersigned hereby further notifies you that it will thereupon, in accordance with its rights, immediately, or at its convenience thereafter, enter upon said lands and premises, and take possession thereof, together with the improvements constructed thereon, and the appurtenances thereunto belonging."

On August 4, 1916 (more than a year after the service of notice), the vendee demanded return of the moneys paid under the contract, and this demand being refused, instituted the present action.

The court found that defendant, although it had accepted payments from plaintiff while he was in default, by the writing of April 28, 1915,

> "notified plaintiff * * * that it exercised its option under said contract to cancel the same, and notified plaintiff that all his rights under said contract had terminated; that the moneys paid to defendant were forfeited and that defendant would retake possession of said real property, and defendant did re-enter and take possession of said real property in said contract described; that no notice was ever given to plaintiff of any intention on the part of defendant to insist upon its right to forfeit said contract, and no notice whatever was served upon plaintiff, except the notice of cancellation and claim of forfeiture above referred to."

This finding is attacked by appellant as being without justification, and appellant also insists that the further finding that "plaintiff accepted said notice of forfeiture as a rescission on the part of defendant of said contract" is not sustainable.

[1] The question to be determined by this court is whether or not the giving of the notice and the conduct thereafter of the parties to the contract amounted to a rescission by their mutual consent. We are of the opinion that it did not. In the first place, there was an express declaration by the vendor that it was not seeking to rescind. This, of course, would amount to nothing if the other parts of the notice were in contradiction of the vendor's declared intention. But we do not so interpret them.

[2, 3] Under the authorities the vendor, by accepting payments after the times specified in the agreement, waived the provision with reference to time being of the essence of the contract as to those payments, and could not thereafter effectually declare a forfeiture of vendee's right to purchase, and of the payments already made, without notice that in the future a strict performance would be required. That is the doctrine of such cases as Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 290, 110 Pac. 947, 139 Am. St. Rep. 126, Stevinson v. Joy, 164 Cal. 279, 128 Pac. 751, Butte Creek Consolidated Dredging Co. v. Olney, 173 Cal. 697, 161 Pac. 260, and Pearson v. Brown, 27 Cal. App. 125, 148 Pac. 956. The vendee was in default over 20 months at the time the notice was served; that is to say, more than $4,000 in monthly installments had not been paid when due. If, within a reasonable time after receipt of the notice, the purchaser had tendered payment of the amounts due under the terms of the contract, perhaps the seller would have been bound to accept such tender. But this is not a case in which a vendee having offered to perform seeks to compel performance of the contract by the vendor. By its notice the vendor was not seeking to rescind the contract, but to declare the vendee's rights forfeited and itself entitled to the moneys previously paid by Newell because of the latter's supposed breach of the agreement. The mere fact that the vendor may have been in error in supposing and declaring that, unless immediate payment were made of the entire balance of the purchase price, it could consider the rights of the vendee foreclosed, does not convert the notice into a declaration that the vendor elected to rescind. On the contrary, defendant sought to stand upon the contract and to enforce its terms. The corporation had done no act of abandonment of the agreement. On the contrary, it had extended to Mr. Newell the favor of accepting payments long past due. The plaintiff could not take advantage of his own default. Glock v. Howard, 123 Cal. 1–19, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17. Plaintiff was in default when the notice was received by him. True, his prior defaults had been condoned, and he could have reinstated himself by making prompt payments of the balance due under the terms of the contract; but he could not, by merely saying nothing, gain the right to demand repayment of the installments of the purchase price previously made. He could not place defendant in default unless he at least tendered to defendant all that was due under the agreement up to the date of his offer. He made no such tender. Therefore he should not prevail in this suit.

BLAHNIK et al. v. SMALL FARMS IMP. CO. (S. F. 8500.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑341(2)—COMPLAINT TO RECOVER PRICE ON SELLER'S FAILURE TO BUILD ROADS AS AGREED.

Complaint to recover on account of seller's breach so much of the price of land as had been paid, the contract showing that in consideration of the price plaintiffs were to have certain lots with roads constructed thereto, was not insufficient as not alleging that plaintiffs had suffered or would suffer damage by reason of defendant's failure to build the roads; it being apparent that they were a material part of the consideration, failure of which, under Civ. Code, § 1689, subd. 2, is ground for rescission.

2. PLEADING 🔑216(3)—ON UNCERTAINTY IN COMPLAINT, OBJECTION RAISED BY DEMURRER.

In an action by the buyers of land to recover, for the seller's failure to build roads as agreed, so much of the price as had been paid, the complaint, because not describing the character of the roads, nor the character of work to be done on them within the time fixed, was uncertain rather than insufficient, and objection should have been presented by demurrer for uncertainty, and not for failure to state a cause of action.

3. EVIDENCE 🔑442(6)—PAROL EVIDENCE OF COLLATERAL AGREEMENT NOT AFFECTING CONTRACT OF SALE ADMISSIBLE.

In an action by the buyers of land to recover from the seller so much of the price as had been paid on account of failure to build roads as agreed, the contract having been silent in regard to the character and kind of work to be done on the roads, evidence of conversations between defendant's agent and a buyer before and at the time of the execution of the contract held admissible as tending to show only an agreement collateral to the main contract.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑341(5)—RECOVERY BY BUYERS ON RESCISSION OF ACTUAL VALUE OF LAND GIVEN IN EXCHANGE.

Where the buyers of land, rescinding for the seller's breach, had not paid the price in money but in land exchanged, if the seller had retained title to the land received, the buyers on rescission could have demanded only a reconveyance, and the seller, having parted with title, must compensate the buyers only for loss actually sustained, the actual value of the property when accepted on the contract of sale, and not the price placed on it by the parties.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Joseph Blahnik and another against the Small Farms Improvement Company. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. L. Smith, of San Francisco, for appellant.

John J. O'Toole, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The defendant appeals from the judgment.

The object of the action was to recover $2,556.94, alleged to have been paid by the plaintiff Catherine C. Blahnik to the defendant as a part of the purchase price of certain lands which the defendant had contracted to sell to said plaintiff, which contract, it is alleged, was rescinded by the plaintiff because of the failure of the defendant to perform the covenants therein contained. The plaintiff Joseph is the husband of the plaintiff Catherine, and has no other interest in the case.

The contract of sale was executed on June 28, 1913. By its terms the defendant agreed to sell to said plaintiff four lots of land, containing about 25 acres, in a subdivision known as "Small Farms Improvement Tract, division R," for the sum of $3,750. It acknowledges the receipt of $2,300 of this price. The remainder was to be paid in installments of $100 each every six months, beginning on December 28, 1914, and continuing until the whole was paid. The unpaid portion was to bear 6 per cent. interest, payable semiannually from the date of the contract. It contained the following stipulation:

> "The seller agrees that it will have the roads in said division 'R' constructed during the fall of 1913 after the rains or when the ground is able to be worked. And construct the necessary bridges."

The complaint sets forth the contract in full and alleges that the defendant failed and refused to construct the said roads; that, because of said failure and refusal, the plaintiffs, before the commencement of the action, rescinded the contract and demanded repayment of the consideration theretofore paid thereon, amounting to $2,556.94. Judgment was asked for the recovery of said sum of money.

The court found that all the allegations of the complaint were true, and thereupon gave judgment for the plaintiff as prayed for. The answer denied the alleged failure and refusal to construct the roads referred to in the contract. Upon the trial the defendant claimed it had constructed the roads before the plaintiff attempted the alleged rescission. The subdivision map of the tract in which the lots were situated showed two roads 40 feet wide, beginning at the county road abutting upon the north side of the tract and leading south to and beyond the plaintiff's lots. These roads afforded the only means of ingress and egress to and from the lots. Between these lots and the county road there was a creek running through the tract from east to west. It was necessary to build bridges over this creek in order to make these roads passable. Two other bridges were necessary at other points on these roads.

[1, 2] The defendant demurred to the complaint on the general ground that it does not state a cause of action. The objection that plaintiffs show no right to rescind because the complaint does not allege that they have suffered or will suffer any damage by reason of the failure to build the roads is not well taken. The contract shows that in consideration of the price to be paid the plaintiffs were to have the lots described, with roads constructed leading thereto for access and egress. That the roads were a material part of the consideration which they were to receive is apparent. The complaint alleges that the defendant failed and refused to render this consideration within the time fixed in the contract. That part of the consideration had failed through the defendant's fault. Where the consideration fails in whole or in part through the fault of the party whose duty it is to render it, the other party may rescind. Civ. Code, § 1689, subd. 2. It is also urged that the complaint is defective because it does not describe the kind of roads nor the character of the work to be done upon them by the defendant within the time fixed in the contract. The complaint fails in this particular, but we are disposed to believe that it is a matter of uncertainty rather than insufficiency of the facts and should have been presented by demurrer for uncertainty. It is averred that the defendant failed and refused to construct the roads referred to in the contract and that the rescission was made because of said refusal. The contract itself is silent with respect to the kind of roads and the character of the work to be done thereon. Evidently that was the subject of some other agreement between the parties, either express or implied. As the case must be reversed for other reasons, we do not think it necessary to discuss this subject further or determine definitely how the objection should be raised, inasmuch as the plaintiffs may amend their complaint prior to the new trial by setting forth the agreement which they claim was made concerning the kind of roads and character of the work. This subject will be hereinafter further discussed in connection with an objection to the evidence.

[3] Upon the trial the defendant claimed that the only road work to be done, under the agreement actually made, was the building of bridges across the creek at its intersections with the roads and at the other two places where bridges were necessary, and the making of the fills or cuts required for convenient approaches to such bridges. The bridges and approaches thereto were constructed by the defendant prior to the time of the alleged rescission, and if they complied with the contract no cause of rescission was shown. For the purpose of showing the real agreement in that respect the defendant offered evidence of conversations between its agents and plaintiff Joseph, who made the deal for his wife, before and at the time of the execution of the contract. This evidence was excluded by the court on the ground that the subject was covered by the terms of the written contract and that the admission thereof would violate the rule that a written contract cannot be varied or contradicted by parol evidence of conversations between the parties prior to or at the time of its execution. This ruling was erroneous. The contract was altogether silent in regard to the character and kind of work that was to be done upon the roads. If there was any agreement on that subject, or any plan relating thereto adopted by defendant and acquiesced in by the plaintiffs, it was not set forth in the contract. So far as appears, it was in parol only. Such an agreement would be collateral and supplemental to the contract contained in the writing, and, as parol evidence thereof would not be inconsistent with the contract and would not alter it in any respect, evidence thereof would be admissible if material to the issues. Sivers v. Sivers, 97 Cal. 521, 32 Pac. 571; Daly v. Ruddell, 137 Cal. 676, 70 Pac. 784; 17 Cyc. 741. Afterwards, however, the court admitted testimony of these conversations, with the result that there was a sharp conflict in the evidence on the subject. Sufficient evidence was given on behalf of plaintiffs to sustain a finding that the bridges and necessary approaches thereto did not comprise all the work that the defendant had agreed to do in constructing the roads. The finding made by the court was in the general form that all of the allegations of the complaint were true. The complaint, as we have seen, merely alleged that the defendant had failed and refused to construct the roads referred to in the contract. It does not appear with certainty that the court adhered to its ruling that the evidence was immaterial and that the contract itself was sufficient, or whether it concluded that the evidence regarding the parol agreement sustained the contention of the plaintiffs rather than that of the defendants. Consequently, we cannot determine whether the rejection of the evidence when first offered was injurious to the defendant or not. We state our views concerning the matter for the guidance of the court below upon a new trial, if the parties proceed after the going down of the remittitur.

[4] By the recitals in the contract the defendant acknowledged the receipt of $2,300 upon the purchase price. Upon the trial it was shown that this sum was not paid in money, but that the real transaction was an exchange of certain real property conveyed by the plaintiffs to the defendant, which property was taken by the defendant at the sum of $2,300, and credited upon the contract price of the land sold by defendant to plaintiffs. Evidence was thereupon introduced concerning the value of the property so exchanged. At the highest value given to it by any witness, it would have been worth at the time the contract was executed at least $300 less than the amount for which it was credited on the contract of sale to the plaintiffs. The court apparently disregarded this evidence and allowed the plaintiffs the full sum of $2,300 as a payment made upon the contract and which they were entitled to recover. It also appeared at the trial that after the contract of sale was made, but before the offer to rescind, the defendant had conveyed the property received in exchange to other parties and was not able to restore that part of the consideration. The court, apparently, proceeded upon the theory that the plaintiffs were entitled to treat the amount for which said property was taken in exchange as a payment in money upon the price of the property sold to the plaintiffs by defendant and to recover said amount upon a rescission. In this the court erred. If the defendant had retained the title to the property, the most that the plaintiffs could have demanded upon the rescission would have been a reconveyance thereof to them. The defendant having parted with the title thereto, and being unable to restore the plaintiffs to the position in which they were at the time the contract was made, the rule in equity is that they must compensate the plaintiffs for the loss thereby sustained. This would not be the price at which the property had been accepted upon the contract of sale, but would be its value at that time, and it was therefore necessary for the court to determine such value. "Where the grantee has conveyed the property, or part of it, to another, or for other reason cannot restore it, the plaintiff is entitled to a money judgment for the value of the land, the restoration of which is thus impossible; such relief being given on the principle that the court having obtained jurisdiction will retain the case for the purpose of giving complete relief." 6 Cyc. 340. Equity does not measure the damage by the price at which the property may have been taken in the exchange between the parties, but allows only the value of the property at the time the exchange was made. 9 Cor. Jur. 1263, § 211; Forrest v. Wardman, 40 App. D. C. 531; Sedgwick on Damages (9th Ed.) § 655b. The plaintiffs were not entitled to more than the actual value of the property at the time of the exchange. The judgment giving them the full amount at which it was taken in the contract is erroneous to the extent of the difference between the actual value and the price so fixed in the exchange. For this reason a reversal is necessary. The complaint did not raise this question, but it was put in issue by the allegations of the answer. There should have been a finding of the actual value of the property at that time and the judgment should have covered that amount only.

HONORE v. LEMM et al. (S. F. 8398.)

1. EVIDENCE 🔑425—PAROL, TO VARY TERMS OF CONTRACT.

In purchaser's action for specific performance involving issue of whether purchaser had paid certain amount, vendor's testimony that note given him for such amount was not received in payment thereof, but merely as security, was not inadmissible as varying terms of contract, notwithstanding contemporaneous execution of receipt for such note, where terms of contract were admitted, and there was no allegation that by terms of contract note was received in payment, or that money had been paid, and receipt was not offered or received in evidence as proof of terms of contract, but merely as evidence of payment.

2. ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS 🔑16—ALTERED RECEIPT AS ESTABLISHING CONTRACT OF SALE.

Where description was inserted in receipt after vendor had signed it and during vendor's absence, the receipt would be insufficient to establish a contract for the purchase and sale of the land described.

3. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE 🔑121(11) — EVIDENCE OF PAYMENT OF PURCHASE PRICE.

In purchaser's action for specific performance involving issue of whether purchaser had paid vendor certain portion of the purchase price, evidence held to sustain finding that purchaser had not made such payment.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Geo. H. Buck, Judge.

Action by M. Honore against Hans Lemm and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Stafford & Stafford, H. I. Stafford, W. F. Stafford, and Wm. M. Stafford, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Drown, Leicester & Drown, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. This is an action for specific performance brought by the vendee against the vendor. The contract is admitted, and the only question is whether the vendee has paid $500 upon the purchase price in addition to the amount conceded by the vendor to have been paid. The trial court held that the payment had not been made, and gave judgment foreclosing the right of the vendee, unless within 30 days from the date of the decree he paid such $500 in addition to other amounts conceded to be due. Plaintiff appeals. The complaint stated and the answer admitted the terms of the contract between the parties. The finding of the court is in accordance with such admission, to wit, that on or about August 22, 1913, the parties entered into an agreement or contract whereby the defendant agreed to sell to the plaintiff the land described in the complaint for the sum of $900, that the sum of $100 was paid on said date, and that no time was agreed upon for the payment of the balance of the purchase price. Plaintiff alleged that on or about April 6, 1914, he paid the defendant the sum of $500 as part payment on the purchase price of the lot, leaving a balance of $300 due on account thereof. Upon the trial plaintiff offered two receipts, one dated August 22, 1913, as follows:

> "Received from M. Honore the sum of $100 in cash and a note for $500 payable February 1, 1914, as part payment on two lots, Nos. 35 and 36, in block 26, Third addition, San Bruno, San Mateo County, Cal., and for which he agrees to pay $900 and I agree to then furnish him with a clear title to said lots.
> "[Signed] Hans Lemm."

The other, dated January 6, 1914, read as follows:

> "Received from Mrs. Anna Honore the sum of $500.00 (five hundred dollars), as part payment on lots Nos. 35 and 36, Blk. 26, Mastick avenue, Third addition, San Bruno, Cal., leaving a balance of $300.00 yet to be paid on said lots. [Signed] Hans Lemm."

[1] With relation to the receipt of August 22, 1913, it appears from the evidence that on that date the vendee delivered to the vendor a note for $500, due February 1, 1914, signed by one Wolff. The vendor, however, testifies that this note was not received in payment of the said sum of $500, but merely as security. To a consideration of this testimony the vendee objects on the ground that the receipt was the contract of purchase, and that therein it was agreed that the note should be accepted as payment to the extent of $500, and that to receive evidence to the contrary is to vary the terms of the written contract between the parties. This objection is not well taken for the reason that the contract between the parties and the terms thereof were admitted in the pleadings, and there is no allegation that by the terms of the contract the note in question was given or received in payment, or that the amount of $500 was then thereby or otherwise paid. On the contrary, it is specifically alleged that the sum of $500 was paid in April, 1914. The receipt in question was not offered or received in evidence as proof of the terms of the contract between the parties, but was offered and received without objection as evidence of payment.

[2, 3] Moreover, plaintiff testified that at the time the defendant signed the receipt in question the above description of the property was not contained therein, but was subsequently inserted therein by the plaintiff in defendant's absence. In such case it would be insufficient, in any event, to establish a contract for the purchase and sale of the lot in question. It was proper, therefore, to receive defendant's evidence to overcome the claim that the $500 was paid by said note. The defendant testified that the note for $500 signed by Wolff, received as security, was retained by him until January 6, 1914, when he surrendered the note to plaintiff at plaintiff's request. Wolff and the plaintiff were partners, doing business under the name of the North Star Iron Works. The defendant Lemm was an employé of the firm. The business had been established by the plaintiff for many years, and Wolff had recently purchased a half interest therein, and in payment thereof had given plaintiff $450, a promissory note for $600, and the $500 note above referred to, as evidence of the indebtedness due from him to the plaintiff on account of said purchase price. The business was apparently regarded of the value of $3,000, and the interest of each partner as $1,500. Under these circumstances plaintiff and defendant and Wolff agreed that defendant for $1,000 should have a third interest in the copartnership. Defendant Hans Lemm was to pay $500 in cash, and Honore agreed to pay the other $500. Upon the faith of plaintiff's promise the defendant claims that he executed the receipt for $500 dated January 6, 1914, acknowledging the receipt of $500 on account of the purchase price of the lots in question. The defendant claims that the $500 was never paid, while the plaintiff claims that it was paid in the following manner, to wit: He arranged with Wolff to reduce Wolff's interest in the partnership from $1,500 to $1,000, and in consideration of such agreement returned to Wolff the note for $500, thus canceling the indebtedness due from Wolff to himself; that in pursuance of the agreement between plaintiff and defendant entries were made upon the books of the copartnership showing that each partner had paid in $1,000; that the defendant thus secured exactly what he bargained for, namely, a third interest in the copartnership, for which he gave plaintiff a $500 credit on account of the purchase price of the lots and paid $500 in cash into the copartnership. The evidence as to the agreement between the plaintiff and defendant concerning the partnership arrangement is, however, conflicting, for Wolff and Lemm, and indeed the plaintiff himself at one point, testified that the $1,000 was to be paid into the copartnership, $500 by Lemm and $500 by plaintiff, as a part of the capital, and the evidence is all to the effect that the $500 to be paid into the copartnership by the plaintiff, on behalf of the defendant, never was so paid, unless the surrender of the note in question was such payment. Wolff left the partnership on April 27, 1914, and the defendant May 28, 1914, apparently without any settlement of partnership affairs. It also appears that the Wolff note for $600 was returned to him before the Lemm copartnership arrangement because of his complaint that the copartnership was indebted for $1,600 above the amount communicated to him when he purchased, thus apparently leaving Wolff's investment in the copartnership $450. If the agreement was as contended by the defendant, that the $1,000 was to be paid into the business in cash, and that after such payment the defendant should have a third interest therein, the defendant thereby retained a third interest in the $1,000, whereas, if $500 was to be used to pay one of the partners off without augmenting the assets of the copartnership, the defendant retained no interest in such amount. There was, then, substantial evidence to the effect that the second $500 receipt was given in pursuance of a promise of the plaintiff which he did not fulfill. The finding of the trial court must therefore be affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, J.; MELVIN, J.; LAWLOR, J.

OLNEY, J. I concur in the result, but I do not agree with what is said in the main opinion as to the writing of August 22, 1913, being a receipt merely, with the result that evidence was permissible to show that the Wolff note was taken by the defendant as security instead of in payment as specified in the writing. The writing was more than a receipt. It was intended by the parties as the written expression of their understanding. Its terms must therefore be taken as final as to what their understanding was. The question of whether the Wolff note was taken as security or in payment is one as to what was understood between the parties; and, inasmuch as the written expression of this understanding says it was taken in payment, that ends the matter.

This conclusion, however, does not change the result. The Wolff note was taken in payment either conditionally or absolutely. The presumption is it was taken in conditional payment (Griffith v. Grogan, 12 Cal. 317), and the subsequent conduct of the parties leaves no doubt as to this being the fact. The final and crucial question in the case is as to whether the note was paid as a result of the subsequent transaction whereby Lemm endeavored to buy into the partnership with the plaintiff and Wolff. It appears that Lemm was to pay not to the plaintiff, but into the capital of the firm, $1,000, of which $500 was to be paid by the payment of the Wolff note to the firm. On this understanding Lemm redelivered the note to the plaintiff. But the note was never paid, and the partnership came to nothing. There was therefore a complete failure of the consideration for which Lemm gave up the note, and he has not, in fact, received anything of value on account of the $500 which constituted the part of the purchase price represented by the note. This being the situation, the plaintiff must pay this $500 before he is entitled to a deed under his contract of purchase.

MUNDELL v. WELLS et al. (TAYLOR, Intervener). (S. F. 8390.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 8, 1919. Rehearing Denied Nov. 6, 1919.)

1. Bail 🔑73—Liability of clerk depositing money on order of court.

Where cash bail for one charged with a misdemeanor triable in the superior court was furnished, the clerk could satisfy out of the money in his custody the part of the judgment imposing fine, and the person who put up the bail and defendant's judgment creditor seeking to go against the deposit have no possible recourse against the clerk for following the mandate of the court which could order disposition of the money.

2. Bail 🔑73—Application of cash bail in satisfaction of fine.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 1295, 1297, in contemplation of law, so far as a criminal action is concerned, money deposited as cash bail to insure defendant's appearance is his money, and the court is not required to protect the rights of any one who may have advanced it for him, though after conviction and on appearance for sentence defendant's counsel seeks to surrender him and asks an order remitting the bail to the parties who put it up; the duty of the court being to apply the money in satisfaction of judgment for a fine.

3. Bail 🔑73—Offer to surrender as prerequisite to return of cash bail.

It is a prerequisite to the return of bail money under Pen. Code, § 1302, that defendant offer to surrender himself to the officer to whom the commitment is directed.

4. Bail 🔑73—Constitutional law 🔑262—Application of bail money to payment of fine not wanting in due process.

Pen. Code, § 1297, requiring the application of bail money by the clerk under direction of the court in satisfaction of judgment for a fine, held not unconstitutional as depriving of his property without due process the person who advances the money by placing him in a different and less advantageous position than a surety on a bail bond.

5. Bail 🔑73—Determination of right to balance of cash bail after payment of fine.

After part of cash bail has been applied, under Pen. Code, § 1297, to payment of defendant's fine, if the true ownership of the remainder be litigated, or refund of the balance to defendant contemplated, the court will inquire who is entitled to the money, whether the person who put it up, or a judgment creditor of defendant's, and will award it accordingly.

6. Bail 🔑73—Ownership of residue of cash bail after payment of fine.

Where cash bail was put up for one charged with a misdemeanor, and after his conviction, under Pen. Code, § 1297, half of the bail was applied to payment of the fine, the surplus of the money remaining in the hands of the clerk was properly adjudged to be the money of the party who put it up, and not to belong to defendant's judgment creditor seeking to attach it.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; J. E. Barber, Judge.

Action by Esther A. Mundell against J. H. Wells and the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, wherein E. B. Taylor intervened. From judgment for plaintiff against defendant Wells, dismissing the action against the fidelity company, and adjudging that intervener take nothing, plaintiff and the intervener appeal. Affirmed.

Chas. S. Peery, of San Francisco, for appellant Mundell.

Appellant Taylor, in pro per.

T. D. Johnston, of Richmond, and A. B. Tinning, Alfred C. Skaife, and Guy Le Roy Stevick, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff sued as assignee of W. A. Mundell for $2,000 deposited with defendant Wells, who is ex officio clerk of the superior court of Contra Costa county, as bail in the case of the People, etc. v. R. B. Cradlebaugh. The corporation defendant is the surety on the official bond of Mr. Wells, and the intervener, Taylor, asserts an interest in the money by reason of an attachment and judgment against Cradlebaugh. The plaintiff and the intervener Taylor are the appellants.

Cradlebaugh was charged with a misdemeanor triable in the superior court. After his arrest he was released on cash bail of $2,000, deposited in that behalf by W. A. Mundell, who had borrowed the money for that purpose. He was preliminarily examined, was held to answer, and his bail was fixed at $2,000. At his request, the fund deposited at the time of his arrest was transmitted to the county clerk. Cradlebaugh was tried and convicted; was readmitted to bail pending sentence; and the money in the hands of Mr. Wells, as clerk of the court, was by order of court accepted as security for his due appearance for sentence.

Cradlebaugh appeared for sentence, as ordered, and his counsel in open court, not in his behalf but for those who had advanced the money in lieu of bail, sought to surrender him into custody, and asked for an order remitting the bail money "to the parties who put it up, and for the purpose of filing new bonds later on." The court did not act upon the suggestion of surrender, nor was there any ruling upon the motion to return the money. Cradlebaugh was arraigned and sentenced to imprisonment for one year in the county jail and to pay a fine of $1,000.

After notice of appeal, the court, on request, fixed bail on appeal; the amount being $2,000. Counsel for the prisoner then asked that the bail theretofore deposited be exonerated. The court instructed him to draw the order and present it to the district attorney. Later in the day the district attorney asked for an order directing the clerk to apply $1,000 of the fund in his hands to the satisfaction of the fine imposed upon Cradlebaugh. After argument upon this matter, the court directed the clerk to satisfy that part of the judgment imposing a fine out of the money in his custody. He obeyed this order and offered the $1,000 remaining, after satisfaction of the fine, to Cradlebaugh. This sum, however, was sought to be attached in the hands of the clerk by Mr. Taylor, in an action brought by him against Cradlebaugh to recover $500 as a fee for his services as counsel in the criminal action. Mr. Taylor recovered a judgment against Cradlebaugh, which was in force at the time of the trial of the case at bar.

Upon these facts the superior court gave judgment for plaintiff against Mr. Wells, as clerk, for the sum of $1,000 remaining in his hands after satisfying the fine imposed upon Cradlebaugh. The court dismissed the action against the sureties on the clerk's bond and adjudged that the intervener take nothing.

Appellants, Mrs. Mundell and Mr. Taylor, contend that the offer to surrender Cradlebaugh into custody was sufficient to exonerate the bail; that the fund on deposit was not the property of the defendant in the criminal action out of which a fine might be satisfied; and that such payment of the fine deprived the real owner of that amount without due process of law.

[1] Even if appellants could uphold their declaration that the money deposited as bail was not in the contemplation of law the property of Cradlebaugh, but of the person who furnished it for that use, they could not prevail in this action against Wells, who, as county clerk and ex officio clerk of the superior court, only performed his duty as a ministerial officer of the court, acting under the order of the judge of said court when he applied half of the fund to the satisfaction of the fine. Regarding that portion of the fund, they can have no possible recourse against defendant Wells. The court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and could order the disposition of the money in custodia legis. If the clerk had disobeyed the order of the court in this case, he would have been guilty of contempt of court. A ministerial officer is protected and justified when acting under a process or order of a court possessing general jurisdiction over the subject-matter, in spite of any errors committed by the court issuing the process or giving the order. 22 R. C. L. 481.

[2] But the court acted correctly and fully within its powers in making the order of which appellants complain. Section 1295 of the Penal Code provides for the deposit of money for the release from custody of a person held to answer. Section 1297 is as follows:

> "When money has been deposited, if it remains on deposit at the time of a judgment for the payment of a fine, the county clerk must, under the direction of the court, apply the money in satisfaction thereof, and after satisfying the fine and costs, must refund the surplus, if any, to the defendant."

It will thus be seen that in contemplation of law, so far as the criminal action is concerned, the money deposited for the purpose of insuring a defendant's appearance is his money, and the court is not required to protect the supposed rights of any one who may have advanced it for him. There is no pretense that Cradlebaugh in the criminal action surrendered himself into custody. His counsel, in making the motion, was seeking to protect the rights of the person or persons who had advanced the money as if bondsmen had appeared upon a written obligation. But persons who advance money in lieu of bail are not in the same position as sureties on a bond and have no such rights.

[3] When the defendant in the criminal action appeared for sentence, the counsel for Cradlebaugh, addressing the court, said:

> "Now if the court please at this time at the request of the bondsmen I will ask for an order of court surrendering the defendant into custody and for an order of the clerk remitting the bail money back to the parties who put it up, and for the purpose of filing new bonds later on."

The court then proceeded to pronounce judgment. From the foregoing it will be seen that there was no offer of the defendant in the criminal action to surrender himself "to the officer to whom the commitment was directed"—a prerequisite to the return of the bail money. Section 1302, Penal Code. Therefore the court was not called upon to rule upon the motion to order Cradlebaugh into custody. Consequently, the money in the hands of the clerk was a fund remaining on deposit "at the time of a judgment for the payment of a fine." Under the statute (section 1297 of the Penal Code), there was but one correct method of disposing of half of it. The court adopted that method.

[4] Appellant Mundell contends that the statute (section 1297 of the Penal Code) is unconstitutional, in that it deprives of property, without due process of law, the person who advances the money for bail, by placing him in a different and less advantageous position than the surety on a bail bond. There is no force in this contention. There is no constitutional reason why one who advances cash in lieu of bail money should occupy the identical position of a surety on a written contract. The latter is bound, and the court, clerk, and sheriff are bound, by the strict terms of the written promise, while the measure of the depositor's liability, as well as of the correlative duties of the court and its officers, are to be found in the statutes. The law does not provide for a written agreement between the state and one who advances cash in lieu of bail. It attributes the ownership of such a fund to the defendant, and one who furnishes money for the release of a person held under a criminal charge is presumed to know that fact. It is argued that the sheriff had no right to accept the money originally, and that the clerk therefore could not receive it in lieu of bail. But it is not contended that the money was not advanced for the purpose of obtaining Cradlebaugh's release. If it finally reached the proper judicial custody, and Cradlebaugh was in fact permitted to go at large, the plaintiff, Mrs. Mundell, cannot complain because the purpose of the payment by her assignor was accomplished, not by a direct deposit in court, but through the agency of the sheriff, who receipted for $2,000, "being bail money, case of R. B. Henry" (one of Cradlebaugh's aliases).

That the money deposited for bail in a criminal action is regarded as the defendant's property is a rule sustained by the weight of authority. In People v. Laidlaw, 102 N. Y. 588, 7 N. E. 910, the court, construing statutes very similar to sections 1295 et seq. of the Penal Code of California, used the following language:

> "All these sections treat the money deposited as belonging to the defendant, and in all cases where money is deposited in lieu of bail it may be applied in payment of any fine imposed, and the surplus, if any, after the fine has been satisfied, must be returned to the defendant. The relator when he deposited this money must be assumed to have known the provisions of these statutes, and the deposit must have been made in compliance with them. There is no authority for the county treasurer to take a deposit in lieu of bail except by virtue of these statutes, and the deposit must be made in strict compliance with the statutes. The statutes may have been framed as they are for the very purpose of avoiding a dispute like that which has arisen in this case. If the contention of the relator be upheld, then disputes may frequently arise as to whose money was deposited, and the county treasurer can never know with certainty to whom the money is to be returned, and the court cannot know in passing sentence, or in making its order, whether the money is properly applicable upon the fine imposed. It is therefore wiser that the provisions of the statute should have their obvious meaning, to wit: The money is deposited as the money of the defendant, and if a fine is inflicted upon him it may be used to pay the fine, and the surplus is to be returned to him."

Other authorities upon this subject announcing substantially the same rule are State v. Wisnewski, 134 Wis. 497, 114 N. W. 1113; State v. Ross, 100 Tenn. 303, 45 S. W. 673; People v. Gould, 38 Misc. Rep. 505, 77 N. Y. Supp. 1067, and State v. Owens, 112 Iowa, 403, 84 N. W. 529. But it is suggested very earnestly that in California an entirely different rule has been adopted, and Hudson v. Police Court of Oakland (App.) 178 Pac. 172, is cited to support this theory. That was a case in which a writ of review was issued against the police court of the city of Oakland, and, after hearing, the District Court of Appeal annulled a judgment forfeiting money deposited as bail and applying it to the payment of a fine. It appears from the opinion in that case that before trial Mr. Hudson, counsel for the defendant in a criminal action, offered to surrender said defendant. There seems to have been no question regarding the sufficiency of this offer, and the District Court of Appeal correctly decided that the court was bound to accept it and to return the money to the counselor who had deposited it for his client. In the case at bar the facts are very different. No request was made for the acceptance of defendant's surrender in the criminal action, but the court was asked for an order accepting his surrender by his bondsman. He had no bondsman, and the court was neither bound to act nor to regard the request for the order as a personal surrender by Cradlebaugh to the sheriff.

[5] But although, as between defendant and the state, the money deposited in lieu of bail is regarded as a defendant's property and will be applied, so far as necessary, to the satisfaction of a fine, nevertheless, in a contest like the one waged in the case at bar involving the residue in the hands of the clerk after the payment of the fine, the court will regard the claims of the person who advanced the fund in order to bring about the release of the individual held in custody. While it is true that the statute provides for the payment to the defendant of the surplus, if any, after satisfaction of the fine (section 1297, Penal Code), if the true ownership be litigated, as in the case at bar, before the refunding contemplated by the statute, the court will inquire who is, in equity and good conscience, entitled to the money, and will award it accordingly. In Way v. Day, 187 Mass. 476, 73 N. E. 543, the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts was considering a judgment dismissing a bill in equity whereby a judgment was prayed to enforce an assignment by Day of $800 deposited as bail and remaining in the hands of the clerk of the superior court after Day's conviction and sentence. It was found in the lower court that Greer, one of the defendants, had deposited the money and that it never was the property of Day, and that court ruled:

> "That, while Greer cannot claim against the commonwealth that this money belongs to him and not to Day, yet this rule does not protect the plaintiff or give to him any rights against the real owner of the fund and that for this sole reason the bill cannot be maintained."

In approving this ruling and the dismissal of the bill, the Supreme Court used the following language:

> "Even if it be assumed that a court of equity can interfere with the power and duty of the court in which the money is deposited and direct to whom it shall be paid—an assumption attended with great, if not insuperable difficulties—and even if it be further assumed that as between the commonwealth and Day the money must be regarded as belonging to Day and not to Greer, and, still further, that the court in which it is deposited has no power to order it to be paid to any other person than to Day or his order (see Edelsten v. Adams, 8 Taunt. 557; Douglass v. Stanbrough, 3 A. & E. 316; Salter v. Weiner, 6 Abb. Prac. [N. Y.] 191; People v. Laidlaw, 102 N. Y. 588 [7 N. E. 910]), still it is plain that the money being in fact Greer's and not Day's, and having been pledged only for a certain purpose, Day had no authority express or implied to divert it to a different purpose. In equity and good conscience the money should go to Greer, and as against him the assignment by Day to the plaintiff must be regarded as invalid to convey any interest in or right to the fund, and equity will not lend its aid to enable him to get possession of it."

In Wright & Taylor v. Dougherty, 138 Iowa, 195, 115 N. W. 908, the question presented to the Supreme Court was whether or not, when money is deposited with the clerk of a court by a friendly third person to secure the release from custody of one under indictment, such fund is subject to seizure in satisfaction of the claims of judgment creditors of the indicted person. After reviewing the authorities which hold that as between the state and the person under indictment the money deposited as bail may be used in satisfaction of a fine, the court said:

> "True, under the statute, the money is to be deposited in the name of the defendant, and perhaps in a sense the legal title thereto is to be regarded as in him. But the money in the hands of the clerk is no more than a deposit, and this is only in favor of the state, the other party to the transaction; and the interest of the state does not extend to the actual ownership of the money. It goes no farther than that the defendant shall appear when called for trial, and that the deposit shall be available out of which to pay any fine or costs that may be assessed against him. This the depositor must be held to have agreed to. The statute goes no farther, and the cases cited go no farther. As between the depositor and the defendant, or his creditors, the ordinary rules of property obtain."

[6] We are of the opinion that the true rule is clearly set forth in the passages quoted above, and therefore that the surplus remaining in the hands of the county clerk after satisfaction of the fine was properly adjudged to be the money of plaintiff. We also approve of that part of the judgment imposing costs upon plaintiff. Manifestly, it would have been unjust to charge costs against the officer who was the mere custodian of the fund.

The judgment is affirmed.

GREEN v. SOUTH SAN FRANCISCO R. & POWER CO. (S. F. 8298.)

1. RAILROADS ⚿359(1)—DUTY TO TRESPASSER ON RIGHT OF WAY.

Where a railroad company runs its track on its own land, and not on a public way, one who goes on the right of way without the consent, express or implied, of the company, is a trespasser, and the company owes him no duty, except to use ordinary care to avoid injuring him after seeing him in danger.

2. RAILROADS ⚿359(1)—DUTY TOWARD TRESPASSERS AT CROSSING WITH OTHER RAILROAD.

The duty of a railroad towards trespassers on its right of way is not changed with regard to either road, when two railroads cross each other at a place where there is no other public way.

3. RAILROADS ⚿274(3) — GROUNDS AT STATION NEAR CROSSING WITH OTHER ROAD MUST BE SAFE.

When one of two railroad companies, whose lines intersect at a place where there is no other public way, establishes a passenger station near the crossing, such company is charged with a duty to exercise reasonable care to have suitable station grounds and to keep them safe and convenient for persons there for any lawful purpose.

4. STREET RAILROADS ⚿86(1)—TRACKS CROSSING RAILROAD PROPERTY MUST BE CONSTRUCTED ACCORDING TO ITS PLAN.

Obligation of street railroad, under Civ. Code, § 465, subd. 5, to lay its tracks and maintain its roadbed at a crossing of another road, so as to afford security for life and property, runs not only to the railroad's own passengers, but to passengers on the other road, or about the other road's station for proper purposes, but is limited by the road's power to control the construction of tracks, which must be in accordance with method other road has first adopted.

5. STREET RAILROADS ⚷86(1) — NEGLIGENCE OF RAILROAD IN MAINTENANCE OF TRACKS AT STREET RAILROAD CROSSING.

If tracks were maintained by a steam railroad at its crossing with an electric road in a negligent manner, and without due regard to the safety of persons lawfully at the place on the steam road's invitation, the negligence was violation of a duty which the steam road owed to such persons, and not of any duty of the electric road.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by Kenneth M. Green against the South San Francisco Railroad & Power Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Wm. M. Abbott and Wm. M. Cannon, both of San Francisco (Kingsley Cannon, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Green, Humphreys & Green, of San Francisco, Joseph J. Bullock, of Redwood City, and Vogelsang & Brown, of San Francisco (L. Seidenberg, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

SHAW, J. The defendant appeals from the judgment. The action was begun to recover damages from bodily injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant. The complaint alleged that the defendant was operating an electric street railway upon a public street in South San Francisco, which railway crossed the tracks of the Southern Pacific Company near the passenger station of said Southern Pacific Company. On the subject of negligence it alleged that where the defendant's track crosses the Southern Pacific tracks, and for more than 100 feet immediately west of the crossing, the defendant failed and neglected to pave, plank, macadamize, or fill in the ground between the tracks and on each side thereof, or to keep the track on said street flush with the street or flush with the surface of the ground, but, on the contrary, both rails of the defendant's track projected the full depth of the rail above the surface of the ground at said place, and that by reason thereof the said track was unsafe and dangerous; that at the time of the injury plaintiff approached the station of the Southern Pacific Company at South San Francisco to take passage on a train of that company which had stopped at said station for that purpose, and being unaware of the dangerous condition of the defendant's track, he tripped upon one of the rails of defendant's track so projecting above the level of the ground, and was thereby caused to fall to the ground in such a position that his left arm was thrown across one of the rails of the track of the Southern Pacific Company; that the wheels of the said train passed over his arm and so injured him that his arm had to be amputated at the shoulder.

We think there was no proof that the defendant violated any duty owing by it to the plaintiff to exercise care in his behalf at the place of injury, and that for this reason the judgment must be reversed. The allegation that the tracks of the defendant were laid in a public highway at that place was not true. Neither the tracks of the defendant nor those of the Southern Pacific Company at that point were upon any public way. Both companies were operating their cars upon tracks laid upon property acquired by them respectively for railway purposes only. The obligations of a railway company which lays its tracks in a public street to maintain the same flush with the street and to otherwise exercise care for the safety of persons lawfully traveling thereon have no bearing upon the case. The liability of the defendant depends upon the duties it owed under the law to exercise care at a place where its track is not laid upon a public street or highway. The evidence showed that the train had stopped at the station of the Southern Pacific Company as alleged, that it was about to start on its journey again, that plaintiff attempted to board said train, and was injured by stumbling over the defendant's rails as alleged. The defendant street railway did not cross the Southern Pacific tracks immediately upon the grounds prepared and maintained for station purposes by the Southern Pacific Company. The defendant maintained no station at that point, and its cars did not stop there. It had no interest in maintaining the station.

The authority of the defendant to lay its tracks across those of the Southern Pacific Company is found in the Civil Code. Section 500 provides that any street railway track is permitted to cross any railroad track already constructed and that the crossing must be made "as provided in chapter 2, title 3, of this part." The provisions referred to are in sections 465 and 469. Section 465 enumerates and describes the powers given to ordinary railroad companies. It authorizes such railroad company, if the route of its road intersects any existing railway, or other public way, to construct its road across the same "in such manner as to afford security for life and property; but the corporation shall restore the * * * railroad [or other public way] * * * thus intersected to its former state of usefulness as near as may be, or so that the railroad shall not unnecessarily impair its usefulness or injure its franchise." Subdivision 5. Section 469 provides that, where the track of one railroad intersects another, "the rails of either or each road must be so cut and adjusted as to permit the passage of the cars on each road with as little obstruction as possible."

[1, 2] Where a railroad company runs its track upon its own land, and not along or across a street or other public way, any person who goes upon such right of way without the consent, express or implied, of such company is a trespasser. Toomey v. Southern P. Co., 86 Cal. 379, 24 Pac. 1074, 10 L. R. A. 139; Baltimore, etc., Co. v. State, 62 Md. 487, 50 Am. Rep. 233; Palmer v. Railroad Co., 112 Ind. 253, 14 N. E. 70. To such person the company owes no duty "to facilitate his trespass or render it safe," although bound to use ordinary care to avoid injuring him in the operation of its road after seeing him so trespassing and in a dangerous position. Id. This duty towards persons thus trespassing is not changed, with regard to either road, when two railroads cross each other at a place where there is no other public way.

[3-5] If one of such railroad companies establishes a passenger station near such crossing, that company immediately becomes charged with the duty of exercising reasonable care to prepare and maintain suitable station grounds, and make them safe and convenient for persons leaving its cars there, or who may be there for any lawful purpose. This duty rests upon that company alone. The other company at the nearby crossing stands in no relation to the passengers of the first company, nor to persons who may come to its station for purposes connected therewith. We are here concerned solely with the duty of the street railway company in regard to the manner of maintaining its tracks and roadbed at the crossing in question. Section 469 relates merely to the duty of the road making the crossing to cut and adjust its rails, so as to permit the passage of cars of the other road with as little obstruction as possible. It is not claimed that this duty was not fully performed. The provisions of section 465 above quoted require such street railway to lay its tracks and maintain its roadbed at such crossing so as to afford security for life and property. This obligation runs, not only to its own passengers, but to persons who may be passengers upon the other railroad, or who may be about the station for proper and lawful purposes connected therewith; but it is obvious that the obligation of the defendant is limited by its power to control the matter of constructing and laying the tracks. It had no power or authority to compel the Southern Pacific Company to extend its station grounds, or to maintain them in a suitable or different manner or condition from that which existed at the time.

The Southern Pacific Company had laid its tracks at the crossing, so that the full width of the rails projected above the ties, and the space between them was not filled in above the top of the ties. It was maintaining its rails and roadbed in this manner at the time the crossing was made and until the accident occurred. The defendant had laid its rails and was maintaining them in the same manner at that time. It had no power to compel the Southern Pacific Company to adopt a different plan. If the latter company had extended its station grounds to the place of the crossing, and had filled in the space between its tracks for the convenience and safety of its passengers, the defendant might have been bound thereafter, while maintaining the crossing, to co-operate and fill in between its own tracks to correspond with the plan of the Southern Pacific Company; but so long as the latter company did not extend its station grounds to the crossing, the plain duty of the defendant was to maintain its own tracks and roadbed to correspond with those of the Southern Pacific Company at that place. If it had maintained them at a different level, and a passenger of the other company had been injured thereby, the defendant might have been subject to a charge of negligence for such departure from the general conformation of the surface as established and maintained by the Southern Pacific Company at that place. It was under no obligation to adopt a manner of maintaining its own track at the crossing different from that adopted by the Southern Pacific Company at that place. If they were maintained in a negligent manner by the Southern Pacific Company, and without due regard for the safety of persons lawfully at that place upon its invitation, this negligence was a violation of the duty which the Southern Pacific Company owed to such persons and was not a violation of any duty which the defendant owed to them. It was the negligence of the Southern Pacific Company alone. The consequence is that such condition of the tracks and roadbed was not negligence by defendant toward the plaintiff. For these reasons we are of the opinion that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence. This conclusion renders it unnecessary to consider the other points presented in the case.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; OLNEY, J.; MELVIN, J.; LAWLOR, J.

WILBUR, J. I concur in the judgment. It is the duty of a railroad company towards its intending passengers to use care in the preparation and maintenance of its premises that a person of ordinary prudence would exercise in such matters. If we assume, as respondent contends we should, that the obligation of the appellant was the same as that of the railroad company with reference to that portion of its track which is sometimes used by passengers intending to take the Southern Pacific Company's passenger trains, the instructions in this case are erroneous for the reasons that, taken as a whole, they asserted the duty of the appellant to make its tracks at the point in question safe for intending passengers. Without futher analysis of either the instructions or the evidence, it is sufficient to say that even on the theory of respondent the judgment must be reversed.

Upon the question of the duty of the care in this state with reference to the maintenance of its passenger depot grounds, see Falls v. San Francisco, etc., Co., 97 Cal. 114, 31 Pac. 901, 20 L. R. BENVENUTO v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR SANTA BARBARA COUNTY et al. (L. A. 6292.)

1. PROHIBITION 🔑5(1) — DENIED WHERE GRANT WOULD REQUIRE ANTICIPATION OF ACTION.

An application for a writ of prohibition directed to an inferior court will be denied, where the granting of the application would require the appellate court to anticipate the action of the inferior tribunal.

2. PROHIBITION 🔑3(2)—WRIT DENIED WHERE THERE IS ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW.

Where it does not appear that petitioner does not have a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by appeal, an application for a writ of prohibition will be denied.

In Bank.

Petition by Pastine Maddalena Benvenuto for writ of prohibition against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Santa Barbara, and Hon. S. E. Crow, Judge thereof. Application denied.

A. C. Postel, of Santa Barbara (C. H. Brock, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. The application for a writ of prohibition is denied.

[1] We deem it proper to say that this denial is without reference to the merits of the legal question attempted to be presented by the application. Regardless of all other questions, we cannot assume to anticipate the action of the trial court on the application for confirmation of the attempted sale referred to in the petition.

[2] It may further be suggested that we are not satisfied that, in the event of unfavorable action on the part of the lower court, the petitioner's remedy by appeal would not be a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy.

All concur.

SCOTT v. TIMES-MIRROR CO. (L. A. 4954.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 8, 1919. Rehearing Denied Nov. 6, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑231(5) — SUFFICIENCY OF GENERAL OBJECTION TO EVIDENCE OF SIMILAR LIBELS.

In a libel action, although a specific objection as to the dissimilarity of subject-matter of other alleged published attacks upon plaintiff by defendant was not made, the general objection of incompetency, irrelevancy, and immateriality of such evidence, in each such instance, was sufficient to reserve for review the special point of dissimilarity of import.

2. LIBEL AND SLANDER 🔑100(1) — ASKING PUNITIVE DAMAGES OR ASSERTING JUSTIFICATION MAKES ACTUAL MALICE ISSUE.

Where plaintiff seeks to recover punitive damages for libel, or where the defendant alleges that the publication was justified on the ground that it was privileged, actual malice or malice in fact becomes an issue.

3. LIBEL AND SLANDER 🔑104(3), 112(2)—REMOTENESS OF OTHER PUBLISHED ATTACKS UPON PLAINTIFF.

In an action for libel, remoteness in time of the publication of other alleged attacks upon plaintiff by defendant, introduced to show malice, goes to the weight of the evidence only and not to its admissibility.

4. LIBEL AND SLANDER 🔑104(3)—ADMISSIBILITY OF OTHER PUBLISHED ATTACKS OF DISSIMILAR IMPORT.

A contention that other published attacks upon plaintiff by defendant not of similar import are not admissible in an action for libel cannot be sustained, where actual malice is an issue, since any evidence having a logical tendency to prove that the publication in question was prompted by actual malice is material, competent, and relevant.

5. COURTS 🔑90(2) — CONCURRENCE OF APPELLATE JUDGES IN DECISIONS IN BANC.

In view of Const. art. 6, § 2, requiring the concurrence of four members of court to a decision in bank, where only four justices participated in the decision and only three concurred on a point, the language used by them is not a decision of this court.

6. PLEADING 🔑129(2)—PRESUMPTION FROM UNDENIED ALLEGATION OF GOOD NAME AND REPUTATION OF PLAINTIFF.

In an action for libel where an allegation in the complaint that "at all times prior to the 6th day of February, 1915," the plaintiff "did enjoy a good name and reputation as an attorney at law," was not denied, plaintiff's good name and reputation must be presumed.

7. Libel and slander 🔑107(1)—Estimating damages to plaintiff, an attorney.

An attorney, plaintiff in libel action, is not required to prove, and in the nature of things cannot prove, the extent of his damage by showing what legal fees he has been deprived of through the libelous circulation, or what clients he has lost because of it, and the jury may consider as a basis for award of actual damages the number of the plaintiff's employés, including lawyers and stenographers, their salaries, his gross income, the wide publicity given to the libel, his holding of political office and prominence in the community, his professional standing, good name, reputation, injured feelings, and mental suffering.

8. Appeal and error 🔑979(5) — Discretionary ruling on motion for new trial for excessive damages.

Where a motion for new trial, including the ground that an award of actual damages for libel was excessive, was denied, the amount of damages allowed stands approved by the trial court, and, the question of the verdict's excessiveness being a matter primarily addressed to the trial court's discretion, the verdict cannot be disturbed upon appeal unless the award is the result of passion or prejudice.

9. Libel and slander 🔑123(10) — Punitive damages in discretion of jury.

In the matter of punitive damages for libel, juries have a wider discretion than in the matter of compensatory damages.

10. Libel and slander 🔑121(1) — Damages not excessive.

In an action by an attorney against a newspaper corporation for libel, an award of $7,500 actual damages and $30,000 punitive damages, where actual malice was proved as an issue and the defendant's property was worth about $2,000,000, the average circulation of its paper about 60,000 daily and over 100,000 on Sunday, circulating in several states, held, that the amount of damages was not such as to warrant the disturbance of the award on the ground of jury's passion or prejudice.

11. Appeal and error 🔑207—Objections to conduct of counsel not made below.

Where plaintiff, in arguing as his own attorney in an action for libel, referred to defendant as "the rottenest corporation I know of in California to-day," and the trial court was not requested to instruct the jury that such conduct was improper and should be disregarded by them, the matter will not be considered on appeal.

12. Libel and slander 🔑104(1) — Evidence of interview before publication of article admissible.

In an action for libel brought by an attorney against a newspaper company and consisting of an article concerning a divorce suit in which plaintiff was attorney, testimony of parties present at the interview between defendant's reporter and other reporters, and the plaintiff in divorce, was relevant and material as bearing upon the good faith of the defendant in publishing the article complained of and upon the question of actual malice which was an issue.

13. Libel and slander 🔑105(1) — In action for libel concerning attorney in divorce suit, divorce complaint admissible.

In an action by an attorney for libel against a newspaper arising out of a publication of matters concerning a divorce suit, wherein it was intimated that the attorney's client had no cause for divorce, and that he was meddling, attempting to ruin defendant, and break up his home to fill the attorney's own pocket, the verified complaint in such divorce suit was admissible to show that the detailed statement of facts in the complaint drawn by the plaintiff's employé did set forth a cause of suit, and that plaintiff acted upon the representations of his client as shown by her sworn complaint.

14. Libel and slander 🔑107(1) — Evidence of plaintiff's training, family, and business career admissible.

In an action by an attorney against a newspaper for libel, it was proper for plaintiff to testify as to his early life and training, as well as to show that he has children, and that when he settled in the town of his residence his resources were limited, and that by his own industry he has built up a successful law business.

15. Trial 🔑108 — Permitting plaintiff an attorney to argue case.

In an action by an attorney against a newspaper for civil libel, it was not error for the court to allow the plaintiff, who was represented by an attorney at law, to appear as his own attorney and argue the case to the jury.

16. Trial 🔑260(6)—Refusal of instructions covered by others given.

In an action by an attorney against a newspaper for damages for civil libel in publishing an article concerning a divorce case in which plaintiff was attorney, an instruction, that an attorney is required to take care and ascertain facts regarding his client's case before advising as to legal rights, was properly refused where the matter was covered by other instructions.

17. Appeal and error 🔑260(1)—Refusal of an instruction covered by others not error.

It is not error to refuse instructions upon matters sufficiently covered by other instructions.

18. Appeal and error 🔑761—Failure to cite authority or argument under assignments.

Where objections to the action of trial court in refusing defendant's instructions are merely stated without citation of authority or any argument beyond such bare statement that "the court also erred in refusing to give defendant's requested instructions," such assignment need not be considered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Action by Joseph Scott against the Times-Mirror Company for civil libel. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 174 Pac. 312.

Geo. P. Adams, Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Hunsaker & Britt, Le Roy M. Edwards and Samuel Poorman, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Joseph Scott, of Los Angeles, John M. Ross, of Bisbee, Ariz., and J. B. Joujon Roche and A. G. Ritter, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

W. H. Anderson, of Los Angeles, amicus curiæ.

LAWLOR, J. This is an action for civil libel growing out of an article published in the Los Angeles Times, a daily paper owned and controlled by the defendant Times-Mirror Company, of and concerning the plaintiff, an attorney at law in the city of Los Angeles. The case was tried by jury, and a total verdict of $37,500 rendered, $7,500 as actual damages and $30,000 as punitive damages. Judgment for the full amount was made and entered. The defendant interposed a motion for a new trial, which was ordered denied. The defendant appeals from the judgment.

The plaintiff at the time of the alleged libel was, and for more than 20 years prior thereto had been, an attorney at law, practicing his profession principally in the city of Los Angeles. He alleged in his complaint:

> "That on the 6th day of February, 1915, the defendant, through evil motive, and malice, and ill will towards the plaintiff, willfully, wickedly, wrongfully, maliciously, and with intent and design to injure, disgrace, and defame this plaintiff, and to bring him into public discredit as a lawyer and as a man, and to cause the public to hold said plaintiff in contempt and ridicule, published in said newspaper of, and concerning the plaintiff, and of and concerning him in his said capacity and profession, the following false, libelous, malicious, and defamatory article, to wit:
> " 'The Hillman Divorce Suit.
> " 'Her Mind's Made Up; They Won't Make Up.
> " 'Having sued her husband for divorce, Mrs. Bessie Olive Hillman returned home, joined her husband in dinner and passed part of the evening with him.
> " 'Having been served with papers in his wife's suit, Clarence D. Hillman conducted himself about the house just as he always had, and as though no little thing like a divorce matter was pending.
> " 'At least, Mrs. Hillman described her domestic situation in about this way: Yesterday she said that while she had brought suit and her husband had been officially informed of the fact, neither of them so much as mentioned the matter and their appetites for dinner were normal.
> " 'In the office of her attorney yesterday Mrs. Hillman regaled a corps of newspaper men with a series of alleged misdeeds on the part of her husband for many years. Extreme cruelty last Monday, she said, decided her to get a divorce. It was the culmination of sixteen years of ill treatment, according to her.
> " 'Thursday afternoon she brought suit; Thursday evening she was very pleasant to her husband, and the same evening she is said to have told newspaper writers that she was not going to press the suit, but would go with her husband to court and dismiss the action. Her husband said the same thing.
> " 'Friday morning she changed her mind; by noon she was closeted with her attorneys and after luncheon she returned home fully determined to leave her husband forever. Reports from the Hillman home last evening were that Mr. and Mrs. Hillman enjoyed their well-appointed dinner together, as usual.
> " 'The Hillmans are reputed to be extremely wealthy. They live in an elegant home, and have all the other desirable things of the rich. They have eight children.
> " 'Sued Once Before.
> " 'In 1904 Mrs. Hillman brought suit for divorce, but later dismissed the action. She said yesterday she wished that she had pressed the matter. She says that her husband has a habit of remaining silent at home, only to discuss his domestic affairs through the press. When she sued for divorce before she says that he gave out interviews to the press, using there arguments which he expected to reach and convince her.
> " ' "This time I am going through with it," she said yesterday, "I am tired of his cruelty. All he thinks about is money. He never takes me out anywhere except to church, and that is only for show. After he found out I had brought suit for divorce he was awfully nice to me—but that doesn't make any difference, this time."
> " 'Joe Scott, who is attorney of record in the case, says he knew nothing about the matter until the suit was filed.
> " 'Son Blames Lawyer.
> " 'Clarence Hillman, the 14-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Hillman, is endeavoring to patch up matters between his parents, and stated last night at their Pasadena home that if his mother's attorney would stop meddling he and his father "could fix things up." "Mother has absolutely no cause for acting as she has, and we are all heart-broken because of it," the young son said. "I am simply sick and can't think of anything since this trouble came up. I can't study and didn't go to school to-day. We thought everything was all right last night and we all had supper together and mother and father went to mass together this morning, happy as could be, but when he took the smaller children to school, Mr. Scott, her attorney, called her up on the telephone and she went to Los Angeles to see him, and as a consequence came back all wrought up again. Mother can't be right or she'd never do this thing; she is peculiar; she is Irish and when she gets mad she doesn't care for her children or anybody. Her lawyers have been telling her if she'd secure a divorce that she'd get $10,000.00 cash and about $3,000.00 a month spending money. Father gives her everything in the world she could possibly want now. He lets her have from $400.00 to $600.00 every month to spend. Father and every one of us children are all broken up, but things will adjust themselves in spite of Mr. Scott."

"'Won't Be, Says Husband.

"'Mr. Hillman said last night that the suit had come to him like a thunderbolt from a clear sky. He said he had no inkling of any trouble, and stated the whole thing is a conspiracy to ruin him. He said that since the suit was filed his wife's attorneys had sent men to hang around his place, to find out, he supposes, how much he is worth.

"'"If they would let my wife alone we will fix this thing up," he said. "She is not right; she springs this thing on me every once in a while, but she has always before fallen into the hands of attorneys who would show her the error of her ways. This time it is different, and her attorney is trying to ruin me and break up our home to fill his own pocket. But he will not do it; we are going to live and die in this home which we all love so well. Even if my wife should get the $10,000.00 and $3,000.00 a month she would only get it for a short while, for it would break me, as I am heavily in debt, owing several hundred thousand dollars. I have been very busy the last few days, but not one unkind word have I spoken to my wife. I gave her about $500.00 every month and she always keeps four servants and sometimes has six, while I have only one to help me on the outside with this twelve-acre estate."

"'The Hillmans won first prize with their electric coupé in the recent tournament of roses parade. The machine was smothered in roses and the youngest child, representing Cupid, rode in a cleverly-arranged seat placed in the front of the coupé. Mr. and Mrs. Hillman and the other children rode in the machine.'" (Italics ours.)

It is further alleged in the complaint that the defendant "meant to say, and was understood to mean" by the portions of the publication which we have italicized:

"That said plaintiff had persuaded and induced said Bessie Olive Hillman to begin said divorce action, and was urging her to prosecute said action, and to refuse to become reconciled with her husband, for the purpose of breaking up the home of said Bessie Olive Hillman and said Clarence D. Hillman, and of ruining said Clarence D. Hillman, and thereby obtaining the property of said Bessie Olive Hillman and her said husband, or compelling the said Clarence D. Hillman to pay to the plaintiff a large sum of money."

After further alleging that the publication was false and defamatory and that "by means thereof the plaintiff has been, and is, greatly injured and prejudiced in his reputation as aforesaid, and has also lost and been deprived of gains and profits which would otherwise have arisen and accrued to him in his said business and profession," and that the publication "was made by the defendant through ill will and malice towards this plaintiff, and with the intent, design, and purpose on the part of said defendant to injure this plaintiff in his professional standing and reputation, and to discredit and defame this plaintiff, and to bring this plaintiff into public discredit as an attorney at law, and bring him into public contempt and ridicule," the complaint prayed for $60,000 damages—$10,000 as actual damages and $50,000 as exemplary or punitive damages.

The defendant's answer, after specifically denying all of the allegations of the complaint, alleged as a separate defense that the article "was privileged, in that the publication of the same was without malice and for the public benefit." And alleged further as a separate defense that the publication was made "without any malice whatever on the part of defendant against plaintiff, and with the belief on the part of defendant that the matter in said article set forth as having been stated to said reporter by the said Bessie Olive Hillman, her husband and her son was true."

The issue of actual malice thus having been raised by the pleadings, the plaintiff introduced ten other publications made by the defendant touching the plaintiff, which were admitted in evidence by the court over defendant's objection. The publications so offerred and accepted were marked as plaintiff's Exhibits 2 to 10, inclusive.

Exhibit 2 was an article concerning the same divorce case and was published in the Times on the day preceding the publication of the article complained of. Concerning the plaintiff, the following appears:

"Unfortunately, it happened that Mrs. Hillman became wrought up while she had access to her lawyer, and he took advantage of her. Had she not been spurred to take some definite action she would not have done such an unnatural thing as to really bring a divorce action.

"There has been no particular reconciliation, for there was need of none. We are just as close as we have ever been, and we shall remain that way, and both Mrs. Hillman and I can assure you that there will never be a divorce in our family, no matter what prying lawyers may do. * * * Mrs. Hillman's suit was filed by Joe Scott."

Exhibit 3 being the Times News Bulletin of February 5, 1915, refers to the same matter in the following language:

"Wealthy Seattle-Pasadena man's wife sues for divorce in Los Angeles; he says lawyer took advantage of her."

Exhibit 4 is an account of the proceedings in the superior court whereby the Hillman divorce case was dismissed and contains the following comments concerning the plaintiff:

"Over Officious.

"Judge Raps Joe Scott; Ends Hillman Divorce.

"A change of mind on the part of Mrs. Bessie Olive Hillman, who brought a divorce suit recently against Charles D. Hillman, a Pasadena millionaire, was sustained yesterday by Judge Monroe and she was freed from her attorney, Joe Scott, who refused to recognize her wishes in the matter. Attorney Scott was left out in the cold in the case and told to collect his fee and other expenses in the case as best he could. * * *

"Mr. and Mrs. Hillman then returned to Pasadena in their limousine. Members of the family said yesterday that now that the attorney in the case has been eliminated, they expect no further trouble between the father and mother."

Exhibit 5 is an attack upon the plaintiff's professional conduct in accepting employment as attorney for the McNamaras, charged with blowing up the Times building. The article appeared in the Times on August 18, 1912, and, after stating how much money was received from union labor for the defense of the McNamaras, continues:

"How much of it did Job Harriman get? How much of it did Joseph Scott get? You union labor men who pay the piper ought to be told what tunes the piper plays. * * *

"When to the folly of the striker is added dishonest repudiation of his solemn agreement, and the brutality of hounding unfortunate men and women out of house and home, or destroying their lives by dynamite, because they stand up for their liberty to work for their livelihood, the striker is more than a fool—he is a criminal, no matter what Darrow, Harriman, Scott & Co. may say to the contrary. In this connection the disgrace to Los Angeles is that Joseph Scott, of this dynamite-murderer defense trio, is still a member of the board of education."

Exhibit 6, which appeared in the editorial column, is an attack on the plaintiff as a member of the board of education, in opposition to his candidacy for re-election to the board. It appeared in the Times of April 22, 1913, and reads as follows:

"The School Board.

"Undoubtedly one of the most important issues to be tried out in the primary election of May 6 is the membership of the board of education. The municipal conference indorsed the present board—the whole of it for re-election. The Times cannot quite follow it; it cannot assent to the return of Joe Scott, defender of the McNamaras, or of Reynold Blight, who is more or less of an agitating anarchist, if he is anything. These men are not safe guides for youth, not suitable persons to be in charge of our public instruction. The ministerial associations are supporting a ticket of their own which includes one straight-out Socialist nominee, Mr. Wheat. Such a condition of things is beyond our comprehension. Socialism would destroy Christianity; its tenets are as subversive of the Christian foundations as are those of atheism. When a process of mixing crude oil and aqueduct water has been devised and made clear to the popular mind, somebody may be able to satisfactorily explain how leaders of the Christian church can favor the election of a Harriman ticket Socialist to the school board. Still we must admit that a Socialist might be found who would be preferable to Darrow's companion, Joe Scott, or to R. Blight, who is a sort of blighted Clarence Darrow himself. We are glad that the church people are getting their eyes opened as to his true character. It is needless to say that the ministerial associations which are sincerely working in behalf of right influences in the schools, are opposed to Scott and Blight and have left them off their list."

Exhibit 7 appeared in the Times on July 23, 1914, and contained the following statements concerning the plaintiff in his position as a member of the board of education:

"The Exposure and Defeat of Joe Scott.

"The master-stroke of the majority members of the board of education on Tuesday evening will meet the unqualified approval of every friend of free education.

"In putting a quietus to the unseemly, unjustifiable and destructive squabble, which had been injected into school affairs through the malevolence of Joe Scott, by declaring that, notwithstanding the trumpeted publicity given so-called 'charges' against superintendent of schools Francis, they find no charges have been made and properly term them mere 'objections.' * * * To logically complete the miserable incident, but one more step is demanded—the resignation of Scott from the board he has disgraced.

"What a sorry spectacle this self-appointed censor has made of himself in his efforts to control the education of 70,000 children, under a system lauded by educators as the best in the country, but with which he is entirely out of harmony. For years he has treated with disrespect his colleagues on the board by seeking to do things, behind their backs, the while professing solicitude for the public schools. He has made life miserable for them behind closed doors and upbraided them in open session, all of which they have borne with a fair degree of humility in order to avoid clashes with the 'temperamentally unfit' member.

"Scott has been the steadfast objector to everything that failed to meet his approval, and has sought by technical delays and in other ways to circumvent the will of the majority; he has been the consistent fosterer of strife, but has conducted his activities so insidiously that the public has been slow to learn the truth; by his attitude toward the superintendent, whose functions he sought to usurp in many ways, he has encouraged insubordination and sneaking tactics, and is believed to have coached an under-official in an effort to discredit the superintendent; by his openly declared opposition to the intermediate schools, he has been the actual force behind the agitation of a coterie to destroy their efficiency.

"What right has a man of this sort to be a member of the Board of Education? Why did he wish to retain his place on the teachers and schools committee? His offer at Tuesday night's meeting, to gamble for the place, sets a sorry example to school children; and its prompt repudiation by President Frank was a deserved rebuke."

Exhibit 8 is an article published in the Times on February 14, 1915, after the publication of the alleged libel, and was in reference to a libel suit or suits brought by the plaintiff against the defendant. It contains the following remarks concerning plaintiff:

> "Joe Scott's Fool Raids.
> "Uneasy, not to say luckless, Joe Scott (once a McNamara attorney of the retiring sort), recently gave mental birth to the curious conceit that the Times was indebted to him in the sum of $60,000.00 for publishing an alleged libel upon himself. * * * Joe Scott would do well to cease pursuing a delusive ignis fatuus; he might better try to get relief from his jejune, jagged and jeopardized plight by trying, even hopelessly, to earn the requisite ducats by practicing that profession in which he has never shown with the resplendent glory of the noonday sun. * * * Joe Scott—huh."

Exhibit 9 is a cartoon published in the Times on March 1, 1915, and entitled "Nothing but Holes." It presents a large hoop covered with paper which is full of holes and across which is written "Joe Scott's Complaint in the L. A. Investment Co. Case." A man bearing in his hand a roll of paper on which appears "Court's Decision" is seen standing on the backs of two horses which are in the act of jumping through the center of the hoop.

On December 5, 1915, plaintiff's Exhibit 10 was published in the editorial columns of the Times. It reads, in part, as follows:

> "What a Monster!
> "The Times is not, as was represented by Joe Scott and his Arizona attorney, Ross, in their arguments before the jury in both trials of Scott's libel suit against the Times-Mirror Company, a gigantic newspaper Minotaur, hiding in the Cretan labyrinth or fort-like structure at the corner of First and Broadway—a monster pulling into its relentless maw not only youths and maidens, but also full-grown alleged lawyers who exploit divorce suits, and progressive politicians and other vermin, and who
> 'Be they alive or be they dead,
> Grinds their bones to makes its bread.'
> "When examined in the true light of the actual facts of its long and open journalistic career, how different is the attitude, standing and character of the Los Angeles Times from the untrue and unsupported representations made by Joe Scott and his man Ross in two conspicuous Superior Court cases, when these special pleaders were suffered to do their worst in their demagogic efforts to conceal the truth and poison the minds of the juries against the Times and against its actual motives, course, career and journalistic record!
> "It was a reckless and a desperate effort to make the jury believe something besides the truth and to bring in a verdict not in harmony with the facts and the merits of the case at issue—an effort that brought the plaintiff to the very ragged edge of failure."

All of these publications were admitted for the limited purpose of proving malice in fact. The offer of plaintiff was so limited, and the court, by its instructions specifically confined the jury to a consideration of the articles in so far as they might be deemed evidence of malice in fact, and repeatedly advised the jury that they were "not to consider the truth or falsity of them, as the truth or falsity of said articles is not in issue in this case"; and that no award of actual damages could be based in whole or in part upon any of the publications admitted in evidence excepting the one sued upon.

The transcript on appeal shows that a large number of exceptions were reserved at the trial, but the only points urged in appellant's briefs are as follows:

> "I. The court erred in admitting libelous articles not of similar import and remote in time.
> "II. The verdict is so grossly excessive that it shocks the conscience because: (a) The award of $7,500.00 actual damages is not supported by the evidence; (b) the evidence does not show malice on the part of the corporation in making the publication; or, if malice be shown, it is totally disproportionate to the award.
> "III. The plaintiff, acting as his own counsel, was guilty of misconduct constituting prejudicial error.
> "IV. Other errors in the admission of evidence.
> "V. The court erred in allowing plaintiff, who was represented by an attorney at law, to appear as his own attorney; and in permitting him to argue the case to the jury.
> "VI. The court erred in refusing to give instructions 2 and 3 requested by the defendant."

[1] Appellant does not criticise any of the instructions given by the court. But it is contended that the admission in evidence of plaintiff's Exhibits 5–10, inclusive, the relevant portions of which we have set out above, constituted reversible error because the articles are "not of similar import" to, and are too "remote in time" from, the publication set out in the complaint. To which respondent replies that—

> "The objection here urged was not made in the trial court, and for that reason is not entitled to consideration in this court."

At the trial the defendant objected to the admission in evidence of all of the other publications, but the defendant does not claim that Exhibits 2, 3, and 4 were improperly admitted; the only assignment of error in that behalf being as to the admission in evidence of Exhibits 5–10, inclusive. We will therefore confine our discussion in this regard to a consideration of the sufficiency of the objections as made to reserve the specific objection that the articles admitted in evidence were "not of a similar import" to, and were too "remote in time" from, the one complained of.

The record shows that Exhibit 5 was objected to on the ground that it was "incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial." Exhibit 6 was similarly objected to and upon the additional ground that it was a privileged communication—a criticism of the plaintiff as a public official. Identically the same objection was made to Exhibit 7 as to Exhibit 6. To Exhibit 8 it was objected that—

> "It was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and of a date subsequent to the date of the article upon which this action was brought."

Exhibit 9 was objected to on the ground that it was "incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial; being a publication subsequent to the publication of the article on which this action was brought, and having no reference to it in any way whatsoever, and not responsive to any of the issues of the case." To the introduction of Exhibit 10 objection was made that it was "incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and that it was a publication made approximately ten months after the publication upon which the action was brought."

While the point as to remoteness of time was included in some of the objections, it is apparent from the foregoing that the specific objection as to dissimilarity of subject-matter now urged was not in terms made at the trial. We think, however, that the general objection of incompetency, irrelevancy, and immateriality which was made in each instance was sufficient to reserve for review the specific point of "dissimilarity of import." It has been held that the general objection, if properly made, is sufficient in all cases in which the specific grounds of objection, if stated, could not be obviated. In Nightingale v. Scannell, 18 Cal. 315, it was said, referring to Merritt v. Seaman, 6 N. Y. 168:

> "A general objection had been taken to the introduction of evidence, and it was held that, as the difficulty could not be obviated, such an objection was all that was necessary. The same point precisely is presented in this case, and we think there is nothing in reason or propriety calling for a different determination. The evidence, say the defendants, was not admissible for any purpose; and, if that be correct, the difficulty could not have been obviated, and the objection was sufficient."

See, also, Brumley v. Flint, 87 Cal. 471, 25 Pac. 683; Wise v. Wakefield, 118 Cal. 107, 50 Pac. 310.

[2] I. Appellant urges that the court erred in admitting libelous articles not similar in import to the one sued upon for the reason that—

> "Such evidence, if admitted, would lead to the investigation of collateral issues to the confusion of the jury, would take the defendant by unfair surprise, and would unjustly enhance the damages by leading to double or multiple damages, according to the number of libels received in evidence."

[3] It is well established that in actions for civil libel where the plaintiff seeks to recover punitive or exemplary damages, or where the defendant alleges that the publication was justified on the ground that it was privileged, actual malice or malice in fact becomes an issue. As we have pointed out, the issue of actual malice was raised in this case both by the demand of the plaintiff for punitive damages and by the allegation of the defendant that the publication was privileged. "The record thus presents the question," to quote from appellant's brief, "whether or no express malice on the part of the defendant in publishing an article on February 6, 1915, reporting that plaintiff had been charged with improper conduct in a divorce case, can be shown by introducing other articles, remote in time, that charge insincerity and hypocrisy in the acceptance of a retainer to defend a group of labor union dynamiters, malevolence and hypocrisy in the course pursued by him as a member of the board of education; and pettifogging arguments made to the jury in other cases against this defendant, and also charge incompetence in the 'L. A. Investment Case.' Or, in other words, in order to show malice in fact, are libels, other than the one complained of and not of similar import and published at remote times, competent, material or relevant?" Appellant continues:

> "The question is not difficult of answer, because it is settled by authority, both in this jurisdiction and in practically all other jurisdictions, that while libels of similar import are admissible, because they tend to show that the publication in suit was deliberately made, yet libels not of similar import are not admissible, and remoteness of time of publication only adds to the vice of such evidence."

It is proper at this time to point out that "remoteness in time of publication" goes to the weight of the evidence only and not to its admissibility. Wigmore on Evidence, par. 404; Evening Journ. Ass'n v. McDermott, 44 N. J. Law, 430, 43 Am. Rep. 392; Gribble v. Pioneer Press Co., 34 Minn. 342, 25 N. W. 710; Julian v. Kansas City Star Co., 209 Mo. 35, 107 S. W. 496. This, apparently, has been accepted by counsel for appellant as the law on this point, for it is said in their reply brief: "This point, being unimportant will not be further noticed."

[4, 5] In support of the contention that "libels not of similar import are not admissible," appellant has cited the following cases from this jurisdiction: Chamberlin v. Vance, 51 Cal. 75; Stern v. Loewenthal, 77 Cal. 340, 19 Pac. 579; Harris v. Zanone, 93 Cal. 59, 28 Pac. 845; Westerfield v. Scripps, 119 Cal. 607, 51 Pac. 958; Hearne v. De Young, 119 Cal. 670, 52 Pac. 150, 449. Of these appellant relies chiefly on Stern v. Loewenthal. The action there was for slander. The slander complained of consisted of two statements, "He is a thief," and, "He is doing business on my money." The trial court had admitted in evidence and refused to strike out another statement made by defendant "that he would break Mr. Stern (plaintiff) up in business." On this point it was said:

> "Upon that question the opinions of courts have been discordant. Against the admissibility of such evidence, the opinion of Bronson, J., in Root v. Lowndes, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 518, 41 Am. Dec. 762, is characteristically clear and vigorous. Townshend, after referring to some conflicting opinions upon this point, says: 'But the better opinion appears to be that evidence of a charge of a different nature, and at a different time from that alleged in the declaration, is inadmissible to prove malice, or for any purpose. This is in effect only another form of the rule that actionable words not counted upon cannot be given in evidence unless suit upon them is barred by the statute of limitations, and their admission where the statute has run is opposed to principle, as it, in effect, restores a cause of action which has been taken away by the law.' Townshend on Libel and Slander, § 392. In that view of the question we concur, and think the court erred in denying the motion of the defendant to strike out."

The Loewenthal Case was heard in bank. However, only four justices participated in the decision, and only three of these concurred on this point. Chief Justice Searls concurred on one point only, and expressly reserved opinion upon the other—the question of alleged error in the admission of other slanderous statements. Since the concurrence of four members of the court is necessary to a decision in bank (Const. art. 6, § 2; Del Mar Water, etc., Co. v. Eshleman, 167 Cal. 666, 140 Pac. 591, 948; Pacific Wharf, etc., Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 179 Pac. 398), it is plain that the language quoted above is not a decision of this court upon the point there considered. Moreover, the case of Harris v. Zanone, supra, cited by appellant, contains language directly opposed to that relied on in the Loewenthal Case. In that case the slander charged was that the defendant had said that the plaintiff was "a damned thief." One of the questions there presented was as to the admissibility, for the purpose of showing malice in fact, of certain threats made by defendant that he would ruin plaintiff's reputation. As affording evidence of malice in fact, we can see no distinction between threats to break plaintiff up in business, the admission of which was said to be error in the Loewenthal Case, and threats to ruin plaintiff's reputation, which were held admissible in the Harris Case. In deciding the point in the Harris Case, the court said:

> "Evidence was offered in behalf of the plaintiff that the defendant had repeated the defamatory words to others upon different occasions, and there was other evidence before the jury tending to establish the falsity of the charge, and also that the defendant had expressed a purpose to injure her reputation. If the jury believed this evidence, they were authorized to find therefrom that the defendant was actuated by express malice in the utterance of the words of Loheide, and therefore was not entitled to the immunity of a privileged communication." (Italics ours.)

Chamberlin v. Vance, supra, which was a case where actual malice was sought to be proved, holds that slanderous words of similar import spoken of the defendant after the commencement of the action are admissible in evidence on the question of malice. The question here involved—the admissibility of words of "dissimilar import"—was not before the court in that case and was not there discussed. Likewise Westerfield v. Scripps, supra, goes no further than to declare that—

> "If language relates to the same subject-matter and is of a character from which a malicious purpose may be inferred, it is admissible."

Nor was the point here presented discussed in Hearne v. De Young, supra. It was there held that the publication objected to was not of a different nature from the one sued upon, and that therefore it was admissible.

In view of the state of our own decisions, it will serve no useful purpose to set out or discuss the numerous authorities from other jurisdictions cited by appellant on this point. Some of them may be distinguished because the statutes under which the decisions were made are different from ours, and in others no distinction is drawn between implied malice and malice in fact. And in several of the authorities the proof of other publications is received or rejected according to whether they have been barred by the statute of limitations, which is touched upon in the Loewenthal Case, the reasoning being that if not so barred the evidence should be rejected because it would tend to aggravate the damages for the particular libel and at the same time permit in the future a possible recovery for the contributing libel. If this reasoning be sound, it would seem to apply with equal force to all libels, whether similar or dissimilar in import. As we have indicated, the appellant has attempted to differentiate them, and argues that articles of similar import are admissible, but that those of dissimilar import are not. But whatever those authorities may decide, or their underlying reasoning may be, they are clearly not binding as authorities in this jurisdiction.

The rule governing the admission of evidence to prove malice in fact has been clearly laid down by this court, speaking through Mr. Justice Henshaw, in the decision of Davis v. Hearst, 160 Cal. 143, 116 Pac. 530:

"As to the nature of the evidence, as has been said, it may be direct (or express, as the Code names it), going to declarations, acts, and conduct of the defendant, showing personal ill will toward the plaintiff, but it will more usually be indirect or inferred (the implied malice in fact of the Code definition), and to this end of proving the malice inferentially all legitimate evidence is admissible bearing upon the general course of conduct of the defendant toward the plaintiff, the internal evidence furnished by the character of the libel, and any other specific facts and circumstances not in direct proof of the malice, but from which the existence may be logically inferred, herein including the circumstance, if it be found to exist, of wanton recklessness and heedlessness of plaintiff's rights." (Italics ours.)

One of the questions presented by the pleadings is whether the publication of the article of February 6, 1915, was inspired by actual malice. This is essentially and purely a question of fact. Therefore, any evidence which would logically tend to solve the question, and which is not otherwise objectionable, is admissible. The test to be applied to evidence offered for this purpose is: Does it tend to prove the state of mind of the party responsible for the publication? If the evidence has such logical import, and is not otherwise incompetent, it must be received, and it is for the triers of the fact to determine the weight to be given to such evidence. The fact that it may also tend to establish the publication of other distinct libels, published either before or after the one constituting the cause of action, is to be regarded as merely incidental and as not furnishing ground for the exclusion of the evidence. Nor is it material that other actions may thus be shown to exist against the party. Hence, where punitive or exemplary damages are sought in an action for civil libel any evidence (which in no other respect is objectionable), having a logical tendency to prove that the publication was prompted by actual malice, is material, competent, and relevant. This is the plain meaning of Davis v. Hearst, supra, and if there was any question about the state of our law on the subject prior to that decision there is none now. It is inconceivable that since the law provides for recovery upon publications made with actual malice the existence of the fact may not be established by the very best evidence—namely, evidence of other libels tending to show a malicious and vindictive attitude of mind toward the injured party. To hold otherwise would be to recognize a right in the party defamed but deny to him a full opportunity to establish and enforce it.

The true rule has been well stated by Odgers and Newell in their respective works on Libel and Slander:

"1. Extrinsic Evidence of Malice.

"Malice may be proved by extrinsic evidence showing that the defendant bore a long-standing grudge against the plaintiff, that there were former disputes between them, that defendant had formerly been in the plaintiff's employ, and was dismissed for misconduct. Any previous quarrel, rivalry or ill feeling between plaintiff and defendant—in short, almost everything defendant has ever said or done with reference to the plaintiff—may be urged as evidence of malice. The plaintiff has to show what was in the defendant's mind at the time of the publication, and of that no doubt the defendant's acts and words on that occasion are the best evidence. But if plaintiff can prove that at any other time, before or after, defendant had any ill feeling against him, that is some evidence that the ill feeling existed also at the date of publication; therefore, all defendant's acts and deeds that point to the existence of such ill feeling at any date are evidence admissible for what they are worth. * * *

"In fact, whenever the state of a person's mind on a particular occasion is in issue, everything that can throw any light on the state of his mind then is admissible, although it happened on some other occasion. * * *

"* * * The more the evidence approaches proof of a systematic practice of libeling or slandering the plaintiff the more convincing it will be." Odgers on Libel and Slander (5th Ed.) pp. 348, 349.

"Any other words written or spoken by the defendant of the plaintiff, either before or after those sued on, or even after the commencement of the action, are admissible to show the animus of the defendant; and for this purpose it makes no difference whether the words tendered in evidence be themselves actionable or not, or whether they be addressed to the same party as the words sued on or to some one else. Such other words need not be connected with or refer to the defamatory matter sued on, provided they in any way tend to show malice in defendant's mind at the time of publication. And not only are such other words admissible in evidence, but also circumstances attending the publication, the mode and extent of their repetition. The more the evidence approaches proof of a systematic practice of libeling or slandering the plaintiff, the more convincing it will be." Newell on Slander and Libel (3d Ed.) p. 405.

The rule thus expressed is supported by the following cases: Julian v. Kansas City Star Co., 209 Mo. 35, 107 S. W. 496; Register Newspaper Co. v. Worthen, 111 S. W. 693, 33 Ky. Law Rep. 840; Meriwether v. Publishers, 211 Mo. 199, 109 S. W. 750, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 953; Evening Journal Association v. McDermott, 44 N. J. Law, 430, 43 Am. Rep. 392; Williams Printing Co. v. Saunders, 113 Va. 156, 73 S. E. 472, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 693; Stearns v. Cox, 17 Ohio, 590; Van Derveer v. Sutphin, 5 Ohio St. 294; Botsford v. Chase, 108 Mich. 432, 66 N. W. 325; Seip v. Deshler, 170 Pa. 334, 32 Atl. 1032; Knapp v. Fuller, 55 Vt. 311, 45 Am. Rep. 618; Severance v. Hilton, 32 N. H. 289; Williams v. Hicks Printing Co., 159 Wis. 90, 150 N. W. 183; Downs v. Cassidy, 47 Mont. 471, 133 Pac. 106, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1155; Smith v. Brown, 97 S. C. 239, 81 S. E. 633; Vial v. Larson, 132 Iowa, 208, 109 N. W. 1007; Hintz v. Graupner, 138 Ill. 158, 27 N. E. 935; Grace v. McArthur, 76 Wis. 641, 45 N. W. 518; Casey

v. Hulgan, 118 Ind. 590, 21 N. E. 322; Beshiers v. Allen, 46 Okl. 331, 148 Pac. 141, L. R. A. 1915E, 413; Brittain v. Allen, 13 N. C. 120.

[6, 7] II. Appellant contends that the judgment should be reversed because the "verdict is so grossly excessive that it shocks the conscience because: (a) the award of $7,500 actual damages is not supported by the evidence; (b) the evidence does not show malice on the part of the corporation in making the publication; or, if malice be shown, it is totally disproportionate to the award." Appellant's position is that there is no evidence whatever presented here justifying the recovery of any damages, either compensatory or punitive, and because respondent did not prove specific pecuniary loss caused by the libel he is not entitled to any compensation whatever. With this position we cannot agree.

The evidence introduced for the purpose of proving damages and upon which the jury made the award tended to show that the publication caused the plaintiff mental anguish. On this point he testified:

"I was very indignant. I felt that a great injustice had been done to me, to my office, and to my reputation. I felt it was degrading before my fellow members of the bar and before the community. It hurts yet. I believe it and I know it to be wholly untrue. I would say, so far as the statements of my office were concerned, it reflected on my office." That the plaintiff was born in England, where he was educated and matriculated in the University of London. That he came to this country while still a young man, and for a time was professor of rhetoric and English literature in a college in Western New York. That he was admitted to practice his profession in this state, and in 1894 opened an office in Los Angeles, where he has been engaged in practice ever since. That he had a general practice, including considerable probate business, trial and jury work, with an occasional criminal case, and only a limited corporation practice. That at the time of the publication of the libel complained of he employed six lawyers and a number of stenographers in his office, his office expenses, including salaries, amounting to about $1,500 a month, and his gross income about $40,000 a year. That his practice had been built up from a modest beginning, it appearing that when he started he lived and had his office in the same room. That plaintiff's practice extended to the various counties of the state, and to a large extent in Arizona. That he is admitted to practice in the United States Supreme Court and other federal courts. That plaintiff was married in 1898, and at the time of the trial his family consisted of his wife and seven children. That he commanded the confidence of the people of Los Angeles, having been a member of the board of education in that city continuously from 1904 to 1915, and was five times elected president of the board. That in addition he was for ten years director and in 1910 president of the Los Angeles chamber of commerce; director of the Equitable Savings Bank and of the Los Angeles Investment Company of the same city. That he is a member of several clubs and of the county, state, and American bar associations. That the value of the defendant's property is about $2,000,000. That the average daily circulation of the Los Angeles Times was about 60,000 and the Sunday edition about 102,000, the paper circulating throughout California and Arizona and elsewhere.

It is alleged in the complaint that—

"At all times prior to the 6th day of February, 1915, [the plaintiff] did enjoy a good name and reputation as an attorney at law."

This allegation not having been denied, the plaintiff's good name and reputation must be presumed.

The respondent is not required to prove, and in the nature of things cannot prove, the extent to which he has been damaged by this libel, or of what legal fees he has been deprived through its circulation, or what clients he has lost because of it. It is well settled that in such cases as this a jury may consider as a basis for its award of actual damages all of such matters as those set out above, including the wide publicity given to the libel, plaintiff's prominence in the community where he lives, his professional standing, his good name and reputation, his injured feelings, and his mental sufferings. Cahill v. Murphy, 94 Cal. 29, 30 Pac. 195, 28 Am. St. Rep. 88; Turner v. Hearst, 115 Cal. 395, 47 Pac. 129; Davis v. Hearst, 160 Cal. 143, 185, 116 Pac. 530.

[8] Appellant's motion for a new trial was made on the ground, among others, that the award of actual damages was excessive. The motion was denied. The amount of such damages, therefore, stands approved by the trial court, and, under the well-established rule, the question of the excessiveness of the verdict being primarily addressed to the discretion of the trial court, we cannot disturb it unless it appears that such award is the result of passion or prejudice. In Swain v. Fourteenth St. R. R. Co., 93 Cal. 179, 28 Pac. 829, it was said:

"The amount of the verdict in this case is large, but we cannot say that it is suggestive of either passion or prejudice on the part of the jury. In fixing damages in this class of cases, which is left to the discretion of the jury, and when the verdict has been approved by the trial court, this court is not authorized to grant a new trial upon the ground of excessive damages, except in a case where it is plain that the verdict was not the result of the fair and honest judgment of the jury."

See, also, Gomez v. Scanlan, 155 Cal. 528, 102 Pac. 12; Dunn v. Hearst, 139 Cal. 239, 73 Pac. 138; Aldrich v. Palmer, 24 Cal. 516; Meyer v. Great Western Ins. Co., 104 Cal. 381, 38 Pac. 82; Hickey v. Coschina, 133 Cal. 81, 65 Pac. 313. In the latter case it was said:

> "The court below had the power to, and no doubt did, carefully weigh and consider the evidence for the purpose of determining whether or not the verdict was the correct conclusion from all the testimony in the case. It had the power to set aside the verdict, even though the evidence was conflicting, if convinced that it was unjust, or not in accord with the weight of the evidence. Here we have no such power. The presumptions are all in favor of the correctness of the verdict. To this presumption is added the sanction of the court below in denying the motion for a new trial."

[9] In Wilson v. Fitch, 41 Cal. 386, where there was no proof of actual malice, and, as was held by the court, not a case for punitive damages, it was said in answer to the claim that the damages awarded were excessive:

> "The court will not interfere in such cases unless the amount awarded is so grossly excessive as to shock the moral sense, and raise a reasonable presumption that the jury was under the influence of passion or prejudice. In this case, whilst the sum awarded appears to be much larger than the facts demanded, the amount cannot be said to be so grossly excessive as to be reasonably imputed only to passion or prejudice in the jury. In such cases there is no accurate standard by which to compute the injury, and the jury must, necessarily, be left to the exercise of a wide discretion; to be restricted by the court only when the sum awarded is so large that the verdict shocks the moral sense, and raise a presumption that it must have proceeded from passion or prejudice."

In the matter of punitive damages it is clear from the authorities that juries have a wider discretion in this regard than they have in the matter of compensatory damages. Voltz v. Blackmar, 64 N. Y. 440; Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 363, 14 L. Ed. 181; Bennett v. Hyde, 6 Conn. 24; Hayner v. Cowden, 27 Ohio St. 292, 22 Am. Rep. 303; McConnell v. Hampton, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 234.

[10] In Luther v. Shaw, 157 Wis. 234, 147 N. W. 18, the court in affirming the award of punitive damages said:

> "Where the jury are properly given such broad discretion with reference to exemplary damages, as indicated by the code of instructions whereby they were told they might assess against the defendant a sum which they deemed just and proper, and best calculated to be an example to him and to others, such jury are entitled to accept these instructions in good faith as meaning just what they say. How, then, can it be said that their verdict is perverse? They disregarded no evidence and violated no instructions in fixing these exemplary damages. Their estimate of what would be sufficient as a punishment and a deterrent and an example was very high as compared with the actual damages assessed and high from any point of view, but it would hardly be candid to invite them, in the language of this instruction, to fix such sum which expressed their judgment in such matter and then charge them with bias or perversity because the measure of their abhorrence of defendant's conduct and their judgment of what would be a sufficient punishment and deterrent was represented by a larger sum of money than that which some other man or men would have allowed."

We cannot say upon the record before us that the damages awarded by the jury, either actual or punitive, have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice, and hence the award cannot be disturbed.

[11] III. Appellant has called attention to the alleged misconduct of the plaintiff before the jury. In some of the instances referred to objection was made, but in others no objection was interposed, and this group includes the principal claim of misconduct wherein the plaintiff in his argument to the jury, referring to the defendant, said: "The rottenest corporation I know of in California to-day is this same corporation." In no case was the court requested to instruct the jury that the conduct objected to was improper and that it was to be disregarded by them. Where the action of the trial court is not thus invoked, the alleged misconduct will not be considered on appeal, if an admonition to the jury would remove the effect thereof. People v. Shears, 133 Cal. 154, 65 Pac. 295; People v. Babcock, 160 Cal. 537, 117 Pac. 549; Grossetti v. Sweasey, 176 Cal. 793, 169 Pac. 687. From an examination of the record on this point we are of the opinion that, even if the plaintiff had been guilty of misconduct, an admonition from the court would have removed the effect thereof in every instance.

[12] Under the heading, "Other Errors in the Admission of Evidence," appellant mentions, first, the testimony of Mr. Ritter and of Mr. Roach regarding the interview between Mrs. Hillman and several reporters, including a representative of the Los Angeles Times, which took place in the office of the respondent the day before the publication of the libel complained of in this action. A motion was made at the trial to strike out certain portions of this testimony on the ground that it was immaterial and irrelevant, which motion was denied by the court. Appellant assigns this ruling as error. There is no merit to this objection. The testimony was clearly relevant and material as bearing upon the good faith of the defendant in publishing the article in suit, and also upon the question of actual malice.

[13] IV. A further assignment of error under this head is the admission in evidence of the verified complaint in the Hillman Case, it being contended that the subject-matter of the complaint was beside the issue, and that acts of cruelty therein detailed may have given the jury the impression that the respondent was "a veritable St. George." This evidence was offered for the purpose of "establishing the motives of the attorney filing the complaint." The court in admitting this evidence stated to the jury that the "facts and allegations therein are not to be deemed to be taken by you conclusively as true, but they are evidence of what was told Mr. Scott at the time of filing the complaint." Now, it is not strictly true that this is evidence of what was told Mr. Scott at the time of filing the complaint, because the record shows that Mr. Scott did not personally interview Mrs. Hillman regarding the subject-matter of the complaint. The fact is that the verified complaint was handed to Mr. Scott by his subordinate, who drew it, and was signed and filed by Mr. Scott. In other words, the verified complaint constituted the representations on which he as an attorney acted in the case by subscribing thereto and filing it. We think that the argument of respondent in his brief presents the correct reason for holding the complaint admissible:

> "The gist of the statements attributed to Hillman and his fourteen year old son, in the article upon which this action is based, was that Mrs. Hillman had no cause for divorce, and that the suit was the result of respondent's meddling and attempt to ruin Hillman and 'break up his home to fill his own pocket.' The respondent has the right to show these statements were false, and the complaint sworn to by Mrs. Hillman and signed by respondent as her attorney was competent to show that if her allegations were true she did have a well-grounded cause for divorce, and the suit was not filed by her as a result of being 'wrought up' by respondent, pursuant to a conspiracy to ruin the defendant and break up his home."

The complaint was admissible for the purpose of showing the nature and character of the charges made by Mrs. Hillman against her husband under oath, and the fact that the plaintiff by filing said complaint acted upon such representations.

[14] In addition to the foregoing, it is urged that the court erred in allowing the respondent to give a "biographical sketch of himself." This contention cannot be supported. It has been held that in an action for libel it is proper for the plaintiff to testify as to his early life and training, as well as to show that he has children, that when he settled in the town of his residence his resources were limited, and that by his own industry he has built up a successful business. Smith v. Hubbell, 142 Mich. 637, 106 N. W. 547; Cyrowsky v. Polish American Publishing Co., 196 Mich. 648, 163 N. W. 58.

[15] V. It is next urged by appellant that—

> "The court erred in allowing plaintiff, who was represented by an attorney at law, to appear as his own attorney, and in permitting him to argue the case to the jury."

In support of this contention, appellant quotes from Boca, etc., R. R. Co. v. Superior Court, 150 Cal. 153, 88 Pac. 718, as follows:

> "It is, however, the settled law of this state that, while a party to an action may appear in his own proper person or by attorney, he cannot do both, and that as long as he has an attorney of record in an action the court cannot recognize any other as having management or control of the action, and the party can act only through his attorney."

It is to be noted, however, that an entirely different situation from the one before us was there presented. The plaintiff corporation in that case had through its attorney of record moved to dismiss a certain action instituted by it. While this motion was still pending, a written request or notice of dismissal was sent to the clerk of the court by the manager of the plaintiff corporation. It was held that the order of the court ignoring this notice was properly made; the court pointing out further that until an attorney has been removed or substituted "the client cannot assume control of the case." While this case correctly states the law on the issues there involved, it does not apply here.

A situation practically identical to the one in this case was presented in Conroy v. Waters, 133 Cal. 211, 65 Pac. 387. It was there said:

> "Appellant further objects that plaintiff, who is an attorney at law, licensed to practice before all the courts of this state, was represented on the trial by Lucian Earle, his attorney of record, and that upon motion of Lucian Earle, plaintiff * * * was by order of the court 'associated' with said Earle as attorney in the case. It was contended that his was a special privilege conferred upon the plaintiff whereby he was allowed not only to appear by attorney, but at the same time to appear in person. Whatever irregularity may be detected in this order of the court, we think it sufficient to say that it was clearly an irregularity without injury, and that no reversal of the case should be had for the assigned reason."

[16] VI. Appellant complains of the action of the trial court in refusing to give instructions 2 and 3 requested by the defendant. Instruction 2 reads, in part:

> "It is the duty of an attorney at law to take care and to ascertain what the facts in regard to his client's case are before advising the client as to his or her legal rights and the legal steps to be taken to obtain relief."

Appellant does not point out the applicability of the instruction to the facts. It is probably addressed to the claim of appellant that the Hillman divorce action was brought prematurely by the plaintiff. In any event, we do not think the failure to give the instruction in any way prejudiced the rights of the defendant. Moreover, instruction No. 22 which was given contains this language:

> "A lawyer whose services are sought by husband or wife with a view of commencing an action for divorce is not justified, through hope of gain or other advantage to himself, to take any action to prevent such reconciliation."

[17] Defendant's instruction 3, which was refused by the court, reads, in part:

> "It is not sufficient on the issue of malice for the plaintiff to prove that the defendant had malice against him, but plaintiff must go further and prove that the publication complained of was made by defendant because of the malice complained of."

It is a sufficient answer to this objection to state that the substance of this instruction was given, among others, in instructions Nos. 8, 9, 12, 28, 35, and 36. For instance, the latter instruction declares, in part:

> "You can consider the articles published in the newspaper of the defendant prior and subsequent to the publication of the article complained of only as bearing on the question as to whether the article complained of was published by the defendant with actual malice. * * *"

[18] The action of the trial court in refusing defendant's instructions Nos. 5, 7, 8, and 9 is also assigned as error. But the objections are merely stated without any citation of authority or any argument beyond the bare statement that "the court also erred in refusing to give defendant's requested instructions." We do not feel called upon to consider points so presented. Gray v. Walker, 157 Cal. 381, 108 Pac. 278; Born v. Castle, 175 Cal. 680, 167 Pac. 138; Dore v. Southern Pacific Co., 163 Cal. 182, 124 Pac. 817.

181 Cal. 406

TODD et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al.

(S. F. 9072.)

1. MANDAMUS 🔑167—MATTERS CONSIDERED ON APPLICATION FOR SUBSTITUTION OF ATTORNEYS.

On application for a writ of mandate to require the superior court to grant a motion for substitution of attorneys, letters, affidavits, and consent of the petitioners, which were attached to and made a part of the motion, may be considered, though the motion was made on the ground that the appearance of the attorney was unauthorized by petitioners.

2. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT 🔑75(1)—RIGHT OF CLIENT TO CHANGE ATTORNEY.

A client has the right to change his attorney at any time, except where the attorney has an interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and this right of discharge exists even though a contingent fee has been agreed upon, or an irrevocable power of attorney given, and notwithstanding the attorney may have rendered valuable services or the client be indebted to him.

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT 🔑43(2)—INTEREST PROTECTING POWER OF ATTORNEY AFTER DEATH OF MAKER.

The interest which can protect a power of attorney after death of the person who creates it must be an interest in the thing itself, a power coupled with an interest being a power which accompanies or which is connected with an interest.

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT 🔑34 — INTEREST MUST COEXIST TO MAKE POWER OF ATTORNEY IRREVOCABLE.

To impart an irrevocable quality to a power of attorney in the absence of an express stipulation, and as the result of legal principles alone, there must coexist with the power an interest in the thing or estate to be disposed of or managed under the power.

5. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT 🔑37—WHEN POWER OF ATTORNEY IRREVOCABLE IN TERMS OR AT LAW.

While, as a general rule, a power of attorney may at any time be revoked by the party conferring it, yet, where a power of attorney forms a part of a contract and is security for money or for the performance of an act which is deemed valuable, it is generally made irrevocable in terms, or, if not so, is deemed irrevocable in law.

6. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT 🔑37—WHEN POWERS OF ATTORNEY REVOCABLE.

Though a power of attorney is made in terms irrevocable, that fact will not prevent revocation by the constituent where the power is not at the same time coupled with an interest or given as security for the payment of money, or for the performance of an act deemed of value.

7. CONTRACTS 🔑162 — WRITTEN CONTRACT WITH REPUGNANT CLAUSES CONSTRUED ACCORDING TO ITS INTENT.

Where there is an inconsistency between two clauses in a written contract, the repugnancy must be reconciled so as to give effect to the repugnant clauses, in keeping with the general intent or predominant purpose of the instrument.

8. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT 🔑37—REVOCATION OF POWER OF ATTORNEY TO COLLECT LEGACIES.

A power of attorney given by legatees to one to collect their legacies held to create an interest in favor of the donee of the power only to the extent of reimbursement and compensation, and hence, though the power declared that it was irrevocable, the legatees might revoke the power, and, where the attorney in fact had procured an attorney at law, the legatees may have another attorney substituted for him.

9. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT 🔑37—REVOCATION OF POWER OF ATTORNEY NOT AFFECTING COMPENSATION.

Where legatees gave a power of attorney to one to collect their legacies, held, that revocation of the power would not deprive the attorney in fact of any right to reimbursement for moneys expended or compensation for services rendered.

Application by Sophia Todd and another for writ of mandate to be directed against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and John T. Nourse, Judge thereof. Writ granted.

T. E. K. Cormac and Wal J. Tuska, both of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Shelton & Levy, of San Francisco, for respondents.

LAWLOR, J. Application for a writ of mandate. On April 28, 1919, the petitioners herein filed an application for a writ of mandate to be directed against the respondents, the court having refused to grant a motion made by the petitioners for the substitution of attorneys in the matter of the estate of Christine Sharbach, deceased. On May 1, 1919, an alternative writ of mandate was issued by this court, and on June 2, 1919, the respondents interposed a demurrer to the petition on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for a writ of mandate. At the same time the respondents filed an answer to the petition. The matter was thereupon orally heard and submitted for decision.

Petitioners, Sophia Todd and Louise Weber, residents of England, were named as legatees in the will of Christine Sharbach, who died in San Francisco on November 21, 1917. On January 3, 1918, each of the petitioners executed a separate power of attorney to L. O. Thieme of Chicago, Ill.; the powers being identical except as to the name of the constituent. That of Louise Weber reads as follows:

"Power of Attorney.

"Know all men by these presents: That I, Louise Weber, of 46 Carlton street, West Hartlepool in the county of Durham, England, spinster, being of lawful age, do hereby make, constitute and appoint L. O. Thieme of Chicago, Illinois, to be my true and lawful attorney in fact with full power and authority to collect, receipt for, and sue for my distributive share, legacy or claim of any kind, nature or description, which I may have against or may now or at any future date be entitled to from the estate of Christine Sharbach, deceased, and to take possession of any personal property disbursed in kind by the personal representative of said estate; also to collect any policies of insurance, or death benefits in which I may be named as beneficiary; to take charge of and manage any real estate in which I may have an interest, to collect rents, pay taxes and to institute and conduct any proceedings for the partition or sale of any such real estate, and to institute, conduct or defend all suits at law or in equity which may concern the subject-matter of this instrument, to retain and discharge counsel, to execute refunding bonds, statutory bonds, or bonds of any kind, nature or description, to enter my appearance and waive notice in the matter of any final accounting, to indorse checks and other papers of whatsoever kind, to compromise claims, to execute releases and to execute all other suitable instruments in writing, to carry into effect the various powers herein granted, and to do and perform all other acts as fully and effectually as I might do or perform if personally present, with full power to appoint and discharge substitutes, hereby revoking all powers of attorney heretofore executed by me.

"And for and in consideration of the sum of one dollar to me in hand paid, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, and in further consideration of services rendered and to be rendered and moneys to be advanced for court cost and other necessary expenses in this behalf by my said attorney in fact, I do hereby assign, transfer and set over unto my said attorney in fact all of the subject-matter of this power of attorney, that is to say, of all property, real or personal, to which I may be entitled out of the estate of Christine Sharbach, deceased, or which arise out of the death of said deceased in any manner whatsoever, it being my intention that this power of attorney shall be construed as a power of attorney, coupled with an interest in the subject-matter thereof.

"After deducting the interest herein assigned, and his expenses and outlays in and about performing his duties, said attorney in fact shall remit the balance of the funds on hand to me thru his corresponding bank.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this third day of January, A. D. 1918."

On January 22, 1918, L. O. Thieme executed a power of substitution in favor of Eugene W. Levy, an attorney at law of San Francisco, as follows:

"Know all men by these presents: That I, the undersigned, L. O. Thieme, of the city of Chicago, state of Illinois, by virtue of the power and authority to me given in and by the letters of attorney dated January 3, 1918, of Sophia Todd and January 3, 1918, of Louise Weber do hereby substitute and appoint Eugene W. Levy attorney at law of the city of San Francisco, in the county of San Francisco, and state of California as the true and lawful attorney and substitute of myself and the said constituents named in the said letters of attorney, to do, execute and perform all and every act and thing requisite and necessary to be done, as fully to all intents and purposes as the said constituents or I myself could do if personally present, hereby ratifying and confirming all that the said attorney and substitute hereby made, shall do in the premises by virtue hereof and of the said letters of attorney."

Pursuant to the foregoing substitution, Mr. Levy, on January 30, 1918, filed a notice of appearance in the proceedings in the estate of Christine Sharbach, deceased, as attorney for the petitioners herein; the will of the deceased having been admitted to probate on December 21, 1917. The estate consists entirely of stocks and bonds, and there is no litigation in connection with these legacies; the administration of the estate being purely formal. On November 11, 1918, notice was served upon Mr. Levy that petitioners would, on November 18th, following, apply to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco for an order substituting T. E. K. Cormac, Esq., "as attorney for the said Sophia Todd and Louise Weber, respectively, in all proceedings in the matter of the estate of Christine Sharbach, deceased, in the place of the said Eugene W. Levy, Esq." The motion, which was heard and denied on April 21, 1919, after a number of continuances granted at the request of Mr. Levy, was "made on the ground that the appearance of the said Eugene W. Levy as attorney for the said Sophia Todd was unauthorized by the said Sophia Todd; and that the same is in furtherance of justice, and will be heard upon letters, affidavits, and consent of the said Sophia Todd, copies of which papers are hereto annexed, and other oral and documentary evidence." The notice of Louise Weber was in identical terms.

The letters and affidavits here referred to show that the petitioners on April 5, 1918, three months after executing the power of attorney to L. O. Thieme, and two months after Mr. Levy had filed an appearance, executed a power of attorney in favor of T. E. K. Cormac, Esq., of San Francisco, "by which he is empowered to represent us in California, and elsewhere in America, for all purposes connected with estates of said decedent, and by which we *expressly canceled, withdrew and revoked the power of attorney we had formerly given to L. O. Thieme & Co. * * * and under which they or any substitutes or agents of theirs might be claiming to represent us in California or elsewhere.*" (Italics ours.)

Petitioners contend that under section 284 of the Code of Civil Procedure they "have the absolute right to change their attorney at any stage of the proceedings," and that the motion for substitution of attorneys made to the court below, supported by the letters and affidavits showing that the power of attorney held by Mr. Levy had been revoked by petitioners, should have been granted. Section 284 reads:

> "The attorney in an action or special proceeding may be changed at any time before or after judgment or final determination, as follows:
> "(1) Upon consent of both client and attorney, filed with the clerk, or entered upon the minutes;
> "(2) Upon the order of the court, upon the application of either client or attorney, after notice from one to the other."

It is evident that the motion herein was made under subdivision 2.

It is urged on behalf of respondents that, since the motion for substitution specified particularly that petitioners' present attorney was not authorized to represent them, they are confined to that ground here, and that if it be found that the allegation was not well taken the order denying the motion must be upheld and the writ denied. In other words, respondents argue that if it be found that Mr. Levy was at any time authorized to represent the petitioners the writ must be denied without going into the question whether that authority has been revoked. In support of this contention respondents cite Rundberg v. Belcher, 118 Cal. 589, 50 Pac. 670. In that case application was made for a writ of mandate for the substitution of attorneys, which was denied on the ground that the petition did not state facts authorizing the granting of the writ, namely, it did not appear from the record that notice, as required by subdivision 2, § 284, Code of Civil Procedure, and section 1005, Id., had been given to the attorney there sought to be substituted out of the case. The court said:

> "While mandate will lie to compel judicial action, and in some instances even specific action (Wood v. Strother, 76 Cal. 545, 18 Pac. 766, 9 Am. St. Rep. 249), and is an appropriate remedy in a proper case to obtain the relief here sought (People v. Norton, 16 Cal. 436), it may not be invoked to require a judicial officer to act in a particular way, except it appear by necessary legal deduction from the facts stated that the aggrieved party has been denied a right which it was the plain legal duty of the officer to grant, and without his proper discretion to refuse."

[1] While it is true, as we have pointed out, that the motion herein was made on the ground "that the appearance of the said Eugene W. Levy as the attorney" for the petitioners "was unauthorized" by them, it is also true that the motion was made "upon letters, affidavits and consent" of the petitioners, which documents were attached to and made a part of the motion. These, therefore, became a part of the facts which, under the plain terms of the decision in Rundberg v. Belcher, supra, are to be considered by this court in making the "legal deduction" as to whether "the aggrieved party has been denied a right which it was the plain legal duty of the officer to grant, and without his proper discretion to refuse." As we have seen, the import of these documents is that the present attorney was not authorized by the petitioners to represent them in the probate proceedings, and, further, that the power of attorney under which he claimed authority to act had been revoked by them.

Respondents contend that the power of attorney which Mr. Levy holds as the substitute of Mr. Thieme is irrevocable; that it is made so by the language:

> "I do hereby assign, transfer and set over unto my said attorney in fact all of the said subject-matter of this power of attorney, that is to say, of all property, real or personal, to which I may be entitled out of the estate of Christine Sharbach, deceased, or which arise out of the death of said deceased in any manner whatsoever, it being my intention that this power of attorney shall be construed as a power of attorney coupled with an interest in the subject-matter thereof."

[2] It is well settled that a client has a right to change his attorney at any time, except where the attorney has an interest in the subject-matter of the suit. In 6 Corpus Juris, at page 677, it is said:

> "This right of discharge exists even though a contingent fee has been agreed upon, or an irrevocable power of attorney has been given (Carver v. U. S., 7 Ct. Cl. 499; People v. Norton, 16 Cal. 436; Crosby v. Hatch, 155 Iowa, 312, 316, 135 N. W. 1079), or the attorney has rendered valuable services under his employment (Gage v. Atwater, 136 Cal. 170 [68 Pac. 581]), or the client is indebted to him therefor, or for moneys advanced in the prosecution or defense of the action (Gage v. Atwater, supra). There is an exception, however, where the attorney has acquired an interest in the property. Louque v. Dejan, 129 La. 519, 56 So. 427, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 389; Gulf, etc., v. Miller, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 609, 53 S. W. 709; Wylie v. Coxe, 15 How. 415, 14 L. Ed. 753."

It is said in 2 R. C. L. 957:

> "The right of a client to change his attorney at will is based on necessity in view both of the delicate and confidential nature of the relation between them, and of the evil engendered by friction or distrust. According to some decisions, an exception to the general rule as to the power of the client to discharge his attorney at will seems to exist where the power of the attorney is coupled with an interest in the cause of action. Loque v. Dejan, 129 La. 519, 56 So. 427, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 389."

[3, 4] It becomes necessary, therefore, to consider what constitutes a power coupled with an interest and whether the interest here given is such as to render the power irrevocable. What constitutes a power of attorney coupled with an interest has been considered in numerous decisions. The leading case on the subject, however, is the decision rendered by Chief Justice Marshall in Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. 174, 5 L. Ed. 589. In that case the owner of an interest in a certain vessel, then at sea, to secure a loan of money, executed to the lender contemporaneously with the loan a power of attorney authorizing him to sell the borrower's interest in the vessel, which power, by its terms, was to become void on payment of the loan. The borrower died before payment, and the question was presented whether his death operated to revoke the power. It was decided that the power was revoked by the death of the grantor. The general doctrine that a power must be exercised in the name of the principal, and does not survive his death, was held to be applicable. But the court, in the decision of the question, proceeded to consider the exception to the rule in cases where the power was coupled with an interest, and to define the meaning of that phrase. In a luminous statement the chief justice confined the scope of the exception to cases where, together with the power, there was vested in the donee an estate, right, or interest in the subject of the power, as distinguished from an interest in the proceeds of the power when exercised. In the former case he declared that the power would not be extinguished by the death of the creator of the power, because it attached to the estate of the donee in the subject thereof, and was capable of execution in his own name after the death of the principal, unlike cases where the power was unconnected with any interest in the thing itself, and the only interest was in the execution of the power. The learned Chief Justice said:

> "It becomes necessary to inquire, what is meant by the expression 'a power coupled with an interest'? Is it an interest in the subject on which the power is to be exercised? Or is it an interest in that which is produced by the exercise of the power? We hold it to be clear that the interest which can protect a power after the death of the person who creates it must be an interest in the thing itself. In other words, the power must be ingrafted on an estate in the thing. The words themselves seem to import this meaning. 'A power coupled with an interest' is a power which accompanies or is connected with an interest. The power and the interest are united in the same person. But if we are to understand by the word interest an interest in that which is to be produced by the exercise of the power, then they are never united. The power, to produce the interest, must be exercised, and by its exercise, is extinguished. The power ceases when the interest commences, and therefore cannot, in accurate law language, be said to be 'coupled' with it."

The doctrine thus enunciated has been adhered to in the following well-reasoned cases: Barr v. Schroeder, 32 Cal. 617; Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 296, 11 Pac. 820; Hammond v. Allen, 11 Fed. Cas. 382; Nicks' Heirs v. Rector, 4 Ark. 251, 280; Schauber v. Jackson, 2 Wend. 1, 54; Terwilliger v. Ontario, 149 N. Y. 86, 92, 43 N. E. 432, 434; Frederick's Appeal, 52 Pa. 338, 342, 91 Am. Dec. 162; Flagstaff Co. v. Patrick, 2 Utah, 313; Alworth v. Seymour, 42 Minn. 526, 44 N. W. 1030; Louque v. Dejan, 129 La. 519, 56 South. 427, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 389; Gulf, etc., v. Miller, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 609, 53 S. W. 709; Wylie v. Coxe, 15 How. 415, 14 L. Ed. 753; Mansfield v. Mansfield, 6 Conn. 559, 16 Am. Dec. 76; Hartley & Minor's Appeal, 53 Pa. 212, 91 Am. Dec. 207.

In Hartley & Minor's Appeal a situation quite similar to the one in the present case was presented, the chief difference being that there the constituent did not assign her legacy to the attorneys in fact. In that case Hannah Gallion made to Hartley and Minor a power of attorney to collect and receive all money and property coming to her as heir of John Douglass, deceased, with power to convey her interest in the real estate of the decedent, "the said Hartley and Minor to receive as compensation for their services herein one-half of the net proceeds of my interest in said estate which may be collected or received by them as my attorneys, after paying all costs and expenses, they to receive no further compensation for any services they may render or expenses they may incur or pay as my attorneys." Subsequently she gave another power of attorney to one Howland for the same purpose, and in it revoked that to Hartley and Minor. The latter, as attorneys of Hannah Gallion, petitioned the court for a citation to the administrator of Douglass' estate to settle his account. This was objected to because of the power of attorney to Howland. On this ground the court refused to grant the citation, and dismissed the petition. Hartley and Minor appealed from this decree. The appellate court said:

> "There was no error committed by the court below in holding the power of attorney of Hannah Gallion to the appellants to be revocable. It was an ordinary agency, constituted by letter of attorney, to act for her to enforce a settlement of his accounts by the administrator of her father's estate, in which she was interested, and to collect any moneys or property that might belong, or be coming, to her. For these services the attorneys were to have one-half of the net proceeds of what they might receive or recover for her. The plaintiffs in error suppose that this clause rendered the power irrevocable by their principal, under the idea that it was a power coupled with an interest. This was a mistake, as all the authorities show. To impart an irrevocable quality to a power of attorney in the absence of an express stipulation, and as the result of legal principles alone, there must coexist with the power an interest in the thing or estate to be disposed of or managed under the power. An instance of frequent occurrence in practice may be given of the assignment of vessels at sea, with a power to sell for the benefit of the holder of the power, or of anybody else who may have advanced money and who it was agreed should be secured in that way. * * *
> "In the case in hand the power and the interest could not coexist. The interest the appellants would have would be in the net proceeds collected under the power, and the exercise of the power to collect the proceeds would ipso facto extinguish it entirely, or so far as exercised. Hence the appellants' interest would properly begin when the power ended." (Italics ours.)

[5] But there are powers which the constituent cannot revoke, although they do not come within Chief Justice Marshall's definition of a power coupled with an interest. This is clearly recognized by him in Hunt v. Rousmanier, supra. After stating the general rule that a power may at any time be revoked by the party conferring it, he says:

> "But this general rule, which results from the nature of the act, has sustained some modification. Where a letter of attorney forms part of a contract, and is security for money, or for the performance of an act which is deemed valuable, it is generally made irrevocable in terms, or, if not so, is deemed irrevocable in law."

An instance of a letter of attorney given as security for money is presented in Norton v. Whitehead, 84 Cal. 264, 24 Pac. 154, 18 Am. St. Rep. 172. In that case a contractor borrowed from the plaintiff, his foreman on the work, various sums of money to enable him to carry on the contract. Afterwards he executed to the plaintiff an assignment of all moneys due or to become due "for any work I may perform, the assignment to remain good and in full force until all notes due, or which are to become due * * * from me are paid." Later he gave plaintiff a power of attorney reciting that "whereas I am now desirous that all moneys that have become or may become due to me by reason of my performance of said contract shall be paid" to plaintiff, and giving him power to collect such moneys. These instruments were deposited with the other parties to the contract. The contractor died and the work was completed by his administrator. It was held that the plaintiff had such an interest in the moneys due on the contract as to prevent a revocation of the power on the contractor's death, and that the plaintiff was entitled to collect it as against the administrator.

[6] But it has been held that, even though the power of attorney is made in terms irrevocable, that fact will not prevent revocation by the constituent, where the power is not at the same time coupled with an interest or given as security for the payment of money, or for the performance of an act deemed of value. Blackstone v. Buttermore, 53 Pa. 266; Bonney v. Smith, 17 Ill. 531; Kilpatrick v. Wiley, 197 Mo. 123, 95 S. W. 213; Martin v. Lamkin, 188 Ill. App. 431, 437; McKellop v. Dewitz, 42 Okl. 220, 140 Pac. 1161, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 255; 6 C. J. 677. In Blackstone v. Buttermore, supra, it was said:

> "A mere power, like a will, is in its very nature revocable when it concerns the interest of the principal alone, and in such case even an express declaration of irrevocability will not prevent revocation. An interest in the proceeds to arise as mere compensation for service of executing the power will not make the power irrevocable."

It is well settled, therefore, that in order to constitute an irrevocable power of attorney there must coexist with the power a beneficial interest in the subject thereof which is enforceable in the name of the attorney in fact and will survive the constituent; or the power must be given as security for the payment of a sum of money other than that which arises as compensation through the exercise of the power; or as security for the performance of some act of value.

It now remains for us to examine in the light of the foregoing authorities the power of attorney in the instant case, and to determine whether or not it is coupled with such an interest, or given as security, either for the payment of money or the performance of an act, so as to make it irrevocable. As we have seen, the power of attorney in this case forms a part of a contract which in express terms purports to assign to the attorney in fact all of the petitioners' interest in the estate, and at the same time expressly stating that it is the intention of the constituents that it shall be a power of attorney coupled with an interest. The letter then goes on to say:

> "After deducting the interest herein assigned, and his expenses and outlays in and about performing his duties, said attorney in fact shall remit the balance of the funds on hand to me through his corresponding bank."

[7-9] Respondents in their answer on this point have this to say:

> "There is an inconsistency between this clause and the preceding assignment of the entire interest of the legatee, because if such assigned interest were deducted, there would be nothing left to remit. If the two clauses were deemed irreconcilable, the instrument would be interpreted most strongly against the petitioner, the promisor. Civ. Code, § 1654. Consequently the assignment would be upheld. The inconsistency cannot be permitted to defeat the plain terms of assignment and the paramount provision of the instrument.
> "But the inconsistency is apparent and not real. When aided by the settled rule of construction that repugnancy must be reconciled so as to give effect to the repugnant clauses, subordinate to the general intent and purpose (Civ. Code, § 1653), the meaning of the power of attorney becomes plain. The predominant purpose to create a power coupled with an interest and thus an irrevocable agency is expressly declared. To insure this result the entire interest is transferred. But the assignment is not intended to be absolute so as to divest the petitioner of all further claim to her legacy. The transfer is really one in trust pursuant to which the attorney in fact takes the legal title with a corresponding duty to account. He himself has a beneficial interest sufficient at least to pay for his services and outlays."

That there is an inconsistency between the two clauses is clear. Nor do we question respondents' statement of the rule of construction that under such circumstances the repugnancy must be reconciled so as to give effect to the repugnant clauses in keeping with the general intent or predominant purpose of the instrument. But we cannot agree with respondents in their statement of what is the "predominant purpose" or "paramount provision" of the instrument. It is clear to us that the chief purpose of the constituents here was not, as respondents contend, "to create a power coupled with an interest and thus an irrevocable agency," but rather to make an assignment in trust to the attorney in fact in order to facilitate the collection of the legacies, and to insure the reimbursement of the attorney in fact for his outlays, and for compensation for his services. Now, since the reimbursements and compensations were to be taken from the legacies, it may be conceded that they are to that extent an interest in the subject of the power, and that the interest arose when the assignment was made; that is to say, the power and the interest concurred. The assignment, in other words, created a present interest in the legacies, but only in the sense we have indicated—to the extent of reimbursements and compensation. But this does not render the power irrevocable. The mere expression, "a power coupled with an interest," does not necessarily render the power irrevocable. It is plain from the foregoing authorities that the interest which the attorney in fact must have in the subject of the power in order to render the power irrevocable is such a beneficial interest in the thing itself, apart from the proceeds, that if the power were revoked he would be deprived of a substantial right. In other words, the relation of the attorney in fact to the subject-matter must be such that a revocation of the power would be inequitable. Such is not the case here. The interest in the proceeds of what may be collected is not, strictly speaking, a beneficial interest in the legacies. The interest is nothing more than an assurance that the attorney in fact will be reimbursed and compensated out of the legacies when collected. A revocation of the power would in no way deprive the attorney in fact of any right, for the reason that he is entitled to be reimbursed for any sums expended by him and to be compensated out of the legacies for any services rendered under the power up to the time of revocation. Nor can the creation of a trust, which has placed the bare legal title in the attorney in fact, with a corresponding duty to account, be considered upon any theory as conferring upon the attorney in fact such a beneficial interest as to render the power irrevocable. Fairly considered, the contract herein creates a trust with a corresponding duty to account. It has no meaning other than this. The case would be quite different if, in addition to providing for reimbursements and compensation, the contract vested in the attorney in fact a definite share in the ownership of the legacies. In such an event, the power would be "ingrafted upon an estate in the thing," and under such a contract to permit the revocation of the power and substitute the attorney in fact out of the case would be to prevent him from exercising the right of property.

Petitioners urge that the power of attorney is unconscionable and should not, therefore, be recognized in equity, since it professes to assign all of petitioners' legacy without consideration. It is likewise contended that the power of attorney was secured through fraud and misrepresentation. It is sufficient to say that such questions have no proper place in the determination of this proceeding. The order of substitution should have been made.

Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue.

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 15, 1919. Opinion of Supreme Court Denying Rehearing, Oct. 13, 1919.)

INFANTS ⚷7—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚷147—MINOR IN CHARGE OF OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF STREETS DE FACTO OFFICER.

An unbonded minor, in charge of the office of superintendent of streets, who was performing the duties of the office, designating himself assistant, the superintendent himself being on leave of absence, was a de facto officer, as far as landowners were concerned, and they could not claim that a contract signed by him in the name of the superintendent, followed by his name as "assistant," was not valid; the work having been done satisfactorily at prices fixed by the council in its acceptance of the bid of the contractor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; R. H. Latimer, Judge.

Proceeding by L. L. Page against Lucio M. Mintzer and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed by the District Court of Appeal, and rehearing denied by the Supreme Court.

John F. Cassell, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Johnson & Shaw, of Oakland, for respondent.

BRITTAIN, J. The defendant property owners appeal from a judgment foreclosing the lien of a street assessment in the city of Richmond. The only question is as to the validity of certain acts performed by the assistant superintendent of streets.

There is no question regarding the proceedings by which the city council acquired jurisdiction to order the work to be done. Upon proper advertisement the plaintiff's bid for the work was properly accepted. It is not suggested that the work was not well done, within reasonable time, in entire accord with the specifications, and for the agreed price. There is no question of the regularity or fairness of the distribution of the cost upon the property. It is not suggested that the defendants' property was not directly benefited by the work, nor that the assessment on defendants' lots was not in proportion to the benefits received.

The work was done under the Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 147), which requires that after the award has been made the superintendent of streets shall enter into a contract with the successful bidder, and in the contract fix the time for the commencement and completion of the work, which time may be extended under certain conditions by the superintendent of streets. From the record in the present case it appears that long prior to the institution of the proceedings involved, one Blankenship, who was the superintendent of streets, appointed an assistant, W. D. Boswell, whose appointment was approved by a resolution of the city council. About the time the bid of the plaintiff was accepted, by another resolution of the council, Blankenship, the superintendent of streets, was granted a leave of absence for two weeks. The contract, which in neither form nor substance is objected to by the defendants, was signed by the contractor on December 30, 1908. At that time Blankenship was absent from the city of Richmond. He returned on January 2, 1909. When the contractor signed the contract, Boswell was in entire charge of the business office of the superintendent of streets. During the absence of Blankenship he transacted all the business of the superintendent of streets with members of the city government, contractors, employés of the street department, and others. When the contractor signed the contract, he paid to Boswell, for the city, $400 required to cover preliminary expenses, whereupon Boswell, with a rubber stamp, appended to the contract the name of "N. M. Blankenship, Superintendent of Streets of the City of Richmond," and wrote beneath it, "By W. D. Boswell, Assistant Superintendent of Streets." The contract was then attested: "Signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of H. H. Turley, City Clerk." In the contract the time of commencement and completion of the work was fixed. Subsequently Blankenship was succeeded in office by R. L. Fernald, and Boswell continued as assistant superintendent of streets. The city council granted certain extensions of time for the completion of the work. The Vrooman Act provides that the superintendent of streets may extend the time under the direction of the city council. One of the extensions was under the incumbency of Blankenship, and one during that of Fernald. Both times the name of the superintendent of streets was signed by Boswell, who in one instance added, after his name, "Ass't Supt. of Sts.," and in the other, "Ass't." Boswell never took oath of office, he filed no bond, and when the contract was signed he was but 19 years old.

It is maintained by the appellants that there was no contract signed by the superintendent of streets; that because the superintendent of streets was absent at the time the purported contract was signed, he did not exercise the discretion vested in him in fixing the time of commencement and completion of the work; and that in no case did the superintendent of streets extend the time in accordance with the provisions of the statute. It is argued that Boswell did not pretend to act independently as a de facto officer, because he signed the contract in the name of the superintendent of streets; that there was no de jure office of assistant superintendent of streets, and therefore there could not be a de facto holder of the nonexistent office; that he was not a deputy superintendent of streets, because the utmost that he could have claimed was that he acted under the resolution approving his appointment, and all he did claim was that he was assistant superintendent of streets; that the superintendent of streets did not and could not delegate to Boswell the performance of the functions imposed by the Vrooman Act on the superintendent of streets; and that the contractor in dealing with the public official was charged with notice of the extent and limitations of his authority.

The learned judge of the trial court showed himself to be one of those to whom Mr. Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes referred in his classic on the Common Law (page 36) when he said: "The law is administered by able and experienced men, who know too much to sacrifice common sense to a syllogism." He properly decided that under the facts the property owner should pay for the work which had been done. The Supreme Court of the United States exercised the same common sense in a case in which it denied the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court to try a Cherokee Indian for the murder of a white man. The Cherokee Nation claimed jurisdiction over the defendants upon the theory that the murdered man was an Indian by adoption, by reason of his having married a Cherokee woman. At the time the marriage license was issued one Triplett was the clerk, and R. M. Dennenberg, his deputy. Both the clerk and his deputy were absent, and the name of the deputy was signed to the license by his son. Substantially the same contentions were made in that case as here concerning the validity of the document in question. In holding the marriage license to be valid, the Supreme Court said:

> "It is true that the younger Dennenberg, who signed the marriage license, was neither clerk nor deputy, but he was an officer de facto, if not de jure. He was permitted by the clerk and the deputy to sign their names; he was the only person in charge of the office; he transacted the business of the office, and his acts in their behalf and in the discharge of the duties of the office were recognized by them and also by the Cherokee Nation as valid. Under those circumstances his acts must be taken as official acts, and the license which he issued as of full legal force. As to third parties, at least he was an officer de facto; and if an officer de facto, the same validity and the same presumptions attached to his actions as to those of an officer de jure." Nofire v. United States, 164 U. S. 657, 17 Sup. Ct. 212, 41 L. Ed. 588.

The fact that Boswell was a minor does not militate against the rule declared in the Nofire Case. Wimberly v. Boland, 72 Miss. 241, 16 South. 905; People v. Dean, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 438; Hooper v. Goodwin, 48 Me. 79-80.

In the Nofire Case the deputy's name was signed by his son without the addition of the son's name. In this case the name of the superintendent of streets was signed with addition of the name of the assistant. No reason appears to exist for holding either the contract or any extension of time invalid because Boswell signed his name, when, under the rule in the Nofire Case, they would have been held valid if he had failed to sign his name.

While there is some difference in the facts of the two cases, the reasoning of the court in Oakland v. Donovan, 19 Cal. App. 488, 126 Pac. 388, in holding valid a contract signed by an acting superintendent of streets, applies to this case. When one is in charge of the physical office of a public official and is performing the duties of the office he is, as to third persons dealing with him in good faith, the de facto officer.

The Vrooman Act provides for appeals, and section 11 (Stats. 1885, p. 157) expressly provides that no assessment shall be held invalid except upon appeal to the city council for any error, informality, or any defect in any of the proceedings prior to the assessment, where jurisdiction to order the work to be done has been established by publication of the resolution of intention. In the present case there is no record of any appeal having been made by the property owner to the council. As has been stated, the work was done satisfactorily and at the prices fixed by the council in its acceptance of the bid of the respondent, and under such circumstances it cannot be held that there was any error in the trial of the case which resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Const. Cal. art. 6, § 4½. The case appears to be within the rules of Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal.

350, 80 Pac. 81, and Farley v. Reindollar, 174 Cal. 707, 165 Pac. 19.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; HAVEN, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court, in Bank, Denying Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The application for hearing in this court after decision by the district court of appeal of the first appellate district, division two, is denied.

In denying such hearing we are not to be understood as assenting to any view that if there was no valid contract for the doing of the work the judgment could nevertheless be affirmed for the reason that there was no appeal by the property owner to the council. We say this for the reason that the opinion may possibly be open to some such construction.

All concur except OLNEY, J., not participating.

AMERICAN IMPROVEMENT CO. v. LILIENTHAL et al. (Civ. 2929.)

1. BANKRUPTCY 🔑376 — "COMPOSITION" DEFINED.

A "composition" is a proceeding under which a bankrupt may settle with his creditors, if the majority agree, by the payment of a lump sum, to be distributed ratably among the general creditors, and such sum as may be necessary to pay priority claims and costs of the proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Composition.]

2. BANKRUPTCY 🔑387 — CONFIRMATION OF COMPOSITION IN EFFECT A DISCHARGE.

Under Federal Bankr. Act, §§ 14c, 70b (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 9598, 9654), confirmation of a composition in bankruptcy is in effect a discharge, superseding the bankruptcy proceedings and reinvesting the bankrupt with all his property free from the claims of creditors.

3. BANKRUPTCY 🔑387 — COMPOSITION RESTORES BANKRUPT TO POSSESSION OF PROPERTY.

While a bankrupt is reinvested with all his property by a composition, the effect is no more than to place it back in his hands as it was before the insolvency proceedings were instituted, and, no adjudication having been made, the debtor is never divested of his property.

4. BANKRUPTCY 🔑387, 418(1) — EFFECT OF COMPOSITION AND DISCHARGE ON PROCEEDINGS TO ENFORCE DEBTS.

A composition in bankruptcy has no more effect than a discharge would have under the same circumstances, both releasing the bankrupt from all his provable debts, except those specified in federal Bankr. Act, § 17 (U. S. Comp. St. § 9601), a discharge not being a payment or extinguishment of the debts, but simply a bar to all future proceedings for enforcement, except such as are by way of enforcement of a lien therefor not in itself invalid; the discharge having merely destroyed the remedy.

5. BANKRUPTCY 🔑433(1) — EFFECT OF DISCHARGE ON VALID LIEN.

A valid lien created on the property of a bankrupt more than 4 months before filing of the petition is not affected by his discharge, which does not operate to cast off a valid lien given or acquired for the debt, either a lien by contract or by legal proceedings, and does not operate to prevent its enforcement, being purely personal to the bankrupt.

6. BANKRUPTCY 🔑387—EFFECT OF COMPOSITION ON LIEN SECURED BY FILING TRANSCRIPT OF JUDGMENT.

A composition with his creditors confirmed by the bankruptcy court released the debtor from further personal liability to pay a judgment obtained against him, but did not affect the security of lien obtained by the judgment creditor by filing transcript in the county recorder's office of a county, in which the debtor owned property not exempt from execution, more than 4 months before institution of the proceeding.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by the American Improvement Company against E. R. Lilienthal, Leon Sloss, W. P. Hammon, and others, resulting in final judgment for plaintiff. From a special order after such judgment denying the motions of defendant Hammon to stay and recall executions and to discharge the judgment of record, he appeals. Cause remanded, with instructions to quash execution. Order otherwise affirmed.

Charles W. Slack, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Wm. P. Hubbard, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. This is an appeal by W. P. Hammon, one of the defendants in an action commenced in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco by the American Improvement Company against E. R. Lilienthal and others, from a special order, made after final judgment in the action, denying the motions of the defendant Hammon to stay and recall executions on the judgment and to discharge the judgment of record.

Judgment for the sum of $5,813.72 was recovered on October 19, 1916, against the defendants as guarantors of the payment of a promissory note executed by Northern Electric Railway Company and delivered to the plaintiff. Judgment was docketed on October 20, 1916, and a certified copy of the transcript of the docket was filed in the office of the county recorder of the county of Santa Barbara on November 8, 1916, at which latter date the defendant Hammon was the owner of certain real property, not exempt from execution, situated in that county. On the same date a transcript of the judgment was filed in the office of the county recorder of Placer county. The judgment is final, no part of it has been paid, and it has never been satisfied, unless by the composition in the bankruptcy proceedings, hereinafter referred to.

An involuntary petition in bankruptcy was filed against the defendant Hammon on September 27, 1917, in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California, Southern Division. Thereafter Hammon filed in the bankruptcy proceedings an offer to pay the sum of $250,000 in satisfaction of his liabilities. On August 31, 1918, the District Court made an order confirming the composition, the offer having been accepted by a majority, in number and amount, of the creditors. No order of adjudication of bankruptcy has ever been made in the proceedings. The plaintiff was included in the schedule filed by Hammon, in the bankruptcy proceedings, as one of the secured creditors. It has had full knowledge and notice of the proceedings, and of the composition, and the proceedings in relation thereto. It never filed any claim in the bankruptcy proceedings, nor participated therein in any respect whatsoever. It received no money upon its judgment, under the composition or otherwise, and took no part in the composition.

An execution on the judgment was issued on September 19, 1918, directed to the sheriff of the county of Santa Barbara, and under it certain real property was advertised for sale. The property had been conveyed by Hammon to the Oilfields Syndicate on September 6, 1917, less than one month prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, and 10 months after plaintiff's judgment lien attached. It was not included in the list of assets of the defendant scheduled therein. Executions on the judgment, directed to the sheriffs of Placer, Monterey, Fresno, and Alameda counties, and of the city and county of San Francisco, were also issued on September 19, 1918, but no levies appear to have been made thereunder.

Motions were made by the defendant Hammon, previous to the time appointed for the sale of the real property, to stay and recall the executions and to discharge the judgment of record on the ground that the judgment had been satisfied and discharged by the composition effected by Hammon with his creditors in the bankruptcy proceedings, and the lien of the judgment extinguished thereby. The motions were denied, and from the order denying the motions this appeal is taken.

One proposition is presented for consideration on this appeal: Is a judgment lien, obtained by filing a transcript of the judgment in the county recorder's office of the county in which the bankrupt owns property not exempt from execution, destroyed by involuntary bankruptcy proceedings commenced more than 4 months after such filing, when a composition between the bankrupt and his creditors was reached and confirmed by the court?

Concisely stated, it is the contention of appellant that the effect of the order of confirmation, made in the bankruptcy proceedings, was to discharge the bankrupt, Hammon, from his indebtedness to the plaintiff, and to revest in the bankrupt the title to his property; that the order of confirmation, being in effect a discharge, the bankrupt was released thereby from liability on the judgment, the lien of which was avoided, although obtained more than four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy.

[1] A composition is a proceeding under which a bankrupt may settle with his creditors, if the majority so agree, by the payment of a lump sum to be distributed ratably among the general creditors, and such sum as may be necessary to pay priority claims and costs of the proceedings. The proposed composition is presented to the court, and, after notice and hearing, if approved by the court, an order is made confirming the same.

[2] Confirmation is in effect a discharge. 2 Remington on Bankruptcy, § 2349; Cumberland Glass Mfg. Co. v. De Witt, 237 U. S. 447, 35 Sup. Ct. 636, 59 L. Ed. 1042, 34 Am. Bankr. Rep. 723; United States ex rel. Adler v. Hammond, 104 Fed. 862, 44 C. C. A. 229, 4 Am. Bankr. Rep. 736; In re Friend, 134 Fed. 778, 67 C. C. A. 500, 13 Am. Bankr. Rep. 597. Its effect is to supersede the bankruptcy proceedings, and reinvest the bankrupt with all his property free from the claims of his creditors. In re Rider (D. C.) 96 Fed. 808, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 179; section 70f of the Bankrupt Act (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541 30 Stat. 565 [U. S. Comp. St. § 9654]).

Section 14c (section 9598) of the Bankrupt Act provides:

> "The confirmation of a composition shall discharge the bankrupt from his debts, other than those agreed to be paid by the terms of the composition, and those not affected by a discharge."

[3-6] While the bankrupt is reinvested with all his property by the composition its effect in that regard is no more than to place it back in his hands as it was before the insolvency proceedings were instituted. Strictly speaking, no adjudication of bankruptcy having been made, defendant was never divested of his property. Houston v. Shear (Tex. Civ. App.) 210 S. W. 976, 43 Am. Bankr. Rep. 462, 469. The composition has no more effect than a discharge would have under the same circumstances. Both a discharge and a composition releases the bankrupt from all his provable debts, except those specified in section 17 (section 9601) of the act. A discharge, however, is not a payment or an extinguishment of the debts; it is simply a bar to all future legal proceedings for the enforcement of the debts or obligations discharged, except such as are by way of enforcement of a lien therefor, not inself invalid. The discharge has merely destroyed the remedy, but not the indebtedness. Zavelo v. Reeves, 227 U. S. 629, 33 Sup. Ct. 365, 57 L. Ed. 676, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 664; 2 Remington on Bankruptcy, 2668, 2672. A valid lien, created on the property of the bankrupt more than 4 months before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, is not affected by his discharge. Evans v. Rounsaville, 115 Ga. 684, 42 S. E. 100, 8 Am. Bankr. Rep. 236. The discharge does not operate to cast off good and valid liens, given or acquired for the debt, either a lien by contract or by legal proceedings, nor to prevent their enforcement. It is purely personal to the bankrupt. Evans v. Staalle, 88 Minn. 253, 92 N. W. 951, 11 Am. Bankr. Rep. 184; Powers Dry Goods Co. v. Nelson, 10 N. D. 580, 88 N. W. 703, 58 L. R. A. 770, 7 Am. Bankr. Rep. 510; Paxton v. Scott, 66 Neb. 385, 92 N. W. 611, 10 Am. Bankr. Rep. 80. Undoubtedly, the composition released Hammon from further personal liability to pay the judgment obtained against him in the action, but it did not affect the security afforded by his lien. Bassett v. Thackara, 72 N. J. Law, 81, 60 Atl. 39, 16 Am. Bankr. Rep. 786.

Appellant contends that the judgment against him was satisfied by the composition; that as the Bankruptcy Act makes no provision concerning the existence of the lien of the judgment, after the judgment itself has been discharged by composition, the lien was itself released and discharged thereby and ceased to exist. The cases already cited by us refute that contention. A discharge is not a payment or extinguishment of the debt. Only the remedy, not the indebtedness, has been destroyed—the debt can no longer be enforced as a personal obligation. Zavelo v. Reeves, supra. Section 67c (section 9651) of the Bankruptcy Act provides the condition under which a lien, created by or obtained in any suit or proceeding in law or equity begun against a person within 4 months before the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, by or against such person, shall be dissolved by the adjudication of such person to be a bankrupt. Section 67f of the act provides that—

> "All levies, judgments, attachments, or other liens, obtained through legal proceedings against a person who is insolvent, at any time within four months prior to filing of a petition in bankruptcy against him, shall be deemed null and void in case he is adjudged a bankrupt, and the property affected by the levy, judgment, attachment, or other lien shall be deemed wholly discharged and released from the same, and shall pass to the trustee as a part of the estate of the bankrupt, unless the court" shall otherwise order.

It will be noted that these provisions apply only to liens obtained within four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, and only then, in the event that an adjudication in bankruptcy shall result. Nothing in the act to which our attention has been called makes any such provision as to judgments or liens obtained more than four months prior to the filing of the petition. To the contrary, the courts have held that, as to such lien another rule is applicable.

Referring to section 67f, the United States Supreme Court has said:

> "In our opinion the conclusion to be drawn from this language is that it is the lien created by a levy, or a judgment, or an attachment, or otherwise, that is invalidated, and that where the lien is obtained more than 4 months prior to filing the petition, it is not only not to be deemed to be null and void on adjudication, but its validity is recognized. When it is obtained within 4 months the property is discharged therefrom, but not otherwise. A judgment or decree in enforcement of an otherwise valid pre-existing lien is not the judgment denounced by the statute, which is plainly confined to judgments creating liens. If this were not so the date of the acquisition of a lien by attachment or creditor's bill would be entirely immaterial." Metcalf v. Barker, 187 U. S. 165, 174, 23 Sup. Ct. 67, 71 (47 L. Ed. 122).

See, also, In re Snell (D. C.) 125 Fed. 154; In re English (D. C.) 122 Fed. 113; Oilfields Syndicate v. American Improvement Co., 256 Fed. 979, in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California, February 27, 1919.

It would seem, therefore, that the lien of plaintiff, having been obtained more than four months prior to the petition in bankruptcy filed against defendant, if otherwise valid, was not affected by the composition reached by defendant and his creditors in the bankruptcy proceedings.

That the lien attached by filing the transcript of judgment in Santa Barbara county is not open to dispute. It continued for two years from and after the date of filing (Code Civ. Proc. § 674) and had been in force for over 11 months when the petition in bankruptcy was filed.

Appellant and respondent have devoted much time to a consideration of the question whether or not plaintiff was a secured creditor of defendant. Whether plaintiff is or is not a secured creditor would not, in our opinion, alter the relation of the parties toward each other in connection with plaintiff's right, under the present facts, to proceed to realize on its lien, which was preserved to it by the composition. No authorities have been cited to us holding that if it were a secured creditor it would be compelled, upon composition, to surrender its security to defendant. Such would be the practical result if plaintiff were not now allowed to enforce its lien. We are not here dealing with the right of a secured creditor to stand upon his right to a certain portion of the assets of the estate by virtue of some security upon property of the bankrupt, but with the right of a judgment lienor to enforce his lien, acquired by legal process, after he has been cut off from all further legal proceedings for the collection of his debt.

When counsel for the appellant admits in his brief that "there is also no doubt that if a lien is acquired in legal proceedings without the 4-month period, the lien is not discharged by an adjudication of and a discharge of the lien debtor in bankruptcy, there being no composition," he concedes the respondent's case. As we have before pointed out, the effect of a composition and a discharge is the same.

No liens were acquired by plaintiff in the counties of Fresno, Monterey, or Alameda, or in the city and county of San Francisco; the transcript of the judgment not having been recorded in either. The cause is remanded to the lower court, with instructions to recall and quash the execution issued to the sheriffs of Fresno, Monterey, and Alameda counties, and to the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco. Otherwise the order of the lower court refusing to recall and quash the execution is affirmed.

KEYES v. NIMS. (Civ. 1981.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 25, 1919. On Petition for Rehearing, Sept. 24, 1919.)

1. Appeal and error 🔑989 — Review of findings of fact.

On appeal, in determining whether the findings of fact of the trial court are supported, only the testimony presented by the prevailing party need be considered, and any adverse showing made by the other party may be disregarded.

2. Partnership 🔑14—"Joint adventure" distinguished.

One of the features which distinguishes a "partnership" from a "joint adventure" is the element of principal and agent which inheres in the partnership relation, each partner embracing the character both of principal and agent, being the former when he acts for himself in the partnership, while in a joint adventure no one of the parties can bind the joint adventure.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Joint Adventure; Partnership.]

3. Joint adventures 🔑4(1) — Rights between members.

The resemblance between a partnership and a joint adventure is so close that the rights as between adventurers are governed practically by the same rules that govern partnerships.

4. Joint adventures 🔑5(1)—Right of member to sue for accounting.

A joint adventurer, as a partner in a partnership may do, may sue in equity for an accounting of the profits flowing from the joint adventure, even where the adventure has been closed and a party thereto is entitled to a sum certain as his share; such right not being precluded by his right to sue at law.

5. Joint adventures 🔑5(1)—Right of member to bring action at law.

One party in a joint adventure may sue the other at law for a breach of the contract, or a share of the profits or losses, or a contribution for advances made in excess of his share, as where the adventure has been closed and a party thereto is entitled to a sum certain as his share of the adventure.

6. Joint adventures 🔑5(2)—Relief granted though pleading alleged partnership.

In an action by joint adventurer for an accounting and termination of the relation, a decree adjudging an accounting and termination of the relation will be sustained, where the facts pleaded and the evidence warrant the decree, although the complaint alleged that the relation was a partnership.

7. Partnership 🔑265—Effect of contract with third party.

Where a partnership agreement was entered into, and a third party, with the consent of both parties to the partnership agreement, was given a one-sixth interest in the partnership by each of such parties, the purpose of the partnership not being changed, the taking of such third person into the partnership did not constitute the making of such an agreement as would operate to supersede and abrogate the original agreement between the original members, although the terms were more definitely specified.

On Petition for Rehearing.

8. Appeal and error 🔑832(1)—Oversight corrected without rehearing.

A rehearing need not be granted because the District Court of Appeal by oversight failed to consider the question of interest allowed in a judgment, and such matter may be considered and disposed of on an application for rehearing without ordering a rehearing.

9. Joint adventures 🔑5(1)—In accounting interest allowed on plaintiff's share.

In an action by a member of a joint adventure for an accounting, court did not err in allowing interest on the share that plaintiff was entitled to on defendant's sale of a royalty contract belonging to the adventure, although the defendant maintained that there was no joint adventure and that plaintiff had no interest whatever, and plaintiff maintained that he had a half interest, and it appeared from the evidence that he was only entitled to a third interest; matter of arriving at the amount after determining plaintiff's interest being a matter of simple computation.

10. JUDGMENT ⚷250—CONTRACT SUED ON IN CONFORMITY TO PLEADING.

In an action by a joint adventurer for an accounting, where plaintiff sued on an alleged partnership agreement between him and the defendant for one-half the profits, fact that the evidence showed that, after plaintiff and defendant had entered into the agreement, they took in a third member and each gave him a one-sixth interest, and that defendant had purchased the interest of the third party, who thereupon ceased to be a member of the partnership, a judgment in favor of plaintiff for one-third of the profits of the joint adventure was not based upon a contract other than that alleged in the complaint; the plaintiff being under the impression that the third party had dropped out of the adventure and abandoned his rights rather than to furnish money required, being ignorant of the transfer of such third party's share to defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Action by A. V. Keyes against F. B. Nims. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Clary & Louttit, of Stockton, for appellant.
Lafayette J. Smallpage and Scott Rex, both of Stockton, for respondent.

HART, J. The action was brought to secure the dissolution of an alleged partnership between the parties and for an accounting. A trial was had before the court sitting without a jury, and judgment was entered dissolving the partnership and awarding plaintiff damages with interest and costs, amounting in the aggregate to $6,960. The appeal is by defendant from said judgment. Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support several of the findings of the court, the first finding attacked being numbered 1, which stated that the parties hereto "formed a partnership."

The finding that the relation existing between the parties was that of a partnership was based upon a written instrument (hereinafter to be called the "Keyes-Nims contract") which is in the following language:

> "Stockton, Cal., September 26, 1916.
> "It is hereby agreed between F. B. Nims of Stockton, California, and A. V. Keyes of Stockton, California, that all dealings and contracts entered into with the Samson Sieve-Grip Tractor Company of Stockton, California, after the 27th day of September, 1916, that each shall have an equal interest, that is, share and share alike.
> F. B. Nims.
> "A. V. Keyes."

It is argued by appellant that the above agreement did not contain the essential elements of a partnership agreement, and that the parties, at the time of the signing thereof, did not intend to become partners. It is also contended by appellant that the said Keyes-Nims contract was never acted upon so as to "launch" a partnership. The above propositions will be considered in their order.

The consideration of the points thus relied upon by appellant will be clarified by first presenting a brief statement of the facts leading up to the execution of the said instrument and of the subsequent dealings between the parties.

The plaintiff testified that he had been engaged for about ten years in the business of selling investment securities, and that, in 1916, he secured a contract from the Samson Sieve-Grip Tractor Company (hereinafter called the Samson Company) under the terms of which he was to endeavor to sell $150,000 worth of the capital stock of the company on a 10 per cent. commission basis. On September 20, 1916, plaintiff presented to defendant a "form" letter of introduction from J. M. Kroyer, president of the Samson Company, and endeavored to interest defendant in the purchase of stock. Plaintiff had previously suggested to Mr. Kroyer the advisability of establishing a manufacturing plant in the Middle West. In the course of the conversation with defendant, plaintiff mentioned the matter of building a factory in the Middle West. Defendant said that he had just returned from Michigan and that he had a friend there who was desirous of entering into a contract for the agency of some tractor company. Plaintiff testified:

> "I told Mr. Nims at this time, 'Mr. Nims, I feel that I can get a contract from the Samson Company if I had some man with me who was financially responsible,' that I knew that the Samson Company would not give me a contract because I did not have the means to carry out the idea that I had, and asked him if he was, * * * and he said that he was, that he would go as strong as $40,000."

Plaintiff said that defendant requested him to take the matter up with the Samson people, which he did, with the result that on September 26, 1916, the Samson Company addressed to plaintiff a letter in which it was stated that at a directors' meeting it was decided to enter into such an agreement if satisfactory arrangements could be made. The letter also made tentative proposals for the execution of a contract. Plaintiff immediately submitted this letter to defendant, its terms were discussed, and defendant suggested that plaintiff write a counter proposal, which he did. During this conversation, plaintiff said:

> "Mr. Nims, would you mind signing some kind of a simple agreement that in case anything happened to us, you having the contract in your name as we have discussed it, I will have something to show that I have an interest therein?"

Defendant replied: "Certainly." Plaintiff prepared the Keyes-Nims contract and it was signed by defendant. The witness testified that in several conversations he had with defendant they had talked generally about how the matter should be financed. He testified:

> "I stated to Mr. Nims that I didn't have money enough at that time hardly to pay the expenses incurred in the sale of this stock, and that I would have to wait before I could put in any money until such time as I had sold that stock and derived the commissions therefrom."

Plaintiff showed defendant a copy of his commission contract with the Samson Company, and witness stated that defendant said:

> "That he was willing to finance me until such time as I got in returns from the sale of this stock."

A contract between the Samson Company and defendant was drawn up, and plaintiff said he had four or five interviews with defendant in which its terms were discussed by them. The contract was executed on October 23, 1916. By its terms defendant was given the right to erect one or more plants and to sell tractors in certain designated territory in the United States and Canada. Certain payments by defendant to the company were specified, the first being $2,500 to be paid upon the signing of the contract.

Plaintiff testified that, about the 15th of October, 1916, defendant said to him that he (defendant) had a friend, of the name of Mr. Clarke, whom he had taken the liberty to invite into the proposition. Two or three days later a meeting was held at the Hotel Stockton at which were present plaintiff, defendant, and C. D. Clarke. As to what then occurred plaintiff testified:

> "There was a general discussion regarding different methods that we should finance this company in the Middle West, and Mr. Nims told Mr. Clarke, in so many words, that I would receive from the sale of the stock of the Samson Company something over $10,000; * * * I had a 10 per cent. contract to sell $150,000 worth of stock. I replied that was true, and followed that up by stating that I would be perfectly willing, when that stock was sold and I would receive my money from it, to put in any amount that would be agreed upon by us gentlemen at a later date, five or ten thousand dollars. * * * Mr. Nims stated to Mr. Clarke that he had to take care of me until such time as I sold the stock * * * Mr. Clarke suggested that he would come in with us and put up his third and send a check in a few days. Mr. Nims said, 'Well, boys, I am going through with it anyway.' Mr. Clarke says, 'Be assured in a few days I am going to come in.' * * * During this conversation no mention was made of the contract between Mr. Nims and myself."

It further appears, and the court found, that on or about October 17, 1916, and prior to the obtaining of the royalty contract from the Samson Sieve-Grip Tractor Company, the plaintiff and defendant, by mutual consent, both offered to C. D. Clarke one-sixth of their respective interests, that said Clarke accepted said offer, and that thereupon the interests of said partnership and its assets of said Clarke, plaintiff and defendant were equal, each acquiring a one-third thereof; "that, during the month of January, 1917, defendant, without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff, agreed to return to said Clarke all moneys which he had theretofore advanced towards the aforesaid partnership business and in return therefor the said Clarke agreed without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff to assign to defendant his one-third interest in and to said partnership and its assets;" that during the month of April, 1917, the said agreement between said Clarke and the defendant was consummated in accordance with the terms thereof; and that thereupon the said Clarke ceased to have any interest in said partnership or its assets.

On or about April 3, 1917, defendant sold to the Samson Company his royalty contract with the company and received the sum of $22,500. When plaintiff learned of this fact, he asked defendant what he was "to get out of it," to which defendant replied, "You don't get a thing."

Upon an accounting, subsequent to the trial, it was stipulated that defendant received $22,500; he was credited with $2,500, the payment made by him on account of the contract, and $574.20, disbursements made by him, leaving net proceeds in his hands of $19,425.80. Plaintiff waived all claims for expenses and disbursements made by him, and the judgment in his favor was for one-third of said $19,425.80.

It is proper to say and briefly to show herein that the defendant's version of the transaction between him and the plaintiff was, in material particulars, wholly at variance with that of the latter. The defendant testified: That, at the time of the conference at the Hotel Stockton, it was understood that he and plaintiff owned the contract jointly. "I guess," he continued, "there is no question as to Mr. Keyes being a partner up to that time. Mr. Clarke understood it so; so did I." Referring to conversations leading up to the execution of the Keyes-Nims contract, witness said plaintiff told him "that he had a contract with the Samson Company by which he would make $15,000, and, outside of a thousand he wanted to pay on his house, he could put the entire balance into the business"; that as the expenses accrued each was to put in his share of the money. The witness said that he told plaintiff that Mr. Clarke was desirous of coming into the business; that plaintiff consented to Clarke coming in and "said we would divide it three ways, that we would each put up $833.33, which would have to be paid to the Samson Company within two or three days." as to the meeting at the Hotel Stockton, which defendant said was on October 17th, he testified:

> "It was discussed that we would raise a fund of either five or ten thousand dollars each as a nucleus upon which to start our new plant. Mr. Clarke said, 'Mr. Keyes, are you ready to put up this money?' Mr. Keyes says, 'Yes, I will put up my money right off, right away.' * * * I said, 'Whether either one of you go in or not, I have decided I am going to take on this contract.' Mr. Clarke said, 'Any one who doesn't put up his money doesn't get in.' Mr. Keyes said that was agreeable to him. He sanctioned that."

Clarke and defendant each paid $1,250 of the first payment of $2,500 to the Samson Company.

C. D. Clarke testified, regarding the meeting at the Hotel Stockton, as follows:

> "We discussed the financing of the contract with the Samson Company. I said: 'Boys, I am going to pay this money anyhow; I am going to take care of the contract.' And we each agreed to pay our share at once; that is to say, I agreed and Mr. Keyes agreed. I said, 'I will take one-third of it.' Mr. Keyes said he would pay one-third of it. The matter of failure to pay was brought up, and I said, 'Who fails drops out.' Mr. Keyes said, 'That is O. K.'"

The witness said that defendant did not say at the meeting that he would carry plaintiff for his share of the money that was to be paid upon the Samson Company contract.

[1] But, in determining whether the findings of the court are supported, we are required only to look to the testimony presented by the plaintiff, and, if sufficient, we may disregard, in such consideration, any adverse showing made by the defendant. It cannot be doubted that the testimony of the plaintiff amply supports all the vital findings made by the trial court; hence, the following must be regarded and accepted as the established facts of the case: That the Keyes-Nims agreement, as given above, was made and entered into by and between the plaintiff and the defendant; that the intention of the parties, as expressed or contemplated by said agreement, was, according to an admission by the defendant, to enter into copartnership with respect to all dealings and contracts which they might have or enter into with the Samson Sieve-Grip Tractor Company, and that they were each to have an equal interest in such dealings and contracts; that, after the said agreement had been made, one Clarke was invited to enter as a third party into the agreement, and upon the consent of the plaintiff as well as that of the defendant did join the two latter in the proposed arrangement as a party thereto; that Clarke and the defendant advanced their respective proportions of the aggregate amount of money required to carry out the agreement; and that the defendant agreed to advance the plaintiff's part thereof upon the agreement and understanding that the plaintiff, upon receiving certain moneys he had in prospect, would repay the defendant the money so advanced for plaintiff.

The theory of the respondent, and the complaint proceeds upon that theory, is that the relation between the plaintiff and the defendant as produced by the agreement was that of a partnership; and the court below so decided. Counsel further contends, however, that if, strictly, the relation so produced was not that of a partnership, it certainly was that of a joint adventure.

[2] It is obvious that the agreement, as originally formed, contemplated that there should be a division between the plaintiff and the defendant of the profits derived from the business or enterprise in which they agreed to jointly engage, and to this extent the relation created between them by the agreement bears the earmarks of a partnership, which, as defined by our Code, is "the association of two or more persons, for the purpose of carrying on business together, and dividing its profits between them." Civ. Code, § 2395. On the other hand, the agreement related to a single transaction, viz., the procurement of a contract from the Samson Company whereby the plaintiff and defendant would be permitted and authorized to erect one or more plants and to sell said company's tractors in certain designated territory in the United States and Canada; the plaintiff and the defendant, as seen, to share equally in said contract and the profits accruing therefrom. It is said by the authorities that one of the distinctions differentiating a partnership from a joint adventure lies in the fact that, while a partnership is ordinarily formed for the transaction of a general business of a particular kind, a joint adventure relates to a single transaction, although the latter may comprehend a business to be continued for a period of years. It is also said that another feature distinguishing a partnership from a joint adventure is the fact that a corporation incapable of becoming a partner may bind itself by contract for a joint adventure, the purposes of which are within those of the corporation. 23 Cyc. p. 453. There are other features which differentiate the two relations, among which may be mentioned the element of principal and agent which inheres in the partnership relation, each partner embracing the character both of a principal and agent, being the former when he acts for himself in the partnership. Story on Partnership, § 1; Jackson v. Hooper, 76 N. J. Eq. 185, 74 Atl. 130, 135. In a joint adventure, no one of the parties thereto can bind the joint adventure.

[3-5] But there is a considerable amount of law upon this subject, the discussion of which here may well be regarded as academic, since it is a matter of absolutely no consequence, so far as the decision of this case is concerned, whether the relation created between the parties to this action is that of a partnership or a joint adventure, or a limited partnership, which we are inclined to believe it to be; for it is held by the cases that the resemblance between a partnership and a joint adventure is so close that the rights as between adventurers are governed practically by the same rules that govern partnerships. 15 Rul. Case Law, p. 500. Accordingly, a joint adventurer, as a partner in a partnership may do, may sue in equity for an accounting of the profits flowing from the joint adventure. It is true that one party in a joint adventure may sue the other at law for a breach of the contract or a share of the profits or losses or a contribution for advances made in excess of his share, as where the adventure has been closed and a party thereto is entitled to a sum certain as his share of the adventure; but the right thus to sue at law does not preclude a suit in equity for an accounting. Rul. Case Law, p. 507.

[6] The complaint here proceeds, as we have stated, upon the theory that the agreement between the parties involved the establishment of a partnership relation, and the court's decision was according to that theory, the interlocutory judgment decreeing a dissolution of "said partnership" that plaintiff is entitled to one-third of the net profits realized from "said partnership business," and that plaintiff have an accounting of said "partnership business" to determine the amount of said net profits, etc. Conceding that it is difficult to determine with accuracy from the pleaded facts and the evidence, or the agreement itself, whether the relation created by said agreement was a partnership or a joint adventure relation, still it is, of course, plain that either one or the other of those relations is thus disclosed, and, since the enforcement of the rights of the parties may be accomplished by or through the agency of remedies applicable and pertinent alike to both relations, it is, as above suggested, a matter of no consequence here whether the relation between the parties be that of a partnership or that of a joint adventure. An accounting and a termination of the relation in either case may be had in a proceeding appropriate to such relief in a court of equity (Jackson v. Hooper, supra), and therefore, if we assume that the relation between the parties was that of a joint adventure rather than that of a partnership, the decree herein comes as clearly within the issues made by the pleadings as though the complaint had specifically alleged that the agreement was a joint adventure. It follows that, whether the relation between the parties was that of a partnership or that of a joint adventure, the evidence, is, upon its face, sufficient to have warranted the court below in finding and adjudging, as it did find and adjudge, that the plaintiff was entitled to one-third of the profits realized from the joint enterprise which was the subject of the agreement between him and the defendant and to an accounting for the purpose of determining the extent or amount of such profits.

The second point made by the appellant is that the original partnership, if such it was, whereby the plaintiff and the defendant associated themselves together for the purpose of securing the contract referred to in their written agreement, was never "launched"—that is, the partnership as then formed at no time proceeded to or did carry out the purposes for which it was organized.

The position of appellant with respect to that proposition may perhaps the better be stated in the language of his brief, viz.:

> "In the case at bar, the terms of the two contracts were inconsistent. There were two parties to the Keyes-Nims agreement. There were three parties to the Clarke agreement. Nothing was said in the Keyes-Nims agreement as to what amount of money each of the parties was to advance, or when. A condition precedent to obtaining an interest in the Clarke agreement was the payment of $833.33 forthwith by each party who desired to 'come in.' Everything done by appellant in protecting the Samson contract, and subsequently disposing of said contract, was in pursuance of the Clarke agreement. After giving Keyes a reasonable time within which to advance his $833.33, as stipulated in the Clarke agreement, he no longer considered that Keyes had an interest in the project. If Keyes had intended to rely on the original Keyes-Nims agreement, he should have declined to accept the three-cornered proposition made at the conference at the Hotel Stockton on October 17, 1916."

This position involves an attack upon the findings that the interests of plaintiff and defendant in "such partnership, as originally formed," were equal, each being entitled to three-sixths interest, and that on or about October 17, 1916, and prior to the procurement of the royalty contract from the Samson Company, "plaintiff and defendant, by mutual consent, both offered to C. D. Clarke one-sixth of their respective interests"; that Clarke accepted said offer; and that thereupon each of the parties to the agreement, plaintiff, defendant, and Clarke, owned a one-third interest "in said partnership" and its assets. It also involves the question whether there is a variance between the plaintiff's pleading and the proof; that is to say, whether the agreement declared upon by plaintiff is the agreement proved.

It is argued that, when Clarke was admitted into the partnership or association, upon the terms then agreed upon, viz. that each should contribute an equal amount to finance the concern, an entirely new contract was made which superseded and abrogated the original agreement between plaintiff and defendant; that, Keyes having failed to pay his proportion of the amount which it was then agreed would be necessary to carry out the purpose of the association, he forfeited whatever rights he might have acquired in the new arrangement or agreement.

As has been shown, the plaintiff testified and the court found that when the agreement between him and the defendant was entered into it was agreed that he was to share equally in the profits and that the defendant promised and agreed to advance for plaintiff his share of the expenses of the venture or partnership and also any other sums of money which might become due from plaintiff to the partnership, "until such time as plaintiff would be financially able to reimburse defendant for such advances." The plaintiff testified, as seen, that such was also the understanding and agreement between him and defendant at the time Clarke was brought into the arrangement or agreement.

[7] It is clear that, so far as plaintiff's right to a share of the profits realized from the enterprise is concerned, it is immaterial whether it be true or not that the circumstance of admitting Clarke into the association or partnership worked a new agreement which superseded and abrogated the original agreement between Keyes and Nims. The original agreement by Nims that he would advance whatever sums of money that might become due to the partnership from Keyes was reaffirmed by him at the time Clarke entered into the agreement as a party thereto. Moreover, Clarke was admitted into the partnership, if such it was, upon the consent and agreement of the plaintiff as well as that of the defendent; hence, if it was a new agreement, it was one which was made by all the parties, including the plaintiff. But, if the effect of the original agreement was to create a partnership relation between Keyes and Nims, as we believe it was, the fact of the taking of Clarke into such partnership did not constitute the making of such an agreement as would operate to supersede and abrogate the original agreement between Keyes and Nims. The situation, upon Clarke entering the partnership, was simply this: That Keyes and Nims had entered into an agreement of partnership for carrying on a certain designated business, and, before carrying out the purpose of the agreement, took into the partnership, already so established and formed, another party as a partner therein. There was nothing in the terms of the so-called "new agreement" different from those of the agreement between Keyes and Nims, except that said parties disposed of certain of their interests to the new partner and entered into an understanding that each of the three should contribute equally to the financing of the enterprise, should share equally in the profits accruing therefrom, and bear equally the burdens thereof. In fact, no more can be said of the effect of taking Clarke into the partnership than that it was either a qualification of the original agreement, to which Keyes as well as Nims actually subscribed, whereby another partner was taken in and the terms more definitely specified, or that it was merely an agreement subsidiary or ancillary to the original.

The cases cited by appellant are not in point here because the facts thereof are materially variant from those of this case. For instance, in the case of Black v. Hunter, 169 Cal. 632, 147 Pac. 463, cited by appellant, the original agreement, which involved a combination or association of the parties thereto for the purpose of effectuating a sale of particular tracts of land to the county of Los Angeles, to be used by the county for the erection thereon of a hall of records, had been entirely abandoned by the parties after a futile effort by them to make a sale of the properties. If appears that the parties to said agreement were one Hunter and the appellant Black, who, having learned that Rowan & Co., real estate brokers, had other lands which they were trying to sell to the county, to be used for the same purpose, took said Rowan & Co. in with them and made them parties to their agreement; the purpose being to put an end to the rival proposition of said brokers. It was this agreement that was abandoned because of a failure to make the sale. Subsequently Hunter and Rowan & Co. entered into a contract whereby they agreed between themselves to secure the right to sell the same lands to the county and, if successful, to divide equally between themselves the commissions realized from the sale. The sale was effected by them, and they received the stipulated commissions, whereupon Black, who was not a party to the second agreement, brought suit to recover a share of the commissions, claiming:

> That "the first contract was one of copartnership; that the second was not a substitute for it, but merely took Rowan & Co. into the transaction as an agent of the copartnership; and therefore the cancellation of the second contract (and appellants admit that it is no longer in existence) did not abrogate the original agreement of copartnership."

The Supreme Court, through Mr. Justice Melvin, held that the finding that the tripartite agreement had been terminated by the parties themselves and said agreement abandoned was fully sustained by the evidence. And even if, as the appellant in that case contended, the original agreement had not been abrogated by the subsequent or tripartite agreement but was a part of the latter, the abandonment and cancellation of the tripartite agreement by all three parties thereto would necessarily have involved the abandonment and cancellation by said parties of the original agreement.

But be that as it may, in this case there was not an abandonment of the original agreement, by the acts of the parties themselves, as was true in the case above considered, nor was there any evidence or pretense that the agreement to which Clarke became a party was independent of any and all consideration of the original contract. Keyes had conceived and proposed the scheme to Nims, who, in writing, agreed with the former to enter upon its consummation with him upon the understanding that they should share equally in the profits resulting from it. Nims suggested to Keyes the advisability of "taking in Clarke" because the latter was able to assist in financing the proposed enterprise, and in taking him in, both Keyes and Nims acted with reference to and in view of the agreement between them as originally formed. They, in other words, merely brought Clarke into their agreement, as originally formed, as a party thereto with themselves. Indeed, there was nothing to take Clarke in on but the agreement, for the business itself to which the agreement related had not been started or even the facilities for its operation obtained at that time.

The other cases cited by the appellant in their facts bear no nearer analogy to the instant case than does the case of Black v. Hunter, above considered. The principles discussed in those cases are therein soundly applied, but the facts to which they are therein applied are entirely different from those with which we are here confronted.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

HART, J. [8] In his petition for a rehearing the appellant calls our attention to the fact that, in our original opinion, we overlooked the proposition urged by him in the briefs that the court below erred in allowing the plaintiff interest on the latter's share of the amount for which the defendant sold the royalty contract with the Samson Company. The failure to consider the question of interest was purely an oversight, and, as it is an important question herein, it should have been considered; but we do not see the necessity of granting a rehearing for that purpose, and we will therefore consider and dispose of the point on this application without ordering a rehearing.

Counsel for appellant take the position that the demand declared upon by the plaintiff was uncertain or unliquidated, and that therefore it was error to include in the judgment against appellant interest on the amount awarded the plaintiff from the date of the sale and the payment of the money to appellant, which was April 3, 1917. In support of this position there are cited many California cases, of which the leading ones are: Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 18 Pac. 100, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164; Easterbrook v. Farquharson, 110 Cal. 311, 42 Pac. 811; and Edwards v. Arp, 173 Cal. 476, 160 Pac. 551.

The reason for the denial of interest on unliquidated demands is said to be "that the person liable does not know what sum he owes, and therefore can be in no default for not paying." Cox v. McLaughlin, supra. But it is further said in that case:

> "We are not prepared to say, in general terms, that no interest in any case can be recovered in an action upon contract for an unliquidated demand. Mix v. Miller, 57 Cal. 356, decided since the adoption of the Code, and McFadden v. Crawford [39 Cal. 662], decided previously, attest the doctrine that in this state interest is allowable on such demands under some circumstances. These were cases in which the contract had been fully performed by the creditors, the fruits thereof accepted by the debtors without objection and they were clearly in default and in the latter case the only question was as to value." (Italics ours.)

This language is approvingly adopted into the opinion in Easterbrook v. Farquharson, 110 Cal. 317, 42 Pac. 811, supra.

In the case of Robinson v. American Fish Co., 17 Cal. App. 212, 220, 119 Pac. 388, 391, the defendant had agreed with the plaintiff and a number of assignees of the latter to purchase fish from them, to be delivered to the defendant in the city of San Francisco. Action was brought by plaintiff to recover the aggregate sum of $815.60, which amount represented the demands of the plaintiff and his several assignees for fish delivered by them to defendant. The court awarded judgment to plaintiff in the total sum sued for, together with interest thereon at the legal rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the date of the delivery of the fish. In that case, on appeal, it was strenuously insisted that the demands declared upon were unliquidated, and that the trial court therefore erred in allowing interest from the date of the delivery of the fish. There was a dispute therein as to whether the price agreed upon for the fish was a cent and a half or two cents per pound. This court, disposing of the question of interest in that case, said:

> "There is no merit in the contention that the plaintiff was not entitled to interest on the several pleaded claims from the 23d day of October, 1910—the day on which the fish mentioned in the complaint were sold and delivered to appellant. The quantity of fish sold to and received by appellant and the price to be paid therefor were definitely fixed and known to appellant. It was not necessary, in other words, to resort to evidence in court or to an accounting or by an accord between the parties to establish the amount due. To the contrary, the amount was susceptible of ascertainment by simple computation. Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164, 18 Pac. 100, and cases therein cited; Easterbrook v. Farquharson, 110 Cal. 311, 317, 42 Pac. 811; Courtney v. Standard Box Co., 16 Cal. App. 600, 117 Pac. 778. Indeed, there seems to have been no dispute as to the quantity of fish delivered to appellant by Meng, and while there was some controversy involving the price per pound which Junta agreed to pay therefor—that is, whether the price agreed upon was a cent and a half or two cents per pound—still the total amount due at either price was capable of ready ascertainment by mere computation, and therefore required no accounting to reach the precise sum due. As is said in Courtney v. Standard Box Co., 16 Cal. App. 600, 117 Pac. 778, so it is true here: 'Whether interest has been allowed upon the theory that compensation is thus awarded plaintiff for the use of his money, past due (section 1917, Civ. Code), or as damages for defendant's (appellant's) wrongful withholding of said money from plaintiff (section 3287, Civ. Code), in either case the allowance was perfectly proper.' "

(We also call special attention to the Courtney Case, cited above in the Robinson Case.) It should be stated that a petition for a hearing of the Robinson Case by the Supreme Court after judgment by this court was denied.

The comparatively recent case of Howard v. Hobson Co., 176 Pac. 715, was an action by one broker against another to recover one-half of the amount in excess of that for which certain real estate was to be sold for the owner; an agreement having been entered into by and between the brokers whereby they were to divide equally between themselves such excess amount. Judgment went for the plaintiff, with legal interest from the date of the sale of the property by the other broker. The evidence disclosed that the expenses incident to the negotiation and consummation of the sale of the property were to be deducted from the amount which the brokers were to receive as their compensation for effecting the sale. The contention on appeal in that case as to interest was, among other objections urged against the allowance of interest, that the demand sued on was unliquidated, and that, consequently, interest was not allowable prior to the date of the entry of judgment. That contention was rejected, and, among other things, this court said:

> "As above stated, the moment that the sale of the ranch was fully effected and completed by the defendant, that moment the latter became indebted to the plaintiff in an amount equal to one-half of the net sum received by the defendant over and above that paid for the property to the owner of the ranch; and at that moment of time the amount due the plaintiff became certain and definite or capable of becoming readily so by the simplest of arithmetical calculation by the defendant of the difference between the 'excess amount' and the amount of the expense which it was necessary for it to incur to negotiate and consummate the sale. The defendant, of course, knew precisely what the expense of selling the ranch amounted to, and, of course, knew the 'excess amount' received by him from the sale over the purchase price. The amount due the plaintiff, therefore, constituted, within the meaning of the law, a liquidated demand."

The Supreme Court, it should be remarked, denied a hearing in that case after judgment in this court.

[9] In the present case the defendant, according to the findings, which are sufficiently supported, became indebted to the plaintiff in the sum to which the latter was entitled as a partner the moment that he (defendant) sold the royalty contract and received the money therefor. The plaintiff, it is true, sued for one-half of the amount received by the defendant for the royalty contract, while the court awarded him one-third of the amount only. But this did not make the demand uncertain or unliquidated. The defendant, it appears, at all times had control and management of the enterprise. He knew whether Clarke had or had not paid over his share of the amount agreed upon as the necessary total amount to launch the enterprise. The plaintiff appears to have had very little knowledge of what was going on in the prosecution of the ends of the copartnership, and it is probable, having heard that Clarke had withdrawn from the concern, that he sued on the theory that Clarke had never paid over his share of the working capital of the firm, and was therefore, as a matter of fact, never a partner, and hence conceived that he was entitled to one-half of the profits of the enterprise, or of the amount for which the defendant sold the royalty contract. But whether the defendant was entitled to one-half of the amount received for the royalty contract or to one-third only is entirely immaterial, so far as the question of interest is concerned. The defendant knew, as we may assume from the findings, that the plaintiff had an interest in the partnership. What that interest was was a disputed question between them, but it was either a one-half or a one-third interest. As to this, then, the only question to be determined was as to the extent of the plaintiff's interest. Whether it was found to be one-half or only one-third, in either case the demand was certain, definite, and liquidated.

The cases holding that interest is not allowable are where the demand is based upon a quantum valebat or a quantum meruit, in which it must be determined upon the evidence what the amount is, or where the amount of the demand must be determined by an accounting or by an examination of numerous accounts and counterclaims. This is not such a case, as we have shown. As stated, the amount of the demand here was ascertainable by a mere determination of the question whether the plaintiff's interest was one-half or only one-third in the partnership, and the defendant himself, if he knew the plaintiff had any interest at all, knew whether it was the one or the other. Therefore, when we consider the reason upon which is founded the rule that, generally speaking, interest will not be allowed on an unliquidated demand prior to the date of the entry of judgment therefor, viz., "that the person liable does not know what sum he owes, and therefore can be in no default for not paying," we readily perceive that the demand sued on here does not come within that rule; that is, that it is not unliquidated in the sense that interest is not payable upon it from the date the money was received by defendant.

The case of Easterbrook v. Farquharson, supra, cited by the appellant, was where the plaintiff leased to the defendant's assignor certain real property, upon which the lessor was to and did erect a building, under an agreement that on the last day of the term of the lease the lessor would pay the lessee two-thirds of the appraised value of the building, to be ascertained by three appraisers, one of whom was to be selected by the lessor, one by the lessee, and the third by the two so selected. The two appraisers appointed by the parties failed to select a third, and themselves failed to agree upon the value of the building. Some six months thereafter, nothing further having been done in the matter of the appraisement of the value of the building, although the lessor and lessee in the meantime had considerable negotiations looking to an adjustment of the matter, the lessor brought suit, setting forth the facts and the impracticability of securing an appraisement by the scheme agreed upon by him and the lessee, averring his readiness at all times to pay the defendant (lessee) two-thirds of the cash value of the building, and asking the court to determine the value of the building at the date of the termination of the lease, and so fix the amount due from him to defendant. The trial court found the value of the building, and, while in its findings it did not fix upon the plaintiff or his appraiser the responsibility for failure to agree upon an appraisement, nevertheless allowed interest on the amount found to represent the value of the building from the date of the termination of the lease. The Supreme Court held that the allowance of interest from the date of the termination of the lease was erroneous, and said:

"To entitle respondent to interest as damages he must bring himself within the terms of section 3287 of the Civil Code. That section awards interest to every person who is entitled to recover damages, certain, or capable of being made certain, by calculation, where the right of recovery is vested in him upon a particular day. But damages are the compensation for the unlawful act or omission of another (Civ. Code. § 3281), and, as has been said, appellant had been guilty of no wrong. He went into court asking a settlement of his account with respondent, and under section 1917 of the Civil Code the sum bore interest only from the day of its judicial ascertainment."

It is plainly manifest that the above case is not in point here, and is no authority against the allowance of interest in the present case from the date the right of recovery was vested in the plaintiff, which was the time when the defendant received the money for the royalty contract.

It is not necessary to review the case of Edwards v. Arp, 173 Cal. 476, 160 Pac. 551, supra, also cited by appellant in the petition; it being only necessary to say that in its facts it presents an entirely different situation upon the question of interest from that we find here.

[10] The appellant further asks in his petition that the case be reopened for a further review of questions considered in the original opinion. We are satisfied with the views expressed and the conclusion announced in the former opinion as to the legal nature of the agreement between the parties hereto and the effect of making Clarke a party to said contract. We may repeat, though, what we have already said, that we do not consider that the contract sued on is at variance with the one proved. The fact merely is, according to the result reached by the trial court from the proofs, that the plaintiff sued upon the theory that he had a larger interest in a partnership than he in fact was entitled to. Thus the situation is the same as where a party sues for a certain sum alleged to be due under a contract with the defendant, but the proof shows that he is entitled to judgment for a less sum than that demanded by his complaint. Such a result, of course, does not mean that the plaintiff sued on one contract and proved and recovered on another.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

MORGAN et al. v. DIBBLE et al. (Civ. 2987.)

1. TRIAL 🔑398—INCONSISTENT FINDINGS IN SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE SUIT.

In action for specific performance of contract for sale of land, a finding that the purchase price was excessive, and the contract inequitable, was fatally inconsistent with a finding that purchasers had received adequate consideration for agreement, and that agreement was just and reasonable.

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE 🔑49(2)—UNREASONABLENESS OF CONTRACT BECAUSE OF EXCESSIVE PURCHASE PRICE.

Under Civ. Code, § 3391, contract for sale of land providing for an excessive purchase price, and being therefore inequitable, will not be specifically enforced; since specific performance will not be granted unless contract was just and reasonable and the consideration adequate.

3. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE 🔑128(1)—GRANT OF DAMAGES UPON DENYING PERFORMANCE.

Where contract for sale of land was valid but inequitable, equity in refusing to grant specific performance, because contract was not just and reasonable and the consideration adequate, cannot grant vendor damages for expenses incurred in order to fulfill their part of contract; since equity has no right to afford relief unless case is one for equitable interposition.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑330—EXPENSES NOT RECOVERABLE FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT BY VENDEE.

Under Civ. Code, § 3307, expenses incurred by vendors in order to perform their part of the contract are not recoverable items of damages for breach of contract by vendee.

5. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE 🔑28(2) — DENIAL WARRANTED BY UNCERTAINTY OF CONTRACT.

Contract for sale of land providing for assumption by purchaser of mortgages on land, but being uncertain as to the property included in the mortgages, the parties to whom and by whom executed, whether already executed or to be executed, the terms of the notes or other evidence of indebtedness to be given, if any, the matter of partial payments, and whether mortgages did actually or were to date from the date of their execution, or from the date of the contract, held so uncertain as to warrant denial of specific performance.

6. COVENANTS 🔑3—UNCERTAINTY OF PROVISION AS TO RIGHT OF WAY.

Provision of land contract that vendors shall "give a right of way for a pipe line from Fifth street over the eastern boundary of five-acre lot 3" held so indefinite as to amount to no covenant at all.

7. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑50 — ESCROW INSTRUCTIONS NOT PART OF ORIGINAL LAND CONTRACT.

Instrument prepared by title company with whom deeds were to be left in escrow, consisting of instructions to the company and not signed by vendor until after expiration of period within which the contract could be consummated, and after vendors had withdrawn their deed and certificate of title from the escrow, was not a separate agreement of sale or a supplemental part of the first agreement.

8. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE 🔑94—FINDING OF COURT AS TO ABILITY OF VENDORS TO PERFORM ERRONEOUS.

Where mortgage on land was not for term provided in agreement, and where land was subject to public easements, which could not be removed, and where vendors executed a lease on the property extending beyond the time when the property was to be exchanged for that of purchasers, court was not warranted in finding, in vendor's action for specific performance, that vendors had performed, or were in a position to perform, all the terms of the contract.

9. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑143—PURCHASER'S KNOWLEDGE OF EASEMENTS ON LAND NOT A WAIVER.

Where land contract required vendors to furnish good title, except as to specified incumbrances, as a condition of the sale, even actual knowledge by purchasers of public easements upon land, which could not be removed, would not be deemed, while contract remained executory, to imply a waiver of substantial fulfillment of the condition of title.

10. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑119 — PURCHASER'S RIGHT TO RESCIND ON INABILITY TO FURNISH GOOD TITLE.

Where vendors agreed to furnish good title as a condition of the sale, but could not comply therewith because of public servitudes upon land, which could not be removed, purchasers were entitled to rescind contract at any time; the title being incurably defective by reason of the public servitudes.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by Joseph B. Morgan and others against Horace P. Dibble and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Leroy A. Wright and Thomas D. McLean, both of San Diego, for appellants.

Henry A. Hunter, of Long Beach, for respondents.

WASTE, P. J. This is an action to revise and specifically perform an agreement for the sale and purchase, or, more properly speaking, an exchange, of real estate, and for damages, in the event specific performance cannot be had. Plaintiffs, so they allege, agreed to sell, and the defendants agreed to buy, a tract of land in Imperial county, and certain shares of stock of Imperial Water Company, No. 1, located on said land and appurtenant thereto, for the sum of $30,700. As part payment of the purchase price the defendants agreed to convey to plaintiffs real property in San Diego county, which plaintiffs agreed to accept at the mutually agreed price of $6,000. As another part payment of the purchase price defendants agreed to assume a first mortgage of $5,000, payable on or before August 1, 1914, with interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually, which plaintiffs agreed to execute upon the Imperial county property. As the balance of the purchase price the defendants agreed to assume a second mortgage on the same property, made payable to Bert Morgan, one of the plaintiffs, in the sum of $19,700, payable on or before 10 years from date, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent., payable semiannually.

The contract was to be performed within 60 days from its date.

The contract contained a stipulation that the Imperial valley ranch should be free and clear of all incumbrances, other than the two mortgages just noted, except the last installment of taxes for the fiscal year 1914–15. In this connection plaintiffs alleged in their complaint that, at the time of the execution of the contract, it was mutually agreed and understood that the Imperial county property should be conveyed by the plaintiffs subject to rights of way then existing thereon, but that, through inadvertence and mistake, the agreement failed to so express the true agreement of the parties.

The plaintiffs alleged their readiness and ability, at all times, and full performance on their part, but that defendants had refused to comply with the terms of the agreement; that the consideration for the agreement was adequate, and the same was, as to the defendants, just and reasonable. The defendants, answering, admitted the execution of the agreement, but denied that it constituted a valid contract of sale; denied that the right of way clause was the result of mistake or inadvertence; denied performance on the part of the plaintiffs; and denied that the consideration for the agreement as to them was adequate, or that the contract was reasonable or just. It was alleged in the answer that the minds of the parties never met, in the execution of the agreement; that it had been abrogated by other proposals and offers, never accepted by defendants; that plaintiffs by their acts had worked a rescission of the contract, which, it was further alleged, had been obtained by fraud, and misrepresentation, as to the value of the Imperial valley ranch, the character and nature of its surface, and of its soil, and its adaptability for irrigation and subdivision purposes.

The trial court found that the contract of sale was made, as alleged by plaintiffs, and that subsequently an agreement supplemental to and a part of the original contract was entered into by the parties. In its findings it construed the two agreements together and thereafter refers to them as the "agreements." This supplemental agreement will be referred to hereafter as the "escrow instructions." The court made no finding on the issue raised by the pleadings as to the mistake alleged to have been made in the original contract relative to the rights of way, but did find that the assent of the defendants to the agreements was not obtained by the misrepresentation of the plaintiffs, nor under the influence of any mistake. It further found that the plaintiffs had performed, or offered to perform, all on their part to be done, and that they at all times had been ready, willing, and able to so do, but that defendants had on their part refused. The sufficiency of the evidence to support these findings will be considered later.

[1] Continuing, the court found that—

> "Defendants herein have received an adequate consideration for said agreements, and that said agreements were, and now are, as to said defendants, just and reasonable."

After other declaration of facts, the court then finds:

> "That the land agreed to be sold, and purchased by said defendants, under said agreements, was, and is, worth a sum less than the sum of $30,000, as specified in said agreements, and that said price is excessive, and the contract inequitable, and that on account, and solely by reason thereof, specific performance should be denied to plaintiffs."

These findings are fatally inconsistent.

The court also found that plaintiffs, relying on the agreements entered into between themselves and defendants, had, "in order to fulfill their part of said contract, necessarily incurred certain expenses, as follows": certificate of title to their land, $150; commission for obtaining the loan, covered by the first mortgage to be assumed by defendants, $100; and for the agent's commission for making the sale, or exchange of the property, $1,200—all to their damage in the sum of $1,450. As conclusion of law the court found that plaintiffs were not entitled to specific performance, but were entitled to judgment against defendants, and each of them, for the sum of $1,450, and costs of suit. Such judgment was thereupon entered, and defendants appeal. No appearance was made in this court on the part of respondents, and no brief has been filed in their behalf, although the transcript on appeal was filed February 1, 1917, and appellant's opening brief was filed within 30 days thereafter, as required. Such palpable neglect on the part of those supposedly interested, in the matter in litigation, leads us to assume that they have no faith in the righteousness of the judgment secured by them in the lower court. Our examination of the record lends confirmation to this conclusion.

[2-4] The trial court having found that the land agreed to be sold to defendants was worth less than the sum agreed to be paid, and that the price of $30,000 was excessive, and the contract therefore inequitable, was correct in denying plaintiffs a decree in specific performance. Such a decree cannot be supported in the absence of a finding that the contract was just and reasonable, and the consideration adequate. Civ. Code, § 3391; Gibbons v. Yosemite Lumber Co., 172 Cal. 714, 716, 158 Pac. 196. Appellants contend that under the findings the court should not have awarded the plaintiffs damages. There are contracts, perfectly valid, which a court of equity will not set aside for any unfairness, but which are so unfair that specific performance will not be decreed. White v. Sage, 149 Cal. 613, 615, 87 Pac. 193. In such cases the party is left to his remedy at law. Agard v. Valencia, 39 Cal. 292, 302; Prince v. Lamb, 128 Cal. 128, 129, 60 Pac. 689. The right to pecuniary compensation in lieu of specific performance "assumes, of course, a sufficient contract, performance or an offer to perform by the plaintiff, and every other element requisite, on his part, to the cognizance of his case in chancery." Milkman v. Ordway, 106 Mass. 232, 254. There is no authority for holding that equity can grant damages unless some case of equitable relief is made out also, to which the damages would be applicable or subsidiary. Bourget v. Monroe, 58 Mich. 563, 566, 25 N. W. 814. An action to recover damages in lieu of specific performance lies not at law, but in equity, for the right to such damages depends upon the right to specific performance, and is not available until the latter is established. Cooley v. Lobdell, 153 N. Y. 596, 603, 47 N. E. 783. A court of equity will not grant pecuniary compensation, in lieu of specific performance, unless the case presented is one for equitable interposition. Marks v. Gates, 154 Fed. 481, 83 C. C. A. 321, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 317, 321, 12 Ann. Cas. 120. "In other words, the ancillary power to award compensatory damages can only be exercised in a case where the equitable relief prayed for might have been given." Clark v. Rosario Mining & Milling Co., 176 Fed. 180, 189, 99 C. C. A. 534, 543. Judgment for damages therefore, should not have been entered against the defendants. Furthermore, the items of the damages, included in the court's findings, as the basis for the judgment, do not fall within the provisions of section 3307 of the Civil Code, which provides the measure of damages caused by breach of an agreement to purchase an estate in real property.

[5] The original agreement of sale falls short of the requirements necessary to support an action in specific performance, which can only be granted when the contract is definite and certain. Meyer v. Lincoln Realty Co., 14 Cal. App. 756, 757, 113 Pac. 333; Minturn v. Baylis, 33 Cal. 129. It is not definite and certain in all its terms. The agreement provides that the defendants shall "assume a first mortgage of five thousand dollars due on or before five years from date, it being further understood that no payment shall be made on the principal until at least one year shall have elapsed, and any payment shall be made on any regular interest pay day. Interest on said $5,000 to be at the rate of 8 per cent. payable semiannually," and, further, the defendants shall "assume a second mortgage made payable to Bert Morgan of $19,700, payable on or before ten years from date interest payable at 7 per cent. per annum payable semiannually." While, as was said in Carr v. Howell, 154 Cal. 372, 378, 97 Pac. 885, 888, "the fact that mortgages sometimes, or even usually, contain other terms and covenants than those here prescribed, does not render the contract uncertain," we are of the opinion that there is such a dearth of facts in the contract here under consideration, relative to the property, included in the mortgages, the parties to whom and by whom executed, whether already executed or to be executed, the terms of the notes or other evidence of indebtedness, to be given, if any, the matter of partial payments, and whether said mortgages did actually or were to date from the date of their execution, or from the date of the contract, as to render the contract uncertain in that particular.

[6] The provision in the contract that the plaintiffs shall "give a right of way for a pipe line from Fifth street over the eastern boundary of five-acre lot 3" is so indefinite as to amount to no covenant at all. The further stipulation that "this agreement includes an option by which" plaintiffs "may purchase lot 6 of block 145 during the next six months for the sum of four thousand dollars to be deducted from the second mortgage," is likewise uncertain.

[7] The document which the parties direct the abstract company to use "as your instructions for this exchange" cannot in our judgment be considered as a separate agreement of sale, or a supplemental part of the first agreement. The instructions were prepared by the title company, according to the evidence of plaintiff J. B. Morgan, "for the purpose of carrying out the contract," and in express terms "relate back to date of August 1st to correspond with a certain agreement of sale and purchase made and entered into on said last-mentioned date between the parties hereto." They were not signed by respondent Joseph B. Morgan until some time after the expiration of the 60-day period within which the contract of sale, or exchange, could be consummated, and after the respondents had withdrawn their deed and certificate of title from the escrow. The respondents and he had utterly failed to reach an agreement respecting a number of matters connected with the transaction, which they had made subject to treaty and further negotiation after the signing of the original agreement. His object in signing the instructions appears to have been the result of a belated attempt to put defendants in default for failing, as plaintiffs at first contended, and alleged in their original complaint, to carry out the terms of the escrow instructions.

The plaintiffs abandoned all reliance on the escrow instructions, as a contract of sale, or exchange, very early in the case. In their amended complaint on which they went to trial they omitted all reference to it, and relied solely on the original agreement. During the trial they sought and secured its introduction in evidence in order "to show that the escrow instructions mention the rights of way, and that defendants had actual knowledge of their existence." It was not until the lower court intimated that it would grant the motion of defendants for a nonsuit, that plaintiffs asked and were granted permission, we think improperly, to set it up by an amendment to their complaint. From all the evidence the court should have granted the motion for the nonsuit.

[8] Appellants also contend that the finding of the lower court, that plaintiffs had performed, or were in position to perform, all the terms of the contract imposed on them, is not supported by the evidence, and that in fact plaintiffs could not perform, because of the following facts: That the first mortgage on the Imperial valley ranch executed by plaintiffs was not for the term provided in the agreement; that their land was subject to public easements which could not be removed; and that the plaintiffs executed a lease on the property extending beyond the time when the exchange was to be made. We think this contention of appellant must also be upheld.

After the respective parties had each visited and inspected the other's land, they met to discuss the details of the exchange. The agreement was there read and explained, "taking each line at a time." All parties being satisfied therewith, it was signed and deposited with an abstract company, together with certain escrow instructions, signed by all the parties, excepting Bert Morgan, one of the plaintiffs, who did not affix his signature thereto within the 60 days allowed for performance of the contract, and until long after a serious disagreement had arisen between the parties, and according to appellant, after there had been a mutual rescission of the contract. Plaintiffs also executed and deposited with the abstract company a first mortgage on their property for $5,000 in favor of one George Birkett, but payable in three instead of five years, as required in the contract. The trial court found, and the evidence satisfies us, that this departure from the original stipulation was agreed to by defendants.

[9, 10] In the original contract, as before stated, the stipulation relating to title to plaintiffs' property is that it is to "be free and clear of all other incumbrances" than the two mortgages specified and taxes for the fiscal year 1914-15. In the escrow agreement the stipulation is that it shall be free from all incumbrances other than taxes, and the mortgages provided for in the contract of sale except: "2. The rights of way for roads, ditches and canals now of record." About 10 acres of the land were shown by the evidence to be covered by rights of way for a railroad, a canal system, and county roads. Appellants contend that nowhere in the record does it appear that these rights of way were ever recorded. This appears to be so. Our examination and conclusion in this regard is confirmed by the statement of the lower court made during the trial. If the lower court, in deciding the case, was proceeding on the theory that the defendants had actual notice of these easements, it seems to have overlooked its own opinion, expressed during the trial, that such was not the case, particularly as to the railroad and parts of the county roads. Plaintiff Bert Morgan testified he did not call the attention of the defendants to these easements before the agreements were entered into. The evidence indicates that defendants did not know of the extent and location of these easements until about the time of the trial. Since the respondents were in express terms obliged to make good title (except as to incumbrances specified), as a condition of sale, even actual knowledge by the purchasers of the true status of the rights of way would not be deemed, while the contract remained executory, to imply a waiver of substantial fulfillment of the condition for title. Snowden v. Derrick, 14 Cal. App. 309, 314, 111 Pac. 757; Prentice v. Erskine, 164 Cal. 446, 450, 129 Pac. 585. At the time of the execution of the contract of sale, and when it should have been performed, the title to plaintiff's land was incurably defective by reason of the public servitudes, a cloud which in the nature of things plaintiffs could not remove by ordinary methods of business negotiation. Defendants could have rescinded at any time. Prentice v. Erskine, supra, 164 Cal. 449, 129 Pac. 585.

This defect in the vendor's title made it impossible for the plaintiffs to perform.

Plaintiffs, after the agreements with defendants were entered into, also executed a lease of their land and delivered possession thereunder to third parties, who continued in such occupancy and were on the land at the time of the trial of the action. The time within which possession might be regained by plaintiff was a matter of some conjecture, depending upon the action of the lessees in possession.

Plaintiffs were therefore not in position to and were never able to perform their contract. The finding of the trial court to the contrary is not supported by the evidence.

The judgment is reversed.

FLICKENGER et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

(S. F. 8889.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑367 — DISTINCTION BETWEEN "EMPLOYÉ" AND "INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR."

A motor truck owner doing a truck business, who is engaged to do hauling for another without agreement as to compensation and without being required to report before going to work or after, and who is allowed to haul as he pleases, except that he is expected to do a day's work, and expecting the customary pay covering operating expenses and services of men and trucks, held an "independent contractor" and not an "employé," as those terms were used prior to adoption of Workmen's Compensation Act of 1917.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Employé; Independent Contractor.]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑367—WHAT CONSTITUTES INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR WITHIN WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

Workmen's Compensation Act 1917, § 8(b), providing that all persons rendering service are employés, "except those who render services other than manual labor for a specified recompense for a specified result, under the control of his principal as to the result of his work only and not as to the means" of its accomplishment, restricts the term "independent contractor," and consequently enlarges to a corresponding degree the meaning of the term "employé."

3. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑347 — STATUTE CHANGING TERMS "EMPLOYÉ" AND "INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR" UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

Workmen's Compensation Act 1917, § 8(b), in so far as it restricts the term "independent contractor" and enlarges the meaning of the term "employé," is unconstitutional as attempting to change the scope of Const. art. 20, § 21, as amended 1911.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑347—CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT AS AFFECTING CONSTITUTIONALITY OF WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

A contention that, if any doubt remains upon the question of the constitutionality of Workmen's Compensation Act 1917, § 8(b), defining "employé" and "independent contractor" as attempting to modify Const. art. 20, § 21, that the same was removed by the adoption of a new constitutional amendment in 1918, is without force in a proceeding where a personal injury resulted before the latter amendment.

In Bank.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Lillian Reeves for compensation for the death of her husband, Tarvin A. Reeves, against M. P. Flickenger, employer, and the Ætna Life Insurance Company, insurer. An award was made by the Industrial Accident Commission, and the defendants, insurer and employer, bring certiorari. Award annulled.

Redman & Alexander and E. L. Stockwell, all of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco (Warren H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

LAWLOR, J. This is a writ of certiorari to review an award made by the Industrial Accident Commission against the Ætna Life Insurance Company as insurance carrier for M. P. Flickenger, in favor of Lillian Reeves in the sum of $4,346 as compensation for the death of her husband, Tarvin A. Reeves, who was killed while hauling hay for Flickenger.

For some time prior to the accident Reeves was the owner of an automobile truck and was engaged in the "truck business" in the city of Bakersfield. He received most of his calls through a telephone which he had in a cigar store. Reeves had formerly done hauling for one W. A. Ferguson, using his own motortruck and receiving $15 per day for his services. Not long before Reeves was killed Ferguson retired from the trucking business and turned it over to Reeves. Thenceforward Reeves was ready to do a general trucking business on his own account, and any calls that thereafter would come to Ferguson were to be referred to him.

Flickenger, who was in the feed and fuel business, was engaged in hauling with his own truck a quantity of hay to some sheep and cattle that were starving on a ranch about 8 miles from Edison, a small town 10 miles distant from Bakersfield. It was raining and the roads were in very bad condition. The work of moving the hay was not progressing rapidly enough with one truck, and hence Flickenger found it necessary to secure help, and so he engaged Reeves and two others to assist in hauling the hay. The deceased went to work on the morning of March 9, 1918, and about the middle of the afternoon of March 11th, while crossing the Santa Fé track with his truck, was struck by a locomotive and sustained injuries from which he died a few hours later.

[1] The chief question presented here is as to the status of Reeves in performing this service: Was he an independent contractor or an employé of Flickenger? The facts in this regard are these: Flickenger testified that, owing to the condition of the roads and the fact that no certain amount of work could be accomplished in any given time, no definite price was agreed upon and no time set for the completion of the work, but that he told Reeves "to go out and haul hay and keep at hauling it and we will not make any definite arrangement, but when you are through hauling, why you will find you will not be dissatisfied with the terms of settlement." He testified further that he sent one of his employés with Reeves the first trip to show him the best road and where to unload the hay. After that Flickenger left Reeves to haul as he pleased, and did not require him to report either before or after work, though he expected him to put in a full day. Mrs. Reeves testified that deceased had told her that it was "day work" and that he supposed he would get $15 a day, which was the price he was accustomed to get when he worked with his truck. Flickenger further testified that he had paid each of the other men $15 a day. This amount included, not only the services of the men and the trucks, but also covered all necessary expenses for oil, gasoline, repairs, and the like in connection with the operation of the trucks.

From these facts the Industrial Accident Commission found:

> "That said injury arose out of and in the course of such employment, was proximately caused thereby, and occurred while the employé was performing service growing out of and incidental to the same."

It was further found:

> "That at the time of said injury the employé was not engaged in any of the occupations or employments excluded by section 8 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 from the provisions of said act."

In addition to the death benefit of $4,346 there was an award of $100 for funeral expenses and $30 for medical expenses.

Petitioners contend that the facts do not support the finding that deceased was the employé of Flickenger, but that he "was an independent contractor as that term was used prior to the adoption of the Compensation Act," that the award can be sustained only under the statutory definition of the term "employé" appearing in section 8(b) of the Compensation Act of 1917, and that section 8(b) is therefore unconstitutional. In other words, the position of petitioners is this: Section 8(b) of the Compensation Act of 1917 has changed and enlarged the meaning of the term "employé," by restricting the definition of what constitutes an "independent contractor," so as to include in the former classification persons who, under the law, as it stood prior to the constitutional amendment of 1911, authorizing the creation of the commission, and prior to the passage of section 8(b), would have come under the latter designation; that this section is unconstitutional because it is an attempt to extend the jurisdiction of the Industrial Accident Commission beyond the limits prescribed by section 21, art. 20, of the Constitution, which confines the authority of the Industrial Accident Commission to the settlement of disputes arising between employers and employés, by bringing into the list of "employés" persons who prior to this legislative enactment were classed as "independent contractors." Section 8(b) reads as follows:

> "(b) Any person rendering services for another, other than as an independent contractor, or as expressly excluded herein, is presumed to be an employé within the meaning of this act. The term 'independent contractor' shall be taken to mean, for the purposes of this act: Any person who renders service, other than manual labor, for a specified recompense for a specified result, under the control of his principal as to the result of his work only and not as to the means by which such result is accomplished." Stats. 1917, p. 835.

The terms "employé" and "independent contractor" had been frequently defined by the courts of this state prior to the amendment to the Constitution authorizing the creation of the Industrial Accident Commission. Article 20, § 21. In White v. City of Alameda, 124 Cal. 95, 56 Pac. 795, it is said:

> "There is no necessary distinction between the terms 'servant' and 'employé.' * * * The term 'employé' may sound more euphonious than the term 'servant,' but there is no substantial difference between the two except as the statute makes a difference."

Section 2009 of the Civil Code defines a servant as "one who is employed to render personal service to his employer, otherwise than in the pursuit of an independent calling, and who in such service remains entirely under the control and direction of the latter, who is called his master."

The status of employé has been distinguished from that of an independent contractor in the following cases: Boswell v. Laird, 8 Cal. 469, 68 Am. Dec. 345; Du Pratt v. Lick, 38 Cal. 691; Bennett v. Truebody, 66 Cal. 509, 6 Pac. 329, 56 Am. Rep. 117; Ahern v. McGeary, 79 Cal. 44, 21 Pac. 540; Hedge v. Williams, 131 Cal. 455, 63 Pac. 721, 64 Pac. 106, 82 Am. St. Rep. 366; Louthan v. Hewes, 138 Cal. 116, 70 Pac. 1065; Green v. Soule, 145 Cal. 96, 78 Pac. 337; Houghton v. Loma Prieta Lumber Co., 152 Cal. 500, 93 Pac. 82, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913, 14 Ann. Cas. 1159; Houghton v. Loma Prieta Lumber Co., 152 Cal. 574, 93 Pac. 377; Pearson v. Potter Co., 10 Cal App. 245, 101 Pac. 681.

In Bennett v. Truebody, supra, it was said:

"The plumber was left to produce the desired result in his own way. If that did not constitute him an independent contractor, we do not know what would. There was no stipulation as to the amount to be paid for the work, but that is an immaterial circumstance in this case."

The court there referred to and cited with approval the early case of Milligan v. Wedge, 12 Adol. & E. 737, where a butcher hired a drover to drive a bullock from one specified place to another. Coleridge, J., held that the drover was an independent contractor.

So, also, the difference between an employé and an independent contractor has been clearly stated in a number of decisions in this state since the creation of the Industrial Accident Commission, which definitions are in entire accord with those laid down in the authorities above cited. In Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 807, 159 Pac. 721, where the question involved was whether the injured teamster was an employé or an independent contractor, it was said:

"It is undisputed that the contract between Stevens and Tittle did not cover any definite period. It is also undisputed that the latter's foreman directed Stevens and his driver in the matter of the materials to be hauled. There was no agreement regarding the bulk of matter or the number of loads per day, but each wagon was to be used for the period of eight hours a day both in removing the rubbish and surplus sand. * * * Neither did he pay Mr. Stevens a certain sum for use of the teams and another sum for personal services. * * * But it is urged with much force that since the foreman for Tittle Company directed Stevens in the matters of the materials to be hauled, the latter was not an independent contractor—that the test of what constitutes independent service lies in the control exercised, and that the driver being under the supervision of the foreman was, therefore, an employé of Tittle. It is true that many authorities specify 'control' of the person performing work as the means of differentiating service from independent employment. The test of 'control,' however, means 'complete control.' For example, the citizen who hires a taxicab to take him to a certain place exercises that amount of control over the driver, but he does not thereby become the man's employer. * * * 'It is well settled that where one person is performing work in which another is beneficially interested, the latter may exercise over the former a certain measure of control for a definite and restricted purpose, without incurring the responsibilities, or acquiring the immunities, of a master, with respect to the person controlled.' * * * In the case at bar confusion arose out of the fact that Stevens drove his own team, but we see nothing in that fact which made him a servant and not a contractor. * * * It has been said that the true test of a contractor is that he renders service in the course of an independent occupation, following his employer's desires in the results, but not in the means used, * * * but in weighing the control exercised we must carefully distinguish between authoritative control and mere suggestion as to detail or the necessary co-operation where the work furnished is part of a larger undertaking. * * * In Chisholm v. Walker & Co., 2 B. W. C. C. 261, a case very much like the one at bar, arising under a workman's compensation statute, it was held that the man who received a certain sum per day for the work of himself and his horse was not engaged in a 'contract of service.' A similar ruling was made in Ryan v. County Council of Tipperary, 5 B. W. C. C. 578."

See, also, Donlon Bros. v. Industrial Accident Comn., 173 Cal. 250, 159 Pac. 715; Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Brush, 176 Cal. 448, 168 Pac. 890; Parsons v. Industrial Accident Comn., 173 Pac. 585.

In Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Brush, supra, it was said:

" 'It has been said that the true test of a contractor is that he renders service in the course of an independent occupation, following his employer's desires in the results, but not in the means used (1 Shearman & Redfield on Negligence [6th Ed.] 396), but in weighing the control exercised we must carefully distinguish between authoritative control and mere suggestion as to detail or the necessary co-operation where the work furnished is part of a larger undertaking. Standard Oil Co. v. Anderson, 212 U. S. 221, 222, 53 L. Ed. 480, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252. The same principles are announced in Fink v. Missouri Furnace Co., 82 Mo. 276, 52 Am. Rep. 376.' "

Applying the principles of the foregoing authorities to the instant case, it becomes apparent that Reeves was an independent contractor and not an employé. As we have seen he was engaged in the "truck business," which is an independent occupation, and not only had his own patronage, but had taken over Ferguson's as well. He had his own truck and was doing a general hauling business. Flickenger merely told him what he desired to have hauled and Reeves loaded his truck in his own way at times suited to his own convenience; he never reported before going to work or after; no one controlled his actions at any time, except that he was expected to do a full day's work. Reeves was obliged to furnish his own appliances and pay all expenses in the operation of the truck and was not subject to any "authoritative control" at any time. In other words, Flickenger was interested only in the result to be attained, but not in the means by which it was to be accomplished.

[2] We may now consider whether a different result will be reached if we accept the definition of an "independent contractor" as it appears in section 8(b) of the Compensation Act of 1917. That section divides persons who render service into two classes: "Employés" and "independent contractors." All persons rendering service are employés except those who render service "other than manual labor, for a specified recompense for a specified result, under the control of his principal as to the result of his work only and not as to the means by which such result is accomplished." We are of the opinion that the effect of this definition is to restrict the term "independent contractor" and consequently enlarge to a corresponding degree the meaning of the term "employé."

[3] To apply the test "other than manual labor" and exclude thereby from the classification of "independent contractors" all those persons who perform manual labor, and bring them into the classification of "employés," is a distinct enlargement of the latter class, and a consequent extension of the jurisdiction of the Industrial Accident Commission beyond the limits of the original constitutional grant of authority to the legislature. Article 20, § 21, Const. And, likewise, if we give effect to the phrase "for a specified recompense," as it appears in section 8(b), we are bringing into the definition of what constitutes an independent contractor an element which, according to the foregoing authorities, did not exist at the time of the adoption of the constitutional amendment, and which was not a part of the definition prior to the passage of the Compensation Act of 1917. That the effect of this clause would be to enlarge the meaning of the term "employé" and thus extend the jurisdiction of the Industrial Accident Commission needs no demonstration. Though if we make the test by applying the rule to the facts in the instant case it at once becomes apparent that the decedent would have been the employé of Flickenger and not an independent contractor for the service he performed was not "for a specified recompense." If this view be correct, and we entertain no doubt that it is, section 8(b) must be held to be unconstitutional to the extent which we have indicated that it is an attempt to enlarge the jurisdiction of the commission. This court in a recent decision in passing upon the constitutionality of section 30 of the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1917, speaking through Mr. Justice Wilbur, had this to say:

> "The terms 'employers,' 'employés' and 'employment,' as used in section 21, art. 20, of the Constitution, as amended in October, 1911, must be construed in the light of their meaning at the time of the adoption of the amendment and cannot be extended by legislative definition, for such extension would, in effect, be an amendment of the Constitution, if accepted as authoritative." Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Industrial Accident Comn., 181 Pac. 788.

[4] Respondents contend, however, that—

> "If any doubt remains upon the question of constitutionality, it has been removed by the adoption by the people in 1918 of a new constitutional amendment authorizing workmen's compensation, which definitely ratifies and affirms the scope of the act."

While it is not so designated, the reference must be to section 21 of article 20, as amended in 1918. But there is no merit in this contention. It is sufficient to point out that this constitutional provision went into effect eight months after Reeves was killed and six months after the commission decided this case, and consequently can have no application here.

It follows that the award must be annulled, and it is so ordered.

OSBORN et al. v. HOYT et al. (L. A. 5213.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 7, 1919. On Petition for Rehearing, Nov. 6, 1919.)

1. PLEADING ⚷8(6) — THAT CONTRACT WAS ILLEGAL, CONCLUSION OF LAW.

An allegation that a contract to will property was "against public policy and wholly illegal and void" was merely the averment of a conclusion of law, and would not put in issue the question of the violation of U. S. Rev. St. § 2290 (U. S. Comp. St. § 4531), relating to contracts concerning unpatented homesteads.

2. WILLS ⚷68 — CONVEYANCE DEFEATING CONTRACT TO DEVISE PROPERTY SUBJECT TO ATTACK BEFORE DEATH.

Where one who had contracted to will specific property conveyed it to others, an action brought before his death to have a trust declared in the property was not prematurely commenced.

3. EVIDENCE ⚷448—PAROL EVIDENCE THAT WRITTEN CONTRACT TO DEVISE WAS FOLLOWED BY ELEMENTS OF DEFENDANT'S CONDITION ADMISSIBLE.

In an action to have a trust declared in land, in that defendant had contracted to will such property to plaintiffs, and had then conveyed it, oral testimony as to "certain improvements" made upon the property, and how they tended toward the "amelioration and betterment" of defendant's condition, was competent to explain the circumstances of the agreement and the matters to which it related; Civ. Code, § 1647, making such evidence admissible.

4. WILLS ⚷59 — IMPROVEMENTS SUFFICIENT CONSIDERATION FOR CONTRACT TO DEVISE.

Improvements made upon land, tending towards the amelioration and betterment of the owner's condition, is a sufficient consideration for a contract to will such property to the persons making the improvements.

5. WILLS ⚷65 — UNCERTAINTY OF CONSIDERATION OF CONTRACT TO DEVISE NOT AVAILABLE OF SUBSEQUENT GRANTEES.

Where one claiming under a contract to devise land seeks to have a trust declared in the land as against the grantees in a conveyance executed by the prisoner after the making of the contract, the grantees cannot complain of uncertainty as to the consideration for the contract, where the conveyance was without consideration.

6. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑235—WHERE GRANTEES WITHOUT CONSIDERATION KNEW OF OTHERS' RIGHTS, EQUITABLE CONSIDERATIONS NOT AVAILABLE.

Where a deed is given without consideration to grantees possessing full knowledge of the rights of persons injuriously affected by it, no equitable considerations are available to them.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑181—OBJECTIONS NOT MADE BELOW NOT REVIEWABLE.

Alleged errors asserted for the first time on appeal will not be considered.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Action by Earl R. Osborn and Will E. Chapin against Silas Hoyt and others. Judgment for plaintiffs is affirmed in the District Court of Appeal and rehearing is denied in Supreme Court.

H. C. Millsap and F. E. Davis, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Frank C. Collier and John Schlegel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiffs sued to have a trust declared in their favor to certain real property which, as alleged, had been deeded by Silas Hoyt, in fraud of plaintiffs and in violation of their rights, to said Hoyt's daughters, defendants Mary E. Hicks and Rachel H. Jolley, charged with full knowledge of the right of plaintiffs and of the fraud. The asserted rights of plaintiffs arose from a written agreement by the terms of which Silas Hoyt promised to make a will giving and devising to plaintiffs all of his right, title, and interest in and to the land in question which he then had or might thereafter acquire. During the trial Silas Hoyt died. A decree was given in favor of plaintiffs to the effect that upon the death of Hoyt plaintiffs became the owners and entitled to the possession of the land, and that defendants Mary E. Hicks and Rachel H. Jolley hold the land in trust for plaintiffs, and commanding that they execute a proper deed of the property to plaintiffs. From the judgment Mrs. Hicks and her sister and their husbands, who were joined with them as defendants, take this appeal.

A most interesting state of facts is developed from this record. Hoyt was an eccentric man, living alone upon wild land in Big Tejunga Canyon, in Los Angeles county. His daughters had long been alienated from him and were living in the East. Plaintiffs desired the hunting privileges on this land, and went there to gain permission from the occupant. That was in 1902. They found Mr. Hoyt a feeble man, 82 or 83 years of age. He was in abject poverty, was very weak physically, and was living in a filthy log cabin. The hunters divided their food with the feeble and apparently starving man, and were glad to see him apparently growing stronger. Their interest in him grew, and during the years following they did much to make his surroundings better and his physical condition more comfortable. Among other things they directed him in the matter of changing his occupation of the land from that of a mere squatter to a claimant of rights which later culminated in his securing a patent to the land (160 acres in area) in the early part of 1913. They piped water to his cabin and garden; installed ditches that enabled him to irrigate a garden patch; built a good road from near the mouth of the canyon to his property (a distance of about three miles); built a clubhouse on the land, and stocked it with provisions, to which the old man was given access without charge; furnished a stable and feed for his horses; financed the survey of the property; sent for his daughters, so that the old man's last years might be comforted by their society; and did many other things for him.

On June 16, 1902, Hoyt leased to plaintiffs the property occupied by him from July 1, 1902, for the term of five years. Mr. Hoyt agreed to be caretaker, and was to receive a rental of $50 per annum. He was to continue to live on the property, and the plaintiffs, according to the terms of the lease, agreed "to begin improvements upon the said property within one year" from the date of the instrument. On June 23, 1902, certain water rights were conveyed to plaintiffs, and all water rights were conveyed to them by another writing early in July of that year. On September 1, 1902, the agreement upon which this suit is based was executed. Among other things there was the following recital:

"And whereas, the said Chapin and Osborne have undertaken and promised to carry to completion certain improvements upon the said ranch in the Big Tejunga Canyon; and whereas, the said improvements all tend towards the amelioration and betterment of the physical and temporal condition of the said Hoyt, and greatly conduces to his comfort and convenience; and whereas, the said Hoyt appreciates the physical and temporal and financial benefits that accrue to him through such improvements; and whereas, the said Hoyt is desirous of providing such a remuneration in return therefor as is within his power." And in consideration of the premises Hoyt promised "to give, devise, bequeath, and will unto the said Chapin and Osborne, at the time of his death, all his right, title, and interest in and to that certain tract of land above mentioned and being known as Hoyt's ranch, in the Big Tejunga Canyon, county of Los Angeles, state of California, together with all water rights which the said Hoyt may have as incident or perquisite thereto in accordance with former documents."

This was followed in the next year by a deed from Hoyt of certain mining rights, and on April 19, 1912, the plaintiffs executed a writing reciting a consideration of $10, for which they bargained, sold, and surrendered all of their "rights, interest, title, and demand in and under that certain lease * * * dated June 16, 1902, and recorded in Book 56, page 25, of leases, Los Angeles county records," together with any claim they might have in any land or premises therein mentioned and the term of years therein yet to come. The instrument concludes as follows: "And, further, we hereby certify that said hereinbefore described lease has been canceled, and that all our rights thereunder have been terminated."

This is the instrument by which appellants insist the plaintiffs denuded themselves of all claim of every sort against Hoyt or the property. There is no basis for such contention. The instrument relates to the lease, and not to the agreement to make a will.

But the counsel for appellants argue that this release was made in order that Hoyt might comply with the homestead law of the United States, and make oath that his application was for his exclusive use and benefit, and not directly or indirectly for the use or benefit of any other person. They contend that the enforcement of the contract to make a will would amount to sanctioning a fraud upon the government, and in this behalf they cite Anderson v. Carkins, 135 U. S. 483, 10 Sup. Ct. 905, 34 L. Ed. 272, Hafemann v. Gross, 199 U. S. 342, 26 Sup. Ct. 80, 50 L. Ed. 220, and similar authorities, holding that a homestead right cannot be perfected without perjury by the homesteader where there has been an alienation or a contract for alienation.

[1] Respondents insist that there was no real issue upon the supposed violation of public policy in the making and enforcement of the agreement by which Hoyt promised to make a will in their favor. In their answer the defendants denied that there were written and oral agreements or negotiations between plaintiffs and Hoyt, as set forth in the second amended complaint, but averred that, if there were any such contracts, then they were and each was "against public policy and wholly illegal and void"; making special reference to the agreement to make a will. This was merely the averment of a conclusion of law, unsupported by any allegation of facts, and we cannot avoid holding that by it the question of the violation of public policy was not put in issue. Callahan v. Broderick, 124 Cal. 80, 56 Pac. 782; Del Campo v. Camarillo, 154 Cal. 647, 98 Pac. 1049; Moran v. Bonynge, 157 Cal. 295, 107 Pac. 312. Appellants assert, however, that in the absence of demurrer to the answer, and in view of the fact that at the outset their counsel set forth orally their theory that the contract was void because in violation of section 2290, United States Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. St. § 4531), this court must assume that respondents waived the infirmity in the pleadings by proceeding to trial without objection to said statement. But, even if we accept this interpretation of the law, the record fails to reveal any proof of the procedure by which Mr. Hoyt obtained his patent, or any showing that in fact it was given to him under the homestead law. This conclusion relieves us from all necessity for discussing the very interesting question whether or not an agreement to make a will was an alienation or promise to alienate property in contravention of the statutes of the United States.

[2] There is no force in the contention that the action was prematurely commenced in the lifetime of the testator. It is true that in Rogers v. Schlotterback, 167 Cal. 35, 138 Pac. 728, this court held that where one is promised a child's share under the laws of succession the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the promisor's death, and that under the contract therein considered James Taylor Rogers "had no enforceable right under his contract in regard to such land or any other property prior to the death of William H. Rogers." In further discussion of the subject the court, by the present chief justice, then an associate justice, used the following language:

> "He [James Taylor Rogers] had no right of action of any character against William H. Rogers and his grantees at any time during the life of said Rogers, except that possibly he might have maintained an action in equity to obtain a decree protecting him against future possible injury to his rights, as was done in Van Duyne v. Vreeland, 12 N. J. Eq. 142, 153, where the chancellor said that 'if this court does not interfere now for the protection of the complainant, and secure this property at the death of Vreeland, it may have passed into the hands of a bona fide purchaser, and the complainant then be remediless.' The case just referred to was, however, one where the conveyance was clearly and unmistakably in violation of the agreement, as the plaintiff was entitled thereunder to all the property that the deceased might leave."

The case at bar comes clearly within the rule announced in the New Jersey case, because the contract now before us was one whereby the promisor agreed to make a will devising specific property, which was, as alleged in the bill of plaintiffs, virtually all of his estate.

[3] Appellants attack certain rulings of the court admitting oral testimony. All of this testimony was necessary to describe the "certain improvements upon the said ranch," and how they tended "towards the amelioration and betterment" of the old man's condition. This testimony was competent to explain the circumstances of the agreement and the matters to which it related. Sec. 1647, Civ. Code; Snyder v. Holt Manufacturing Co., 134 Cal. 324, 66 Pac. 311.

[4] That the agreement is supported by an adequate consideration is evident from the facts recited herein.

[5, 6] Nor was the agreement too uncertain for enforcement. Hoyt's duty under it is expressed in no uncertain terms, and appellants are not in a position to complain of any other uncertainty, because there is no denial in the answer of the allegation in the complaint that the deed was without consideration. Where a deed is given without consideration to grantees possessing full knowledge (as did Mr. Hoyt's daughters) of the rights of the persons injuriously affected by it, no equitable considerations are available to them. Rogers v. Schlotterback, 167 Cal. 35, 138 Pac. 728.

The finding of fraud was amply supported.

[7] In the closing brief appellants assert that there is no proof that Hoyt died intestate, or, having died leaving a will, that he failed to comply with his contract. They also complain because the representative of his estate was not made a party to the action after his death. These alleged errors are asserted for the first time on appeal, and, even if material, would receive no attention.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. In denying the petition for rehearing we would say that it was not intended either to hold or to imply that there need be an issue raised by the pleadings as to the illegality of the contract sought to be enforced by the action in order that the question of illegality may be considered. Kreamer v. Earl, 91 Cal. 112, 27 Pac. 735. But in the present case no facts showing the contract to be illegal were either pleaded, shown in evidence, or found.

The application for a rehearing is denied.

181 Cal. 443

CARY v. LONG, Mayor, et al. (S. F. 9228.)

1. JUDGMENT 🔑720—CONCLUSIVENESS ON OVERRULING OBJECTIONS TO AWARD OF ARBITRATORS.

Where a city agreed with the tenant of land, a portion of which was taken for a highway, that the matter should be submitted to arbitration, and the award of the arbitrators was duly filed in the superior court, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1283, held that, the award which was attacked in that court on the ground of misconduct, fraud, error, and excess in amount having been sustained, and an appeal from the judgment of the superior court having been dismissed, the award and judgment cannot thereafter be attacked by the city on the ground that it was not made in good faith, etc.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑1011—ARBITRATION OF CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES FOR TAKING LAND FOR HIGHWAY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1281, providing that persons capable of contracting may submit to arbitration any controversy which might be the subject of a civil action between them, a city may through its regularly constituted officials agree to submit to arbitration claims for damage arising out of the taking of real property for highway, urged by an occupant of the property.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑865(2) — JUDGMENT ON ARBITRATORS' AWARD BASED ON TORT NOT WITHIN DEBT INHIBITION OF CONSTITUTION.

Where a city stipulated with an occupant that it should be allowed to proceed with the construction of a highway over his premises, and that the question of damages should be ascertained thereafter, and the condemnation action was abandoned, the route of the highway having been changed, and the occupant, asserting that he had been injured, entered into an agreement with the city for the submission of his claim for damages to arbitration, the award of the arbitrators and judgment thereon were based on tort, which may be enforced under St. 1901, p. 794, by compelling city authorities to make provision in the budget for payment of the claim, and was not within the inhibition of Const. art. 11, § 18, limiting contractual indebtedness which may be incurred by cities.

4. MANDAMUS 🔑176—TO COMPEL PAYMENT OF JUDGMENT AGAINST CITY, LEAVING TERMS DISCRETIONARY.

Under Act March 23, 1901 (St. 1901, p. 794), which is an act to provide for the payment of judgments against counties, cities, and towns, officers having authority to levy taxes may provide at their option for payment of the judgment in annual installments spread over successive years, provided that no payment shall be less than one-tenth of the whole of the judgment; hence a writ of mandate to compel municipal officials to make provision for payment of a judgment against the municipality should leave the officials free to exercise their discretion in determining whether the judgment should be paid by single levy or by ten annual levies.

In Bank.

Application by Julian E. Cary for writ of mandate, to be directed to J. N. Long, as Mayor of Richmond, and others, requiring provision to be made in the budget to pay a judgment. Writ issued.

Beverly Hodghead and T. John Butler, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

D. J. Hall, of Richmond, and Alvin Gerlack of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. In this case the following opinion, prepared by Mr. Justice Richards, was filed in the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, Division 1:

"Application for a writ of mandate, whereby the petitioner seeks to have the respondents, who are the properly constituted officials of the city of Richmond, commanded to include in the tax levy of said city for the current year an amount sufficient to pay a judgment which the petitioner holds against said city for the sum of $17,000, with interest. The facts out of which the claim of said petitioner, which ripened into said judgment, arose, are practically undisputed and are briefly as follows:

"On the 22d day of June, 1913, the city of Richmond commenced an action in the superior court of Contra Costa county against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company, Julian E. Cary, the petitioner herein, and certain other defendants, to condemn certain lands described in the complaint in said action for the purpose of constructing a highway from the central portion of the city of Richmond to the outer harbor. The line of said highway, according to the averments of said complaint, ran across certain lands of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway, of which the said defendant Cary was in possession under an arrangement with the railway company which permitted him to use said lands for or in connection with a brickyard. After the inception of said suit, and in order to expedite the construction of said highway, a stipulation was entered into between the attorneys of record for the parties to said action, by the terms of which the city was permitted to immediately proceed with the construction of said highway over the lands described in said complaint as belonging to said railway company and as occupied by said Cary, without first ascertaining the amount of damages to be paid to the said defendants for the taking and use of said lands. By the express terms of the stipulation entered into between the attorneys of record for the plaintiff in said action and the attorneys of record for said defendant Cary 'the question of the amount of damage which shall be sustained by said J. E. Cary by the taking of said property and the construction of a highway thereover by the city of Richmond as described in said complaint is to be determined at the trial of said cause, and said plaintiff hereby agrees that it will pay to said J. E. Cary promptly the amount of any judgment which may be awarded and fixed as the damage herein and without appeal therefrom, unless plaintiff should abandon said proceedings within the time and in the manner provided by section 1255a of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California.' Subsequent to the making of said stipulation the city of Richmond, being unable to make satisfactory terms with Cary as to his claim for damages, a resurvey of the line of the highway was made, which removed its route from the lands occupied by Cary, and the construction of said highway proceeded to completion along its new alignment. In the meantime the said plaintiff, the city of Richmond, made a settlement with the railway company by which it agreed to pay a certain sum for the damages caused by the taking of such portion of the lands of said corporation as were occupied by the highway according to its new alignment. Having thus disposed of the claims, both of the railway company and of said Cary, in so far as these related to the taking of the lands owned or held in use by either for the purposes of said highway, the condemnation suit was not pressed to trial, and was in fact practically abandoned, since the purposes for which it was instituted had been fully subserved. There remained, however, certain claims for damages which were insisted upon by Cary as having been suffered by him through the construction of said highway, and which were asserted by him to have arisen by reason of the destruction of a spur track connecting his brickyard with the main line of the Santa Fé Railroad, and also by reason of the interruption in his business and the restriction of his storage facilities and certain other items of incidental damage resulting from such construction. These various elements of alleged damage were itemized in 17 specific claims which he presented against said city, and upon which apparently he threatened to bring an action against the municipality. In order to arrive at an adjustment of these claims as between itself and said Cary, the city of Richmond, through its duly constituted officials, entered into an agreement for the arbitration thereof. This agreement of arbitration, which was executed by the respective parties thereto on the 29th day of July, 1916, proceeded to recite the fact of the institution of said condemnation suit and of the making and substance of the aforesaid stipulation therein, and then provided that 'whereas, said highway has been constructed and completed, and disputes and differences have arisen and still exist between the parties hereto as to the amount of damage which said city should in justice pay to said Cary as sustained by him by reason of the construction of said highway or boulevard, whether the matter of his said claim for damages be strictly involved in said action above named or not: Now, therefore, it is hereby agreed that all said disputes and differences shall be referred to arbitration.' It then proceeds to appoint arbitrators and to set forth such other matters as may be properly provided for in arbitration agreements in pursuance of section 1283 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

"Upon the execution of this agreement of arbitration the arbitrators named therein duly qualified and proceeded to hear and determine the matters which were by its terms submitted to them, and, having taken a considerable amount of evidence with respect to the asserted claims of said Cary against said city, proceeded to make an award, and in so doing allowed to said Cary the sum of $17,000 as the aggregate amount of his damages, which award was, in accordance with the terms of the arbitration agreement, duly filed with the county clerk of the county of Contra Costa in pursuance of the aforesaid section of the Code of Civil Procedure. Thereafter the city of Richmond, being dissatisfied with the amount of said award, moved the superior court of said county for an order vacating the same, and, after said hearing, being submitted to the judge of said court for decision, was decided against the contention of the said city of Richmond and in favor of said Cary. From the decision thus rendered an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court, which was later, on motion, dismissed, and the judgment of the said arbitrators and the order of the superior court confirming the same thereby became a finality and became in force and effect a final and general judgment in favor of said Carey and against the said city of Richmond, and is still in full force and effect as such. The said judgment not having been paid by said city, and no steps having theretofore been taken looking to the satisfaction thereof, the petitioner herein instituted this proceeding, whereby he seeks by a writ of mandate to compel the properly constituted officials of the city of Richmond to include in their tax levy for the current year an amount sufficient to pay said judgment.

"This action upon the part of said petitioner is predicated upon the provisions of the act of the Legislature approved March 23, 1901, entitled 'An act to provide for the payment of judgments against counties, cities, cities and counties and towns.' Stats. 1901, p. 794.

"The respondents in this proceeding have appeared and filed an answer, setting forth in substance the facts above recited, and also undertaking to set forth certain facts impeaching the good faith and proper conduct of the arbitrators in said arbitration proceeding, and also assailing their award as excessive, unjust, and fraudulent. The said respondents also in their answer assert that the said agreement for arbitration was and is void, for the reason that the making of the same was beyond the power of the city of Richmond or its officials.

[1] "As to these latter contentions, they may be briefly disposed of. With respect to the integrity of the judgment itself, we are of the opinion that the award of the arbitrators, having been duly filed in the superior court of the county of Contra Costa in pursuance of the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to arbitrations, and having been there assailed by the said municipality upon the various grounds of misconduct, fraud, error, and excess in amount, which are set forth in the answer of the respondents herein, and the said award having upon hearing as to these various matters before said court been sustained, and the decision of said court thereon having become final upon a dismissal of the appeal, the integrity of said award and said decision sustaining the same can no longer be made the subject of assault, and that, therefore, in so far as the portions of the respondents' answer herein, which undertake to assail the same, are concerned, we are not at liberty to consider them.

[2] "As to the contention of the respondents herein that the action of the city of Richmond through its regularly constituted officials in agreeing to submit to arbitration the claim or claims for damages insisted upon by the petitioner herein, and which might otherwise have been the subject of a civil action, was ultra vires, we are of the opinion that a municipal corporation, like an individual, has power to submit to arbitration any controversy which might be the subject of a civil action against it. Section 1281 of the Code of Civil Procedure broadly provides that 'persons capable of contracting may submit to arbitration any controversy which might be the subject of a civil action between them.'

[3] "This brings us to the main contention of the parties to this proceeding. On the part of the petitioner herein it is contended that the claims which he asserted against the city of Richmond, and which were made the subject of arbitration between himself and it, were claims for damages for a tort or series of torts arising by reason of the construction by the city of Richmond of that certain highway which was originally the subject of the condemnation suit, and that the judgment based thereon, having its foundation in tort, is such a judgment as may be enforced through the processes provided by the statute of 1901. On the other hand, it is the contention of the respondents herein that the claims of the petitioner which ripened into said judgment were claims arising solely out of a stipulation entered into in the aforesaid condemnation suit and out of the agreement to arbitrate which was predicated thereon, and hence that the said judgment which the petitioner holds is one having its foundation in contract, and that, this being so, it comes within the inhibition of section 18 of article 11 of the state Constitution, and is therefore a judgment the superior court of Contra Costa county had no power to enter, and one which the petitioner herein has no constitutional right to have enforced, either under the provisions of the statute of 1901 or in any other manner, against the said municipality.

"We are of the opinion that the contention of the petitioner herein must be sustained. In the recent case of Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Deasy, 183 Pac. 243, it was decided by this court that a creditor of a municipality, holding a general judgment against it which was founded upon a claim for damages sustained by said judgment creditor through the construction of a tunnel, which caused certain injuries to his property, was entitled to have the benefit of the provisions of the statute of 1901 for the enforcement and collection of said judgment. This decision by this court was based upon the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of City of Long Beach v. Lisenby, 179 Pac. 198, which deals with the question of the constitutionality of the act of the Legislature in question. While it is true, as the respondents herein contend, that the matter out of which the claims for damages which the petitioner herein asserted against the said municipality had their inception in the institution by the city of Richmond of the condemnation suit above referred to, and that as between the attorneys of record for the respective parties in said action a stipulation was entered into which provided that the amount of damages which should be sustained by the petitioner herein through the taking of the property described and the construction of a highway thereover should be left to determination at the trial of said cause; and it is also true that thereafter the said municipality, the plaintiff in said action, changed the routes of its proposed highway so as to exclude therefrom the property which the petitioner herein held in possession, by which exclusion any amount of damage which he might have suffered through the taking of said property was eliminated; and while it is also the fact that after the completion of said highway along the route of its new alignment, and after said condemnation suit had ceased to be a living litigation, the said petitioner herein was still found to be asserting claims for damages resulting from the construction of said highway, and consisting in the main of elements of damages which would not have been the proper subject of admeasurement or determination in said condemnation proceeding, especially in view of the changed route of said highway; and it is also true that as between the petitioner herein and the said city of Richmond an agreement for the arbitration of said claims was entered into, which agreement contained certain recitals with respect to the institution of said condemnation suit, and with respect also to the said stipulation made between the attorneys of record therein—we are still of the opinion that these facts, engagements, and agreements between the parties did not operate to change the fundamental nature and basis of the petitioner's claim for damages against said municipality which ripened finally in the general judgment which he seeks to have enforced in this proceeding. In so far as the stipulation which was entered into between the attorneys for the respective parties in the condemnation suit is concerned, the only purpose and effect of said stipulation was to postpone the hearing and determination of the question of the amount of damage which the petitioner, Cary, as the defendant in said action, might sustain by the taking of the lands which he held in possession until the trial of said suit. Said stipulation could have had no other or further effect, for the reason that the attorneys of record for the parties to said action had no authority to bind their respective clients further than that which was conferred upon them under the provisions of section 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In so far as the agreement for an arbitration is concerned, it cannot be held to have created any new or contractual obligation as between the said municipality and the petitioner herein beyond the obligation and agreement to submit whatever claims for damages the petitioner herein held against said municipality to arbitration. Such an agreement in no respect altered the nature or character of the petitioner's claims against said city. They remained after said agreement—as before it—claims for damages arising out of the construction by said city of a highway in proximity to the business and property of the petitioner, and in respect to claims of this nature we can perceive no difference between them and the claims for damages which were asserted in the case of Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Deasy, supra, which claims we held were in the nature of claims sounding in tort, and hence the proper subject of a general judgment against the municipality. This being so, it is our conclusion that the petitioner in this case, as in that case, is entitled to a writ of mandate compelling the performance on the part of the officials of the city of Richmond who are named as respondents herein of those acts specially enjoined upon them under the provisions of the aforesaid statute of 1901, supra, for the levy and collection of a tax sufficient to pay the amount of the general judgment which the petitioner herein holds against said city."

We are entirely satisfied with this opinion, and adopt the same as part of the opinion of this court.

[4] The transfer to this court was ordered because we were of the opinion that the writ of mandate directed by the judgment of the District Court of Appeal was too broad in its terms, in view of the provisions of the act under which the writ was sought ("An act to provide for the payment of judgments against counties, cities, cities and counties, and towns," approved March 23, 1901 [Stats. 1901, p. 794]). Under these provisions the officers having authority to levy taxes may provide, at their option, for the payment of the judgment in successive years in annual installments, with the proviso that no fractional levy and payment shall be less than one-tenth of the whole amount of the judgment. We see no good reason to doubt the validity of this part of the act. Any writ issued should leave the officers free to exercise this option. The petitioner asked for a writ requiring the inclusion of the whole amount of the judgment in this year's tax levy. The judgment of the District Court of Appeal was that "the writ issue as prayed for."

It is ordered that a peremptory writ of mandate issue, requiring respondents to provide in accord with the provisions of this act for the payment of the judgment referred to, together with interest thereon.

STARR PIANO CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (L. A. 5751.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 11, 1919. Rehearing Denied Nov. 10, 1919.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑375(2)—INJURIES BEFORE REACHING WORKSHOP.

To entitle an employé to compensation for injuries, he need not have reached the place of employment and actually begun to render service, but it is sufficient if he has come to the employer's premises and is seeking entrance by a means of access provided by the employer or reasonably used by the employé.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑375(2)—INJURY ON WAY TO EMPLOYMENT.

If an employé is merely on his way to his employment and is injured, the injury is not one sustained in the course of the employment within Workmen's Compensation Act.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Course of Employment.]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑375(2)—INJURIES TO EMPLOYÉ OF TENANT IN ELEVATOR SHAFT.

A lessee's employé, injured by falling into an elevator shaft in an attempt to use the elevator in going to his work held entitled to compensation as injured in the course of his employment, though the elevator was controlled by the owner of the building.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⚷405(4)—INJURED EMPLOYÉ ACTING WITHIN AUTHORITY.

In proceedings for compensation for injuries to an employé who fell into the elevator shaft of a building occupied by his employer, evidence held to justify the finding that claimant was legitimately seeking to reach his place of work by a reasonable means of access.

Shaw and Melvin, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank.

Proceedings for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act by J. W. Steinkamp, opposed by the Starr Piano Company, employer, and the Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation, insurer. Compensation was awarded by the Industrial Accident Commission, and the employer and insurer apply for certiorari to annul the award. Award affirmed.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, and Griffith R. Williams, of Oakland, for petitioners.

Christopher M. Bradley and Hugo D. Newhouse, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

OLNEY, J. The petitioners seek the annulment of an award by the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of respondent Steinkamp. Steinkamp was in the employ of the petitioner, Starr Piano Company, which rented space on the fourth floor of the Manufacturers' Exhibition Building in San Francisco. He was hurt by falling into the elevator shaft of the building in an attempt to use the elevator on his way to the fourth floor, there to perform services for his employer. The elevator was one solely under the control of the owner of the building, and maintained and operated for the common use of all the tenants and so used. The only question is as to whether or not the accident by which Steinkamp was injured was one "arising out of and in the course of his employment," as prescribed by the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831). Two reasons are advanced by the petitioners why the accident was not of this character.

[1] The first reason is that at the time of the accident Steinkamp had not yet reached his place of employment, but was merely on his way there, and accordingly had not yet entered upon his employment. On the one hand, it is not doubted that it is not necessary, in order to entitle the employé to compensation, that at the time of accident he have reached the place of employment and have actually begun there to render service. It is sufficient if he has come to the employer's premises and is seeking entrance thereto by a means of access provided by the employer or reasonably used by the employé. A typical, if not the leading, case of this character is Moore v. Manchester Liners, Ltd., 3 B. W. C. C. 527, where compensation was allowed for the death of a fireman employed on a steamer, who was drowned while returning to his ship from a personal errand of his own, by falling from a ladder provided for the purpose of access from the quay to the ship.

[2] On the other hand it is not doubted that, if the employé is merely on his way to his employment and is injured, the injury is not one sustained in the course of his employment. A typical case of this sort is Ocean Accident Co. v. Industrial Accident Comn., 173 Cal. 313, 154 Pac. 1041, L. R. A. 1917B, 336, where it was held that compensation could not be awarded for the death of a seaman drowned while seeking to make his way over a wharf and across other vessels to his own ship. In the latter case the authorities dealing with these two classes of cases and making the distinction between them are reviewed at length.

The question here is under which of these rules does an accident come which is suffered by an employé on the way to his employment and when he has reached the building in a part of which his employer's premises, so to speak, are located, and when he is using a means of access, such as stairs or an elevator, supplied by the owner of the building, as distinct from the employer, for the common use of all the tenants of the building, of whom the employer is but one. This question may be solved, we believe, by means of an approach to the facts of the case from the facts of those in which, as we have said, it is undoubted that an award of compensation is proper.

[3] Under the rule first stated, if the employer were the owner of the building and the employé were injured on the elevator or stairs in reaching his place of work on a certain floor, it cannot be doubted that compensation is payable under the statute. The employé has reached the employer's premises and is using a means of access specially provided for that very purpose. It would seem to follow that if the employer did not own the building, but rented it all, compensation would still be payable, even though the employer did not operate or control the elevator, or have the control or care of the stairs, but such operation, control, and care remained with the owner of the building. The operation, control and care of the elevator and stairs in such a case would seem to be a matter wholly between the employer and the owner of the building. It would not enter as between employer and employé and would be entirely extraneous to the employment. As to the employé it would be a matter of indifference whether the elevator or stairs necessary for access to the spot where he is to work are by the employer's lease operated and controlled by the latter or by the owner of the building, provided only that they are in fact furnished so that access by the employé may be had. There would seem to be no reason for allowing compensation where the employer controls the elevator for instance, and refusing it where he does not, when the fact as to who controls it is extraneous to the employment and the theory upon which compensation is now allowed under the Workmen's Compensation Act is not, as before, that the employer, either directly or through some agency or instrumentality under his control, has been guilty of some breach of duty toward the employé. So far as the employé is concerned, the elevator or stairs are a special means of access furnished him to get to his place of work, and, in effect, furnished him by his employer. By the lease the tenant has the right as an appurtenance of the premises leased to the use of the elevator or stairs for the purposes of access, and, so far as the tenant's employés are concerned, the elevator and the stairs are, in effect, a part of the employer's premises. See Judson Iron Works v. Industrial Accident Comn., 184 Pac. 1.

Nor is the situation in this respect changed by the fact that the employer is but one of several tenants, all of whom have the right to the use of the elevator and stairs. The right to their use still remains an appurtenance of the employer's premises, the only difference being that the right is now one enjoyed in common with others instead of exclusively. The essential thing, that the elevator and stairs are in effect a part of the employer's premises covered by his lease, still remains.

A decision directly in point is In re Sundine, 218 Mass. 1, 105 N. E. 433, L. R. A. 1916A, 318, where an employé, going from her place of work for lunch, was injured upon the stairs of the building in which the employers leased a floor. Upon the point under discussion the court said:

> "Nor do we regard it as decisive against the petitioner that she was injured while upon stairs of which neither Olsen nor F. L. Dunne & Co. had control, though they and their employés had the right to use them. These stairs were the only means available for going to and from the premises where she was employed, the means which she practically was invited by Olsen and F. L. Dunne & Co. to use. In this respect, the case resembles Moore v. Manchester Liners, ubi supra; and that case, decided under the English act before the passage of our statute, must be regarded as of great weight. McNichol's Case, 215 Mass. 497, 499 [102 N. E. 697, L. R. A. 1916A, 306]. It is true that before the passage of St. 1911, c. 751, the petitioner could not have held her employer for this injury. Hawkes v. Broadwalk Shoe Co., 207 Mass. 117 [92 N. E. 1017]. But that now is not a circumstance of much importance; for one of the purposes of our recent legislation was to increase the right of employés to be compensated for injuries growing out of their employment.
> "It was a necessary incident of the employé's employment to use these stairs. We are of opinion that according to the plain and natural meaning of the words an injury that occurred to her while she was so using them arose 'out of and in the course of' her employment."

The present case also comes within the language at least of Nelson, etc., Co. v. Industrial Commission, 286 Ill. 632, 122 N. E. 113, to the effect "that it makes no difference that the injury occurred off the premises of the employer if the employé were using premises which he had a right to use, and which provided the only available way to reach the point to which he was going for lunch."

The language in De Constantin v. Public Service Commission, 75 W. Va. 32, 83 S. E. 88, is too broad if it was intended thereby to include injuries sustained on a public road or way, but the fundamental idea is sound when applied to a private means of access appurtenant, so to speak, to the employer's premises. The language is:

> "Since injury after termination of actual work, while on the premises of the employer and in pursuit of the usual way of leaving the same, is held to be within the course of employment and to have arisen out of the same, it seems clear that an injury to a workman while coming to his place of work on the premises of the employer and by the only way of access, or the one contemplated by the contract of employment, must also be regarded as having been incurred in the course of the employment and to have arisen out of the same. If, in such case, injury does not occur on the premises, but in close proximity to the place of work and on a road or other way intended and contemplated by the contract as being the exclusive means of access to the place of work, the same principle would apply and govern. If the place at which the injury occurred is brought within the contract of employment, by the requirement of its use by the employé, so that he has no discretion or choice as to his mode or manner of coming to work, such place and its use seem logically to become elements or factors in the employment, and the injury thus arises out of the employment and is incurred in the course thereof."

See, also, Nole v. Wadsworth, 6 B. W. C. C. 129.

[4] The second contention of the petitioners is that the injury to Steinkamp did not arise out of his employment because he was injured when by means of a key surreptitiously obtained he had entered the building on a Sunday when it was closed, and was proceeding without authority to run the elevator himself in the absence of an operator. In our former opinion the award was held invalid on this ground. A rehearing was granted, not because of any doubt as to the invalidity of the award upon such a state of facts, but because of doubt as to whether the commission was not justified in finding a different state of facts. A re-examination of the evidence has satisfied us that the commission was justified in so finding.

The home office of the Starr Piano Company is in Los Angeles. Steinkamp was employed by it as traveling salesman and its San Francisco representative and to take charge of its exhibit in the building where the accident occurred. He had both the freedom and the responsibility incident to his position as local representative. He was not held to regular hours at a particular place, but was supposed to give as much time as was required to discharge his duties efficiently, and it was expected of him that he would at times work evenings and on Sundays. This, in effect, was testified to by the secretary and treasurer of the piano company. It further appears that at the time when the piano company, through its secretary, was arranging to rent its space in the building, Steinkamp brought up the matter of his being permitted to use the building evenings or Sundays, and the agent of the building told the secretary and Steinkamp that while the building was not ordinarily used evenings or Sundays, it could be arranged that Steinkamp might do so if necessary. Steinkamp did work frequently in the building evenings and Sundays, and the evidence shows that this was known both to his employer and the agents of the building. On the Sunday when he was hurt, he was in the building to attend to some business for the piano company. Being there for that purpose, it follows from the facts just previously stated that he was legitimately there in the course of his employment, although there out of business hours and when the building was closed.

This would hardly be questioned were it not for the manner by which he effected an entrance. He obtained entrance by means of a key which he had had made from one loaned him temporarily by a representative of the building after he had been refused a key by another representative and by the janitor.

But in the first place, assuming that he had the key surreptitiously, the only bearing which that fact would seem to have would be to indicate that he was not in the building legitimately. If he were rightly there, how he got there would seem to be immaterial, since he was not hurt getting there, but afterwards. That he was there legitimately hardly admits of serious question upon the other facts already stated.

In the second place, there was evidence sufficient to justify the conclusion by the commission that, no matter how Steinkamp first obtained his key, his continued possession and use of it was not surreptitious. Numerous other tenants had keys and used them. It was no exceptional thing for a tenant to have a key. Steinkamp himself was frequently in the building out of hours to the knowledge of the agents, and when, if he were supposed not to have a key, the question must have occurred to them as to how he had got in. It also appears that after he had been refused a key by the janitor, the latter observed him in the building out of hours, and reported that fact to one of the responsible agents for the building, but nothing was said or done about it. The whole course of conduct warrants the conclusion that Steinkamp, having in some manner obtained a key, the agents of the building acquiesced in his retaining and using it.

The remaining questions in the case pertain to Steinkamp's attempt to use the elevator in the absence of the operator. He was hurt in an attempt so to use it, and, unless he had authority to do so, he was not using a means of access to his employer's premises then open to him, and was not hurt in the course of his employment. Furthermore, authority so to use an elevator cannot reasonably be presumed, but must affirmatively appear.

There were two elevators in the building, both operated by electric power, one a freight elevator, the other a passenger elevator. No operator was supplied for the freight elevator, and any tenant desiring to use it either applied to the janitor or was at liberty to operate it himself. On the other hand, an operator was supplied for the passenger elevator, and during business hours at least this elevator was operated by no one else. When the operator left, the power was left on. Why this was done does not appear. The agents for the building deny that any one was authorized to use the passenger elevator in the absence of the operator. Whether its method of operation was different from or more difficult than that of the freight elevator, which the tenants were permitted to run, does not appear, but it is a matter of common observation that there are electric elevators which do not require any considerable skill or experience for their operation. As against the general statement of the agents of the building that no one was authorized to use the passenger elevator in the absence of the operator, there is the testimony of Steinkamp that the manager and secretary of the building himself showed Steinkamp how to operate it; that other tenants operated it themselves; that he had operated it himself on several previous occasions, and that no objection to such use had ever been made to his knowledge by the agents of the building. This testimony is corroborated by that of one Nelson, a mechanic employed by the piano company to install some phonographic booths. He testifies that on going to the building he was given a key by the manager and secretary and told to use the elevator; that he did use it a number of times; that on one occasion he found the elevator door open and the elevator not there, it having been taken to a floor above by a tenant, and that he investigated and found the door was apt to rebound on being closed, and reported the matter to the agents of the building. The manager and secretary of the building contradict Steinkamp's testimony that he showed him how to operate the elevator, but, admits that he showed him how to open the door into the elevator compartment. Why he did this, if not in order that Steinkamp might operate the elevator, does not appear.

It is clear that upon the foregoing testimony of Steinkamp and Nelson, taken in conjunction with the other evidence stated, the commission was justified in concluding that, unusual as it might be, Steinkamp and other tenants were in fact permitted to operate the passenger elevator, themselves. In fact, the petitioners hardly contend to the contrary. The point on which they rely in this connection is that while Steinkamp may have been permitted by the owners of the building to run the elevator, this fact and the fact that he was doing so were wholly unknown to Steinkamp's employer, and was not acquiesced in by it. This is true so far as appears. It is likewise true that acquiescence by the owner of the building in some unreasonable and dangerous use of some appurtenance of the building by an employé of a tenant, unknown to the tenant, would not be the equivalent of acquiescence by the tenant in such use by his employé. But in such a case as this, where Steinkamp was largely a free and responsible agent, it must be taken that his employer acquiesced in his use of the building in any reasonable way permitted by the owner of the building. The award of the commission cannot therefore be annulled, unless it appear that Steinkamp's using and operating the elevator himself was unreasonable and dangerous. There is no evidence upon this point; and, while it might be said in the case of some kinds of elevators that their use without a skilled and trained operator was unreasonable and dangerous as a matter of common knowledge, it does not appear that the elevator here involved was of that character. Certainly there are some electric elevators which can be operated with safety by a person without particular experience or skill, and the acquiescence by the owners of the building in the use of this particular elevator by such persons, if the testimony of Steinkamp and Nelson be believed, is some indication that it was of that character.

It follows that the commission was justified in finding that Steinkamp was not injured in endeavoring to reach his employer's premises by an unreasonable and dangerous means of access which he was not authorized to use, but, on the contrary, that he was injured while legitimately seeking to reach his place of work by a means of access appurtenant thereto and which he was justified in using. This being the case, it follows that the finding that his injury arose out of and in the course of his employment must be sustained.

Award affirmed.

SHAW, J. I dissent for reasons similar to those stated in my dissenting opinion in Judson Mfg. Co. v. Industrial Accident Comn.. S. (Supreme Court of California. Oct. 24, 1919. Rehearing Denied Nov. 21, 1919.)

1. DIVORCE ⟹169 — INTERLOCUTORY JUDGMENT AS "CONTRACT" OR "AGREEMENT."

An interlocutory judgment of divorce, under Civ. Code, § 131, so far as it determines the rights of the parties, is a contract or agreement between them, within section 175, freeing the husband from liability for support when the wife lives separate from him by agreement, and, though temporary and provisional, settles their rights for the time being until some action, proceeding, or motion is begun to change their status, and some order is made thereon having such effect, or until they become reconciled and resume marital relations, restoring their mutual obligations.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Agreement; Contract.]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟹388 — NO PRESUMPTION UNDER COMPENSATION ACT OF DEPENDENCY OF DIVORCED WIFE.

Husband and wife, after interlocutory judgment of divorce for the wife, rendered under Civ. Code, § 131, and making no provision for her support, held living separate by agreement not providing for the wife's support, so that, under section 175, the husband was not personally liable for her support, and she was not entitled to the presumption of total dependency created by Workmen's Compensation Act, § 14, subd. a(1).

the order of the Industrial Accident Commission. Award annulled, and cause remanded.

Walter H. Linforth, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an application to review a decision of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation to Eva Oberg and Mary Oberg on account of the death of John M. Oberg, who at the time of his death was the husband of Eva Oberg. Mary Oberg was the mother of said John M. Oberg. It is admitted that the injuries which caused the death of John M. Oberg were caused by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. The only questions for consideration relate to the amount of compensation to be awarded and the rights of the beneficiaries to receive the same.

The injury occurred on November 30, 1918. Oberg and his wife at that time had not been living together for nearly two years. In December, 1917, Eva Oberg began an action for divorce against John M. Oberg, alleging in the complaint as cause for divorce the willful failure of said Oberg to provide her with the common necessaries of life for more than a year prior to the beginning of the action. The complaint did not ask alimony or other provision for her support or for an award of property. Oberg was a nonresident of the state, and summons was served by publication only. In that action, on April 16, 1918, she obtained an interlocutory judgment of divorce, declaring that she was entitled to a divorce from said John M. Oberg on the ground stated in the complaint. It made no provision whatever for any alimony or maintenance and no reservation of any right or power thereafter to award alimony or maintenance or to entertain any application therefor. This judgment became final, in the sense that no appeal could be taken therefrom, on June 16, 1918. Mary Oberg, the mother of John M. Oberg, had been receiving financial aid from John M. Oberg prior to his death. His contributions to her for the year preceding his death did not exceed $125. The commission found that Eva Oberg was the wife of John M. Oberg at the time of his death, and that he was legally liable for her support; that Mary Oberg was partially dependent on him for support at the time of his death, and thereupon it awarded full death benefits, and, as it is authorized to do by subdivision "e" of section 14 of the Workmen's Compensation Act (Stats. 1917, p. 845), reassigned the same by giving one half of the amount to the mother and the other half to the wife.

It is the contention of the petitioner that said John M. Oberg was not legally liable for the support of said wife at the time of his death, and consequently that full compensation could not be awarded and subsequently reassigned in the manner stated, but that the only allowance that could be made under the provisions of the section was $100 for burial expenses and an additional sum to the mother, as a death benefit, not exceeding three times the annual amount devoted to the support of said mother by said deceased in his lifetime, and not exceeding the equivalent of three times his average annual earnings, as provided in section 9, subdivision "c" (2) of the Workmen's Compensation Act (Stats. 1917, p. 840). This contention would be correct, if the wife be not legally entitled to compensation under the act.

The act provides that if the wife was living with the husband at the time of his death, or if he "was legally liable at the time of his death" for her support, she is "conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent for support" upon her husband, so as to be entitled to compensation under the act as such dependent. Section 14, subd. a(1). The commission was of the opinion that, under the circumstances above narrated, and notwithstanding the entry of the interlocutory decree of divorce between Eva Oberg and her said husband, he was legally liable for her support at the time of his death. The correctness of this conclusion is the question to be considered in the case.

The question depends mainly upon the meaning and effect of sections 131 and 132 of the Civil Code. The provisions of these sections, applicable to this case, are that in an action for divorce, if the court determines that a divorce should be granted, "an interlocutory judgment must be entered, declaring that the party in whose favor the court decides is entitled to a divorce" (section 131); and that after the lapse of one year from the entry of such interlocutory judgment the court "may enter the final judgment granting the divorce, and such final judgment shall restore them to the status of single persons," and that the court may then give "such other and further relief as may be necessary to complete disposition of the action" (section 132).

The petitioner claims that where the complaint in such action does not ask for alimony, support, or maintenance, nor for any relief regarding property and the interlocutory judgment does not reserve the questions of alimony, support, or disposition of property for further consideration, the right of the wife to demand subsequent support from the husband is terminated by the interlocutory judgment, and that he is thereby relieved from the obligation to support her during the interval between the interlocutory judgment and the final judgment. In support of this claim it cites Howell v. Howell, 104 Cal. 45, 37 Pac. 770, 43 Am. St. Rep. 70, O'Brien v. O'Brien, 124 Cal. 422, 57 Pac. 225, McKay v. McKay, 125 Cal. 68, 57 Pac. 677, O'Brien v. O'Brien, 130 Cal. 409, 62 Pac. 598, and Harlan v. Harlan, 154 Cal. 348, 98 Pac. 32. These decisions all related to the effect of final judgments, which made no provision for future alimony or support and did not reserve that subject for subsequent disposition. They are put upon the ground that, inasmuch as the court in those cases had rendered final judgment without reserving the question of support or alimony for further consideration, and such judgment had become final in that court, it had lost jurisdiction over the action, and that as the final judgment dissolved the marriage absolutely, the woman was no longer his wife, and the personal liability of the husband for her subsequent support had ceased to exist, and that all her former rights to support from him had become merged in the judgment. The interlocutory judgment is provisional or temporary only by the terms of the statute, and does not of itself dissolve the marriage relation, and therefore these reasons do not apply.

We have considered the effect of sections 131 and 132 in Deyoe v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 476, 74 Pac. 28, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73, Periera v. Periera, 156 Cal. 9, 103 Pac. 488, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 880, 134 Am. St. Rep. 107, Estate of Dargie, 162 Cal. 51, 121 Pac. 320, Estate of Seiler, 164 Cal. 181, 128 Pac. 334, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1093, Estate of Walker, 169 Cal. 403, 146 Pac. 868, and Brown v. Brown, 170 Cal. 1, 147 Pac. 1168. The principal proposition established by these cases is that the marriage relation is not dissolved by the interlocutory judgment, and that for all the purposes involved in those cases it remained in existence until the final judgment of divorce. Neither the Periera Case nor the Deyoe Case contained anything concerning the liability of the husband for support after the interlocutory judgment. In Estate of Dargie the parties had become reconciled after the interlocutory judgment, and were living together as husband and wife at the death of the husband, but the interlocutory judgment had not been set aside. It was held that the marriage relation was not dissolved, and that she was entitled to the benefit of the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure declaring a surviving wife entitled to a family allowance out of the estate of the husband. In Estate of Seiler and Estate of Walker it was held that when the husband died after the interlocutory judgment the surviving wife was his widow, and was entitled to administration upon his estate, under the provisions of section 1365, Code of Civil Procedure. In Brown v. Brown, the interlocutory divorce had been granted to the wife on the default of her husband upon a complaint for divorce on the ground of willful neglect, and which alleged that there was no community property at the time the action was begun. During the interval between the interlocutory judgment and the final judgment the husband acquired community property, and after the final judgment the wife began the action to establish her title as tenant in common with him in such property. It was held that the final judgment upon such a complaint and default was a determination that there was no community property in existence at the time the action was begun, but that it did not conclude the wife with respect to the subsequent acquisition of property by the husband, and that she was entitled to show such acquisition and to claim her share thereof after the final judgment had been rendered. The case went upon the theory that the judgment had left the after-acquired community property undisposed of, and that they therefore became tenants in common thereof, each holding a half interest. De Godey v. Godey, 39 Cal. 162. The divorce was not granted upon either the ground of cruelty or adultery. The decision holds that the statute declaring what shall constitute community property continues applicable after the interlocutory judgment and until the final judgment, unless the interlocutory judgment in some manner adjudicates the matter.

[1, 2] These decisions do not reach the point presented in the case now in hand. This case presents the question whether section 155 of the Code, declaring that the husband and wife contract toward each other obligations of mutual support, continues in existence notwithstanding the rendition of an interlocutory judgment rendered upon a complaint by the wife which alleges a cause of divorce against the husband for willful neglect and does not ask alimony or any other provision for her support. Certain other provisions of the Civil Code are important. Section 159 declares that the husband and wife "may agree, in writing, to an immediate separation and may make provision for the support of either of them and of their children during such separation." Section 175 provides that he is not liable for her support if she abandons him without cause, until she offers to return, "nor is he liable for her support when she is living separate from him, by agreement, unless such support is stipulated in the agreement." Here the husband and wife had been living separate and apart for nearly two years prior to his death and for about a year prior to the time when she began the action for divorce. The wife began the action asking for a divorce and seeking no relief whatever from him for her support. This was, in effect, a waiver by her, for the purposes of the action, of her right to support from him, at least until such time as she should apply therein for some order to enforce such obligation. To this complaint he made no answer, and suffered the interlocutory judgment to be taken against him by default. This was equivalent to a consent on his part that she should have the divorce as prayed for upon the allegations of her complaint. It is said that "a judgment is a contract, in the highest sense of the term." Wallace v. Eldredge, 27 Cal. 499. This is well settled in this state. Stuart v. Lander, 16 Cal. 372, 76 Am. Dec. 538; Bean v. Loryea, 81 Cal. 153, 22 Pac. 513; Dore v. Thornburgh, 90 Cal. 66, 27 Pac. 30, 25 Am. St. Rep. 100; Weaver v. San Francisco, 146 Cal. 732, 81 Pac. 119. An interlocutory judgment of divorce is therefore, so far as it determines the rights of the parties, a contract between them. It is temporary and provisional in its nature, it is true, but it settles the rights of the parties for the time being, and until some action, proceeding, or motion is begun to change the status, and some order is made thereon which has that effect, or until they become reconciled and resume marital relations, in which event their mutual obligations are, for the time being at least, restored. Olson v. Superior Court, 175 Cal. 250, 165 Pac. 706, 1 A. L. R. 1589. The following passage from Brown v. Brown, supra, although it refers to a final judgment, is applicable also to an interlocutory judgment so far as it declares the same to be a contract:

> "Where a defendant is served with a summons and complaint stating the facts upon which he is required to act, and he makes default, he is presumed to admit all the facts which are well pleaded in the complaint. The judgment which follows upon this sort of admission is, in contemplation of law, a complete adjudication of all the rights of the parties embraced in the prayer for relief and arising from the facts stated in the complaint, including the facts in his favor as well as those against him. The defendant here is presumed to have acceded to the proposition embraced in the complaint, and to have consented that plaintiff should obtain the relief therein prayed for, upon the conditions and facts set forth in the complaint. The proceeding is equivalent to a statement by Brown to plaintiff that he did not object to a divorce for the cause alleged, based upon the theory that there was no community property existing at the time the action was begun. When judgment is rendered upon such a complaint and default, it becomes, in effect, a contract between the parties that the judgment shall be final with respect to everything properly embraced within the allegations of the complaint and in the prayer for relief."

So in the present case the interlocutory judgment, although not final, was conclusive between the parties for the purposes of that action during the period elapsing before the final judgment should be entered, unless by some proceeding or agreement it became in some manner modified. Perhaps the wife would have had the right during that interval to apply in that action for further relief in the way of support and maintenance or for alimony, but until she did so the rights of each with respect to the personal marital obligations of the other remained as declared by the interlocutory judgment, and it was binding on each of them. It is true it had no effect on the operation of the statutes which declare her rights in the property of which he dies possessed, nor upon the statutes declaring the status of the property acquired by him during the marriage, because, until the final judgment, the marriage status continues. But the personal obligations between them remain in abeyance until changed by some subsequent action or agreement which is binding upon the husband. They are, by virtue of the interlocutory judgment, living separate by agreement, and if that judgment makes no provision for her support by him, they are living separate by an agreement which does not provide for her support, and under section 175 he is not, during that interval, personally liable for her support. The judgment has the effect of a contract for that purpose. Until that contract is in some manner changed, either in the action or in some independent proceeding, or by a reconciliation, her right to support is suspended. In the present case no change was made in their status up to the time of his death. They were living apart under this contract evidenced by this judgment. He was not at that time legally liable for her support, and, therefore she does not come within the aforesaid provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act. It follows that the award cannot be sustained. It will be necessary for the commission to readjust the matter under the principles we have stated, giving the wife no compensation whatever and allowing the mother such compensation as the evidence may show she is entitled to under the provisions of the act.

The award is annulled and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

In re MATHEWSON'S ESTATE.

WARD v. MATHEWSON.

(L. A. 6162.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE 🔑151(7)—ALLOWANCE TO HUSBAND AS WIFE'S ADMINISTRATOR OF FUNERAL EXPENSES.

Where husband owned property worth $7,050, and was joint tenant with his deceased wife, whose administrator he was, of property worth $8,000, incumbered to $6,000, which property he held by right of survivorship, the income being sufficient to pay interest and taxes, and not having sufficient income to pay funeral expenses, the court properly allowed him $512.50 for reasonable funeral expenses.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS 🔑510(8)—NO REVERSAL FOR IMMATERIAL ERROR.

Order settling final account, and allowing an amount for reasonable funeral expenses, will not be reversed for lack of verification of the inventory; the only omission from the inventory being a small amount of property which was nevertheless duly charged in the account, and all distributed in kind.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Ada Hays Mathewson, deceased. From an order settling final account of J. Everett Mathewson, as administrator, Margaret Ward appeals. Order affirmed.

E. A. Miller and Stewart & Stewart, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

James S. Bennett, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This case is an appeal from an order settling a final account and allowing the husband, who was the administrator of the estate, the amount of $512.50 for the reasonable funeral expenses of his wife's burial. The only heirs of the decedent were the appellant, who was her mother, and the respondent, who was her husband.

The first point assigned as error is the allowance for funeral expenses. Upon that subject the court found that the husband was the owner of property in his own right of the value of $7,050; that he was a joint tenant with his wife of certain property of the value of $8,000, incumbered to the amount of $6,000, which property he succeeded to and holds by right of survivorship upon the death of his wife; that the income from the property was about sufficient to pay the interest upon said incumbrance and taxes; that he had borrowed money since the wife's death for his necessary living expenses, and did not have sufficient income to pay the funeral expenses; and that $512.50 was "a reasonable and proper sum to be allowed as funeral expenses, in view of her manner of living, her position in society, and the amount of her estate in her lifetime."

[1] In support of the appeal the case of Estate of Weringer, 100 Cal. 345, 34 Pac. 825, is cited. That case, in our opinion, justifies an allowance to the husband, as administrator of the wife's estate, of funeral expenses, if, when the circumstances of the parties, their mode of living, and the amount of the estates of the wife and husband, respectively, are taken into consideration, it is reasonable to do so. This case comes up without the evidence. The findings aforesaid show facts which justified the exercise of the discretion of the court in making the allowance of the funeral expenses.

[2] The other objection urged on the argument is that the inventory was not verified, and therefore that it was improper to take it into account at all. Just what is meant by this objection we do not know. It is not claimed that any property of the estate was not included in the inventory, except a small amount which the court found had been omitted therefrom and which was properly charged in the account. None of the property was sold, and it is all distributed in kind. It is therefore manifest that the fact that the inventory was not verified has not injured any one. The principle that error which does not produce injury does not justify a reversal is well exemplified in this case.

The other objections are too trivial to be worthy of mention.

The order is affirmed.

CITY OF OAKLAND v. ALBERS BROS.' MILLING CO. (Civ. 2933.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑966(1) — IMPROVEMENTS BY CITY'S LESSEE NOT TAXABLE.

A dock and warehouse which by terms of lease, given by city, of public lands granted by state to city in trust for certain purposes under St. 1911, p. 1238, lessee was to construct, and which when so constructed were to become and remain the property of the lessor, are within the express provisions of Const. art. 13, § 1, and Pol. Code, 3607, that property of a municipal corporation is not taxable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Edgar T. Zook, Judge.

Action by the City of Oakland against Albers Bros. Milling Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ezra W. Decoto, Dist. Atty., J. M. Koford, Asst. Dist. Atty., H. L. Hagan, City Atty., and John J. Earle, Asst. City Atty., all of Oakland, for appellant.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, amici curiæ.

RICHARDS, J. This action was instituted by the city of Oakland to collect from the defendant certain taxes alleged to be due said city. The cause was submitted to the trial court for decision upon an agreed statement of facts which may be summarized as follows: On February 16, 1916, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into a certain written lease of certain lands upon the western water front of the said city of Oakland, the same being a portion of the public lands granted by the state to the city of Oakland in trust for certain purposes under the provisions of an act of Legislature approved May 1, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 1258). By the terms of said lease the lessee was to construct certain substantial buildings and improvements consisting of a dock and warehouse, which were to be used by it during its tenancy of the premises, for which the lessee was to be repaid by a system of warehouse and dockage charges as specified in said lease; it being expressly provided therein that—

> "The said dock and warehouse when so constructed shall become and remain the property of the lessor."

It was upon these specific improvements that the tax officials of the city of Oakland undertook during the fiscal year 1917–18 to levy and collect the taxes which are the subject of this suit, and the sole question presented to the trial court and to this court upon appeal is as to whether the said improvements upon the said public property of the plaintiff is subject to taxation. The trial court held that it was not, and rendered its judgment accordingly in the defendant's favor. From such judgment the plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

The case upon which the appellant chiefly relies to sustain its contention upon this appeal is the case of San Francisco v. McGinn, 67 Cal. 110, 7 Pac. 187. A careful examination of that case convinces us that it has no application to the case at bar, the essential difference between the two cases being that in the former case the court based its ruling that the defendant therein, who had placed the improvements in question upon the lands of the city of San Francisco, was to be held to be their owner for the purposes of taxation; while in the case at bar the improvements in question are expressly made the property of the city of Oakland, and hence the defendant herein could not have for any purpose any ownership in them. Under the express provisions of section 1 of article 13 of the state Constitution, and also of section 3607 of the Political Code, the property of a municipal corporation in this state is not the subject of taxation. In the presence of these constitutional and statutory provisions, it is needless to cite the earlier cases showing that this is and has long been the settled law of this state; but in the recent case of San Pedro, etc., Railroad Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 179 Pac. 393, the Supreme Court declared void an attempted assessment of a breakwater built by a lessee of submerged public lands, as "improvements," holding that while, as conceded by the parties in that case, the breakwater was not an "improvement" within the meaning of section 3617 of the Political Code, even if it were so considered to be, it would be such an improvement as would become fixed to the realty itself, "the fee of which was in the state, and hence not subject to assessment."

Judgment affirmed.

CHASE v. PETERS et al. (Civ. 2991.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 8, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 6, 1919.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT 🔑291(17) — TIME WITHIN WHICH TENANT MUST PAY DEFAULTED RENT INTO COURT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1174, in unlawful detainer against a tenant which has defaulted in its payment of rent, if, after judgment for plaintiff landlord, the tenant had desired to retain the premises, it should have tendered into court the rent found due within five days after judgment was entered, and it did not have a continuing right to be restored to possession during the whole of the period consumed by its appeal, which resulted adversely to it, and for five days after return of remittitur.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by Charles A. Chase against Homer H. Peters, Jr., and others. From an order refusing application for an order to restore defendant Peters Investment Company to possession of certain realty, the investment company and its trustees appeal. Order affirmed.

See, also, 174 Pac. 116.

Riley & Heskett and Wright & McKee, all of San Diego, for appellants.

James E. Wadham, of San Diego, James S. Bennett, of Los Angeles, and Frank J. Macomber, of San Diego, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This is an appeal taken by the Peters Investment Company, a corporation, and certain other persons named, who are designated as trustees of said corporation. The appeal is from an order of the superior court refusing an application for an order to restore the Peters Investment Company to the possession of certain real property from which it had been ousted by process authorized under a judgment for unlawful detainer. For convenience, we will designate the appellant in this case under the general name of investment company.

Prior to May, 1917, the investment company held possession of the real property in question under an assignment made by the lessee of the plaintiff. Default had been made in the payment of the rental fixed by the lease, and the lessor had also been compelled to pay certain taxes which under the lease the lessee had agreed to discharge. An action for the unlawful detainer of the property was brought, after a due notice given to the lessee and the investment company to either pay the rental or surrender possession of the premises. In that action there were two counts or causes, in one of which was contained a statement of the several installments of rental which were due and unpaid. In the second cause of action there were detailed various amounts which the lessor had paid on account of the tax charges. The investment company did not deny that the rental charges had accrued as alleged, but insisted that there could be no recovery for taxes paid by the lessor, because that cause of action was improperly joined to the cause of action for the unlawful detainer of the property. The court made findings of fact which separately and distinctly found the various amounts of rental which were due, and separately the items of tax charges that had been paid by the lessor. After the entry of judgment in May, 1917, no stay having been granted, and five days having elapsed from the entry of the judgment, writ of restitution was issued and the lessor was restored to the possession of the premises leased. The investment company appealed, and this court held that there could be no recovery for taxes paid in an action for the unlawful detention of real property. The cause of action under which that recovery was had being separately stated in the complaint, and the findings being complete upon the matter of the rental charges due, the judgment on appeal was to the effect only that the judgment of the lower court be modified by striking therefrom the amount which the superior court had found to be owing to the plaintiff on account of the tax charges. The opinion rendered on that appeal more fully states the facts of the case than we have included in the foregoing statement. See Chase v. Peters et al., 174 Pac. 117. Upon the going down of the remittitur in that case the investment company, within five days after the remittitur had been received in the clerk's office of the county of San Diego, made application to the superior court to be restored to possession of the real property upon payment of the amount of rent which the judgment of the court had fixed. It is from the order denying that application that this appeal is taken.

In section 1174 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which refers to the form and substance of a judgment in an unlawful detainer suit, it is provided:

> "When the proceeding is for an unlawful detainer after default in the payment of rent, and the lease or agreement under which the rent is payable has not by its terms expired, execution upon the judgment shall not be issued until the expiration of five days after the entry of the judgment, within which time the tenant, or any subtenant, or any mortgagee of the term, or any other party interested in its continuance, may pay into court, for the landlord, the amount found due as rent, with interest thereon, and the amount of the damages found by the jury or the court for the unlawful detainer, and the costs of the proceedings, and thereupon the judgment shall be satisfied and the tenant be restored to his estate; but if payment as here provided be not made within the five days, the judgment may be enforced for its full amount, and for the possession of the premises. In all other cases the judgment may be enforced immediately."

It is the contention of the investment company on this appeal that the five days mentioned in the provision quoted did not commence to run as against it, because of the appeal taken, until after remittitur had been returned. Under the facts of the case as they have appeared, we think that the investment company was not entitled to the relief asked and that its application came too late. If it had desired to retain possession of the premises, it should have made tender into court of the amount of rent found due, as the section provides, within the five days after the judgment was entered. There was no order of reversal made as to that judgment. In fact, we have noted that the investment company did not dispute the amount claimed by the lessor on account of rent. The case appears to us to be in all respects the same as though the judgment appealed from in the former suit was a judgment for rent only, and that that judgment had been affirmed upon appeal. In such a case there would seem to be no room to argue that the defaulting tenant was given a continuing right to be restored to possession of the premises from which he had been ousted, all during the period consumed by the appeal and for five days after remittitur had been returned. This was clearly not the intent of the Legislature; such a construction of the statute would work a hardship against a lessor seeking to rid himself of a tenant who would not pay his rent, for it would compel the landlord to hold the property in readiness to be restored during the whole time that was consumed by the taking of the appeal and until the determination thereof. This, to our minds, would be directly contrary to the whole design of the special remedy provided against defaulting tenants of real property.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

McKENZIE v. NICHELINI et al.

(Civ. 2844.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 5, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 3, 1919.)

1. BOUNDARIES 🔑8—PROPORTIONAL METHOD RE-ESTABLISHING GOVERNMENT CORNERS NOT CONTROLLING ON STATE COURT.

The rule as to use of the proportional method in re-establishing government corners, as laid down by the Surveyor General of the United States, is for the guidance of United States deputy surveyors in running lines in which the government is interested, and cannot control a state court in its choice of means for establishing such a fact as the point where the government surveyor originally placed a section or quarter section corner, when the question properly arises within its jurisdiction.

2. BOUNDARIES 🔑37(3) — EVIDENCE RELOCATING CORNERS OF GOVERNMENT SURVEY.

In ejectment by the owner of the south half of the northwest quarter and north half of the southwest quarter of a section against claimants of the south half of the southwest quarter, who had taken possession, by virtue of their claim, of land which according to plaintiff constituted part of the north half of the quarter, evidence held to have justified the court in locating quarter corners on the west and south sides of the section as it did without resorting to proportional method to re-establish government corners.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by Roderick McKenzie against A. Nichelini and others. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Percy S. King, of Napa, and Chas. L. McEnerney and Leo J. McEnerney, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

John T. York, of Napa, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The plaintiff, being the owner of the south half of the northwest quarter and the north half of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 8 north, range 4 west, Mt. Diablo base and meridian, brought an action in ejectment against the defendants, who claimed ownership of the south half of the last-named quarter section, but who had entered into possession of land by virtue of such claim which, according to the plaintiff, constituted part of the north half of said southwest quarter.

The court, after a lengthy trial, in which much evidence was taken of surveyors and others as to monuments, witness trees, courses, distances, and topography, found in favor of the plaintiff, and gave judgment accordingly. The defendants appeal; their main contention being that the finding of the court as to the location of the plaintiff's land upon which its judgment is based is wholly unsupported by the evidence and is contrary thereto.

The deciding factor in the case, as admitted by the appellants, is the location of the line dividing the north and south halves of the southwest quarter of section 24 above referred to. According to the contention of the appellants, the true method for locating this line is first to find the legal center of the section—a point, as they remark, which is not set by the government surveyor, but which is found by running a straight line from the quarter section corner on the north boundary of the section to the quarter section corner on the south line thereof, and then by intersecting this line by one drawn from the quarter section corner on the west side of the section to the opposite quarter section corner on the east, the point of intersection of these two lines being the legal center of the section. Having thus obtained the interior boundaries of the four quarters of the section, the north and south halves of the southwest quarter will be found by similarly intersecting that quarter section by an east and west line equidistant from its north and south boundaries, to do which it is, of course, necessary to know in addition to the points already obtained the quarter corner on the south boundary of the section (identical with the southeast corner of the southwest quarter) and the southwest corner of the section (identical with the same corner of the quarter section). It is the appellants' contention that the evidence offered by the plaintiff shows that the lines were not run in this manner, from which they argue that the court's finding as to the location of the line in dispute is not supported by the evidence.

It will be observed, however, that, given a section of land 80 chains square, the southwest quarter thereof will be bounded by four straight lines, each 40 chains in length, one running from the southwest corner to the west quarter corner of the section; a second running from the said southwest corner to the south quarter corner; a third running from the west quarter corner easterly and parallel to the last-mentioned line; and the fourth running from the quarter corner on the south northerly and paralleling the first-mentioned line. The north and south halves of this quarter section will be found by running a line from a point 20 chains north of the southwest corner to a point 20 chains north of the southeast corner thereof. And since the dispute between the parties to this appeal is only as to the location of the line between the north and south halves of the quarter section involved in its relation to north and south, the degree of extension easterly or westerly of this line becomes immaterial; for no right of appellants to land to the or west of this quarter section is in question, and the judgment of the court has not ejected them from any land so located.

Turning now to the evidence upon which the court based its finding as to the relative location of the north and south halves of this quarter section, there is testimony in the record that the entire section is approximately 80 chains from north to south; that the plaintiff's surveyor, for the purpose of locating the plaintiff's land, started at the southwest corner of the section, which corner he had known as the established government corner for many years; from that point he ran north 20 chains, and there located the westerly end of the line dividing said southwest quarter into north and south halves; from there he ran 40 chains north, and there located the westerly end of the line dividing the northwest quarter of the section into north and south halves; to ascertain the precise direction in which he should run the north and south boundaries of plaintiff's land (having ascertained that there were no established government corners on the east side of the section now to be found), he measured the whole township line from south to north between townships 3 and 4, the eastern boundary of section 24 being part of this line, and, finding it 7 chains short of the correct distance, he prorated the deficiency between the six sections on the east side of the township, which gave him as the direction in which the north and south boundaries of section 24 should be run a course north 83 degrees east. He accordingly ran two such lines 40 chains in length for the north and south boundaries of plaintiff's land, and joined the eastern extremities of these lines by a line parallel to the western boundary already described. This direction of north 83 degrees east, however, was not accepted by the court as correctly locating the plaintiff's land. The government field notes of certain lines of the section in question were in evidence, among them the south boundary thereof, which was a line run due east from the southwest corner of the section; and from testimony as to the topography of the land traversed by a line run east from said corner the court concluded that such testimony was sufficient to establish as the true direction of said south boundary a line due east as given in said field notes, and in its findings adopted this direction for the north and south boundaries of plaintiff's land, the latter of which is the dividing line between plaintiff and defendants. It further appears that the northwest corner of this section as established by the government could not be found, but that a line drawn from the corner common to sections 14, 15, 22, and 23 (located one mile west of section 24) to a point on the east line of the township between said section 24 and section 19 in the adjoining township, located with reference to its relation to a known government corner further east, would pass through or very close to a point 80 chains north of the southwest corner of section 24, the distance called for by the field notes for the northwest corner of the section. If we regard the north boundary of the section as being coincident with the eastern half of this line (and it is the only testimony in the record with reference to its location), a line drawn from the quarter corner on the north boundary of the section to the corresponding corner on the south boundary would be somewhat longer than 80 chains. If this excess were divided between the four equal parts of this line, it would place the eastern extremity of the line dividing the north and south halves of the section a trifle to the north of where the court found it to be; but the error is so small that we think it is a case for the application of the legal maxim, "The law disregards trifles" (Civ. Code, § 3533), and not of sufficient magnitude to warrant a reversal of the case.

The appellants' contention that the finding of the trial court as to the location of plaintiff's land is not supported by the evidence is also based upon the assertion that the southeast, northeast, and southwest corners, as also of all the quarter corners of section 24, are lost corners, which should be re-established by the proportional method in order to locate the line in dispute in this action. It is not necessary to agree with the appellants that the re-establishment of all of these lines is necessary in order to correctly locate the line in dispute, but their contention may be considered with reference to those corners which the trial court used in reaching its conclusion and which it found by methods other than that urged by appellants, viz, the quarter corners on the west and south sides of the section, and the section's legal center point.

[1] It may first be said that we think the appellants' contention as to the duty of the trial court to resort to the proportional method in re-establishing government corners is entirely too broad. The rule in this respect as laid down by the Surveyor General of the United States is for the guidance of United States deputy surveyors in running lines in which the government is interested. It cannot control a state court in its choice of means for establishing a fact, to wit, the point where the government surveyor originally placed a section or quarter section corner, when that question properly arises within its jurisdiction. But this rule of the General Land Office is itself but a statement in detail, and perhaps an extension of a rule long followed by the courts of the country generally. In Weaver v. Howatt, 161 Cal. 77, 84, 118 Pac. 519, 522, our own Supreme Court has indicated the extent to which it will follow the rule. It is there said:

> "It is not the province of the court to determine where the corner should have been fixed. This is not an action to vacate the government survey. It must be assumed that the line was measured and the monuments set. Their positions, as set, fix the rights of the parties, regardless of the inaccuracy of the measurements and the errors in distance found in the field notes. The trial court must ascertain, as near as may be, where this monument was set by the government surveyor. If the exact spot cannot be found, it must, if possible, decide from the data appearing in evidence its approximate position, and the proportional method is to be used only when no other reasonable method is possible, and it must be so used that it does not contradict or conflict with the official data that are not impeached, and which, when not impeached, confine the actual position within certain limits. The application of the proportional method must, in that case, be also confined to the same limits."

[2] In the case at bar the trial court was apparently satisfied that the evidence in the case afforded the means of locating the quarter corners on the west and south sides of the section wihout resorting to the proportional method; and a comparison of the government field notes with the testimony of witnesses relative to the topography of the country traversed by the government surveyor in reaching and placing these points does not enable us to say that it was not justified in locating these corners as it did without resorting to the method claimed by the appellants to be compulsory under the circumstances here presented.

The appellants make the further point that the court failed to find upon a material issue, namely, the claim by the plaintiff, denied by the defendants, of ownership of land in the south half of the southwest quarter of the same section; but, as the court granted the plaintiff no relief under this claim, and the point is made by the appellants for the first time in their closing brief filed after the oral argument of the case, we do not feel called upon to give it consideration.

For the reasons stated, the judgment is affirmed.

BLACKBURN v. MARPLE. (Civ. 2298.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 8, 1919.)

1. HIGHWAYS ⚷184(3) — NEGLIGENCE OF AUTOMOBILE DRIVER A QUESTION OF FACT.

In an action against an automobile driver for injuries to plaintiff in collision between their cars, whether defendant driver was negligent held a question of fact for the trial court.

2. HIGHWAYS ⚷183—IN AUTOMOBILE COLLISION SPEED LAW NOT VIOLATED.

The driver of an automobile toward a road intersection, who, just previous to collision, had been traveling about 20 miles an hour, but who, on observing defendant 200 feet away, slowed down his machine so that when it was struck by defendant's it was traveling about 8 miles an hour, did not violate the Motor Vehicle Act of 1913, § 22, subd. (b).

3. HIGHWAYS ⚷183 — DOCTRINE OF LAST CLEAR CHANCE NOT INVOLVED IN AUTOMOBILE COLLISION.

The doctrine of last clear chance held applicable to neither party, plaintiff nor defendant, involved in a collision between their automobiles at road intersection.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Oliver V. Blackburn against R. S. Marple. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Tanner, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Porter C. Blackburn, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff was awarded judgment for the sum of $350 against this appellant on account of damages alleged to have been suffered through the negligent acts of the defendant R. S. Marple. The particular act of negligence alleged was that said defendant so operated an automobile driven by him as to cause it to collide with an automobile which was then being operated by the plaintiff. The appeal is taken from the judgment.

The particular facts upon which the judgment was entered are quite fully embraced in the findings of the trial judge, the most material portions of which we quote:

"That on the 14th day of July, 1915, at or about the hour of 6:30 p. m., while it was still light, the plaintiff was driving a Ford automobile along a public highway known as the state highway, leading from the town of Whittier to the town of Fullerton, in an easterly direction, about 1 mile east of the county line of Los Angeles and Orange counties. That the plaintiff was driving his Ford car at a speed of 20 miles per hour. That the plaintiff was seated in the front seat of his car with a small child on his right side, and that his wife and two small children were seated in the rear seat. That the state highway runs in an easterly and westerly direction at the above-mentioned place, and that there is an intersecting highway that enters the said state highway from the south, known as the La Habra road, and that the said La Habra road intersects the said state highway by two long, sweeping curves, one curve turning into the said state highway to the left and one curve turning into the said state highway to the right as the said La Habra road approaches the intersection with the said state highway. That the said La Habra road does not cross the said state highway. That in the center of the two sweeping curves and at the junction with said state highway there is a triangular piece of ground, which is not paved but subject to travel, being oiled and rolled. That the said state highway and the said La Habra road are about 60 feet wide, with a paved portion in the center of 18 feet, and that said highways are used by the public for travel. That there is a row of electric light poles on the south side of the said state highway near the property line, and a row of orange trees about 4 feet south of the south property line. That the plaintiff, who was driving his Ford car, on approaching the said intersection of the two highways, saw an Overland car, driven by the defendant, approaching the said state highway by the long sweeping curve that branches from the said La Habra to the left as the said state highway is approached from the south. That the plaintiff saw the approaching Overland touring car turning into the said state highway, and immediately turned to his right, and slowed his Ford car down to 8 miles per hour. That the defendant also slowed his car down, but after he had arrived at about the center of the said state highway, and his car was approaching the north side of said state highway, he turned his car abruptly to his left, and continually turned the same to his left, with the same pointed in a southwesterly direction and towards the south side of the said state highway. That the defendant drove his car in such a negligent manner that the same was pointed and directed toward the side of the plaintiff's machine near its front. That the plaintiff kept turning his machine to his right and to the south of the said state highway, whereupon he was forced to turn off the said state highway into an orange orchard, within about 2 feet of an electric light pole, and under the branches of an orange tree, and the plaintiff's machine was struck by the front end of the defendant's machine on the left side and near its front."

[1] Appellant's contentions may be briefly stated under two heads: (1) That under the evidence the court was not justified in making findings against appellant; (2) that, conceding that the evidence showed negligence upon the part of appellant, the evidence also showed contributory negligence upon the part of the plaintiff. There was a conflict in the evidence concerning the manner in which the accident occurred; hence as to findings made under such evidence the conclusions of the trial judge must be here treated as final. Appellant has argued that under all of the evidence it must be concluded that it was impossible that the accident could have happened in the manner described by the plaintiff. After carefully examining the printed transcript of the testimony heard, we cannot agree with this contention. Plaintiff testified that he was traveling easterly along a straight road, and that 200 feet away from where the intersecting road upon which the defendant was traveling emerged he observed the defendant, and immediately slowed down his machine, he then being upon the extreme right of the highway, and that the defendant, instead of keeping to the right and making the turn along the curve of the intersecting road, turned toward the left; that the plaintiff guided his machine off from the highway into the soft dirt on the right-hand side thereof, and that the defendant's car collided with him. The point of collision was not within any part of the intersecting highways, but was about opposite the most westerly point of the intersecting curve. A physician, who was traveling in an automobile immediately behind the plaintiff, testified that the plaintiff was on the right side of the road and that he (the witness) saw the automobile of the defendant emerge from the road intersecting at the right, and that the defendant's vehicle passed across the front of the plaintiff's machine, and appeared in view at the left thereof, and that the collision occurred immediately thereafter. There was testimony of several witnesses that the appellant stated immediately after the accident that he had become confused, and had thought that the plaintiff intended to travel directly eastward, and that he (appellant) turned to the left to allow the machine of the plaintiff to go on at his right. On the evidence the case was peculiarly one which called for the judgment of the trial court upon the question as to the negligent act of appellant, and we find nothing at all appearing in the transcript of the evidence which would justify us in the conclusion that the findings of the trial judge are in any way unsupported by the evidence.

[2, 3] The findings of the trial court further negative the claim of appellant that the plaintiff had been guilty of contributory negligence proximately causing or contributing to cause the accident. Appellant cites us to a provision of the motor vehicle law, found in the Statutes of 1913, at page 649, which requires that the operator of a motor vehicle, where the view is obstructed, upon approaching an intersecting way must not travel at a greater rate of speed than 10 miles an hour. Just previous to the accident plaintiff had been traveling at the rate of about 20 miles per hour. The evidence showed that his machine was under control, and he himself testified that upon observing the appellant 200 feet away, emerging from the intersecting road, he slowed down his machine and kept to the right. When he was struck by appellant's automobile his machine was traveling about 8 miles per hour. At that point, as we have before noted, he had not entered upon the intersecting way. The intent of the law, as we view it, in restricting the speed at which a motor vehicle may travel at such a point, is that it shall be brought to the speed indicated by the time it shall reach the intersecting way in order that it may be fully under control of the operator. It cannot be said under the evidence it was established that the plaintiff violated the provision of the statute cited. The case of Cook v. Miller, 175 Cal. 497, 166 Pac. 316, cited on behalf of appellant, was not the same in its facts as the case here presented. Neither was there anything in the facts under the evidence which would make the doctrine of the last clear chance applicable to either party.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 3, 1919.)

1. HIGHWAYS ⟹184(2) — EVIDENCE SHOWING NEGLIGENCE IN OPERATION OF AUTOMOBILE.

In an action against an automobile driver for injuries to a woman when her husband's car collided with defendant's, evidence held to sustain finding that defendant driver was negligent in the operation of his car.

2. HIGHWAYS ⟹184(3)—QUESTION OF FACT AS TO WHEN AUTOMOBILE DRIVER SHOULD REDUCE SPEED AT INTERSECTION.

The question as to what distance away from an intersecting road with an obstructed view a driver on the highway, going at a rate otherwise legal, should reduce his speed to 10 miles an hour, under the Motor Vehicle Act of 1913, § 22, subd. (b), is a question of fact, in each particular case, to be determined in view of the particular circumstances.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Fredericka L. Blackburn against R. S. Marple. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Porter C. Blackburn, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Tanner, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action for damages for personal injuries suffered by the plaintiff as the result of a collision between two automobiles.

The facts of the case, as summarized from the findings of the trial court, are as follows: On July 14, 1915, at about the hour of 6:30 p. m., the plaintiff was riding in a Ford automobile, being driven by her husband along the state highway leading from Whittier to Fullerton, going in an easterly direction at a speed not in excess of 20 miles per hour, and was approaching the point upon said highway where a public road known as the La Habre road enters it from the south. The state highway and the La Habre road are each about 60 feet wide at this point, each having a paved center of about 18 feet in width. At the point of entrance of the La Habre road the latter makes two long curves, one turning into the highway to the left going west, and the other turning into the highway to the right going east, and the triangle at the point of entrance caused by their separation being unpaved, but oiled and subject to travel. The private property on each side of the La Habre road at its said point of emergence into the highway is well grown up in orange trees standing within 4 feet of the property line, and forming quite an obstruction to the vision either of the highway or of the road by persons approaching the point of contact upon either thoroughfare. There were also some electric light poles at said point further obstructing this line of vision. As the plaintiff's husband, driving the car in which she was seated, approached the said point of emergence of the La Habre road, and was, as is variously stated, at from 150 to 200 feet west of said point, he observed an Overland car, operated by the defendant, turning into the state highway on the westerly curve of the La Habre road, and immediately turned his Ford car to the right of the center of the highway going east, and slowed down his speed to 8 miles an hour. The defendant proceeded on said curve until he had arrived at about the center of the state highway when, instead of proceeding on the course which would have taken his machine to the right of the center of said highway going west, he suddenly turned his car to the left, and without slowing down proceeded to turn directly across the course of the car in which the plaintiff was riding. The plaintiff's husband, seeing this action, turned his car further and further to the right until he was forced off of the paved portion of the highway and onto the dirt strip along it and into the edge of the adjacent orange orchard, where his car was struck by the defendant's car, and badly damaged, and the plaintiff was severely injured by the impact.

The trial court, the cause having been tried without a jury, found from the foregoing facts that the defendant was guilty of negligence in the operation of his car, and that the claim of the defendant that the plaintiff's husband was guilty of contributory negligence could not be sustained, and accordingly rendered judgment in the plaintiff's favor for the sum of $1,000 damages, from which the defendant prosecutes this appeal.

[1, 2] From our examination of the testimony and particularly of the exhibits before us we are entirely satisfied that the findings of the trial court, of which the foregoing is a brief summary, are abundantly supported by the evidence in the case, and that in point of fact the real cause of the collision was that given by the defendant himself to the plaintiff's husband and also to several bystanders immediately after the accident that, "He got rattled and lost control of the machine."

The only contention of the defendant which saves him from the penalty which would otherwise be justly imposed for taking a frivolous appeal is his contention that the plaintiff's husband was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law for a violation on his part of the provisions of subdivision (B) of section 22, p. 649, of the Motor Vehicle Act of 1913, in force at the time of said accident, which required that persons operating motor vehicles on the public highways of this state should operate or drive their cars at no greater speed that 1 mile in six minutes, "where the operator's * * * view of the road traffic is obstructed upon approaching an intersecting way." This point made on behalf of the appellant is also devoid of merit for two reasons: First, the question as to the distance away from an intersecting road with an obstructed view when a driver upon the highway, going at an otherwise legal rate of speed, should reduce his speed to 10 miles an hour under the said provisions of said act is necessarily a question of fact, in each individual case to be determined by the trial court according to such particular circumstances, as the kind of car the operator is driving, the speed at which he was previously going, the brake control of the car, the nature of the obstruction to his view of the intersecting road, etc.; and the point is without merit for the second reason, which is that, according to the evidence in the case, which fully sustains the finding of the court, the plaintiff's husband was from 150 to 200 feet west of the point of emergence of the La Habre road, going at a rate of speed not in excess of 20 miles an hour, when he first discovered the defendant's car coming into the highway, and that he immediately reduced his speed to 8 miles an hour, and took a position on the highway which would have led to an entire avoidance of the accident if the defendant had not, to employ his own language, "got rattled and lost control of his car," with the result that he crossed over unexpectedly to the wrong side of the highway. and there ran the plaintiff's conveyance down in spite of the driver's utmost effort to avoid a collision.

Judgment affirmed.

3. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1159(3)—CONVICTION ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE SUSTAINED.

On appeal from a conviction of burglary, conflicts in the evidence must be resolved against defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

George Wagner was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Ralph Starke, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BRITTAIN, J. The appellant was convicted on an information charging burglary by entering the "house, room, apartment, tenement, shop, warehouse, store, and building" of Michael Logue, in San Francisco. The only question is regarding the sufficiency of the evidence to show burglarious intent.

[1-3] Logue, the complaining witness, operated a saloon. Back of the saloon ran a passageway, on which opened the living apartments he occupied with his wife. From the passageway also opened a washroom, from which there was a door to an alleyway. Evidently there was another door leading either from the passageway or the washroom to an inclosed yard. Shortly before 10 o'clock on the night in question the appellant, a stranger, entered the saloon and was served with liquor. About 10 o'clock the saloon was closed by Logue. He went to his living apartments across the hall, and, after closing the door from the passageway to the living apartments, he retired with his wife. The door was fitted with a Yale spring lock, which, the evidence showed, automatically locked the door when it was tightly closed. Logue testified that he had slammed the door. Shortly before midnight Logue was awakened by his wife, who said something unusual was occurring in the corridor. He arose, and on going to the door leading to the passageway found it open, and saw the appellant standing there. He slammed the door, and he testified the appellant then tried to shove the door in, and that the appellant made some exclamation, which Logue described as a "yell of dissappointment." Logue immediately went into another room, the back one of the living apartments, and saw the appellant trying to get over the fence from the yard. The appellant then ran out of the alleyway. Logue telephoned to the police station, and after a few minutes accompanied an officer to Daly City, where the appellant was arrested, after having been identified by Logue. At that time the appellant had whitewash on the upper portion of his clothing, which it was claimed was from the fence of the yard. The officer testified that when the appellant was arrested, in response to a statement of the officer that Logue claimed he had committed burglary at his residence, he said, "You have the right man—I am the man."

On behalf of the appellant it is argued that under the presumption of innocence which attends the accused, and in view of the silence of the record as to the appellant leaving the saloon after he was served with drinks, the state failed to show a burglarious intent on the part of the appellant. It is argued that he may have gone into the corridor under the influence of liquor, and on coming to his senses after the saloon was closed he was simply trying to find a way out of the corridor. The appellant relies on the rule announced in People v. Barry, 94 Cal. 484, 29 Pac. 1026, and People v. Brittain, 142 Cal. 10, 75 Pac. 314, 100 Am. St. Rep. 95. The defendant took the stand on his own behalf and testified that on the day in question he had been drinking.

The question of criminal intent is one to be determined by the jury from all the evidence. People v. Swalm, 80 Cal. 46, 22 Pac. 67, 13 Am. St. Rep. 96; People v. Noon, 1 Cal. App. 44, 81 Pac. 746. The evidence that the locked door of the living apartments was opened; that the appellant was discovered at the door, and concerning his statement to the arresting officer, was believed by the jury who heard the testimony. It was sufficient to support the verdict, and any conflict between the evidence of the appellant and that produced on behalf of the state on appeal must be resolved against the appellant. People v. Emerson, 130 Cal. 562, 62 Pac. 1069.

The judgment is affirmed.

WEST v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF PASADENA CITY SCHOOL DIST. et al. (Civ. 3101.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 6, 1919.)

1. Schools and school districts 🔑80(1)—Offer and acceptance of contract employing school superintendent.

Where the resolution of the board of education of a city appointing a superintendent of schools was sufficient in form to express contractual terms, if accepted, and the employment as offered was promptly accepted, a binding contract arose between the board and the superintendent, unless the board's action was unauthorized in some particular.

2. Schools and school districts 🔑79—Appointment under city charter of superintendent of schools.

Under Pasadena City Charter, art. 16 (as to the department of education) §§ 6, 7, the board of education was authorized to appoint a superintendent of schools, to fix his salary, and to limit his term of office to the four years specified by Pol. Code, § 1793, which the electors, in adopting the charter, and the Legislature, in ratifying it, intended should control as to the term of office.

Petition for writ of mandate by John Franklin West against the Board of Education of the Pasadena City School District, the Pasadena City High School District of Los Angeles County, and George W. Woolley and others, members of and constituting the Board of Education. Peremptory writ directed to be issued.

Woodruff & Shoemaker, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

James H. Howard, of Pasadena, for respondents.

A. J. Hill, Co. Counsel, of Los Angeles, amicus curiæ.

JAMES, J. Mandate to compel respondents to permit petitioner to exercise the duties of the office of superintendent of schools of the Pasadena city school district and the Pasadena city high school district, and to require respondents to draw a warrant in petitioner's favor for the sum of $375 in payment of his salary as such superintendent for the month of July, 1919.

On the 24th of June, 1919, the board of education of the city of Pasadena held a regular meeting; there being three of the five members constituting the board present. These three members unanimously adopted a resolution or motion for the employment of petitioner to be superintendent of schools for the city of Pasadena for the term of four years, beginning July 1, 1919, at a salary of $4,500 per annum, payable monthly. On July 2d an adjourned meeting of said board was regularly held, the same three members being present, and it evidently being the apprehension that the action on the 24th of June was not expressed with sufficient formality in the resolution then adopted, the board adopted the following further resolution:

"Resolved, that the action of this board on Tuesday, the 24th day of June, 1919, in declaring that the contract of employment then existing between this board and Dr. Jeremiah M. Rhodes expired by its terms on June 30, 1919, and in appointing John Franklin West of San Diego, superintendent of the city schools of the Pasadena city school district and the Pasadena city high school district, for a term of four years, beginning the 1st day of July, 1919, and ending on June 30, 1923, be and the same is hereby ratified and approved; and

"Be it resolved, further, that in event the legality of the action of this board taken on the 24th day of June, 1919, in filling the office of superintendency of schools for the ensuing term, should be questioned upon any ground whatever, then this board will and does here now at this meeting appoint the said John Franklin West as superintendent of the Pasadena city school district and the Pasadena city high school district, for the term of four years, commencing on the 1st day of July, 1919, and ending on the 30th day of June, 1923, at a salary of four thousand five hundred dollars ($4,500) per annum, payable monthly; and

"Be it further resolved, that the vice president and clerk of this board be and they are hereby empowered and directed to enter into a contract of employment with the said John Franklin West in the name and on the behalf of this board, under and in pursuance of these resolutions."

[1, 2] Petitioner having been notified of the action taken by the board at its meeting on the date first mentioned, under date of June 25, 1919, dispatched to the said board a telegram accepting the employment in the words following:

"Accept the appointment as city superintendent of your school, on terms and conditions stated in your telegram."

The office of superintendent of schools had theretofore been filled by Jeremiah M. Rhodes, whose term (being of four years' duration) expired on June 30, 1919. On July 7, 1919, the incoming board of education organized, an election having changed the personnel only as to one member; that one outgoing member being one of those who had participated in the election of petitioner as superintendent. The new board, voting three to two, proceeded to adopt a resolution attempting to rescind all of the action of the preceding board in the matter of the employment of petitioner as superintendent of schools. The petition shows that petitioner has been in attendance, ready and offering to perform the duties of the office of superintendent of schools, and that the board of education has refused him that right and refused to award to him any payment for his services under the alleged contract of employment. That the meeting of the outgoing board of which the resolution employing petitioner was adopted was regular, and that the number attending and voting thereat was sufficient, is not questioned, and indeed could not be. The resolution first adopted was sufficient in form to express contractual terms, if accepted by petitioner. The employment as offered was promptly accepted, and upon acceptance being made a binding contract arose, unless by reason of the law the action taken was in some particular unauthorized.

We do not decide that the action taken before the expiration of the term of the superintendent attempted to be retired was premature. Even though it be conceded that there was no authority in the board to employ petitioner until his predecessor's term had actually expired, it does appear that the board, by the resolution adopted on the 2d of July, made a complete and second resolution wholly covering the same matter. Petitioner, as has been noted, thereafter appeared and tendered his services and offered to fill the position, so that it matters not, in our opinion, whether we say the employment was made under the resolution of June 24th or that of July 2d. The main argument of counsel is directed to the point as to whether in cities operating under freeholders' charters the general laws of the state are applicable and govern in all school matters; or whether the charter provisions affecting such questions govern exclusively. The fact is first pointed to that it is provided in section 1793, Political Code, that:

"City superinendents of public schools, elected by city boards of education, shall be elected for a term of four years. * * *"

Assuming that the general law is applicable, this express provision having been incorporated in the Code relative to the term of the superintendent of schools, petitioner contends that the board had the right to make an engagement for the four years specified. Respondents contend that the charter provisions are exclusively applicable and that those charter provisions do not authorize the board of education to make employment for such a length of time as was attempted to be done. In this connection it is urged that section 1584, Political Code (appropriate action having been taken thereunder), aids in defining the charter provision as being exclusive. It is shown by the agreed statement of facts that such action has been taken as is mentioned in section 1584. That section provides that where there has been an appropriate action in the direction required:

"Then the electors of such school district shall be deemed to have submitted to be governed in all matters relating to the management of public schools within such school district or high school district as fully and to all intents and purposes as though the electors of such school district or high school district had by their votes elected to be governed by the provisions of such charter."

The section in brief provides for the question to be submitted to the electors as to whether the charter provisions shall govern, and provides that where the electors have participated and voted at any school election held subsequent to the adoption of and under the provisions of the charter, the same effect shall follow as though the question had been specially submitted and an affirmative vote made. Petitioner contends that if the section last mentioned purports to disassociate all general statutes from connection with school affairs of a chartered city, then it is unconstitutional, for the reason that the school system is a state system, and not a municipal affair, and is controlled by general laws unless there is an absence of legislation upon the subject—citing Kennedy v. Miller, 97 Cal. 429, 32 Pac. 558. Also, Mahoney v. Board of Education, 12 Cal. App. 293, 107 Pac. 584, and other cases which generally define the school system as being a state matter and not falling within the class of "municipal affairs."

The difficulty we have in following counsel through the various phases of this argument is that it seems to invite unnecessary labor, in that the charter provisions of the city of Pasadena relating to the school department contain nothing by which it may be said the authority of the board of education to employ a superintendent for a fixed term is prohibited. We find upon that subject, under the title of "Department of Education," article 16 of the charter, the following sections:

> "Sec. 6. The board of education may, at its discretion, appoint a superintendent of schools, and prescribe the duties and fix the salary of such superintendent.
> "Sec. 7. In all matters not specifically provided for in this charter the board shall be governed by the provisions of the general law relative to such matters."

It then appears that no attempt is made in the charter to limit the term of the superintendent of schools authorized to be elected by the board of education. Acting under the authority alone of the charter provision, and conceding without deciding that it has exclusive effect, we would find no difficulty at all in sustaining the contract made with petitioner for four years' employment. But furthermore, the charter being silent as to the term for which the superintendent should be elected, and its provisions only authorizing the board of education "to appoint a superintendent of schools, and prescribe the duties and fix the salary of such superintendent," it follows as a natural and, we think, necessary deduction that the electors in adopting the charter, and the Legislature in ratifying it, intended that the duration or term of office of the superintendent of schools should be controlled by the general statute, which fixes the term at four years. Looked at from any angle that the argument assumes, we think that the contract of petitioner was made with full authority and must be upheld.

Peremptory writ is ordered to be issued as prayed for; petitioner to have his costs.

PEOPLE v. SARTORI. (Cr. 862.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 17, 1919.)

1. ROBBERY 🔑24(1)—EVIDENCE SUFFICIENT TO SUSTAIN CONVICTION.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain a conviction of robbery.

2. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑559—CONSPIRACY MAY BE INFERRED FROM FACTS PROVED.

In a criminal case, the fact that a conspiracy existed may be inferred from facts proved, although there is direct uncontradicted testimony that no conspiracy existed.

3. ROBBERY 🔑15—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE TO SUSTAIN CONVICTION.

In a prosecution for robbery, where defendant was charged as a principal on the theory that, although not present at the time of the robbery, he aided and abetted in its commission, under Pen. Code, § 971, it was not necessary that a detailed plan of the robbery had been arranged among the different parties charged with the crime.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; M. F. McCormick, Judge.

Richard Sartori was convicted of robbery and appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Curtin, Short & Sutherland, and Carl E. Lindsay, all of Fresno, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., and R. L. Chamberlain, of Sacramento, for the People.

NOURSE, J. Defendant was charged, together with his codefendants Sasselli and Gatti, with the crime of robbery by taking from the possession of one Joe Ponti a certain sum of money by force and fear. Defendants Sasselli and Gatti both entered pleas of guilty. The defendant Sartori stood trial, was convicted by the jury, and prosecutes this appeal. The sole ground for reversal urged in his behalf is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict of conviction.

The undisputed facts are that this defendant first met Ponti in a saloon in Fresno one evening at about 6:30 o'clock; that Ponti had just recently arrived from Stockton; that the two had several drinks together at the bar, where Ponti displayed considerable money; that the other two defendants were in the same saloon drinking at the same bar; that defendant Sartori left Ponti for a short time and went out to the sidewalk, where he met Sasselli, to whom he said:

> He "had a friend inside, from Stockton; he has $80; saw him buy a drink, and he changed a $20 gold piece."

It then appears that after more drinks were had Sartori suggested to Ponti that they go out and have some tamales. As they stepped outside of the saloon, he urged Ponti to get into Sasselli's automobile, which was standing near by, saying he would follow on his bicycle. Ponti, Sasselli, and Gatti drove off in the automobile, and Sartori followed for a few blocks on his bicycle. Sasselli, driving the machine, turned into the country, and when several miles out of town he and Gatti forcibly took Ponti's money from him, put him out of the machine, and turned back to town.

On their way back Gatti gave Sasselli $50, telling him he had taken $75 from Ponti and that $25, half of that given to him, was for Sartori and half for himself. When they reached town, Gatti got out of the machine and Sasselli proceeded a few blocks until he picked up Sartori, to whom he handed $25, telling him that Gatti had taken $75 from Ponti and had given him $50 to be divided between Sartori and himself. Thereafter Sartori went to the saloon where he first met Ponti, and, as he entered, overheard Ponti relating his experiences to the proprietor and accusing "the man with the bicycle." Sartori stepped up, and as to what then occurred the testimony of the proprietor of the saloon shows:

> "Sartori comes in, and he says to Ponti, 'I am the man with the bicycle.' And so Ponti says, 'I will go up to make my own complaint and to fight it out,' and Ponti asked me what place was the police headquarters, and I show him. And Sartori says: 'If you want to go out there, I will show you; I will go with you.' And so when it started that way, and Sartori says, 'If you put me in the complaint, I will fix you,' and Ponti says, 'Never mind,' he says, 'I am going to make my own complaint,' and so Sartori tells him again, 'I will fix you.' At the same time he hit him and he fell on the floor."

[1] It is undisputed that this defendant was not present at the time the crime was committed. To show his participation in the crime the prosecution relies upon the following circumstances: That he endeavored to make himself very agreeable to the complaining witness as soon as he learned that he had money to spend; that he told his codefendant Sasselli that the complaining witness had $80; that he urged the complaining witness to go out to get something to eat and then persuaded him to get into the automobile of Sasselli; that he accepted $25 of the money taken from the complaining witness, which represented one-third of the profits of the robbery; and that, when this defendant re-entered the saloon and heard the complaining witness telling of the robbery and placing the blame on the man with the bicycle, he immediately asserted his innocence, although still retaining his share of the spoils, and attacked the complaining witness when he learned that a criminal charge was to be laid against him. This defendant attempts to explain the receipt of the money from Sasselli by saying that Gatti owed him money, but his testimony was far from convincing, and, like the rest of his story, came from a man showing a guilty knowledge of the entire affair. After a careful examination of the entire record, it is difficult to see how the jury could have reached any other verdict than that returned.

[2] Appellant, attacking the verdict, insists that, as the prosecution failed to prove a conspiracy through the testimony of Sasselli and Gatti, the jury was not justified in drawing an inference of guilt under the circumstances which occurred. The argument is that, where direct uncontradicted evidence is introduced to show that no conspiracy existed, the jury is not warranted in drawing the inference of the existence of such conspiracy from the facts proved, citing Maupin v. Solomon, 183 Pac. 198. But if the rule of that decision is as stated by appellant, then it cannot be the rule in criminal cases. If it were, there could be no conviction on circumstantial evidence if the defendant or any one in his behalf took the stand and directly denied the commission of the crime.

[3] In the instant case the defendant is charged as a principal on the theory that, although not present at the time of the robbery, he did aid and abet in its commission. Pen. Code, § 971. It is not necessary for the prosecution to prove that a detailed plan of the robbery had been arranged among the three parties. No conversation may have been necessary between Sartori and Sasselli or between Sartori and Gatti. Sartori gave the information regarding Ponti's possession of the money, and urged him to get into Sasselli's automobile with Gatti on the representation that they were going to have something to eat.

All of the circumstances lead inevitably to the conclusion that the defendant participated in the fruits of the crime with guilty knowledge and criminal intent. The jury chose to follow the only inference that could be reasonably drawn from these circumstances rather than the denials made by those jointly charged with the crime.

The evidence as outlined is sufficient to support the verdict, and the judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. RAZO. (Cr. 864.)

1. WITNESSES 🔑282½ — REPETITION OF CROSS-EXAMINATION PROPERLY DENIED.

Where cross-examination of complaining witness had been very complete and comprehensive, court's refusal to permit further examination, as to matters which had been covered several times in the course of the cross-examination, was proper, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2044, giving the trial court power to exercise a reasonable control over the cross-examination of a witness.

2. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑719(3) — ARGUMENT OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEY PROPER SUMMING UP OF EVIDENCE.

Where complaining witness had testified on cross-examination that he had not discussed case with deputy district attorney, and that he had visited the office of such attorney, but had left without discussing case, because attorney was busy, deputy district attorney's statement in argument to jury that complaining witness' testimony was that "he had not discussed the case over with me at all; he came to my room intending to talk it over with me, but I was busy, and did not talk it over with him"—held a proper summing up of testimony as against objection that the deputy district attorney was stating his own knowledge of the subject.

3. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1171(3)—STATEMENT OF FACT IN ARGUMENT TO JURY HARMLESS ERROR.

Where complaining witness unequivocally stated during cross-examination that he had not discussed case with deputy district attorney, deputy district attorney's statement in argument to jury that the testimony of complaining witness was that "he had not talked the case over with me at all; he came to my room intending to talk it over with me, but I was busy and did not talk it over with him"—if improper as statement of deputy district attorney's own knowledge, was harmless.

4. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑323—TRUTH OF TESTIMONY WILL BE PRESUMED.

The testimony of every witness will be presumed to be truthful.

5. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1206(1) — INDETERMINATE SENTENCE LAW CONSTITUTIONAL.

Indeterminate Sentence Law (Pen. Code, § 1168; St. 1917, p. 665), held constitutional as to offenses committed after its enactment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Ramon Razo was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

M. W. Sevier, of San Francisco, and George M. Naus, of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment of conviction of the crime of robbery. The appellant presents three points upon the appeal. We shall discuss them in the order in which they are urged. The first is that the cross-examination of the complaining witness Scott upon a vital fact was improperly and unnecessarily limited by the trial court. Scott testified that on November 14, 1918, at about 10 o'clock in the evening, he was walking along the street in Oakland when he was attacked by the defendant and another person; that the defendant knocked him down and cut him with a knife and the other person searched his pockets and took from them two coins, a five and ten cent piece. Appellant argues that, as it was necessary for the state to prove that the defendant actually took some property from Scott, therefore the question of whether Scott actually had the coins becomes decisive. He urges that the excluded questions were directed toward this matter and should have been allowed. But this matter was testified to repeatedly by Scott upon his cross-examination. He said he had a Canadian dime and a nickel in his pocket when he left his home, a few moments before the attack; that he looked at the coins before leaving home, and he knew they were there; that he had his hand in his pocket and felt such coins as he was walking on the street and up to the moment of the attack; that his pockets were good; and that the money could not have rolled out in the struggle on the sidewalk. Scott was a negro Pullman porter. It is true that he did not always answer questions as directly as might have been desired; but his examination discloses no effort to evade, but merely the difficulties which come from a lack of precision in speech and in thought, the natural consequences of lack of training. It is evident that he had difficulty in comprehending the exact meaning of many of the questions, and this in itself made it necessary for many questions to be asked a number of times. The court permitted this, and it seems to us that the cross-examination is very complete and comprehensive.

[1] Appellant contends that he should have been allowed to ask five certain questions. It is not necessary to discuss the relevancy of each of these questions here. In so far as they were relevant and proper cross-examination, their substance was covered several times in the course of the cross-examination. It appears that the direct examination of Scott covers 7 typewritten pages in the record, while the cross-examination covers over 50 pages. The trial court has the power to exercise a reasonable control over the cross-examination of a witness (section 2044, Code Civ. Proc.), and we think that was all that was done in this case.

The second point urged by appellant is that the deputy district attorney was guilty of misconduct in his argument to the jury. The facts relating to the incident complained of are that the attorney for the defendant upon cross-examination asked the complaining witness several times if he had talked the case over with the deputy district attorney, to which he replied that he had not. In reply to further questions, Scott stated that he had gone to the office of the deputy district attorney at the close of the trial on the first day and had remained there a short time, but they had not talked about the case; that, during the three or four minutes that he remained in the office of the deputy district attorney, said deputy was talking to some one else, and he (Scott) was waiting for him to finish talking. In his argument to the jury, the deputy district attorney referred to the attempts of counsel for the defendant to impute to him improper practices in the preparation of his witnesses for the trial; he admitted that he had talked with all the witnesses in the case with whom he had had an opportunity to talk, as a regular and customary part of his duty. He continued as follows:

> "I say, frankly, and very gladly, that every witness that I could get my hands on, who was going on the stand, told me definitely what his testimony was going to be, because I wanted to know what the testimony was going to be."

At this point he was interrupted by the counsel for the defendant, who objected to these remarks for the alleged reason that they contradicted the testimony of the witness Scott, who had testified that he did not talk with the deputy district attorney. The deputy district attorney then, in reply to this objection, explained his remark to the jury by saying:

> "I said every witness that I could get my hands on; I could not get my hands on Mr. Scott."

Attorney for the defendant then called attention to the testimony of Mr. Scott, saying:

> "And Mr. Scott's further testimony was that he was in Mr. Agnew's room, with the door closed."

To which the deputy district attorney answered:

> "The testimony of Mr. Scott was that he had not talked the case over with me at all; he came to my room intending to talk it over with me, but I was busy and did not talk it over with him."

Appellant contends that this statement of the deputy district attorney, explaining why he did not talk to Scott, was outside of the record and corroborated the witness, and was therefore improper. As the statement appears in the record, it is susceptible of being construed as a statement of the testimony of Mr. Scott, and as such it is sustained by the record, for we find upon cross-examination that Scott testified as follows:

> "Q. Where did you go with him, after you went through that door? A. Out in his office. Q. Into his office. A. Yes, sir. Q. What did he talk about in there—the weather? What did he talk about? A. Talked about nothing. Q. Didn't talk about anything. How long were you in the room with him? A. About three or four minutes. Q. What did he do during the time you were in his office three or four minutes? A. He was talking to some one else."

And again:

> "Q. What were you doing during the three or four minutes, or whatever time it was, that you were in Mr. Agnew's office yesterday evening? A. I was waiting for him to get through talking."

Scott also testified that he went to the office of the deputy district attorney for the purpose of discussing the case.

[2, 3] It does not seem to be an improper summing up of this testimony to say that—

> "The testimony of Mr. Scott was that he had not talked the case over with me at all; he came to my room intending to talk it over with me, but I was busy and did not talk it over with him."

However, let us assume that the appellant's construction of this remark is correct and that the deputy district attorney was not referring in the latter part of the sentence to the testimony of Scott on the stand, but was stating his own knowledge of the subject. While clearly this would be misconduct upon his part, yet such misconduct, we think, under the special circumstances of this case, would not be such prejudicial error as to warrant a reversal. Appellant's argument is based upon an insistence that the fact of whether or not the witness Scott talked with the deputy district attorney was important to the defendant's case. But we have the repeated, unequivocal statement of Scott that he did not talk to him.

[4] There is a presumption that follows the testimony of every witness that such witness speaks the truth, and this witness remains uncontradicted on this point. Both Scott and the deputy district attorney admitted that they wished to talk to one another about the case. Scott testified that he went to the office of said deputy for the purpose of talking about the case, and the deputy district attorney stated in his argument to the jury that he talked with every witness in the case that he could "lay his hands on," and would have talked with Scott if he had had the opportunity. The reason why this avowed intention and desire on the part of both was not carried out cannot have any bearing upon the matter one way or the other.

[5] The last point made by the appellant is that the judgment is erroneous because the Indeterminate Sentence Law (section 1168, Pen. Code; St. 1917, p. 665), under which it is imposed, is unconstitutional. It is necessary for us to discuss this question, because it has been passed upon in Re Lee, 177 Cal. 690, 171 Pac. 958, which upholds the validity of this section as to offenses committed after its enactment.

The judgment is affirmed.

FINDLEY et al. v. LINDSAY. (Civ. 2980.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 4, 1919.)

1. PLEADING 🔑263 — REFUSAL OF AMENDMENT TO ANSWER NOT ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

Where an action on a note was set for trial, though the answer of defendant did not deny his default, and merely denied on information and belief that the instrument had been transferred to plaintiffs, refusal to permit an insufficient amended answer, during the progress of the trial, after defendant's vain attempt to secure postponements, was not an abuse of discretion.

2. COSTS 🔑260(4)—GRANTED ON FRIVOLOUS APPEAL.

Where the whole progress of the trial showed an attempt on the part of defendant to secure a delay, though there was no defense and it appeared that defendant appealed on wholly frivolous grounds, a penalty will be imposed upon the judgment being affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by M. W. Findley and others against Lycurgus Lindsay. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed, with penalty for the taking and prosecution of a frivolous appeal.

A. L. Abrahams, C. W. Fricke, and W. I. Gilbert, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. A. Meserve and S. E. Meserve, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover the sum of $15,000 with interest, attorneys' fees, and costs, alleged to be due upon a promissory note of the defendant.

The only question presented upon this appeal is as to whether the trial court erred in denying the defendant's application to amend his answer at the time of the trial of the case.

That this is one of the most flagrant instances of abuse of the processes of justice for purposes of delay and of a frivolous appeal which has come within our purview the following undisputed facts will show: The plaintiffs commenced this action on May 13, 1916, by filing their complaint upon a promissory note and contract, which were set forth therein and which called for the payment to the plaintiffs of the sum of $15,000 by the defendant as the purchase price of 1,287½ shares of the capital stock of the Independent Sewer Pipe Company and 4 shares of the capital stock of the Pacific Tile & Terra Cotta Company. On June 26, 1916, the defendant filed his answer herein, admitting all of the allegations of the complaint with respect to the purchase of the said stock and the execution of the note and contract, but denying for want of information and belief an averment in the complaint to the effect that the trustee mentioned in the contract had assigned and transferred to the plaintiffs the note in question after the maker's default according to the terms and requirements of said contract, which assignment and transfer it was the duty of the said trustee pro forma to make upon the plaintiffs' demand after such default, according to the express agreement of the defendant in said contract. As the defendant's default was not denied it would seem that this sole denial of the defendant for want of information and belief did not present a material issue. The plaintiffs, nevertheless, moved the court on July 3, 1916, to set the cause for trial. The defendant appeared in opposition to said motion by one of his attorneys of record, who announced in court that he intended to file an amended answer, setting up fraud in the obtaining of said note. The court set the cause for trial on October 25, 1916, in order to allow the defendant ample time to prepare, serve, and file said amended answer if he so desired. A few days before the said date of trial an assistant in the office of an attorney, who was not one of the attorneys of record for said defendant, made an effort to have the trial of the cause further postponed on the ground that his principal expected to be employed to try the cause on behalf of the defendant. This effort was unsuccessful. On the morning of October 25, 1916, when the cause was called for trial one of the attorneys of record for the defendant appeared to suggest that another of his attorneys of record could not be present, but had arranged with the above-mentioned attorney who was not of record to try the cause, and the latter could not do so because he was engaged in a trial in another court. The court's attention was then called to the fact that said last-named absent attorney was not an attorney of record in the case, and furthermore that no amended answer had ever been served or filed. The attorney of record for the defendant, who was then present in court, and who had previously announced the defendant's purpose to present such an amended answer, made no statement or offer indicating that the defendant intended or desired to amend his pleading, whereupon the court set the cause peremptorily for trial for the hour of 1 o'clock p. m. of said day. At said hour the aforesaid attorney not of record for the defendant was present to ask a further postponement of the case, which request the court refused to grant. The trial then proceeded, and after a witness for the plaintiff had been sworn one of the attorneys of record appeared with an affidavit and amended answer of the defendant which he then asked leave to file. The affidavit presents no sufficient reason whatever as an excuse for the defendant's delay in presenting his amended answer, and the amended answer presents no sufficient averments of fraud in respect to the transaction in the course of which said note was executed by the defendant to constitute a defense thereto. The court, after an examination of said affidavit and answer, refused permission to the defendant to file the same, and ordered the trial to proceed. The defendant presented no evidence upon the further hearing of the case, and judgment accordingly went for the plaintiff for the recovery of the full amount due upon the note, with counsel fees and costs. The defendant appealed to the Supreme Court, the notice of appeal being filed on November 15, 1916. The appellant's opening brief was filed February 16, 1917. The respondents' brief, filed March 19, 1917, directed attention to the foregoing facts as disclosed by this record, and urged that the appeal was frivolous and taken for delay. No reply brief on behalf of the appellant has ever been filed. The cause was transferred to this court for hearing on May 19, 1919, and was set for argument on August 11, 1919. No appearance was made by appellant on said date, and the cause was submitted without argument for decision.

[1, 2] As to the merits of the case it is obvious that the trial court committed no error or abuse of discretion in refusing defendant leave to file his belated and insufficient amended answer; and it appears to us equally obvious that the whole procedure of the defendant herein from the time of his first appearance in the case down to the present moment has been marked with a deliberate design to delay the operations of justice in respect to the enforcement of his just and legal obligation, and to persist in and consummate such purpose by the taking and prosecution of a frivolous appeal.

The judgment is affirmed, with the added penalty of $500 hereby imposed upon the appellant for the taking and prosecution of a frivolous appeal.

Items for taking depositions are proper disbursements to be put into a cost bill, unless they were unnecessary, or for some special reason should not be allowed.

2. COSTS ⚷154—ITEM FOR EXPENSE OF TAKING NECESSARY DEPOSITION OF PLAINTIFF.

Where the taking of the deposition of plaintiff was regular in all particulars, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 2021, subd. 1, and there was no contradiction of the allegations of defendant that the deposition was necessary for the trial, the expense of taking it was a proper item on defendant's cost bill.

3. COSTS ⚷154—EXPENSE OF DEPOSITION NOT CHARGEABLE AGAINST PARTY WITHOUT NOTICE OF TAKING.

Where no notice was given to plaintiff of taking of deposition of one of the three defendants, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2031, 2032, it was not entitled to be admitted in evidence against plaintiff, and he may not be charged with it as costs.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by Herbert Eades, a minor, by his guardian ad litem, Walter L. Eades, against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation, a corporation, Maude Funk, and another, resulting in judgment for defendant Railway Corporation. LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court, made after judgment in favor of the defendant Los Angeles Railway Corporation, the appellant here, which order granted the motion of plaintiff to retax costs and struck from the cost bill of said defendant an item of $8.50 for the taking and transcribing of the deposition of plaintiff, and an item of $17 for the taking and transcribing of the deposition of F. C. Funk, one of the defendants. The motion to retax costs was made upon the grounds that the items were not taxable under the law and that the deposition of F. C. Funk was taken without the notice or knowledge of the plaintiff.

Upon the hearing of the motion the parties stipulated as to all material facts, from which stipulation it appears that the deposition of plaintiff was taken by the defendant and appellant under and by virtue of the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 2021, Code of Civil Procedure, said deposition having been taken upon stipulation of all of the parties to the said action. It also appears that the deposition of F. C. Funk was taken upon a stipulation entered into between counsel for defendant Funk and counsel for defendant Los Angeles Railway Corporation, the appellant, but that the counsel for plaintiff did not sign said stipulation and had no notice of the taking of said deposition, and plaintiff was not represented at the taking thereof. In addition to the stipulations regarding these facts, upon the hearing of said motion, the appellant filed an affidavit of its counsel to the effect that both depositions were necessary to the preparation and trial of its case. No evidence was offered by the plaintiff to contradict this affidavit, and the motion to retax costs was not made upon the ground that the depositions were not necessary.

[1, 2] It is stated to be the rule that items for taking depositions are proper disbursements to put into a cost bill, unless they are unnecessary or for some special reason should not be allowed. Lindy v. McChesney, 141 Cal. 351, 353, 74 Pac. 1034; Cal., etc., Co. v. Schiappa-Pietra, 151 Cal. 732, 745, 91 Pac. 593. The taking of the deposition of the plaintiff, being regular in all particulars, as provided by the Code of Civil Procedure, and there being no contradiction of the allegations in the affidavit that this deposition was necessary for the trial of the action, the expense of taking the same was a proper item upon the cost bill and should have been allowed.

[3] As to the expense of the deposition of the defendant Funk, we think the action of the trial court was proper. It is true that section 2021, Code of Civil Procedure, provides for the taking of a deposition of a party to an action. However, section 2031, Code of Civil Procedure, provides how such depositions may be taken "on serving upon the adverse party previous notice of the time and place of examination," together with a copy of an affidavit showing that the case is within the provisions of section 2021. Section 2032, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that, when a deposition is regularly taken in the manner provided therein, it may be used by either party upon the trial or other proceeding against any party giving or receiving the notice. It being admitted that no notice was given to the plaintiff of the taking of this deposition, such deposition was not entitled to be admitted in evidence as against him. It is stated in the affidavit of the appellant that at the trial the plaintiff objected to the introduction of the deposition upon this ground. As this deposition was not regularly taken so as to make it admissible in evidence against the plaintiff, it would seem to follow that plaintiff may not be charged with it as costs.

The order appealed from is modified by allowing the item of $8.50, the expense of taking the deposition of plaintiff, thus increasing the amount of costs allowed to appellant from $47.70 to $56.20. As modified, the order appealed from is affirmed, the appellant to pay its own costs.

CARL v. McDOUGALL. (Civ. 3039.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 16, 1919.)

1. FORGERY ⚷5, 27 — INTENT TO DEFRAUD ESSENTIAL TO CRIME.

In a prosecution for forgery, the intent to defraud is not only an essential element of the crime, but is essential to every indictment for the offense.

2. LIBEL AND SLANDER ⚷2—INTENT IMMATERIAL EXCEPT AS TO EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

If defendant's words were slanderous as to plaintiff, the intention with which they were used is immaterial, except possibly on the question of exemplary damages.

3. LIBEL AND SLANDER ⚷7(12)—CHARGE OF FORGERY INCLUDES ALL ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

Defendant's charge that plaintiff was a forger, and had forged defendant's name to a check, necessarily included all elements of the crime of forgery, including the element of intent to defraud, and charged a felony.

4. LIBEL AND SLANDER ⚷124(1)—INSTRUCTION DEFINING OFFENSE IN ACTION FOR CALLING PLAINTIFF FORGER PROPER.

In an action for slander by having called defendant a forger, the court properly instructed that, to enable the jury to determine whether the language used by defendant amounted to an accusation of the crime of forgery, he would define the offense, and that Pen. Code, § 470, provided that every person who with intent to defraud signed the name of another or of a fictitious person, knowing he had no authority to do so, to a check, committed forgery.

5. LIBEL AND SLANDER ⚷7(12)—CHARGE OF FORGERY SLANDEROUS.

If defendant charged plaintiff with the crime of having forged defendant's name to a check, such charge was slanderous.

6. Libel and slander ⚷100(8)—No variance between pleading and proof.

In an action for slander, testimony that defendant said of plaintiff, "He forged a check on me," and, "He had a check which he forged his name to it," held not a fatal variance from plaintiff's allegation that defendant said, "Mr. Carl (plaintiff) is a forger," for, though plaintiff must prove the use of the particular slanderous words, it is sufficient if enough of the words alleged are substantially proved to constitute the sting of the charge.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Suit by Marcel Carl against D. McDougall, administrator of the estate of Theodore Wiesendanger, deceased. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. F. Oster and Peyton H. Moore, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. C. Shelton, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BRITTAIN, J. In a suit against Theodore Wiesendanger, the plaintiff, Marcel Carl, was awarded a verdict for $300 actual and $700 punitive damages for slander. Wiesendanger appealed from the judgment entered upon the verdict. After the death of the appellant, upon suggestion, the administrator of his estate was substituted.

The complaint was in two counts, and in it the plaintiff in substance alleged the defendant had to two different persons, then the employers of the plaintiff, on the same day but at different times, accused the plaintiff of having forged the defendant's name as the indorser of a certain check. The appellant makes six specifications of error, which may best be discussed in what appears to be their logical order. They are closely related and all refer to the allegation that the defendant said:

> "Mr. Carl is a forger. He has forged my name to a check, and I have a lithographed copy of the check in my office."

[1-3] In criminal prosecutions for forgery, the intent to defraud is not only an essential element of the crime of forgery, but is an essential element to every indictment for forgery. People v. Turner, 113 Cal. 278, 45 Pac. 331; People v. Smith, 103 Cal. 563, 37 Pac. 516. In reliance upon this strict rule of criminal pleading, the appellant contends the complaint in the present case was fatally defective, in that it contained no allegation that the slanderous words were used with the intention of charging that the plaintiff had forged the indorsement intending thereby to defraud. If the words were slanderous, the intention with which they were used is immaterial, except, possibly, upon the question of exemplary damages. The rule relied upon by the appellant binds him. The charge of forgery necessarily includles all the elements of the crime. If the defendant accused the plaintiff of forgery or said the plaintiff had forged a check, he accused the plaintiff of a felony. It is not necessary that the language used should be chosen with the technical nicety required in an indictment. Mitchell v. Sharon (C. C.) 51 Fed. 424, 425. Under the contention of the appellant none but those trained to observe the technicalities of criminal procedure would be able to slander their neighbors, and they would know how to limit their statements so they might do the wrong and avoid its consequences. Where one accuses another of having forged his name to a check, the language can mean nothing other than that the person accused has been guilty of a felony.

[4, 5] The appellant contends the court erred in instructing the jury that, in order to enable them to determine whether the language used by the defendant amounted to an accusation of the crime of forgery, he would define for their purposes the offense of forgery, and in further instructing them that—

> "Section 470 of the Penal Code provides in effect that every person who with intent to defraud signs the name of another person or of a fictitious person, knowing that he has no authority so to do, to a check, commits a forgery."

The appellant argues that there was no allegation in the complaint that the language used was to be construed in any other manner than according to its plain and literal meaning, and that it was the duty of the trial court to construe the language. This the court did in defining forgery. He had previously properly instructed the jury that they must determine whether or not the defendant charged the plaintiff with the crime of forging his name to a check. If such a charge was made it was slanderous. Childers v. San Jose Mercury, 105 Cal. 284, 38 Pac. 903, 45 Am. St. Rep. 40; Smullen v. Phillips, 92 Cal. 408, 28 Pac. 442.

[6] The appellant contends there was a fatal variance between the words alleged and those proved. Neither of the two witnesses to whom the statement was made testified that the defendant said, "Mr. Carl is a forger," but one testified the defendant said of Carl, "He forged a check on me," and the other, that the defendant said, "He had a check which he forged his name to it." The appellant relies on those cases which hold that in a civil suit for slander the plaintiff must prove the use of the slanderous words, and that it is unavailing that the jury imputes a slanderous meaning to other words. Fleet v. Tichenor, 156 Cal. 343, 104 Pac. 458, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 323; Haub v. Friermuth, 1 Cal. App. 556, 82 Pac. 571. The rule is unquestionable and was properly applied in those cases. In the Fleet Case the charge was that the defendant had said the plaintiff "stole" certain jewelry. The evidence was that the defendant said the plaintiff had "taken" the jewelry. The word "taken" does not imply the commission of a crime. The statement that a man has forged a check can imply nothing else. The appellant testified he had not made the statement. The jury believed the other witnesses. The statements of the plaintiff's witnesses were within the rule that slander is established if enough of the words alleged are substantially proved as constitute the sting of the charge and contain the poison to the character. Fleet v. Tichenor, 156 Cal. 346, 104 Pac. 458, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 323; Smith v. Hollister, 32 Vt. 708; Lewis v. McDaniel, 82 Mo. 577; Merrill v. Peaslee, 17 N. H. 540; Zimmerman v. McMakin, 22 S. C. 372, 53 Am. Rep. 7.

The appellant claims the court erred in refusing to give two requested instructions and in giving another. His argument on those points is based upon the same grounds and the same rules and authorities which have been discussed. An examination of the record and all the instructions leads to the conclusion that the instructions given were fair to the defendant, complete, and in accord with the law that in such actions enough of the words alleged must be proved to contain the sting of the charge and that all the words charged need not be proved.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITCOMB v. GIANNINI et al.
(Civ. 2313.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 8, 1919.)

1. Appeal and Error ⚿110—No appeal from order denying new trial.

An order denying motion for new trial is not appealable, and an attempted appeal therefrom should be dismissed.

2. Evidence ⚿73—Presumption in favor of regularity of corporate proceedings.

Where no showing is made that a regular directors' meeting of a certain date was illegally called, assembled, or held, if notice of the meeting was required to be given each director, it must be presumed, in the absence of contrary showing, that such notice was given.

3. Corporations ⚿298(3)—Notice to directors of adjourned meeting unnecessary.

Where a directors' meeting of a certain date was regularly held, and a majority of the directors were present, and action to adjourn to a later date was regularly taken, no notice to directors of the adjourned date was necessary.

4. Corporations ⚿298(4) — Directors' meeting not irregular because held three hours later.

The fact that the minutes of a directors' meeting showed that the directors assembled at 1 p. m., instead of 10 a. m., as ordered by the resolution of adjournment previously made at a regular meeting, is not material on the regularity or irregularity of the meeting, as it may be presumed the directors met as soon as a quorum assembled after 10 a. m., particularly in the absence of showing that the single absent director appeared after 10 and failed to remain because of lack of a quorum.

5. Corporations ⚿93—Stockholder must sue within six months after sale to set aside assessment.

Where an assessment on corporate stock levied by directors was not invalid, and the stockholders had notice of their delinquencies, the irregularity that requisite notices to directors were not given of the meeting when resolution was passed postponing a previously fixed date of sale of delinquent stock was included within Civ. Code, § 347, providing a stockholder in such case must bring his action within six months after the date of sale.

6. Corporations ⚿89(2) — Notice of assessment to one, notice to both joint stockholders.

If plaintiff was a stockholder in defendant company of whom it was bound to take notice as such, his interest in his 10 shares of stock being a joint interest with the original owner of such shares, notice to the original owner of an assessment was notice to him.

7. Corporations ⚿89(2)—Notice to company of interest of one not appearing on books.

A corporation was not compelled to take notice of the interest in 10 shares of stock of one who had acquired a joint interest therein with the original owner, and had merely had his name written on the original certificate with that of the owner, but no transfer made on the books of the company, so that the only notice the company was required expressly to give of the levying of an assessment on the stock was notice to the original owner.

8. Corporations ⚿93—Purchase of stock by director at sale for assessment.

A director in the company when an assessment was levied and sale of delinquent stock made held not ineligible and disqualified by any confidential relationship to the stockholder from bidding at the sale or purchasing the stock sold.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by C. S. Whitcomb against Frank Giannini and the Tulare County Power Company, a corporation. From judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Appeal from order denying motion for new trial dismissed; judgment reversed.

E. I. Feemster and Middlecoff & Feemster, all of Visalia, for appellants.

Ward Chapman, of Los Angeles, and Bradley & Bradley, of Visalia, for respondent.

JAMES, J. [1] This action was brought to recover ten shares of corporate stock, or the value thereof, which plaintiff alleged had been made illegally the subject of a sale for delinquent assessment. Plaintiff had judgment, from which the defendants appeal. There was also an appeal attempted to be taken from an order denying to defendants a new trial; but, as that order was not appealable, the appeal therefrom should be dismissed.

[2-4] The contentions of the plaintiff, which were upheld by the trial court, were: First, that the meeting of the directors at which the assessment was levied was not legally called, in that the directors were not given written notice of the time and place of hearing; second, that a subsequent meeting of the directors, at which a resolution was adopted postponing the sale of stock upon which the assessment had become delinquent, was illegally held, in that the directors were not given written notice of the time and place of hearing; third, that the plaintiff as a stockholder never received a notice, nor was any sent to him, advising him of the delinquency; fourth, that defendant Giannini, who was the purchaser of the stock at the delinquency sale, being a director of the corporation, the stock of which was then being sold, was ineligible and disqualified to bid at such sale. It appeared in evidence that the 4th of August, 1914, was the day regularly set by the by-laws of defendant corporation for the holding of the regular monthly directors' meeting. There were seven directors, all of whom were present except one on the day of this regular meeting. The directors present, after the meeting was convened, adjourned the regular meeting to August 11th, at 10 a. m. The minutes of the meeting of the directors, held on the 11th day of August, showed that the meeting convened at 1 p. m., instead of 10 a. m., and that all directors again were present except one. The secretary of the corporation testified that he had given written notice by letter to this director and that he had received a telephonic communication from the director stating that he would be unable to attend the meeting. There was no evidence offered to contradict this latter showing as to the notice having been given in writing to the absent director of the meeting of August 11th. No showing was made on the part of the plaintiff that the regular meeting of August 4th was illegally called or assembled or held, and, if notice of that meeting was required to be given, it must be presumed in the absence of a contrary showing that such notice was given. Sferlazzo v. Oliphant, 24 Cal. App. 81, at page 86, 140 Pac. 289. The meeting of August 4th being regularly held and a majority of the directors being present and the action to adjourn to the later date of August 11th having been regularly taken, no notice to directors of the adjourned date was necessary. See Seal of Gold Mining Co. v. Slater, 161 Cal. 621, 120 Pac. 15, where it is said:

> "A director receiving notice of a meeting was bound to know that a quorum might adjourn, and that business might be transacted at the adjourned meeting. And this is in accordance with the general rule, which is that no notice of adjournment of a meeting regularly called need be given"—citing authorities.

Hence, not only was no notice required to be given to any director of the time and place for the holding of the adjourned directors' meeting, but the evidence without dispute shows that the only director absent on August 11th was notified in writing. The fact that the minutes of the meeting showed that the directors assembled at 1 p. m., instead of 10 a. m., as ordered by the resolution of adjournment, previously made, seems to us not to be material, for the reason that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it may be presumed that the directors met as soon as a quorum had assembled after the hour of 10 a. m., and especially in view, too, of the fact that no showing was made that the absent director appeared at 10 o'clock and failed to remain because of the lack of a quorum. He had previously notified the secretary that he would not appear. The directors' meeting of August 11th, at which the resolution was adopted levying the assessment against the stock of the defendant corporation, was therefore duly held and legally noticed and called. That the resolution levying the assessment was sufficient in form and substance is not disputed. In this resolution it was declared that the assessment levied thereunder should become delinquent on the 16th day of September, 1914, and that all delinquent stock on which the assessment had not been paid should be sold on the 5th day of October, 1914, at 2 o'clock p. m. On the first Tuesday in September, that being the time fixed by the by-laws for the holding of the regular monthly directors' meeting, a quorum was not present. Minority directors attempted to adjourn until September 2d. On September 2d a quorum was present and an adjournment was taken to September 17th. Five directors were present at the meeting of September 17th and an adjournment was again taken to October 3d. At the meeting of September 17th, at which there were present all but two directors, a resolution was adopted providing for the publication of a notice giving the names of those delinquent and the stock held by them, and giving notice of sale which was to take place on the 5th of October, 1914, as previously determined in the resolution levying the assessment. At the October 3d meeting, at which all directors were present except one, the absent director being the director who is defendant here, Giannini, a resolution was adopted postponing the date of sale from October 5th to November 4th, and providing for a publication of notice of such extension or postponement. We have already concluded that the proceedings up to and including the levying of the assessment were regularly taken and had, and the record further shows that subsequent proceedings up to and including the date of delinquency as fixed in the resolution last referred to, were all completed as required by law. The resolution ordering the assessment contained complete direction for the publication of the necessary notice of sale for delinquencies (Civ. Code, § 337), and the publication of that notice, it is admitted, was had in accordance with the direction of the resolution.

[5] The question as to whether the meeting of October 3d was regularly called and held, that being the meeting at which the resolution was passed postponing the date of sale to November 4th, is next entitled to consideration. If all of the directors had been present at that meeting, there would have been no question as to the legality of the action taken, regardless of the matter of notice having been given to any of them. Civ. Code, § 320a. It may be assumed that the court was correct in finding, as it inferentially did, that the requisite notices were not given of the meeting of October 3d. The assessment, as has been noted, was not invalid; the stockholders had notice of their delinquencies. Hence we think that the irregularity, if such it be, was one included within the provisions of section 347, Civil Code, which provides that a stockholder must in such case bring his action within six months after the date of sale. This action was commenced by the filing of a complaint on February 21, 1916; the sale of the stock was made in November, 1914. Assuming that the plaintiff as stockholder received all the necessary notices and that, as we have already decided, the levying of the assessment was regularly done, plaintiff's action would be too late.

[6-8] There is next to be considered the question as to whether at the times material to the levying of the assessment and making of the sale plaintiff was in fact a stockholder in defendant corporation and, if so, whether he was charged with notice. It is admitted by the defendants that no special notice was given to the plaintiff of the levying of the assessment, as required by section 336, Civil Code; that is, no notice was given to him other than such notice as might be imparted by that published in the newspaper. Admittedly the giving of notice by publication alone under the section of the Code cited would not be sufficient. The ten shares of stock referred to in this controversy were originally issued to one Hall and had never been transferred from Hall to any person upon the books of the corporation up to and including the date of sale as made under the assessment. It seems that the defendant corporation was engaged in the business of furnishing a certain form of power to its stockholders. After Hall secured his stock, he parted with some interest in land, which was affected by the stock, to this plaintiff, and the certificate of stock was taken to the office of defendant corporation and the person in charge notified of the fact that Whitcomb had become the owner of an undivided interest in the stock. There was testimony that the secretary of the corporation took the original certificate and, after the name of Hall, appearing therein, wrote the name of this plaintiff. Plaintiff testified that he was the joint owner with Hall of the stock up to the time that Hall transferred his entire interest to the plaintiff. Under the issues made by the pleadings, we must assume that this latter transfer was made after the sale for delinquent assessment. We have noted that the stock was never transferred upon the books of the corporation. It is shown that notice of the assessment was given to Hall, the record owner, and that none was given to the plaintiff. As far as can be gathered from the record the interest acquired by Whitcomb, the plaintiff, both in the property of Hall and in the stock of defendant corporation, which was useful principally in connection with that property, was in the nature of a partnership interest. Plaintiff in his testimony insisted that the interest was a joint interest, and if we are to assume that the corporation, because of the fact, as it appeared, that it had knowledge that both Whitcomb and Hall were being dealt with in connection with the power furnished to the land, is estopped from denying that plaintiff held a stockholder's interest in the corporation, then we think that it is logically to be concluded that notice to Hall was notice to Whitcomb. We are strongly inclined to the conclusion that as the stock had never been transferred on the books of the corporation the latter was not bound to recognize Whitcomb as a stockholder when it gave notice of the assessment levied. While it is true that Whitcomb stated in his testimony that he asked the secretary to see that the books were changed, he made no request at any time to have any specific number of shares of stock assigned to him, or for any new certificate to be issued to him, but went away content with the writing in of his name after Hall's on the original certificate, after stating to the secretary that he had become "jointly" interested in the stock with Hall. Section 324 of the Civil Code provides that stock may be transferred upon the books of the corporation, and provides that "until the same is so entered upon the books of the corporation as to show the names of the parties by whom and to whom transferred, the number of the certificate, the number or designation of the shares, and the date of the transfer," such transfer, except as between the parties, should not be valid. Under the facts shown we conclude: First, that assuming the plaintiff to have been a stockholder of defendant corporation and of whom defendant corporation was bound to take notice, the interest in the stock being a joint interest, notice to Hall of the delinquent assessment was notice to him. Secondly, that it is not correct to assume the corporation was compelled to take notice of the interest in the stock of the plaintiff, but that relying upon its records, there appearing not to have been a transfer made from Hall to plaintiff, the only notice that was required to be expressly given of the levying of the assessment was the notice to Hall. The claim made and to which countenance was given by the trial judge, that Giannini, being a director at the time of the levying of the assessment and the sale made, was ineligible and disqualified from bidding at the sale or of purchasing stock sold thereat, we are not prepared to sustain. The facts shown in no way illustrate a case where the relation of the director to the stockholder was of such a confidential character as to make it a breach of faith or trust should he be permitted to purchase the stock.

In our opinion, the trial judge was in error in the making up of his conclusions as to the rights of the plaintiff.

The appeal from the order denying defendants' motion for a new trial is dismissed. The judgment is reversed.

DE BOCK v. DE BOCK et al. (Civ. 1896.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 17, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 14, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑757(3)—UNNECESSARY TO PRINT ALL TESTIMONY IN BRIEF.

The Legislature did not intend, by the enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, that appellant should be required to print in his brief all the testimony appearing in the record, or even all the testimony relating to the points urged by him for reversal.

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE 🔑332—COMPLAINT BY WIFE STATING CAUSE OF ACTION FOR ALIENATION.

In a wife's action for alienation of her husband's affections, complaint held sufficient to state a cause of action.

3. ESTOPPEL 🔑3(2)—JUDGMENT 🔑632—ESTOPPEL OF WIFE SUING FOR ALIENATION BY PREVIOUS ALLEGATIONS WHEN SUING FOR DIVORCE.

Wife held not estopped, in her action for alienation of her husband's affections, from denying certain facts alleged by her in her complaint in suit for divorce against the husband, defendants' attempt being to invoke an estoppel by judgment in effect, while such an estoppel can only arise and be invoked where the subject-matter of the litigation and the parties are the same.

4. EVIDENCE 🔑265(8)—PLEADING IN PRIOR SUIT REBUTTABLE AS ADMISSION AGAINST INTEREST.

In a wife's suit for alienation of her husband's affections, complaint in her prior divorce action against him can perform no other office than that of evidence of an admission on plaintiff's part that the material facts stated in her divorce complaint, which was verified, are true, not being conclusive, but rebuttable as an admission against interest.

5. HUSBAND AND WIFE 🔑333(9)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE TO SHOW ALIENATION OF HUSBAND'S AFFECTIONS.

In an action by a wife for alienation of her husband's affections against the husband's brother, his sister-in-law, and the woman alleged to have exercised the improper influence over the husband, evidence held insufficient to justify verdict against such woman, but sufficient to support verdict against the brother and sister-in-law.

6. HUSBAND AND WIFE 🔑333(3)—EVIDENCE OF CONVERSATIONS IN SUIT FOR ALIENATION.

In an action for alienation of a husband's affections, evidence by plaintiff wife of conversations between herself and husband was admissible to indicate their feelings towards each other.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑237(2)—TIMELY OBJECTION TO INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE.

Where it is not apparent from the question itself that the response will on any theory of the case be inadmissible, an objection alone to the question will be of no avail, but the party, when the inadmissible evidence is for the first time disclosed by the answer, must move to have it stricken out, and, failing to do so, cannot predicate error on the question.

8. TRIAL 🔑98—STRIKING OF INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE.

In a wife's action for alienation of her husband's affections, testimony of a witness that the husband told her he had received two letters from a certain woman held effectually stricken on motion of defendants by the trial court.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1050(1)—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE OF FACT OTHERWISE SHOWN HARMLESS.

The improper admission of evidence was harmless to appellants, where the same fact was otherwise shown on trial without objection from them.

10. TRIAL ⊂⇒45(1)—EXCLUSION OF QUESTION TO COURT INSTEAD OF WITNESS NOT SUBJECT OF REVIEW.

In a wife's action for alienation of her husband's affections, where defendants' attorney asked the court whether he might ask plaintiff a question regarding a conversation with her husband along the lines as that with a third person, the inquiry was not sufficiently precise.

11. TRIAL ⊂⇒29(3) — OBJECTION BY TRIAL COURT TO CROSS-EXAMINATION.

The action of the trial judge in objecting to a question to plaintiff on cross-examination, and in then sustaining his own objection, is not ordinarily to be commended.

12. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⇒930(2)—ASSUMPTION JURY FOLLOWED INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the trial court's stricture on one of the witnesses and counsel for defendants should not have been indulged in, but the jury was fully and clearly instructed to disregard everything said by the court along that line, the appellate court must assume the instruction was followed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Action by Catherine M. De Bock for alienation of her husband's affections against August De Bock and others. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed in part; affirmed in part.

Jay L. Henry, E. S. Wachhorst, and C. E. McLaughlin, all of Sacramento, for appellants.

P. H. Johnson and Irving D. Gibson, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. We adopt the following portion of our opinion on the former hearing of this cause:

"The appeal is prosecuted by defendants, under the alternative method, from a judgment against them in the sum of $5,000.

"It is stated in appellants' opening brief that the action was brought 'to recover damages from defendants, for enticing, inducing, and persuading plaintiff's husband to desert and abandon her,' while respondent maintains that the cause of action is 'for the alienation of the affections of Louis De Bock, husband of respondent.'

[1] "Preliminarily, respondent contends that this court is precluded from considering the points urged for reversal for the reason that appellants have failed to comply with the provision of section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that 'the parties must print in their briefs, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court.' The trial of this case occupied six days, and the reporter's transcript contains 752 typewritten pages. Appellants' opening brief consists of 125 printed pages, practically one-half of which are devoted to a reproduction of the testimony which they claim is sufficient fairly and lucidly to present to this court the points upon which they rely, and we think their briefs sufficiently comply with the terms of the section to compel our consideration of the points raised on the appeal. That the Legislature did not intend, by the enactment of said section, that the appellant in a case should be required to print in his brief all the testimony appearing in the record, or even all the testimony relating to the points urged by him for a reversal, is indubitably shown by the use of the phrase, 'such portions of the record.'

"The points first urged for a reversal by the appellants concern the complaint and the effect of certain allegations of the complaint in an action for divorce instituted by the plaintiff against Louis De Bock and determined prior to the time at which the present action was commenced, and they are: (1) That the complaint fails to state a cause of action; (2) that there is a variance between the facts alleged in the complaint in the divorce action and those set forth in the complaint in this action with respect to the cause or causes culminating in the separation of and estrangement between the plaintiff and her former spouse; that the plaintiff is concluded by the facts alleged in her divorce action, and is therefore estopped from contradicting them in this action. In other words, the contention is that the plaintiff, having charged certain specified misconduct against her former husband in her divorce complaint, is conclusively bound by the averments so made, and therefore will not be permitted to say in the complaint in this action that the charge so made was not true.

"The decision of these points will require, of course, a consideration of the complaint in this action and (as to the asserted estoppel) also a consideration of the complaint in the action by the plaintiff against the said Louis De Bock for a divorce.

"The complaint herein alleges: That plaintiff and Louis De Bock intermarried at Sacramento 'on the 25th day of January, 1905, and ever since have been and now are husband and wife, and up to about the month of June or July of the year 1914, lived happily together as such husband and wife. That the conjugal affection, support, protection, care, comfort, and consortium of the plaintiff's said husband was and is a valuable property right' to which plaintiff is entitled. 'That said Louis De Bock, on or about the first day of August, 1914, with the intent at such time to desert and abandon this plaintiff, wrongfully, willfully, and voluntarily separated from plaintiff and then and there deserted and abandoned this plaintiff,' by reason of which plaintiff is now living separate and apart from her husband. That, by reason of said alleged wrongful acts, which are reproduced, plaintiff was compelled to bring an action for divorce against her husband which resulted in an interlocutory decree of divorce being entered on September 12, 1914. 'That some time about the month of June, 1914, and prior to the day of the said desertion and abandonment of plaintiff by her husband, the said defendants willfully, wrongfully, wickedly, maliciously, and injuriously combined, conspired, confederated, and agreed and contrived, intending thereby to injure this plaintiff and to deprive her of the affection, support,' etc., of her husband, and 'said defendants by reason of said agreement and conspiracy, wrongfully, maliciously, willfully, and wickedly behaved and conducted themselves continuously ever since said time, towards this plaintiff in an unkind, inconsiderate, unsociable, cruel, and inhuman manner, thereby gradually undermining and wholly destroying this plaintiff's happiness, peace of mind, and greatly injuring and impairing her health; said conduct * * * continually growing worse and more cruel, until by reason thereof, and in conjunction with the conduct of her husband, * * * plaintiff suffered great and grievous mental anguish and pain' and she became sick and confined to her bed. That in execution of said conspiracy said defendants wrongfully, etc., continuously until about the first day of August, 1914, 'enticed, induced, begged, persuaded and urged' her husband 'to deprive this defendant of all the things which it was the duty of said Louis De Bock to furnish this plaintiff as his wife, and to abandon and desert her and live separate and apart from her, and to refuse to live with her and to neglect her and keep her away from his said home and the home of these defendants, and for himself to remain and live with the defendants, August De Bock and his said wife, Ella De Bock, where defendant Millie Fisher was, and is, a frequent visitor.' That said Louis De Bock did, on or about August 1, 1914, 'by reason of, and on account of, and as a result of the arts, wiles, designs, blandishment, machinations and persuasion, in pursuance of said agreement and conspiracy * * * entirely desert and abandon this plaintiff, and ever since said time has continued to desert and abandon her, and has during all of said times persistently and continuously neglected and refused to furnish this plaintiff all the things which' it was his duty to furnish her. That said defendants, 'combining, conspiring, confederating, and agreeing, and willfully, wickedly,' etc., 'intending then and there to injure this plaintiff, to reduce her to penury, and deprive her of the affection, support,' etc., of her husband, about the months of June, July, and August, 1914, 'absolutely and entirely alienated, estranged, and destroyed the affection of' her husband for her 'and alienated the affections of said Louis De Bock from plaintiff, and did illegally persuade, entice, and abduct said Louis De Bock from plaintiff, whereby the plaintiff has wholly lost and been deprived of the assistance, comfort,' etc., of her husband, to which plaintiff was entitled and otherwise would have had 'but for the illegal persuasion, conversation, and the said enticement, abduction and doings and actions of the said defendants.' It was alleged that plaintiff had thereby been damaged in the sum of $15,000, and judgment was prayed for that amount.

"There was introduced in evidence the judgment roll in the case of Catherine M. De Bock v. Louis De Bock, being the action for divorce referred to in the complaint. It appears therefrom that on September 12, 1914, the complaint in said divorce action was filed in the superior court of the county of Placer, in which county the parties resided; that the answer of the defendant was filed, a trial of the action was had, and findings and an interlocutory decree of divorce on the ground of cruelty were entered on the same day, the decree also providing for alimony to be paid the plaintiff and for a division between the parties of certain real and personal property. A final decree of divorce was entered in the action on September 28, 1915.

[2] "There was no demurrer to the complaint in this action, but even in the face of a general demurrer we would hold the foregoing allegations sufficient in the statement of a cause of action in a case of this character. The eighth paragraph in very plain and direct language charges the formation of a conspiracy by the defendants having for its object the alienation from the plaintiff of the affections of her former husband and thereby to deprive her of his protection, assistance, and consortium, that such conspiracy was actually executed or carried out by the defendants, and that by reason of the wrongful acts of the latter the plaintiff lost the love and the affection and the consortium of her said former husband. A complaint in substantially the same language was held good in Humphrey v. Pope, 122 Cal. 253, 54 Pac. 847. It is true that the complaint contains some matters which are wholly immaterial to and have no necessary connection with the cause of action pleaded, unless they may be regarded as explanatory by way of inducement of the cause stated; but where, as here, the complaint contains averments which do state a cause of action, it cannot be held bad even under a demurrer, albeit it does also contain matters having no connection with or in no way tending to explain the facts constituting the cause of action or how or in what manner such facts came into existence. If the matters referred to are nonessential or redundant, they could have been stricken from the complaint on motion, in which case the complaint would, as stated, still state a cause of action against the defendants for the alienation of the affections of plaintiff's husband.

[3, 4] "Nor is there any merit in the contention that the plaintiff is estopped in this action from denying certain facts alleged in her complaint in the suit for divorce against Louis De Bock. This contention arises from the fact that the plaintiff in the complaint in the divorce action charged that her then husband treated her in a cruel and inhuman manner for a period of more than one year 'next immediately preceding the commencement' of the action for divorce, particularizing therein certain occasions upon which acts of cruelty were practiced upon her by said Louis De Bock and specifically describing the nature thereof, some of which facts (it was alleged) having been committed in the month of August immediately preceding the month in which the action for divorce was instituted, whereas, in the present action, the plaintiff alleges in her complaint that she and her former husband 'up to about the month of June or July, 1914, lived happily together as husband and wife.'

"It is, of course, elementary that estoppels bind only parties and privies. An estoppel by judgment can only arise and be invoked where the subject-matter of the litigation and the parties are the same. Strangers to the suit or those not privies in law to the parties thereto are not precluded under the doctrine of estoppel from setting up rights which, as to them, have not been adjudicated in the action. While the estoppel sought to be invoked here is said to be an estoppel arising upon and in the pleadings, yet, if this were true, we can perceive no logical reason for holding that in effect the attempt here is not to invoke an estoppel by judgment, since the findings of the court in the divorce action are in strict accord with the facts stated in the complaint therein, and certainly, if the plaintiff is upon the doctrine of estoppel foreclosed the right to deny in this action the truth of the facts alleged in her divorce complaint, a fortiori, should she be likewise handicapped by the judgment in the divorce action, which involves a definitive and conclusive adjudication of the facts as pleaded by her, so far as is concerned the cause of action so stated as against her former husband. But be that as it may, it is very clear that, since the parties to the present action were not parties to the divorce action and the subject-matter of the two actions is entirely and wholly different, the principle that an estoppel will not lie in such circumstances is equally applicable whether the claimed estoppel arises in the pleadings or by virtue of the judgment. It follows that the complaint in the divorce action can perform no other office in this action than that of evidence of an admission upon the part of the plaintiff that the material facts stated in her divorce complaint, which was verified, are true. It is not, of course, conclusive evidence of the truth of the facts so stated and may be rebutted, but it constitutes an admission against interest which may and should be considered in the determination of the issues of fact in the subsequent action. 'A verified petition filed in one case by a party is competent evidence against such party on the trial of another case as a statement or admission, but is not conclusive and carries nothing of estoppel.' "The remaining and by far the more important problems submitted for solution here involve the question whether the verdict derives sufficient support from the evidence and the further question whether certain rulings upon the evidence were erroneous and, if erroneous, whether prejudicial in their effect upon the substantial rights of the defendants.

"Although, as seen, the briefs contain portions of the testimony, the writer has performed the decidedly operose task of reading all the testimony, which comprises approximately seven hundred pages of typewritten matter. This burden was assumed because of the claim that the evidence is wholly insufficient to support the verdict, and that a number of errors in the admission and exclusion of certain evidence was committed at the trial, and because, if they were errors, we are required to determine whether or not a miscarriage of justice has followed from those errors (article 6, § 4½, Const.)—a question which can be determined in this case only after an examination of the evidence.

"It is, of course, entirely out of the question to essay a reproduction herein, even in substance, of all the testimony which was received and presented to the jury. All that can be done or which, in our opinion, it is necessary to do, is to state in a concise form all of what may be termed the controlling facts; that is, all those facts which, in any view or under any possible interpretation, may be said to afford or tend to afford support to the cause of action stated in the complaint. This we will now proceed to do.

"The defendant August De Bock, spoken of as 'Gus,' is a brother of Louis De Bock, and defendant Clara E. De Bock, referred to in the record as 'Ella,' is the wife of August. Defendant Millie Fisher for many years had been an intimate friend of her codefendants. She first met Louis De Bock and the plaintiff in 1912, when she visited their house in company with Ella De Bock. Louis De Bock was an engineer in the employ of the Southern Pacific Company.

"There was testimony tending to show that plaintiff and her husband lived happily together for a period of over nine years, from their marriage in 1905 until the spring of 1914. They lived mostly at Roseville and Blue Canyon, in Placer county. During the period above mentioned Louis De Bock treated his wife in a kind and affectionate manner. He would kiss both her and her mother, who lived with her part of the time, when he left the house to go on his run. Plaintiff testified that in about March, 1914, her husband became cool and indifferent towards her; that in June, 1914, he went to Colfax to work, leaving her at Blue Canyon; and that about the first of August he deserted her. She also said that defendants had always been friendly towards her and had visited her frequently until in the summer of 1914, when they ceased visiting her and became very indifferent and cool toward her. Some time in the month of August, 1914, plaintiff and her mother visited Ella De Bock and Millie Fisher at the house of said Ella in Blue Canyon and had a conversation with them. Plaintiff spoke of a letter written by Ella De Bock and asked why she had written it. Defendant Ella said that she had written, saying that plaintiff and her husband were having trouble. Plaintiff testified: 'She started in about my husband, and she said that I was a fool to put up with him the way he was carrying on, and that he was low and dissipated, and she was sure he was running around with fast women, and she said that I was a superior woman to him; she said: "The only thing left for you to do is to get a divorce; if I were you I would go away off to Los Angeles, where I would never come in contact with him again. You could take him to the desert of Sahara, and he would never be any different."' Asked by plaintiff if she was sure her husband was running around with fast women, defendant Ella said that 'she didn't know it for a fact, but was sure of it. * * * She said: "I would take my maiden name back."' Plaintiff testified that defendant Fisher spoke up and said that she admired Ella for the way that she took the thing; that when she first met my husband she thought he was a pretty good looking fellow; but she said, '"Now he is low and dissipated, degraded looking," and she said: "Kate, you are a fool to put up with anybody like that; there is too many men in the world." And she says: "I could get one any time, but no man for me. I advise you to get a divorce."' Plaintiff said that in July, 1914, at the house of Ella De Bock, in Roseville, she had a conversation with her husband in which she asked him: 'What is the matter with you, Lou, anyway? Why are you treating me this way?' to which he replied, 'Kate, the only way for you and I to get along is for me to quit my job, and for us to go off where my folks will never know where we are.' Plaintiff said: 'Why do you talk that way? * * * My folks aren't trying to separate us.' At about the same time, at Roseville, plaintiff's husband told her he was not going to live with her any more, and said, 'If you don't think you have got grounds enough to get a divorce, I will get a woman and let you catch me with her,' and plaintiff said he told her 'he had been running around with fast women, and all that sort of thing; he wouldn't live with me any longer.' She said that she had tried to get him to come back to her, even after she had filed her complaint for divorce, but that he said: 'It has gone this far, let it go through.' Plaintiff said that when she would go to the train to see her husband, if Gus and Ella De Bock were there he would hardly speak to her, but that when she would go the next day, if he was alone, he would get off the engine and kiss her and be himself again.

"Mrs. Rose Gray testified that very often she and Ella De Bock discussed the plaintiff, and that on one occasion said Ella stated that 'the only way Lou could get rid of her was to take her meal ticket away from her.' It appeared that plaintiff had a painting which she had taken to Sacramento to have valued, and Ella said to the witness that 'she didn't care if she got a hundred thousand dollars for the picture, just so she got out of the family, and left the De Bocks alone; that Gus said he would give her five dollars if she would take her maiden name back'; that plaintiff's influence was so strong over her husband 'that they would have to move away until this thing was put through.' At one time, speaking of the Caminetti case, Ella said to witness 'that she didn't blame Drew Caminetti at all, if he was in love with the girl, and that his own father upheld him, and that if she were in Lou's shoes, she would do the same.'

"Louis De Bock first met defendant Fisher in 1912, when she, with Ella De Bock, visited the home of himself and wife at Blue Canyon and remained there about eight or nine days. They made them another visit of two or three days' length in 1913. In the same year, Ella De Bock had a cottage at Truckee, where Miss Fisher was her guest. Louis De Bock visited them every Saturday night for about two months. He testified that in 1914 he saw Miss Fisher one evening in Oakland at his sister's house, and later the same year he met her again in Oakland.

"During the month of July, 1914, Mrs. Ella De Bock wrote to Mrs. Rose Gray, who lived at Blue Canyon, requesting her to secure a house for her at the canyon during the summer months and not to let plaintiff know of it. Mrs. Gray secured a house, and Mrs. Ella De Bock and Miss Fisher occupied it from the middle or latter part of July. Miss Fisher testified she had always been friendly with plaintiff and had visited at her house until the summer of 1914, but that at that time 'we were requested by Mrs. Gus De Bock to stay away from there, not mix in our family affairs. At about this time, Ella De Bock and Miss Fisher kept their clothes on most of one night without retiring in order to be sure of meeting the respondent's husband as he passed through on his run at 4 o'clock in the morning. He dismounted from the engine and hugged and kissed both of them. On one occasion Clara E. De Bock met Louis De Bock at a train and 'patted him on the face in an affectionate way.' From June 15 to July 5, 1914, Louis De Bock roomed at the house of Mrs. Jessie M. Wales, at Colfax. Louis was then the fireman on the locomotive engine of which Mrs. Wales' husband was the engineer. While stopping at the Wales', Louis received one or more letters from the defendant Fisher, signed 'Millie,' and he spoke of her on those occasions as 'My Mill,' and called her his 'pal' and friend. On one occasion Louis showed Mrs. Wales some samples which he said were samples of Millie's dresses and that she (Millie) had sent them to him.

"In August, 1914, defendant Gus De Bock went to plaintiff's house to get Louis De Bock's hunting clothes. She said he told her that four men, including himself and her husband, were going on a hunting trip; that no women were going along. The three defendants went by train to Reno and were there met by Louis De Bock. From Reno the four of them, with a man named Judd, started in an automobile belonging to Gus De Bock and drove to Sacramento. The party stayed two days in Sacramento, Louis De Bock stopping at a hotel and the defendants going to the home of the mother of Mrs. Ella De Bock. The defendants and Louis De Bock then went in the automobile to Nelson, Chico, Oroville, and Lincoln, remaining one night in each place. They had a camping outfit with them, but the testimony was that they did not camp out at any time. The auto trip consumed about a week.

"We have now presented herein the salient facts brought out by the testimony. There are many other facts in the record of the same general character of those embraced in the foregoing statement to which we have not considered it necessary to make specific reference herein for the purpose for which the evidence is to be considered here.

"It must, of course, be conceded, in view of the verdict, that, notwithstanding that the plaintiff in her divorce complaint under oath declared that 'for more than one year next immediately preceding the commencement of the foregoing action, defendant has treated plaintiff in a cruel and inhuman manner,' etc., specifying times and places when and where such acts of cruelty were committed, she and her former husband, down to a few weeks prior to the commencement of said divorce suit, lived amicably and happily together, never prior thereto having had anything more than those inconsequential misunderstandings which are common among married people and which are mere temporary outbursts, generally not followed by serious results. These further facts are, from the verdict, to be conceded as having been established: That from the date of the intermarriage of Louis De Bock and the plaintiff, in the year 1905, down to about a year prior to the date of their separation by divorce, the defendants Gus and Clara E. De Bock were on uniformly friendly terms with the plaintiff; that at about the time indicated they turned against the plaintiff, the defendant Gus De Bock having developed a feeling of intense hatred for her; that both Gus and Clara E. De Bock were at the least agreeable to if not anxious for a permanent separation of the plaintiff and Louis De Bock; that Gus and Clara De Bock, as well as Louis De Bock, were very much attached to Millie Fisher and that the latter reciprocated that sentiment as to all those three persons; that both Gus and Louis De Bock almost invariably, upon returning from their runs (Gus being also a locomotive engineer in the employ of the S. P. Co.), greeted both Clara E. De Bock and Millie Fisher, upon meeting them on those occasions, in a very affectionate manner, often kissing the women; that Gus De Bock, Clara E. De Bock, Millie Fisher, and Louis De Bock, between themselves arranged the outing in the automobile, mentioned above, and that (it may reasonably be inferred) it was the purpose of all of them to make the plaintiff believe that the party constituting the 'outing party' was to consist entirely of men—that no females were to be members thereof. It is further to be conceded that it is fairly and reasonably inferable from the evidence that Gus and Clara E. De Bock had discussed with Louis De Bock the proposition of a permanent legal separation between himself and the plaintiff. In a word, it is the duty of this court to assume that every word of the evidence as to the acts and conduct of the defendants in connection with the plaintiff and Louis De Bock is absolute verity," and so viewing the record, what shall we conclude as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict?

"Unquestionably, the theory upon which the complaint proceeds is that there existed between Louis De Bock and Millie Fisher a mutual sentiment of love and affection; that Louis, having transferred his affections from the plaintiff to Miss Fisher, desired to be freed from the then insuperable legal obstacle in the way of making that young woman his wife; that Gus and Clara De Bock, being greatly attached to Miss Fisher and having conceived a deep feeling of animosity against the plaintiff, joined Miss Fisher (and perhaps Louis De Bock) in a scheme the consummation of which would be the divorcement of the plaintiff and Louis and the subsequent intermarriage in due legal time of the latter and Miss Fisher. At the time of the trial of this case—over two years after the plaintiff was divorced from her former husband—Louis De Bock and Millie Fisher had not intermarried. There is no direct evidence that they ever intended to intermarry or that they were more than good friends. There is no evidence that they ever maintained improper relations with each other, unless it is to be declared that the fact that he, as did Gus De Bock, in the presence of his wife, often kissed her when he met her affords an inference of meretricious relations between them, a proposition abhorrent to decent and right thinking. But let it be assumed that Louis De Bock was 'in love' with Millie Fisher, that she loved him, and that as a consequence Louis lost all love and affection for his wife; yet the truth remains that there is no direct evidence that that condition was not brought about wholly and solely through the conduct and acts of Louis himself. In other words, if it be true that there was generated and developed in the hearts of Louis De Bock and Miss Fisher a mutual sentiment of love and affection sufficient to overcome and destroy the love and affection which Louis once had for the plaintiff, the evidence, while perhaps having a tendency to do so, does not clearly show but that Louis himself was the wooer and not the wooed, and that he himself took the initiative in bringing about that state of feeling or sentiment between them. In short, the record discloses very slight evidence, the effect of which is to negative the proposition that Louis De Dock's whole conduct towards Millie Fisher was his own voluntary act, uninfluenced by any active interference on her part. Buchanan v. Foster, 23 App. Div. 542, 48 N. Y. Supp. 732, 735."

[5] Upon further consideration we have reached the conclusion that not only is the evidence against Millie Fisher very slight, but that it is not legally sufficient to justify a verdict against her.

"The evidence is obviously stronger against the De Bock defendants than it is against Miss Fisher. But the evidence against all the defendants is entirely of circumstances. There is no direct evidence that the conduct and acts of any of the defendants constituted the cause of the abandonment by Louis De Bock of his wife or his loss of affection for her." But, considering all the circumstances disclosed by the record, we think it cannot be said that the verdict as to the De Bocks is unwarranted.

In cases like this, depending for their support entirely upon circumstantial evidence, the task of the reviewing court is more difficult than in those instances wherein the verdict rests, in part at least, upon the direct testimony of witnesses. This circumstance furnishes an additional reason why we have given this record such deliberate consideration, devoting especially close attention to the questions whether the verdict is supported, and whether any prejudicial error was committed by the trial court in its rulings upon the admissibility of evidence.

As to the sufficiency of the showing to support a rational inference in favor of plaintiff we have already declared our judgment. It remains to notice the other specifications of alleged error, and of these only five are regarded of sufficient gravity to require specific attention.

[6, 7] 1. The record shows the following proceedings while the plaintiff was on the stand:

"Mr. Johnson: Q. In July, 1914, when you were visiting Ella De Bock at Roseville, did you have a conversation with your husband at that time? A. Yes. Q. Well, what was it? A. Well, I asked him what was the matter with him, and he told me—we had, we took a walk—he had not been treating me right for quite a while, and we took a walk and Ella De Bock, she went out some place, and him and I took a walk, and I asked him: 'What is the matter with you, Lou anyway? Why are you treating me this way?' And he said, 'Kate, the only way for me to get along'— Mr. Wachhorst (interrupting): 'We object to that as irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial.' The Court: 'It will be admitted for the purpose of showing the relations existing between the witness and her husband; not for the purpose of binding the defendants, except as it would show the relations. Go on.' A. Well, we took a walk, and I asked him what was the matter with him that he was treating me the way he was, and he said: 'Kate, the only way for you and I to get along is for me to quit my job, and for us to go off where my folks will never know where we are—never find out where we are.' I said: 'Why do you talk that way? My folks aren't trying to make trouble with me.' I asked it of him, and I said, 'You do not want to quit your position,' and I said to him, 'If you feel that way, why don't you quit?' and he said: 'No, I will take a lay-off.' And I said, 'My folks aren't trying to separate us.' He said: 'That is just the way it stands.'"

The point of the objection is that—

> "The defendants could not be prejudiced by any declaration, act or omission of plaintiff or her husband not made in their presence." Code Civ. Proc. § 1848; Humphrey v. Pope, 1 Cal. App. 376, 82 Pac. 223; Bashore v. Parker, 146 Cal. 529, 80 Pac. 707.

It is quite obvious, however, that the only portion of the answer that could possibly prejudice the defendants was the statement in reference to their going away "where my folks will never know where we are." But a sufficient answer to appellants' criticism of this is that no motion was made to strike it out. The question itself was concededly proper, as evidence of conversations between the husband and wife was admissible to indicate their feelings towards each other. Hence, any objection to the question would have been properly overruled. But, if it may be said that the objection of appellants made in the midst of the answer can be considered as a motion to strike out, then it is quite apparent that the motion was properly denied, since she had up to that time said nothing whatever to connect appellants in the slightest degree with any trouble between herself and her husband. The proper practice in such cases is well settled, and it is sufficient to refer to the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of People v. Lawrence, 143 Cal. 148, 70 Pac. 893, 68 L. R. A. 193. Therein it is said:

> "Under such circumstances, where it is not apparent from the question itself that the response thereto will, upon any theory of the case, be inadmissible, an objection alone to the question will be of no avail, but the party must, when the inadmissible evidence is for the first time disclosed by the answer, move to have it stricken out. This is the proper and only remedy, and the appellant here, having failed to avail himself of such a motion, is not in a position to predicate error merely upon a question which, upon its face, did not show that the testimony to be given in response to it would necessarily be inadmissible."

Moreover, the court in its ruling limited the consideration of the evidence to the single purpose of indicating the relation of the parties, and we must presume on appeal that it was considered by the jury only for that purpose.

[8, 9] 2. Complaint is made of the testimony of a Mrs. Wales that Louis De Bock told her either in June or July, 1914, that he had received two letters from the defendant Fisher. But the court struck out this evidence in the following language:

> "As to the letters which Lou De Bock told her he received from Millie Fisher, why the motion will be granted. It is hearsay, anything that is told her, and her only information is what he told her—is hearsay."

Furthermore:

> "The court instructs the jury that as the court has granted the motion to strike out that portion of the witness' testimony wherein she stated what Louis De Bock had told her concerning letters, and what he told her concerning whom the letter was from; but as to the letters which she saw herself and read, and the testimony will be one letter; that stands, and is not stricken out."

Appellants contend that there is some uncertainty as to this ruling. But it is clear that everything that was said by Louis De Bock was stricken out. There was nothing left of any importance in the answer to the question, to which an objection had been made. The one letter to which the court refers was undoubtedly the one concerning which she testified without objection when she was asked the question: "Did Lou De Bock ever give you any letters to mail to Millie?" and she answered, "One." Furthermore, "What did you do with it?" and she answered, "I burned it." But, if we concede that the court did not fully strike out the testimony to which an objection was made, it is quite apparent that it resulted in no prejudice to appellants, since the same fact was shown without objection. Fernandez v. Watt, 26 Cal. App. 86, 146 Pac. 47; 3 Corpus Juris, 815.

3. The situation is similar in reference to the ruling of the court as to a conversation between plaintiff and one Bob Wales as to said correspondence. If error was committed, it was clearly without prejudice for the reason already stated.

Besides, the contents of the letters were not shown, and it cannot be assumed that there was anything therein of a compromising or improper character, or that the jury was influenced against any of the defendants by the mere circumstance that Lou De Bock had corresponded with Miss Fisher.

[10] 4. It is urged that the court erred in refusing a request of appellants to cross-examine the plaintiff in reference to a conversation with her husband. The request itself was somewhat indefinite, being in the following language:

> "Well, now, your honor, in regard to Ben Smith, may I ask the question regarding a conversation along the same lines with her husband?"

The reference to "Ben Smith" may be understood when we recall that appellants had unsuccessfully attempted to question the witness about a conversation with said Ben Smith. If appellants desired to interrogate plaintiff concerning a conversation with her husband, they should have put the inquiry in more precise terms. It does, indeed, appear that the court did not so understand the question. Again, they should have asked the question of the witness directly to make it the proper subject of review. Moreover, the question does not purport to be in reference to any quarrel, disagreement, or dissension between her and her husband. If such was the purpose of the question, it should have been disclosed to the court. In County of Sonoma v. Hall, 129 Cal. 659, 62 Pac. 213, objections were sustained to certain questions upon cross-examination. It was contended on appeal that the questions should have been allowed for a certain purpose, not evident on the trial; but the Supreme Court said:

> "If such was the purpose of the questions, a direct question should have been asked in such manner as to show the aim of counsel."

Again, assuming that counsel desired to ask the witness concerning a controversy about her having been in a hospital at Sacramento, it may be said that the husband testified fully as to the conversation, and it thus appears that the conversation did not amount to a quarrel and the fact that they lived together for six years thereafter is quite satisfactory evidence that said conversation did not cause their separation.

[11] 5. Plaintiff was asked on cross-examination concerning a "disagreeable conversation" with her husband about one Schultz. The trial judge made an objection to the question and then sustained his own objection. Such procedure is not to be commended except in unusual cases. Counsel for respondent seem to have been amply able to fully protect the interests of their client and they should have been permitted to make whatever objection they deemed advisable. But what has been said in reference to the preceding matter will apply to this question which related to an occasion of six years prior to the separation of the parties. And whatever discord was thereby created was clearly condoned and forgotten in the subsequent six years of felicitous marital relation.

[12] Some complaint is made of certain criticism made by the trial judge of one of the witnesses and of the counsel for appellant. It may be admitted that the stricture should not have been indulged in; but the jury was fully and clearly instructed to disregard everything said by the court along that line, and we must assume that the instruction was followed.

The judgment as to Millie Fisher is reversed, and as to the other defendants it is affirmed.

HART, J. (concurring). As the writer of the former opinion filed in this cause, and in view of the fact that we have reached a different conclusion from that arrived at on the former consideration of the case, I deem it proper to explain that in the original consideration I was misled by the lack of clearness of the record as to the action of the court with respect to certain evidence to which objections were, in my opinion, well taken, and which I conceived to be, in view of the slightness of the proof against the defendants, sufficiently prejudicial to require a reversal of the judgment as to all the defendants. Upon a reconsideration of the rulings upon which the reversal by the former opinion was ordered, however, I find, as the present opinion shows, that the court struck out all the damaging portions of certain testimony to which objection was made, and that, as to other testimony, which I held to be erroneous and prejudicial, no motion was made to strike it out after it had been given, although there was an objection made to it after it got into the record. As the main opinion shows, in such circumstances—that is, where a proper question elicits from a witness improper testimony—the remedy is by a motion to strike out such testimony, a mere objection to it not being sufficient to preserve the right of the objecting party to have the questions so raised reviewed. Other rulings as to other testimony which appeared to my mind to be prejudicially erroneous are disposed of satisfactorily to me in the present opinion of the court.

I desire further to add that, after a fuller consideration of the case, I have become convinced that the judgment should not stand against the defendant Fisher. While it appears that the three defendants were close friends and companions, and that Louis De Bock was also very friendly with Miss Fisher, it was not made to appear that the latter did or said anything calculated to cause an estrangement between the plaintiff and her husband, or that she had or entertained any feeling of animosity or unkindness toward the plaintiff. There is no evidence tending to show that Miss Fisher ever attempted to persuade Louis to desert his wife or ever said anything to Louis or any other person in the least derogatory of the personal character of the plaintiff. There is, in short, nothing in the evidence tending in the slightest degree to connect Miss Fisher with a conspiracy to which the defendants De Bock might have been parties, the object of which was to cause a separation and divorce between the plaintiff and Louis De Bock. The fact that Miss Fisher was on intimate terms of friendship with her codefendants and Louis De Bock is without special significance in the absence of proof that she had committed acts or uttered words calculated to influence Louis against the plaintiff, and which were designed by her to cause the alienation from plaintiff of Louis' love and affection. There are, it is true, some circumstances from which the conclusion might justly follow that Louis De Bock and Miss Fisher were "in love with each other"; but, conceding that to have been the case, there is no evidence showing or tending to show that Miss Fisher was responsible for that state of the affairs between them. In other words, putting it in the language of the main opinion, it was not made to appear but that Louis himself "was the wooer and not the wooed," and that but for what might have been, so far as the record discloses, his undue attentions to her, wholly initiated and persistently prosecuted by him, she would not have given him any serious thought as an unholy suitor for her affections. These observations are, of course, based upon the assumption that a reciprocal sentiment of love had developed between Louis and Miss Fisher, a fact as to which the evidence is by no means clear and convincing, since, after all, the evidence as to the relations between Louis and Miss Fisher and the sentiments they entertained for and toward each other is justly capable of the interpretation that their relations at all times were only those which commonly exist and are entertained between mere friends or between persons entertaining no thought of each other beyond that which is motived by a mere ordinary sentiment of friendship.

But it is not necessary to discuss this matter further. I am satisfied, from a thorough examination of the record, that no case was made against Miss Fisher, and for the reasons stated in the main opinion I concur in the reversal of the judgment as to the defendant Fisher, and in its affirmance as to the defendants De Bock.

HEGEL v. HANNAS et al. (Civ. 3059.)

1. CONTRACTS ⚷265—PROVISIONS OF STATUTE AS TO RESTORATION OF RIGHTS CONSTRUED TOGETHER.

Civ. Code, §§ 1691, 3407, and 3408, relating to restoration of status quo on rescission, must be construed together, for they are not mere statutory laws, but are declarations of well-understood principles of equity.

2. CONTRACTS ⚷265—RELIEF FOR FRAUD BY CANCELLATION.

If equity can be done between the parties, the courts will grant relief to the defrauded party, by way of cancellation of a contract, even though the parties cannot be placed exactly in statu quo.

3. EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY ⚷5 — RESCISSION OF EXCHANGE OF LAND FOR FRAUD.

Where defendants were guilty of fraud in effecting an exchange of land, plaintiff may obtain rescission of the contract, even though she had, before discovery of the fraud, entered into a cropping contract; judgment that defendant shall receive the share of the crops which plaintiff would otherwise have received being a sufficient provision for restoration.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by Kate Hegel against Grace B. Hannas and another. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying their motion for an order vacating the judgment, etc., defendants appeal. Judgment and order affirmed.

R. T. Quinn, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Charles J. Kelly and D. A. Stuart, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The defendants appeal from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for an order vacating the judgment and for an order to amend and correct the conclusions of law and to enter a judgment for the defendants instead of the judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff.

Both appeals raise the same question. The action was brought to rescind an exchange of real property between the plaintiff and the defendants. Upon evidence the sufficiency of which is not disputed, the court found that the transaction was tainted by fraud on the part of the defendants, and that the plaintiff is entitled to rescind. Finding 11 reads as follows:

"That after the plaintiff obtained possession of the land described in Exhibit C, and before she knew that the representations made to her by said Heber, which are hereinbefore found to be untrue, were in fact untrue, she made a cropping contract of said land for cropping purposes for the period of one year from the 11th day of January, 1918, to and with one Manuel Dueso, and by the terms of this cropping contract said Manuel Dueso has the right to go upon said land for the purpose of raising crops thereon until January 11, 1919. That under the terms of said cropping contract said Manuel Dueso has raised a crop of barley hay, and has now growing on said land a crop of beans. That one of the conditions of said cropping contract is that the plaintiff is to receive one-fourth of each of these crops, but has not yet received any part of either of them, but one-fourth of said hay crop is on said land ready for delivery by said Manuel Dueso. That said land has no buildings or improvements thereon, and is only adapted to agricultural purposes, such as provided for in said cropping contract. That said cropping contract was an ordinary and proper use thereof. That otherwise than as provided by said cropping contract the plaintiff is able to surrender full possession of said land to the defendants. That the defendants are entitled to the one-fourth part of said crops that would have gone to the plaintiff under said cropping contract. That the making of said cropping contract, and the keeping of the land in cultivation thereunder, was beneficial to said land, otherwise it would be in an uncultivated condition and weeds would have grown thereon and reduced the value of said land. Said cropping contract has increased the value of said land, and therefore the defendants are not entitled to any other compensation on account of the right outstanding in said Manuel Dueso to go upon and use said land up to January 11, 1919, than said one-fourth of said crop."

The court ordered that the property conveyed by the plaintiff to the defendants be reconveyed to the plaintiff. It ordered that upon that reconveyance the plaintiff deliver to the defendants a reconveyance of the property conveyed by the defendants to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff also deliver to the defendants an assignment in writing conveying to the defendants all her rights and interest in and under the Dueso lease, and also to all crops raised on said land under said lease.

[1-3] Section 1691 of the Civil Code provides that the party rescinding a transaction "must restore to the other party everything of value which he has received from him under the contract; or must offer to restore the same, upon condition that such party shall do likewise, unless the latter is unable or positively refuses to do so." Sections 3407 and 3408 of the Civil Code are as follows:

"Sec. 3407. Rescission cannot be adjudged for mere mistake, unless the party against whom it is adjudged can be restored to substantially the same position as if the contract had not been made.

"Sec. 3408. On adjudging the rescission of a contract, the court may require the party to whom such relief is granted to make any compensation to the other which justice may require."

Appellants contend for a strict application of the foregoing provisions of section 1691, and claim that the subsequent provisions above quoted cannot be applied until it is first shown that the plaintiff has fully and absolutely complied with section 1691. We do not agree with this contention. The three sections must be construed together. They are not mere statutory law, but are declaratory of well-understood principles of equity. "It is not an invariable rule that the rescission of a contract obtained by fraud will be denied merely upon the ground that the parties cannot be placed in statu quo. If equity can still be done between the parties, courts will grant relief to the defrauded party." Green v. Duvergey, 146 Cal. 379, 389, 80 Pac. 234, 238. It is our opinion that the provisions as made in the decree in this case are sufficient to restore the defendants to substantially the same position in which they would have been if the rescinded conveyances had not been made. The Dueso lease was made for such a short time and upon such terms that the existence of such lease does not prevent the plaintiff and the court acting in this matter from doing substantial justice to the defendants, while at the same time the plaintiff's undoubted right to a rescission is enforced.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

SAN JOAQUIN LIGHT & POWER CO. v. BARLOW. (Civ. 2294.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 8, 1919. Rehearing Denied Sept. 30, 1919.)

1. Assumpsit, action of ⚷23—Contract price admissible under common count to prove value.

Though letters from plaintiff, power company, to defendant, consumer, proved a contract price for current furnished, by virtue of such fact they were also admissible under a common count to prove that the rate charged was reasonable.

2. Appeal and error ⚷277—Ruling on and exception to exclusion of evidence.

In an action by a power company against a customer to recover for current furnished, conduct of the customer's attorney in refraining from cross-examination of the power company's witness as to the reasonableness of its rate, the court having announced that the only issue was whether the power company had furnished the amount for which it was charged, held equivalent to formal ruling not permitting any further cross-examination, and exception thereto.

3. Witnesses ⚷268(1) — Curtailment of cross-examination.

In a power company's action against its customer to recover for current furnished, the trial court erred in cutting off, substantially at its beginning, the cross-examination of the company's clerk by the customer on the subject of the reasonable value of the electricity furnished, where the action was upon a common count and not on express contract, although letters in evidence proved a contract price; he being the only witness on the subject produced by the company, and his evidence having an important bearing on the fact.

4. Appeal and error ⚷110—No appeal from orders denying new trial.

Code Civ. Proc. § 963, as amended (St. 1917, p. 624), takes away the right to appeal from orders denying motions for new trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by the San Joaquin Light & Power Company, a corporation, against C. H. Barlow. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Frank P. Doherty, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Stuart M. Salisbury, of Los Angeles, and Borton & Theile, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. In this action the plaintiff seeks to recover the sum of $655.20 upon a common count for the alleged reasonable value of electric current delivered by plaintiff to the defendant. From a judgment awarding the demanded sum of money the defendant appeals.

The plaintiff introduced in evidence certain correspondence between the parties, constituting a contract which authorized the plaintiff to deliver electricity and to charge therefor at a stated rate. The evidence further shows that a stated quantity of electric current was delivered, and that the amount due therefor, when computed in the manner and at the rate named in the contract, is the sum demanded in this action. Simpson, a clerk whose duty it was to compute charges from meter readings brought into plaintiff's office, testified for the plaintiff, and stated that the several charges made were reasonable charges for the service rendered.

The errors claimed and relied upon, as we glean them from the briefs of appellant's counsel, are as follows: (1) That the letters were not admissible to prove a contract price, because the plaintiff's complaint counts upon reasonable value and not upon a contract price; (2) that the court erred in preventing cross-examination of Simpson for the purpose of testing his qualifications as a witness on the question of reasonable value, and for the purpose of showing that the charge was not reasonable.

[1] 1. Although the letters received in evidence proved a contract price, they by virtue of that fact were also evidence tending to prove that the rate charged was reasonable. "A promise to pay a specific sum is some evidence of value." Steward v. Hinkel, 72 Cal. 187, 191, 13 Pac. 494, 495. "Where an express contract has been fully performed by plaintiff and nothing remains to be done under the contract but the payment of money by defendant, and plaintiff sues on indebitatus assumpsit instead of on an express contract, the contract is admissible as evidence of the amount due, and it is the best evidence of such amount, and prima facie establishes it." 5 Corp. Jur. 1409.

2. On cross-examination of Simpson, after some questions had been asked and answered, relating to the conditions under which the service was to be rendered, and for the stated purpose of reaching the question of what was a reasonable rate, counsel for plaintiff objected that defendant could not go into these matters, on the ground that defendant, by entering into the contract, was estopped to question the reasonableness of the rate. After discussion, the court announced that—

> "The only issue here is of them furnishing the amount for which they are charging."
> Mr. Doherty: "You mean no further testimony allowed on the proposition of whether or not the rate fixed by them was a reasonable rate under the issue of their pleadings?"
> The Court: "I don't see that there is any open question there."

On the ruling thus made, defendant's counsel refrained from further cross-examination on the reasonableness of the rate. To the statement made by the court, and without any direct exception, counsel responded, "Well, on the ruling of the court, then, I will not ask any further questions on cross-examination as to the reasonableness of the rate." [1]

[2] Although no question was formally propounded, with a ruling thereon from which under the statute an exception would be implied, the record made, as above stated, was equivalent to such formal ruling and exception. Pastene v. Pardini, 135 Cal. 431, 67 Pac. 681.

[3] The court erred in thus cutting off, substantially at its beginning, the cross-examination of Simpson on the subject of reasonable value of the electricity furnished to defendant. The effect of the ruling was to leave his testimony, as given on direct examination, unaffected by any additional statements by which it might have been modified on the cross-examination. No other witness on the subject was produced by plaintiff, and this evidence had such an important bearing on the fact at issue that the defendant was seriously prejudiced by the court's refusal to allow the cross-examination to proceed as indicated.

[4] As the court's order denying defendant's motion for a new trial was made after the right of appeal from such orders had been taken away by amendment of the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 963; St. 1917, p. 624), the appeal from that order is dismissed.

The judgment is reversed.

BISHOP v. BARNDT et al. (Civ. 2982.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 4, 1919.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑95(2), 101 — RESTORATION OF VENDOR'S RIGHT AFTER SUSPENSION BY WAIVER.

Where time is made of the essence of a contract for the payment of money, as a land sale contract, and the covenant has been waived by acceptance of installments overdue, with knowledge of the facts, such conduct will be regarded as creating only a temporary suspension of the right of forfeiture, which may be restored by giving specific notice of intention to enforce it.

2. ESTOPPEL 🔑72—ESTOPPEL TO DENY VALIDITY OF ASSIGNMENT TO AGENT.

Where an assignment was signed in blank with the knowledge of the real party in interest, who in turn delivered to his agent, whose name was written into the assignment with the knowledge and consent of the real party in interest, the latter is estopped to deny that the assignment as delivered to his agent was valid, duly executed, and binding on him, and one not a party to the assignment cannot complain.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑207—NO PRIVITY BETWEEN VENDOR AND THIRD PERSON WITHOUT ASSIGNMENT OF CONTRACT.

The assignee of a contract to convey by contracting to sell to a third person could not create a privity of contract or estate between her and the vendor without assigning his interest in whole or in part under the original contract, and without such assignment and notice of it the vendor was entitled to stand upon the contract with the vendee regardless of any subcontract the latter might make.

4. QUIETING TITLE 🔑7(1) — VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑214(1) — THIRD PERSON WITHOUT RIGHTS BECAUSE NOT ASSIGNEE OF CONTRACT.

Where, by contract with the assignee of a contract to convey, a third person assumed no obligations towards the vendor so as to bring herself into privity with the vendor, she acquired no rights under her contract, which did not operate as an assignment, and, having no rights, there was nothing for her to forfeit to the vendor, who was entitled, however, to have removed, in an action to quiet title, her claim operating as a cloud on title.

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑101—REVIVAL OF RIGHT OF FORFEITURE BY VENDOR'S NOTICE.

Notice, served by the vendor of land by contract to convey on the real party in interest, several installments being in default, to the effect that the vendor would insist on the forfeiture clause unless payment was made promptly, held sufficient to revive all the vendor's rights under the contract, entitling her subsequently to stand strictly on its terms, and to have decree of forfeiture against the buyer and various assignees on their failure to pay within a reasonable time.

6. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE 🔑114(2)—NECESSARY TO PLEAD AND PROVE CONTRACT JUST AND CONSIDERATION ADEQUATE.

A decree for specific performance of a contract to sell and convey land cannot be supported under Civ. Code, § 3391, in the absence of allegation and finding the contract was just and reasonable, and the consideration adequate.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; W. H. Thomas, Judge.

Action by Ada M. Bishop against Elizabeth J. Barndt and others. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Hartley Shaw, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

G. P. Adams and John C. Stick, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WASTE, P. J. This, in form an action to quiet title, is, in effect, one to declare a forfeiture of the rights of all the defendants in and to the real property in question. The facts of the case appear from the findings, fully supported by the testimony.

By an agreement of sale, made on February 6, 1913, the plaintiff agreed to sell, and the defendant Elizabeth J. Barndt agreed to buy, the land in question for the sum of $1,300, payable $100 upon the execution of the agreement, $400 on March 1, 1914, $400 on March 1, 1915, and $400 on March 1, 1916, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually; the buyer to pay all taxes after March 1, 1913. This contract, almost immediately after its execution, was assigned and transferred to defendant Stick, and, together with said assignment on the back thereof, was recorded in the office of the county recorder of Orange county, but not until May 29, 1915, just before this action was commenced. Time is the essence of the contract.

On August 14, 1913, defendant Stick sold the property under another contract to defendant Beulah B. Coward for the sum of $2,400, on account of which defendant Coward had paid the sum of $1,863.81 before trial of the action.

The initial payment of $100, due under plaintiff's contract, was paid at the time of the execution of the agreement. The $400 installment on account of principal, due March 1, 1914, and the various payments on account of interest, falling due prior to February 6, 1915, were paid by defendant Stick. None of these payments were made when due, but at various dates thereafter, and each was received and accepted by the plaintiff without any objection on her part. At the time the suit was commenced—July 23, 1915—the payment of interest due on February 6, 1915, and the $400 installment on account of principal, due March 1, 1915, had not been paid to plaintiff. Plaintiff had also paid certain taxes, assessed against the property, which had not been repaid.

Prior to the bringing of the action, no notice of any delinquency of any payment, or demand for the payment of the same, was made, or served, upon defendants Stick or Coward. Plaintiff never gave to the said defendants, or either of them, any notice that she would, or did, insist upon the provisions of the agreement between herself and Barndt, as to time being the essence of the agreement, or that she would declare a forfeiture of her contract with defendant Barndt, although she became aware of the existence of the agreement between defendants Stick and Coward in June, 1915, about one month before bringing this action.

The court found that defendants Stick and Coward were ready, willing, and able to pay to the plaintiff all money due under the contract between herself and the defendant Barndt. Those defendants, in open court, in keeping with this finding, offered to pay the amount, together with all taxes paid by plaintiff, and costs of suit, upon the condition that plaintiff convey the title to the premises to either of them, and deliver to the grantee a certificate of title, as provided in the original contract. Defendant Stick, by stipulation filed in the action, consented to the transfer being made directly to the defendant Beulah Coward. Plaintiff declined to accept the tender and convey the property. Counsel for the respective parties, by stipulation, then agreed that the amount due upon principal and interest, under the contract between plaintiff and defendant Barndt, provided the same was then in force, amounted at that time to $901.87; that the taxes paid by plaintiff on said premises, including interest, amounted to $13.20; and that plaintiff's costs amounted to $19.95—making the total of principal, interest, taxes, and costs the sum of $935.02. The defendants Stick and Coward then made tender of that amount in open court to the plaintiff, and the tender was refused. In lieu of the payment of the money into court, pending the final determination of the action, it was stipulated that the amount be deposited with a trustee, to hold the same, with proper instructions as to its disposition.

As its conclusion of law from the foregoing facts, the court found that plaintiff was entitled to recover of and from the defendants John C. Stick and Beulah Coward the above amount, upon her executing and delivering a proper deed and certificate of title, and, also, that the defendants in the action were entitled to a judgment and decree that plaintiff execute such conveyance to defendant Coward, and furnish proper certificate of title. Judgment and decree was entered in accordance with the findings. It was further decreed that, in the event said plaintiff refused to make such deed of conveyance and furnish such certificate of title within 40 days from the date of the judgment, the clerk of the court make, execute, and deliver to the defendant Coward such conveyance for and on behalf of plaintiff, and obtain and turn over the certificate of title, as directed. Plaintiff has appealed.

The judgment and decree of the lower court, if it is to be upheld, must rest upon the legal effect of its findings that all of the payments on the contract between plaintiff and defendant Beulah Coward, other than the initial payment of $100, were made at various dates after the same became due, according to the terms of the contract, and were received and accepted by plaintiff without objection upon her part. From this conduct on the part of plaintiff, the trial court apparently reached the conclusion that plaintiff had waived the default, and failure to comply strictly and punctually with the conditions of the agreement to such an extent that plaintiff had induced the purchaser and assigns, in reliance thereon, to alter their course as to strict and punctual compliance with the contract. There is no finding to this effect.

In addition to the facts, outlined above, as found by the trial court, it appears from the evidence that Gail E. Moon, who was made a defendant, and answered generally, denying the allegations of the complaint, was the real vendee in interest in the contract between plaintiff and defendant Barndt. On May 18, 1915, and before she knew of the claim of defendant Coward to an interest in the property in litigation, plaintiff directed her attorney to send a letter to Moon. In this communication, after calling attention, by apt reference, to the contract between plaintiff and Mrs. Barndt, counsel said:

> "I understand that you are the present owner of this contract, and this is to notify you that the sum of $400 due under the terms of said contract March 1, 1915, has not been paid, and that the interest has not been paid beyond August 6, 1914.
> "You are hereby notified that, unless the sums due under this contract are paid within 15 days from date hereof, Mrs. Bishop will exercise the rights conferred upon her by the contract, which recites that time is the essence thereof, and will declare all your rights under said contract to be forfeited, and will not recognize herself as being under any further obligation to perform said contract."

No attention was paid by defendants to this notice, and the amounts due were not tendered or paid to plaintiff. After waiting two months plaintiff commenced her action to quiet title.

Upon the foregoing admitted facts, the first question that arises is as to what were the rights of the respective parties on May 18, 1915, the date of plaintiff's letter to defendant Moon. On that date the defendants were more than three months in default in respect to the semiannual installment of interest due under the contract, for the six preceding months, and nearly three months in default as to the payment of the installment on principal due March 1, 1915. According to the strict letter of the agreement, making time the essence thereof, the vendees under the contract were then subject to the penalty of having their contracts canceled and of a forfeiture of the payments which they had theretofore made, unless, as contended by defendants, the plaintiff, by receiving without objection the several payments which the defendants had tardily made, can be held, by her action in so doing, to have waived her right to insist upon the strict letter of the contract. Defendants claim that plaintiff is no longer entitled to take advantage of their past delinquencies, so as to either declare the contract canceled because of them, or to claim a forfeiture of such payments as she had theretofore received without objection, when they were not made on the dates fixed by the contract. In urging this contention they rely, among many others, upon Pearson v. Brown, 27 Cal. App. 125, 129, 148 Pac. 956; Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 290, 295, 110 Pac. 947, 139 Am. St. Rep. 126; Stevinson v. Joy, 164 Cal. 279, 285, 128 Pac. 751; Sausalito Bay Land Co. v. Sausalito Improvement Co., 166 Cal. 302, 307, 136 Pac. 57.

[1] These cases support respondent's contention, as being the correct rule under proper circumstances. Our attention has not been called, however, to any cases holding that the vendor may not by proper steps revive such right of forfeiture after default. On the contrary, it is the law that where time is made the essence of the contract for the payment of money, and this covenant has been waived by acceptance of the installments after they were due, and, with knowledge of the facts, such conduct will be regarded as creating only a temporary suspension of the right of forfeiture, which may be restored by giving a definite and specific notice of an intention to enforce it. Stevinson v. Joy, supra; Boone v. Templeman, supra. As was said in the latter case:

> "The simple act of receiving a payment after the date when the payee was bound to accept it, without more, is no excuse for laches as to future payments. The effect of the acceptance is exhausted upon the payment made, and, as to those following, the provisions of the contract are left to operate with unimpaired force."

This court, in Pearson v. Brown, supra, took note of this power, resting in a vendor to revive and restore the right to a forfeiture under contracts wherein time is made the essence thereof. In speaking of the notice given in that case the court said:

> "The utmost effect, under the foregoing rule [relating to waiver by accepting past due payments], which would be given to it, would be that of a notification to the vendees that the vendor intended thereafter to insist upon a strict compliance upon the terms of the contract; and, that unless within a reasonable time the vendees paid up their deficiencies, and thereafter made their payments strictly in accordance with the time conditions of their contract, the forfeiture clause would be enforced."

[2] Appellant contends that she has complied with all the requirements of the rules laid down by the cases we have cited, in that ample notice of default and forfeiture was in fact given. She relies upon the notice contained in the letter of May 18th, sent by her attorney to the defendant Moon. This letter, as will be noted, was sent after the assignment from Barndt to Stick, and the execution of the separate contract between Stick and Miss Coward, and before plaintiff had knowledge of the latter's claim to an interest in the property. Appellant's first contention in this regard is that Moon was still the owner and holder of all the rights under the original contract, and that servvice of the notice upon him was sufficient within the application of the established rule. In making this contention she relies, first, upon the fact that the assignment by Mrs. Barndt was executed and delivered in blank, the name of John C. Stick, as assignee, having been inserted thereafter, and, for the law to sustain the proposition, cites Arguello v. Bours, 67 Cal. 447, 8 Pac. 49. In that case it was held that a deed, in which the name of the grantee was left blank by the grantor at the time of its execution and afterwards inserted without his authority, did not convey any interest, nor become sufficient to pass title because the grantee entered into possession and paid the purchase price. We have no such state of facts in the present case. Mrs. Barndt signed the assignment in blank, with the knowledge of the defendant Moon, the real party in interest, and he, in turn, delivered the contract to defendant Stick, who appears to have at all times conducted the entire transaction for and on his behalf. Thereafter, the name of Stick was written into the assignment with Moon's knowledge and consent, and apparently for the purpose of carrying out some arrangement between the two. Moon was estopped to deny that the assignment, as delivered to Stick, was valid, duly executed, and binding upon him (Dolbeer v. Livingston, 100 Cal. 617, 621, 35 Pac. 328), and appellant, who was not a party to the assignment, cannot complain.

Appellant's second point in support of her contention that the notice given to Moon was amply sufficient to revive her right of forfeiture is that, notwithstanding the assignment by the latter to Stick, Moon was in reality the owner of all the rights conferred by the contract. This suggestion is entitled to more serious consideration. The testimony bearing on this subject is neither full nor elucidating, and some of it is hearsay. But the only inference which can safely be drawn from the evidence is that appellant is correct in her contention. There is absolutely no showing to the contrary. Notwithstanding that the trial court found that defendants Barndt and Moon had no right or interest in the real property, we are fully satisfied from the statements made by Stick to plaintiff and the admissions contained in his letters to her and from the testimony of Moon that Stick and Moon were one in interest in the contract. Moon testified that Stick acted as his representative in dealing with Miss Coward.

[3, 4] Appellant's contract bound her, on receiving the payments at the time and manner therein mentioned, to deliver a certificate of title showing the property free from incumbrances, and execute and deliver to the buyer or her assigns a good and sufficient deed thereof. She contends, however, that defendant Coward was not an assignee of the contract, and in no way party thereto; that there was no privity between plaintiff and her; and that Miss Coward was not entitled to the notice to perform, and is not now in position to enforce the contract. Appellant is correct in this contention. While defendant Stick had an ostensible equitable interest in the land acquired by the assignment of the Barndt contract, which he had the right to contract to convey to Miss Coward (Rogers Dev. Co. v. Southern California, etc., Inv. Co., 159 Cal. 735, 739, 115 Pac. 934, 35 L. R. A. [N. S.] 543), she was a stranger to the plaintiff. Her agreement with Stick was a separate and independent contract, without any reference to the contract between plaintiff and Barndt, and plaintiff was not required to take any notice of it. Stick, by contracting to sell to Miss Coward, could not create a privity of contract or estate between her and plaintiff without assigning his interest, in whole or in part, under the original contract. Plaintiff, without such assignment, and notice of it, was entitled to stand upon her contract with her vendee regardless of any subcontract the latter might make. The contract between defendant Stick and Miss Coward did not operate as an assignment of the contract between plaintiff and Barndt. Miss Coward assumed no obligations under that agreement towards plaintiff so as to bring herself into privity with her. This being so, she acquired no rights under the contract, and, having no rights, consequently there was nothing to forfeit. Her claim, however, operrated as a cloud upon the title of plaintiff which she was entitled to have removed in this form of action. Stratton v. Cal. Land, etc., Co., 86 Cal. 353, 360, 24 Pac. 1065.

[5] The notice served by plaintiff on defendant Moon was, in our opinion, under the disclosed facts of this case, sufficient to revive and restore all plaintiff's rights under her contract, and she is now entitled to stand upon its terms. When she gave the defaulting vendees a reasonable time within which to pay the money due thereunder, they should have met the requirements of the notice. When they did not they forfeited all rights under the contract. Plaintiff is doing no more than to insist that under the terms of the contract defendants have no further rights thereunder, but have forfeited all such. Her action to quiet title amounted to no more than the calling of the defaulting vendees into court to show why it should not be decreed that, under the terms of the contract, all their rights thereunder were at an end. In the absence of some sufficient equitable showing to excuse their failure to comply with the terms of the contract, which defendants failed to make, the plaintiff was entitled to such decree. Oursler v. Thatcher, 152 Cal. 739, 745, 93 Pac. 1007. Defendants were not entitled to the finding made by the trial court that the contract between plaintiff and Mrs. Barndt was still in force and effect. It is a finding against fact. The finding that the contract made between defendants Stick and Miss Coward was still in force and effect is a finding on an immaterial issue.

[6] Specific performance in this case was decreed upon the answer of defendant Coward. Even though she were in position to seek such relief, her answer does not state sufficient facts, for it is not alleged therein that the consideration to be paid plaintiff for the land is adequate, or that the Barndt contract is just and reasonable. White v. Sage, 149 Cal. 613, 614, 87 Pac. 193. No evidence was received upon this subject, and there is no finding in regard to it. A decree for specific performance cannot be supported in the absence of allegation and finding that the contract was just and reasonable, and the consideration adequate. Civ. Code, § 3391; Gibbons v. Yosemite Lumber Co., 172 Cal. 714, 716, 158 Pac. 196.

The judgment is reversed.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚷979(2)—REVIEW OF ORDER GRANTING NEW TRIAL.

In an action against a railroad for the death of one lying on the track, where he had been thrown by an automobile, an order setting aside verdict for defendant and granting a new trial to plaintiff cannot be interfered with on appeal, where the record shows ample evidence to indicate that the engineer, if he had exercised due care, could have seen the deceased in ample time to have stopped the train.

2. RAILROADS ⚷312(4)—LIABLE FOR INJURIES TO PERSON ON TRACK UNDER LAST CLEAR CHANCE DOCTRINE.

Where one was thrown onto a railroad track by an automobile at a crossing, and the engineer, if he had exercised due care, could have seen him in time to have stopped the train, but failed to do so, the railroad was liable for running over him.

Jordan, and Warren M. Thorne. From an order setting aside a verdict in favor of defendants, and granting a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Henry T. Gage and W. I. Gilbert, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Harry M. Irwin and Waldo M. York, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

At the conclusion of the oral argument, SHAW, J., delivered the opinion of the court; LAWLOR, J., and OLNEY, J., concurring:

This is an action for damages for the death of decedent, Wong On King, alleged to have been caused by the conduct of the defendant in negligently propelling its engine along Alameda street in the city of Los Angeles, at a street crossing, over his body then lying on the railroad track, where he had been thrown by a passing automobile. A verdict was given for the defendant, and the court below granted a new trial.

[1, 2] The only point assigned for reversal is that the evidence did not justify the order granting a new trial; that is, that on the evidence, as given, the verdict should have been for the defendant as matter of law. The record shows ample evidence to indicate that the engineer in charge of the train, if he had exercised due care, could have seen the deceased lying on the track in ample time to have stopped the train. Under these circumstances we cannot disturb the order of the court granting a new trial.

The order is affirmed.

1. Wills 🔑288(3)—Burden to prove invalidity of clause of olographic will.

Where an olographic will was admitted to probate with a separate residuary clause as part of it, on subsequent contest the burden rested on contestants to show the residuary clause objected to was not a valid testamentary disposition by testator because not dated; the original order of probate creating a prima facie presumption that the will, residuary clause and all, was a single instrument covered by the single date.

2. Wills 🔑130—Residuary clause of olographic will covered by date of main instrument.

If the separate residuary clause of an olographic will was written by testator when he wrote the body of the instrument as part of the same testamentary act, the instrument as a whole was a single instrument, and the date at the beginning covered both portions of it.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Frank J. Hartley, deceased. From an order revoking probate of a portion of decedent's will, an appeal was taken. Order reversed.

E. E. Rogers, of Los Angeles (L. V. Silverstein, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants.

Clyde C. Shoemaker, George H. Woodruff, and Woodruff & Shoemaker, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

At the conclusion of the oral argument OLNEY, J., delivered the opinion of the court, SHAW, J., and LAWLOR, J., concurring:

In this case a document entirely written, dated and signed in the hand of the testator, was admitted to probate. The entire document reads as follows:

"Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 15th, 1917.

"My Last Will.

"Frank J. Hartley—being of sound and disposing mind—as follows—I bequeath,

To my daughter Lillian M. Murphey..	500.00
To my daughter Edith F. Haney.......	$500.00
To my son Francis C. Hartley.......	$500.00
To my daughter Loretta T. Hartley...	$500.00
To my son Sylvester B. Hartley......	$500.00
To my son Lawrence F. Hartley.....	$500.00
To my son Herbert J. Hartley........	$500.00
To my wife Ida S. Hartley..........	$100.00 and no more as property settlement has long been made, same is of record. And I herein name my son Francis C. Hartley to act as administrator of my estate, and in case of his death my daughter Edith F. Haney to act as my administratrix.

"[Signed] Frank J. Hartley.

"Residue to be divided equally between my daughter Lillian, my daughter Edith and my son Francis C. Hartley.

"[Signed] Frank J. Hartley.

"Funeral expenses to be paid first out of money on hand or life insurance money.

"F. J. H."

After the will had been admitted to probate a contest was inaugurated by certain of the heirs against the portion of the instrument following the first signature of the testator and by which the residue of the testator's estate was given to three of his children.

The point made on the contest is that this portion of the will is a codicil, and, not being separately dated, is void. The question is identical with that presented in the case of La Grave v. Merle, 5 La. Ann. 278, 52 Am. Dec. 589, and is there put in this language:

"Where an olographic testament contains several dispositions, of which the first one, at the same time dated and signed, and the second are only signed by the testator, are the latter null for want of date? They are; provided that from the manner those clauses are conceived and placed, they cannot be considered to have been written immediately after the first, and on the same date that the first was written. But if, according to the contents or position of the second clauses, it appears that they could have been written on the same day with the first, we ought to presume that they were so in effect, consider them as forming but one and the same testament, and apply to the whole, which is composed of different clauses, the general principle that it is sufficient for the validity of the olographic will that it be dated in the context, without its having a date at the end."

[1, 2] It is not necessary in this case to go quite as far as was done in the Louisiana decision, for it appears here that in the first instance the instrument was admitted to probate as the decedent's will with this residuary clause as a part of it, with the result that upon this contest subsequently instituted the burden rests upon the contestants to show that the portion objected to was not a valid testamentary disposition by the testator. If, as a matter of fact, the residuary clause was written by the testator at the same time with his writing the body of the instrument and as a part of one and the same testamentary act, there can be no reasonable question but that the instrument as a whole is a single instrument, and the date at the beginning covers both portions of the instrument. The original order of probate creates a prima facie presumption that this was the fact. There is nothing in the instrument to indicate the contrary, and thereby overcome the presumption, and no evidence was offered to overcome it. Nor does the contest filed contain any allegation to the effect that this portion of the will was executed at a time and as a part of a testamentary act different from the time and act at and by which the main body of the instrument was executed. This being the situation, the presumption arising from the original probate is not overcome, and it must be taken that both portions of the instrument were executed at the same time and as part of the same testamentary act, so that the one date covers both.

It follows that the order of the probate court revoking the probate of this portion of the will should be reversed; and it is so ordered.

BAYSIDE LAND CO. v. PHILLIPS et al.
(Civ. 3042.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 12, 1919.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑104—BURDEN ON VENDOR TO SHOW REVIVAL OF CONTRACT.

In an action to quiet title, where defense was that defendant was entitled to possession under contract of sale, the burden was on the plaintiff, having conceded a waiver of the right of forfeiture of the contract for delay in payments, to show a revival of the terms of the contract by proof of a definite and specific notice of an intention to enforce it.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1011(1)—REVIEW OF FINDINGS OF FACT ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Finding of trial court that vendor did not give notice of an intention to enforce a contract of sale after having waived forfeiture will not be interfered with, where the evidence as to such notice was evasive, indefinite, and conflicting.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1071(6)—FAILURE TO FIND ON ALL ISSUES HARMLESS.

Where a finding on one issue is sufficient alone to support judgment, failure to find on other issues is immaterial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; W. H. Thomas, Judge.

Action by the Bayside Land Company against Mrs. Eva Phillips and Mrs. F. M. Harmer. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Bordwell & Mathews, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Evans, Abbott & Pearce, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Action to quiet title to real property, in which defendants claim an interest by reason of a written contract, entered into between the parties hereto, by which plaintiff agreed to sell and defendants agreed to buy said property. The trial court rendered judgment in favor of defendants, from which plaintiff appeals.

Said contract was found by the court to have been executed on or about August 28, 1913. The provisions material to this appeal are as follows:

"Said lot being sold for the sum of seven hundred ($700) dollars gold coin of the United States, and the said parties of the second part, in consideration of the premises, agree to pay to the said party of the first part the said sum of seven hundred ($700) dollars, as follows, to wit: The sum of seventy ($70) dollars, cash, receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged; the further sum of ten ($10) or more dollars on or before the 28th day of each and every month hereafter until the full amount of principal with interest on deferred payments has been fully paid; all to bear interest from date until paid at the rate of six (6) per cent. per annum, payable and compounded semiannually. And the said parties of the second part agree to pay all state and county taxes, and assessments of whatsoever nature, which may become due on the premises above described. It is further agreed that time is of the essence of this contract, and in the event of a failure to comply with the terms hereof, by the said parties of the second part, said party of the first part shall be released from all obligations in law or equity to convey said property, and the said parties of the second part shall forfeit all right thereto."

Appellant contends that defendants' interest in said contract, and in the land therein involved, terminated on the 27th day of November, 1915, by reason of the exercise of the forfeiture clause therein contained. Defendants, on the other hand, deny plaintiff's right to exercise such forfeiture by reason of the waiver of that provision of the agreement.

It appears from the record that on November 27, 1915, the total amount paid on said contract was $177.43, principal and interest; that on said date there was a total delinquency of $231.15, made up as follows: Nineteen principal payments, amounting to $190; accumulated interest, amounting to $35.18; delinquent taxes, covering a period of two years, amounting to $5.97. It also appears that the last payment on the contract, amounting to $7.50, was made July 30, 1915; that some time subsequent to that date (the time is not otherwise fixed by any evidence) Mrs. Harmer, one of the defendants, attempted to make a further payment of $5, but that plaintiff refused to accept it, stating that the contract had been canceled November 27, 1915; that on March 20, 1916, defendants offered plaintiff a check for $290, the full amount then delinquent, but that plaintiff refused to accept the same.

[1, 2] Appellant concedes that—

> "Defendants did not make payments punctually, and plaintiff for nearly two years indulged them in this, and accepted payments from time to time of less than the whole amount due at the time of such payments."

Plaintiff likewise concedes that such conduct operated as a waiver of that clause of the agreement making time the essence thereof, and created "such a temporary suspension of the right of forfeiture as could only be restored by giving definite and specific notice of an intention to enforce it." Stevinson v. Joy, 164 Cal. 279, 285, 128 Pac. 751; Myers v. Williams, 173 Cal. 301, 304, 159 Pac. 982; Burmester v. Horn, 35 Cal. App. 549, 552, 170 Pac. 674; Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 290, 297, 110 Pac. 947, 139 Am. St. Rep. 126. Plaintiff, however, insists that such notice was given to defendants, and that the provision making time the essence of the contract was thereby revived. Defendants deny the receipt of such notice, and contend that the contract was still in force March 20, 1916, when plaintiff refused to accept the amount due thereunder. The trial court found that the "plaintiff corporation has never given notice of cancellation or voidance of said contract."

Having conceded the waiver of the right of forfeiture, the burden was on the appellant to show a revival of the terms of the contract by proof of a definite and specific notice of the intention to enforce it. As to this the evidence was evasive, indefinite, and conflicting, and the trial court was justified in making the finding above noted.

[3] Having thus waived the right of forfeiture and failed to prove the revival of that right, the failure of the court to find on other issues becomes immaterial on this appeal. Hertel v. Emireck, 174 Pac. 30; Smith v. Smith, 173 Cal. 725, 161 Pac. 495. A finding favorable to appellant on each of these issues would not support a judgment in its favor in view of the general finding of want of notice. A finding on this issue alone, taken with the concessions of appellant, is sufficient to support the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

BARBER v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR SAN DIEGO COUNTY et al. (Civ. 2993.)

1. Equity 🔑39(1)—Grant of complete relief.

Where equity has acquired jurisdiction for one purpose, it will retain that jurisdiction to the final adjustment of all differences between the parties arising from the cause of action presented.

2. Courts 🔑475(2, 3) — Executors and administrators 🔑516(4)—Equity jurisdiction of accounting by administrator.

Until a decree settling an administrator's account and distributing the estate is made final by expiration of time for appeal, the court of probate has exclusive jurisdiction over all matters of accounting, but after that time has expired, if the decree was fraudulently obtained, equity has jurisdiction of an action to set it aside, and in order to afford complete relief may require an accounting by the administrator in such action, unless the usual chancery powers are curtailed by some peculiar limitation in the nature of the case.

3. Executors and administrators 🔑516(4)—Necessary parties in proceeding in equity for accounting.

Where, in an administratrix's suit in equity against a former administrator of the estate, the decree of settlement and distribution is set aside for fraud, an accounting by the administrator may be made in such suit, instead of in the probate court, though new claimants, not before the court, might assert claims, since, in view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 369, 1586, the administratrix represents all possible claimants and is the only necessary plaintiff, and payment to plaintiff of the amount found due will protect the administrator.

Petition by E. M. Barber against the Superior Court of San Diego County and C. N. Andrews, Judge of said Court, for writ of prohibition to prevent setting aside of a decree of settlement of account and distribution in probate, to which petition respondents demurred. Writ denied, and proceeding dismissed.

Thomas, Beedy & Lanagan, of San Francisco, and Patterson Sprigg, of San Diego, for petitioner.

Bischoff & Thompson, of Escondido, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. The petitioner applied for a writ of prohibition commanding respondents to refrain from certain threatened proceedings in an action numbered 26366 and entitled "Ostergard, Administratrix, et al. v. E. M. Barber and United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company." An alternative writ was issued. Respondents' return is in the form of a demurrer, which rests upon the ground that the facts alleged are not sufficient to entitle petitioner to the demanded relief.

Barber was administrator of the estate of James Ostergard, deceased. His final account and petition for settlement and distribution of that estate were filed on the 10th day of September, 1914, in the superior court of San Diego county. On the 29th day of that month the account was approved by order of court, and a decree of final distribution followed in due course. On the 6th day of July, 1916, the letters of administration of Barber were revoked. On the 8th day of July, 1916, Ingina Ostergard was appointed administratrix of said estate.

Thereafter Ingina Ostergard, as administratrix, together with Victoria Jensen, Mary Larsen, and Ingina Ostergard, claiming to be the only heirs at law of James Ostergard, deceased, and claiming to be the only persons interested in his estate, commenced said action No. 26366. In that action facts were alleged showing that said final account of Barber as administrator was false and fraudulent, and that in fact he failed to account for a large amount of the assets of the estate, and falsely credited himself with sundry sums for which in fact he was not entitled to receive credit; that the time within which an appeal might have been taken, or any application for relief made, as against said order and decree in the probate proceeding, had expired before the alleged fraudulent acts of Barber were discovered by the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs demanded that said order and decree be vacated; that a true account be made; and prayed for such other and further relief as is agreeable to equity.

The petition herein shows that on the 22d day of March, 1919, in said action No. 26366, findings of fact were entered, and conclusions of law thereon, which were in favor of the plaintiffs; that the court proposes, not only to set aside said order and decree in the probate proceeding, but also has made an order fixing a certain date for an accounting to be made by said Barber, before the court in said action No. 26366.

By his petition herein said E. M. Barber seeks to prevent respondent from proceeding with such proposed accounting, in that action. His contention is that the settlement of such an account is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the superior court as a probate court, exercisable solely by a proceeding in the matter of the estate of James Ostergard, deceased, and that, therefore, the court in the equity case having set aside the order and decree formerly made, its sole further jurisdiction will be limited to the power to decree that a further accounting be made in the probate proceeding. This contention presents the only question now before us.

[1] 1. It is an established rule that—

> "Where equity has acquired jurisdiction for one purpose, it will retain that jurisdiction to the final adjustment of all differences between the parties arising from the cause of action presented. It is, indeed, the duty of a court of equity, when all the parties to the controversy are before it, to adjust the rights of all and leave nothing open for further litigation." Swan v. Talbot, 152 Cal. 142, 94 Pac. 238, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1066.

[2] 2. Let it be assumed that until the decree settling the final account of Barber as administrator and distributing the estate had been made, and until that decree had become final by expiration of the time within which an appeal therefrom might have been taken, the court in probate had exclusive jurisdiction over all matters of accounting by the administrator. But when that time had expired, and no opportunity remained by appeal or motion to obtain any relief against such decree, the powers of a court of equity were at once available, if the decree had been fraudulently obtained; and those powers became active, instead of latent, for the very reason that then the ordinary course of procedure within the limits of probate jurisdiction could not be used to afford the demanded relief. At the time when action No. 26366 was instituted, the court acquired jurisdiction over the subject-matter thereof. Unless there is some peculiar limitation in the nature of the case, whereby the usual chancery powers are curtailed, we are certain that an accounting may be made in that action, and a decree entered granting complete relief between the parties before the court.

[3] 3. Petitioner contends that there is a reason why the accounting must be had in the probate court, in this, that the proposed decree will necessarily reopen the administration of the estate, by setting aside the decree of settlement of account and final distribution; that a new decree, based upon a new report, notice, and hearing, will be required in that proceeding; that, perchance, additional claimants to some interest in the estate will be unearthed; that such additional claimants being not before the court in the action in which it is now proposed to take an accounting, Mr. Barber will thus be exposed to two several attacks upon his administration where only one should be required. Counsel for petitioner say:

> "If the present case proceeds to a judgment, Mr. Barber will have to pay to the plaintiffs the amount found due from him on an accounting. This will not protect him, because the probate court has not determined to whom the estate of James Ostergard is to go."

This contention is not sound. Barber can satisfy any decree entered against him by paying the required sum into the hands of the administratrix, who is a plaintiff in the action, and as such administratrix will be responsible for the money so received. The court in its findings has declared, presumably upon sufficient evidence, that the plaintiffs are the only heirs at law, persons, and parties interested in the estate. With all his years of acquaintance with this estate and its affairs, petitioner does not anywhere suggest a claim that this finding is untrue. He rests upon the bare possibility that some new claimant might appear when the administration of the estate is about to be closed, and so raises this cloud, less substantial than ether, as a wall to limit the jurisdiction of a court of equity. If there be some remaining unknown claimant, he has been represented by the administratrix as plaintiff in action No. 26366. If section 369 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies to such an action—and we think that it does—she was the only necessary plaintiff in that action.

> "An administrator may, in his own name, for the use and benefit of all parties interested in the estate, maintain actions on the bond of an executor, or of any former administrator of the same estate." Code Civ. Proc. § 1586.

There appears to be no good reason why the administrator may not, with like effect, under appropriate circumstances, maintain a suit for an accounting, against a former administrator.

For the foregoing reasons, an order has been entered denying the application for a peremptory writ, and directing that this proceeding be dismissed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

STANDING v. MOROSCO. (Civ. 1879.)

1. Frauds, statute of ⇨119(1), 126 — Estoppel to plead.

Every person being advised of the requirement of Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 1, as to contracts not to be performed within a year, the mere omission to insist that a writing be made, or reliance only on the unfulfilled promise of the other party to put the agreement in writing, is not sufficient to protect the party insisting on fulfillment of the contract, but he must be misled by the other to his prejudice through representation, by words or conduct, of lack of intention to resort to plea of the statute.

2. Frauds, statute of ⇨129(2) — Injury an element of estoppel to plead.

A party seeking to enforce a contract not to be performed within a year, and against whom the statute of frauds, Civ. Code, § 1624, is set up because the contract is not in writing, must show, in order to avail himself of the principle of part performance, not only that he was misled by the other party's implied or express representation that he would not rely on the statute, but also that plaintiff has altered his position, so that he will be made to suffer loss or unconscionable injury, if the plea of the statute is allowed to prevail.

3. Master and servant ⇨8(1)—Hiring of servant from week to week.

Where the compensation of an actor was to be paid at a weekly rate, the term of employment should be construed as being from week to week, even without reference to Civ. Code, § 2010, imposing such rule of construction on contracts for the employment of a "servant," defined by section 2009 to be one employed to render personal service otherwise than in the pursuit of an independent calling.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Servant.]

4. Frauds, statute of ⇨129(2)—Void contract not enforceable on ground of estoppel.

Actor, suing manager on contract of employment for a year, void under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 1, because not to be performed within a year and not in writing, on the facts alleged in the complaint, held not entitled to enforce such contract against the manager on any ground of estoppel through detriment to him (the actor) by removal of himself and family from New York to Los Angeles.

Action by Herbert Standing against Oliver Morosco. From judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Paul W. Schenck and Joseph Citron, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Scarborough & Bowen, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. The demurrer of defendant on general and special grounds was sustained to the third amended complaint of the plaintiff, and leave to further amend was denied. Judgment of dismissal followed, from which plaintiff appealed.

[1-3] The cause of action attempted to be alleged was one for damages sustained by the plaintiff through the refusal of the defendant to use and pay for the services of the plaintiff after having employed him as an actor to appear in plays produced by the defendant in his theater at Los Angeles. Plaintiff alleged that the engagement was for a period of one year. It is respondent's contention that the complaint in its allegations showed a case falling within the statute of frauds, and that plaintiff could not recover because the term of employment was not fixed in any writing. An agreement which is not to be performed within one year from the making thereof, in order to be valid, must be expressed in writing. Section 1624, Civ. Code, subd. 1. In order to avoid the effect of the statute, it is appellant's position that there was such part performance of the contract shown as to raise an estoppel against respondent, preventing him from questioning the validity of the contract or its enforceability. The rule referred to is an equitable one, which holds it to be a fraud under some circumstances to permit a party to make the defense that a contract is void or unenforceable because not in writing. Every person is advised of the plain requirement of the statute, and the mere omission to insist that a writing be made, or reliance only upon the unfulfilled promise of the other to put the agreement in writing, is not sufficient to protect the party insisting upon the fulfillment of the alleged contractual obligation. He must be misled by the other to his prejudice; not only must sufficient facts appear to show a representation (by words or conduct) on the part of the defendant that he did not intend to resort to a plea of the statute, but the other party must have so altered his position as that he would be made to suffer loss or unconscionable injury. If no such injury or loss is shown, the reason for the rule of estoppel fails and the excepted case is not established. See Browne on Statute of Frauds (5th Ed.) § 457; Glass v. Hulbert, 102 Mass. 24, 3 Am. Rep. 418—both cited in Seymour v. Oelrichs, 156 Cal. 782, 106 Pac. 88, 134 Am. St. Rep. 154.

The complaint of plaintiff shows: That in December, 1912, plaintiff was employed as an actor in the city of New York by defendant at the weekly salary of $200, and that he had been engaged for a certain play. (How long this play was to run, or for what period of time plaintiff was under contract at $200 per week, is not alleged.) It is alleged that defendant promised and agreed that, if plaintiff would reduce his salary to $150 per week and remove to Los Angeles, defendant would employ him for a period of one year; that defendant promised to execute a contract in writing employing plaintiff for one year; that plaintiff accepted the agreement, relying wholly upon the representations made, and "refused to accept other employment which had been tendered him, and otherwise injuriously changed his position and removed to the city of Los Angeles." (What the compensation or term of service would have been under the alleged employment offered, or how plaintiff's position was "injuriously changed," does not appear.) There is the further allegation that plaintiff's wife remained in New York, "as was agreed," and disposed of plaintiff's home and household furniture, and that two months after plaintiff came to Los Angeles his wife came also, and that the transportation was furnished to her by defendant; that on the 15th day of March, after plaintiff had been employed in Los Angeles by defendant for 2½ months at $150 per week, defendant discharged plaintiff and refused to accept his offered services, and refused to "complete the execution of the said contract of employment which the said defendant promised and agreed at various times to deliver to the plaintiff, and repudiated his promises and representations made to this plaintiff." It is further alleged that defendant knew that a detrimental change of position and situation on the part of plaintiff would be necessary in the event plaintiff relied on defendant's said promises and representations; that the said promises and representations of the defendant were made with the knowledge and with the intent that they should be relied on by plaintiff and the change in his position thereby induced. A written memorandum, alleged to have been signed by defendant in New York, was set forth. It was in the following words:

> "Mr. Standing:
> "I will pay you one hundred and fifty ($150.00) dollars per week in Los Angeles for the length of your engagement there, under the terms of the usual theatrical contract.
> "As you have reduced your salary with me, I will be very glad to pay the transportation and sleeper of Mrs. Standing two mo's hence to Los Angeles.
> "This will hold good only when we execute regular contract. [Signed] O. M.
> "Yours very truly, [Signed] O. Morosco."

The memorandum contains no words fixing the term of service. The compensation was to be paid at a weekly rate; hence the term should be construed as being from week to week. This without reference to section 2010, Civil Code, which imposes that rule of construction upon contracts for the employment of a "servant." A servant is defined in the preceding section to be one employed to render personal service "otherwise than in the pursuit of an independent calling," and one who remains entirely under the direction and control of his master. It is not alleged what "the terms of the usual theatrical contract" were; they may have related wholly to matters of detail. And so the writing does not help the complaint, except to show that the defendant agreed to execute "the usual theatrical contract." This promise would be of no more potency when expressed in writing than by parol.

[4] We cannot conclude that the case alleged is one showing that plaintiff is entitled to enforce his contract, which is admittedly within the statute of frauds. That he suffered detriment because of any action taken by him, and in reliance upon the promises of defendant, the facts alleged do not show. Neither monetary loss nor great personal inconvenience can be presumed to have resulted to him. His property in New York may have been disposed of at a profit; the other employment tendered him may have been undesirable, of short duration, or covered by small prospective compensation. The change of residence from New York to Los Angeles may have been an agreeable one. The contract that plaintiff relinquished under which he was receiving $200 per week, may have been one for weekly employment only. Assuming against the pleader, as we must, all facts reasonably consistent with the facts alleged, but adverse to the plaintiff, it cannot be said the complaint makes out a case entitling the plaintiff to the relief sought.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

43 Cal. App. 261

PRATT v. PRATT. (Civ. 2012.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 15, 1919.)

1. Executors and administrators 🔑305—Payment over of money to only heir.

In an action brought after the lapse of over 30 years to establish a claim against the estate of an administrator for money collected, but not accounted for in the administration, evidence held to justify the presumption that if any money was due to the legal heir represented by such administrator, it was paid over.

2. Executors and administrators 🔑305—Presumption of payment to heirs after lapse of time.

The presumption arising from the lapse of time that the administrator of a brother's estate had paid his father, the only heir, is not affected by noncompliance with Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1443, 1622, 1636, and 1665, requiring inventory and other steps in the administration.

3. Executors and administrators 🔑309—Presumption of true settlement after a lapse of time.

It is not illegal for an administrator, collecting money belonging to a decedent who was not indebted, to settle the estate with the heir without the formality of the ordinary administration of estates, and in a proceeding for accounting many years after it will be deemed not improbable he followed the shorter way.

4. Equity 🔑72(1) — What constitutes laches.

Laches, unlike the statute of limitations, is not a mere matter of time, but involves or implies some other circumstances rendering inequitable the enforcement of a claim, such as change of relations of the parties or condition of the property.

5. Executors and administrators 🔑473, 474(1)—Right of heir to compel settlement within statutory time.

On the administrator's failure to take the statutory steps in the administration, the heir may ask the aid of the court to compel him to settle the estate within the statutory time.

6. Trial 🔑82—Specific objection to evidence.

The certificate of authenticity and conformity to law contemplated by Civ. Code, § 1189, is not required to be attached to an acknowledgment to afford prima facie evidence of proper acknowledgment of an instrument executed in a foreign country, but in its absence other proof of compliance with the foreign law may be offered as provided by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1901 or 1902, and if not acknowledged according to the foreign law such specific objection should be made to put one to such proof upon its introduction in evidence.

7. Executors and administrators 🔑305—Evidence of payment of heir's claim after lapse of time.

In an action against the estate of a deceased administrator for accounting, evidence that the only parties that could have positive knowledge of the facts were dead, in connection with the circumstance that slight evidence was offered on both sides, held to justify the court's finding that, owing to the great lapse of time, evidence of nonpayment to the heir was not available.

8. Appeal and error 🔑949—Executors and administrators 🔑470—Lapse of time barring action against administrator in discretion of judge.

The length of time that will bar an action against a deceased administrator's estate on a claim based on nonpayment to heir depends upon the peculiar circumstances of the case, and a large discretion is confided to the trial judge, whose determination is binding on the appellate court, unless manifestly an injustice has been done.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

Action by William H. Pratt, as administrator of the estate of George Pratt, deceased, against Jennie S. Pratt, as administratrix of the estate of Samuel Pratt, deceased. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hawkins & Hawkins, of Modesto, for appellant.

J. M. Walthall, of Modesto, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. George Pratt died on the 12th day of June, 1876. On the first day of July following, his brother, Samuel Pratt, was appointed the administrator of his estate by the probate court of the county of Stanislaus. Samuel Pratt thereupon qualified as such administrator, and immediately collected from two certain banks the sum of $850, which the said George Pratt, deceased, had deposited therein, but he took no further steps in the administration of, nor did he account to, said estate for the moneys he received. On the 14th day of January, 1915, the said Samuel Pratt died, and on the 5th day of February, 1915, letters of administration of his estate were issued to respondent. On the 25th day of October, 1915, plaintiff was appointed administrator of the estate of said George Pratt, deceased, and he thereupon presented a claim against the estate of Samuel Pratt in favor of the estate of George Pratt for said money, with compound interest, the total amount of the claim being over $11,000. It was rejected by the said administratrix, and suit was immediately brought thereon. The said George Pratt left as his sole heir at law, his father, Samuel Pratt, Sr., who was and always remained a resident of England. He also left several brothers and sisters in that country and one brother, the plaintiff herein, who, after the death of George, the exact time not being shown, came to California. There is no positive evidence that said Samuel Pratt ever made any accounting or paid any money to his father, the only showing as to any money transactions between him and the other members of the family consisting of his sending a few small sums of money to his sisters in 1913 and 1914.

The grounds for the trial court's judgment in favor of the defendant are disclosed by the following findings:

> "The court finds that the said Samuel Pratt collected certain sums of money belonging to the estate of George Pratt, deceased, to wit, said sum of $850. That he never accounted to the said estate therefor, but that he received and held a power of attorney from his father, Samuel Pratt, Sr., who was the sole heir of said George Pratt, deceased, to collect said money and pay the same to his father, and the court finds that the presumption is that said Samuel Pratt accounted to said father for said money collected, and from said presumption the court finds that said money was paid by Samuel Pratt to his father, Samuel Pratt, Sr. That the said Samuel Pratt, Sr., deceased, did not die for 23 years after the death of said George Pratt, deceased, and that during said time had knowledge of the death of said George Pratt, deceased, and the appointment of said Samuel Pratt as administrator of his estate during all of said years. That almost immediately after the death of said George Pratt, deceased, the said father executed and forwarded to the said Samuel Pratt said power of attorney. That during no time during said time of said 38 years did said plaintiff make any demand upon said Samuel Pratt for an accounting as administrator of the estate of George Pratt, deceased. That no demand was made upon said Samuel Pratt for an accounting as such administrator during his lifetime. That there is on file in the estate of said George Pratt, deceased, no demand or request for an accounting by the said plaintiff, or any one else, filed during the lifetime of said Samuel Pratt.
> "That after the said letters were issued to the said Samuel Pratt, he took no further steps to settle said estate, and that no further steps have been taken in said estate, and that none were taken any time prior to the 14th day of January, 1915, at which date the said Samuel Pratt died, and that no inventory and appraisement were ever filed in said estate from the time of the appointment of the said Samuel Pratt as such administrator until his death, and that no claims have been filed against said estate.
> "That the evidence is insufficient to show that no money out of the money of said estate of George Pratt, deceased, was paid out for sickness or burial. That evidence cannot be obtained by reason of the long lapse of time between the death of said George Pratt, deceased, and the institution of this action to establish any allegation in the pleadings, for the reason that the said Samuel Pratt, the person having full knowledge of the matters, and all other persons from whom information can be had, are dead. That the evidence is insufficient to establish what disposition was made of any moneys or property belonging to said estate of George Pratt, deceased, which might have or did come into the hands of said Samuel Pratt as administrator of said estate. That the evidence is insufficient on account of the great lapse of time since the death of said George Pratt, deceased, and the appointment of Samuel Pratt as his administrator, and the death of all those possessed of the knowledge of such fact, to establish the allegation in the complaint that the money alleged to have been collected by said Samuel Pratt for or on account of the estate of George Pratt, deceased, was never paid to any of the heirs of the said George Pratt, nor expended for the benefit of the estate of George Pratt, nor paid to any other person in interest for the estate of George Pratt or otherwise, or that it was never paid out to any one else, or that it was used for the benefit of said Samuel Pratt.
> "The court, therefore, finds from the foregoing facts that said Samuel Pratt accounted to and paid over to said Samuel Pratt, Sr., the father of said George Pratt, deceased, and the sole heir of said George Pratt, deceased, all sums of money to which he, the said Samuel Pratt, Sr., would have become entitled to, or was entitled to from said estate."

As conclusions of law the court made the additional findings:

> "That said action is barred on account of the laches of the plaintiff, and each and all of the heirs of Samuel Pratt, Sr., in demanding an accounting of the said Samuel Pratt as administrator of the estate of George Pratt, deceased.
> "That the said claim of the plaintiff as administrator of the estate of George Pratt, deceased, against the estate of Samuel Pratt, deceased, is a stale claim, and not enforceable against the estate of Samuel Pratt, deceased.
> "That on account of the great lapse of time since the appointment of said Samuel Pratt as administrator of the estate of George Pratt, deceased, the said Samuel Pratt is presumed to have duly accounted to the heirs of said George Pratt and to have paid their distributive shares in said estate."

It thus appears that four considerations entered into the decision of the lower court, namely, the failure of proof on the part of plaintiff, the presumption of payment by Samuel Pratt to his father, the staleness of the claim, and the laches of said plaintiff and the other heirs of Samuel Pratt, Sr.

[1] As to the first, it may be said that the record herein furnishes a striking demonstration of the difficulty of proving a fact after the lapse of so many years. And in considering this phase of the case, it must be deemed a fair inference that the parties presented all the evidence that was available. We cannot say that there is an entire absence of evidence of the failure of Samuel Pratt to properly account with his father. However, it is meager, and, in view of the exclusive province of the trial judge, acting in place of a jury to determine the probative force of the testimony, we think no appellate court would be justified in holding that a fair consideration of the evidence should have led the lower court necessarily to the conclusion that Samuel Pratt had not paid his father all that the latter was entitled to. In regarding the point we must remember that, while it was shown, and the court found that Samuel Pratt had collected $850, there is no evidence whatsoever as to the expense of the last illness of George Pratt or of his funeral, or of the administrator's, or the attorney's fee in the administration of the estate. Respondent claims $350 to be a reasonable amount for these items. Ordinarily, such expenses would be equal to that amount. Of course, it is impossible to say positively how much, if anything, was paid out for any or all these matters, and in the absence of any evidence whatever as to this consideration, the trial court would necessarily be in doubt as to the amount left in the hands of Samuel Pratt to be paid over to his father.

But, assuming that the burden of proof was upon respondent to show how much, if anything, was paid for these purposes, and in the absence of any showing to that effect, the court was bound to charge the estate of Samuel Pratt, deceased, with the full amount, which was collected, the inquiry then arises whether the evidence was such that the court should have found that it was not paid to Samuel Pratt, Sr.

The testimony on this point in behalf of appellant was brief, and we may herein set it out. John Radley testified:

> That he had known Samuel Pratt since 1875. That they were working together in June, 1876. "Samuel Pratt's brother, George Pratt, got hurt, and Samuel Pratt got a message to come up, and he went. He returned the next day. He then told me that his brother was hurt very bad, and he didn't think he would live very long. Samuel Pratt was running the header for Mr. Wardrobe, and he said he came back to keep his job, and he said that he had hired a man to take care of his brother. His brother soon hereafter died."

After stating that Samuel told him that he collected over $700 from the Stockton and Merced banks belonging to his brother, George, the witness proceeded:

> "I once asked him if he had sent the money to his father, and he told me no, but he was going to. We had several conversations in regard to it. The last time I asked him about it he said he had put that money to interest so it would draw more money, and he would send it later on to his father. He told me he knew where he could buy 160 acres of land, and he asked my opinion. Afterwards he bought the land."

He also stated that Samuel Pratt never told him anything as to whether his father had made a demand for the money. Plaintiff offered in evidence a mortgage on certain lands in Stanislaus county, dated November 3, 1876, made by James Berry to Samuel Pratt to secure the sum of $1,850 and a satisfaction thereof on October 24, 1879. A deed from one Emeline Daggett to Samuel Pratt, reciting a consideration of $1,000 and dated October 12, 1878, was also introduced in evidence.

George Squire then testified:

> "I knew Samuel Pratt for 10 years, from 1873 to 1883. He told me that George Pratt asked him to collect certain moneys, $950 or $960, and send it to his father. The money was in the savings bank at Stockton and Merced. What I know about the matter was what I learned from being his nearest neighbor and what he told me himself. I know he had the money. He bought with it three quarter sections of the town of Oakdale. One of the quarters was purchased from me."

The trial court might well hesitate to find from the foregoing that Samuel Pratt violated his trust and withheld from his father any money to which he was entitled. The incidents concerning which the witnesses testified were held in the uncertain grasp of memory, reaching back nearly 40 years, and this circumstance was, of course, significant in the determination of their credibility. That after such a period of time they could state with accuracy what was said and done concerning a matter in which they had no personal interest might well challenge credulity. It is well to remember in this connection that the substitution or elimination of a single word of the conversation, or the addition of a slight incident, might present the consideration in an entirely erroneous light. Moreover, it is admitted that Samuel Pratt did not conceal from these witnesses the fact that he had money in his possession belonging to his father, and he expressed his intention of sending it to him. This, at least, tends in some degree under the circumstances to negative the theory of a dishonest purpose. In fact, the only incident detailed by the witnesses lending any support to the claim that Samuel Pratt failed to settle with his father was the purchase of land to which they testified. But as to this, in the first place, it may be said there is nothing to show that he did not have money of his own. That he had some is quite apparent, indeed, from the amount invested. That he also purchased the land with his own money would be presumed, were it not for the said testimony of George Squire that Samuel Pratt "bought with the money three quarter sections in the town of Oakdale." But this testimony is quite unsatisfactory in the absence of any further explanation, and it is more significant for its omissions than for what was stated. When the land was bought does not appear, the deed not being offered in evidence, nor how much was paid for it, nor how long it was retained by Samuel Pratt. Furthermore, the statement of the witness undoubtedly involved his mere opinion from what was told him by said Pratt and his neighbors. Again, his credibility was for the trial judge, and we cannot say that he was not justified in attaching little, if any, importance to this testimony.

But according it full credit, would the lower court be required to find from this circumstance that the money was not paid to Samuel Pratt, Sr.? We think not. A more just and reasonable inference would be that the son was moved by an honest and filial purpose to increase his father's possessions, that he was successful in his endeavor, and that in due time he transferred the money with its increase to its rightful owner. We repeat, the record contains some evidence, though slight, as we view it, of the dereliction of Samuel Pratt, Jr., in the premises, but not of sufficient probative force for us to hold that the lower court was bound to find that there was no payment. How would the case then stand, and, particularly, what presumption should be indulged? Clearly, we think, that Samuel Pratt, Jr., performed his official duty, and that he acted honestly and in good faith. A contrary presumption would impute to him, not only a violation of the obligations of his trust but an utter indifference to the compelling impulses that usually characterize such relation of kinship, and, more than that, the actual commission of a crime. This is not to be permitted, especially in view of the great number of years that had elapsed. The whole record, we are persuaded, justifies the presumption and the conclusion that, if any money was due, it was paid.

Many cases of similar import are found in the books, and some of them determine that the presumption of settlement should be indulged where it is not overcome by satisfactory evidence to the contrary. In Jones v. Jones, 91 Ind. 378, the right to a settlement had existed for about 20 years, and the court said:

> "This was a stale demand. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the presumption would be it had been paid. Even in cases of chancery jurisdiction, to which the statute of limitation is not a bar, a court of equity will presume that a stale demand has been paid. Parker v. Ash, 1 Vern. 256; Sturt v. Mellish, 2 Atk. 610; Higgins v. Crawford, 2 Versey, Jr., 571; Smith v. Calloway, 7 Blackf. 86; Stehman v. Crull, 26 Ind. 436."

[2] Nor do we think this presumption is affected by the provisions of the statute in relation to the administration of estates. It is true that the Code of Civil Procedure provides that an administrator must make and return to the court a true inventory and appraisement of the estate (section 1443); when required by the court or upon application of any person interested he must render an account (section 1622); upon the hearing of the accounts, the heirs may contest all matters included therein (section 1636); and final distribution of the estate can be had only upon final settlement of the accounts of the administrator, at which time the court ascertains who are the persons entitled to the estate (section 1665).

In view of the failure of Samuel Pratt, Jr., to comply with these various provisions of the statute it is contended that he had no right or authority to pay out any money to his father, and hence the presumption would be that he acted accordingly. But it must be remembered that the only parties interested in the regularity of the proceedings are the administrator himself, the creditors and the heirs, and each case must be considered in the light of its own peculiar facts. Herein there was no real estate, and we must take it for granted that there were no creditors, unless perhaps on account of the last illness and funeral expenses of the brother; that there was no controversy as to the heirs; that a relation of trust and confidence existed between the administrator and his father; that the son believed and had reason to believe that no question would ever arise as to the integrity of his conduct; that he knew how much his father was entitled to, and believed that he could, with safety, settle with him without incurring any further expenses of administration.

[3] It can hardly be said that it was his duty in any event to pursue the course indicated by said provisions of the Code. That would have been the more regular procedure, and it would have afforded him greater security, but if the facts existed as we have supposed, there was nothing unreasonable or illegal in his settling with his father without the formality of the ordinary administration of estates, and we deem it not improbable that he followed the shorter way. His determination was, of course, subject to review by the court at the instance of any interested party, but we must suppose that he felt amply protected, and that the heir was satisfied.

In the Estate of Willey, 140 Cal. 238, 73 Pac. 998, the executors, in an account rendered by them, sought to have themselves credited with certain advance payments made by them to certain beneficiaries named in the will, without obtaining an order of court, and it was held that the trial court properly retired those items from the account to be considered when the petition for distribution was heard. Therein was involved the construction of the terms of a will, and a controversy existed between the interested parties, which the court was called upon to review in the regular course of the administration of the estate. The executors could not by their action preclude the court from determining the controversy at the proper time and, manifestly, as it was stated:

> "When an executor undertakes to construe the provisions of a will or to make payments thereunder in anticipation of the decree of distribution he does so at his peril."

While the facts herein distinguish this case from that, still it may be conceded that, if said Samuel Pratt made a settlement with his father without an order of court, he did so "at his peril," and that he could not thereby forestall an accounting in court, yet under the circumstances of this case we deem it not an unreasonable inference that he did make such settlement, believing that he was justified in so doing, and we think it cannot be said that thereby he violated his duty or transgressed any provision of the law.

[4] The findings as to the staleness of the claim and the laches of plaintiff may be considered together, as they are closely related. Appellant is clearly right in the contention that laches, unlike the statute of limitations, is not a mere matter of time. It involves and implies some other circumstance, or circumstances that would render inequitable the enforcement of the claim. This may be a change in the relations of the parties or the condition of the property that is deemed a justification for the denial of any relief. It may be added, though, that the great lapse of time, especially if the claimant has knowledge of the existence of his right, is often held sufficient to create the presumption or implication of another fact of an equitable nature, and thus to justify a decision against the claimant. As to the character of this defense and the reasons for its recognition and enforcement, it is sufficient to refer to the carefully considered opinion written by Justice Hart and adopted by the Supreme Court in the case of Miller v. Ash, 156 Cal. 544, 105 Pac. 600.

To illustrate, however, the peculiar views of various courts concerning situations similar to the one before us, we may cite some instances of the application of the doctrine of "staleness" and "laches."

In Perkins v. Cartmell, 4 Har. 270, 42 Am. Dec. 753, a legacy was involved for which no demand had been made for 30 years, and the court said:

> "This suit is barred by lapse of time independently of the statute of limitations upon the presumption of payment and satisfaction, which presumption is not rebutted. The defense founded upon mere lapse of time and the staleness of the claim, in cases where no statute of limitation directly governs the case, is said by Judge Story (2 Com. on Eq. Jur. § 1520, p. 904) to be a defense peculiar to courts of equity. Upon general principles of their own, independently of the statutes of limitation, they have always discountenanced laches and neglect, and refused their aid to stale demands where the party has slept upon his right, or acquiesced for a great length of time. After a considerable lapse of time, they refuse to interfere, from considerations of public policy, and the difficulty of doing entire justice when the original transactions have become obscure by time and the evidence may be lost."

There was something like 20 years' delay in demanding an accounting in the case of Osborne v. O'Reilly, 43 N. J. Eq. 647, 12 Atl. 377, and the court said:

> "This great delay might have justified the court in dismissing the complainant's bill without looking at the merits. It certainly requires of the court to take care that the dangers of injustice, which always attend the investigation of facts long since transpired, are not overlooked, and that, before disturbing the status acquiesced in by both parties for so many years, very convincing evidence of the propriety of a change shall be adduced."

In Le Roy v. Bayard, 3 Bradf. Sur. (N. Y.) 228, it was held that the lapse of 29 years since the administration of the estate commenced is sufficient to excuse a formal inventory and account.

In Calhoun's Appeal, 39 Pa. 218, the court determined that since the devisee and her heirs knew for 25 years of the mismanagement of the estate, but required no accounting nor sought any relief, they were not entitled to the aid of a court of equity, after having so slept on their rights, the court saying, however:

> "Had there been ignorance of facts or legal disabilities to account for the extraordinary neglect of legal remedies on the part of the appellants, their inaction might have been excused, but nothing is shown or suggested by way of excuse."

In Gatewood v. Gatewood Adm'x, 70 S. W. 284, 10 years after the death of an administrator, suit was brought against his estate for a sum claimed to have been retained by him belonging to plaintiff, the claim being 30 years old, and it was held that the claim was stale and not enforceable in equity.

In Hill v. Hill, 70 N. J. Eq. 107, 62 Atl. 385, the court of chancery held that the lapse of 17 years was sufficient to bar an application for an accounting of an administrator. The court declared that—

> The complainants were "chargeable with notice that they were entitled to a prompt accounting, which is precisely the remedy which they are here asking. Not only do they not allege their ignorance in these matters, but it is quite impossible to believe that they were so far indifferent to their pecuniary rights as not to be informed that the time had arrived when they were entitled to receive from their father's estate more than they did actually receive, unless the same was absorbed in the payment of debts. * * * The complainants, then, are chargeable with resting on their rights for about 17 years without the least excuse whatever. In the meantime it is fair, I think, to infer that the vouchers and papers relating to the estate, which must have been in the hands of their uncle, John, have been lost or mislaid, and are not now available to the answering defendant."

In Re Henry's Estate, 198 Pa. 382, 48 Atl. 274, it was held that an application for an accounting of an administrator was barred by the lapse of 18 years, the court saying that the case was "made much stronger by reason of the death of the person whose liability to account is now asserted." Therein the court cites with approval the case of Gress' Appeal, 14 Pa. 463, wherein an account was refused after the lapse of 18 years, not because of either presumption of payment or settlement, but because it resulted "altogether from the unwarrantable negligence of the party to call for an account, without offering any sufficient reason accounting for the delay."

In Phillips v. Piney Coal Co., 53 W. Va. 543, 44 S. E. 774, 97 Am. St. Rep. 1040, a delay of 10 years was held sufficient to bar an action to reform a deed, and the court declared that a party who seeks to avoid the charge of laches in such case "should set forth in his bill specifically what were the impediments to an earlier prosecution of his claim; how he came to be so long ignorant of his rights, and the means used by the respondent to fraudulently keep him in ignorance; and how and when he first came to a knowledge of the matters alleged in his bill; otherwise the chancellor may justly refuse to consider his case, on his own showing, without inquiring whether there is a demurrer or formal plea of the statute of limitations contained in the answer."

In Preston v. Preston, 95 U. S. 200, 24 L. Ed. 494, the suit was brought 25 years after the right occurred, and the court said:

> "The delay of one to this extent in prosecuting his rights under a contract is, except under special circumstances not existing here, such laches as disentitled him to the aid of a court of equity."

In Pusey v. Gardner, 21 W. Va. 469, it was held that a court of equity will not set aside a deed, made by a daughter to her father immediately before her marriage, conveying her remainder in land, ~~in~~ which the father had a life estate, upon the ground of undue influence after an interval of 35 years and after the death of the father, though the claim of the daughter is not barred by the statute of limitations, where the case is not a clear one and there are no circumstances which sufficiently account for the delay. Therein was quoted the following statement from Kerr on Fraud and Mistake, § 305:

> "Lapse of time, when it does not operate as a positive statutory bar, operates in equity as an evidence of assent, acquiescence or waiver."

Other cases to the same effect are available, but they need not be cited.

Appellant finds comfort in certain other decisions, which he claims to be essentially in conflict with the cases upon which respondent relies. But it can hardly be said that they teach another doctrine, although some of them present a different view of the burden of proof. One of them is the carefully considered case of Depue v. Miller, 65 W. Va. 120, 64 S. E. 740, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 775, wherein the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals declared it to be a sound doctrine that—

> "Mere forbearance to compel rendition of a just debt or other right, the existence of which is clear beyond doubt, does not prejudice the party from whom it is due, and it is not inequitable to enforce rendition thereof after long delay; but if the length of time be long enough in itself, or with the aid of circumstances and conduct to satisfy the chancellor that the plaintiff had abandoned his right before he brought suit to enforce it, his demand will be regarded as stale and lost by laches."

However, the court held that the claim therein was fully proven by documentary evidence under circumstances not in any way operating to the prejudice of the defendants and tending to negative the inference of intent on the part of plaintiff to abandon or relinquish his right, and concluded that the delay in the assertion of the right for a period of less than 20 years would not bar relief.

In Glen v. Kimbrough, 58 N. C. 173, the action was held not to be barred by the lapse of 34 years, but the decision was based upon the ground that there was no representative of the estate against which the action could be brought. The court, however, recognized the rule to be that after the lapse of a long period of time a presumption will arise "of payment or satisfaction or abandonment; * * * but this presumption is one of fact, and is rebuttable, and where it appears it has not been settled, or where it appears there was no one with the legal power to make a settlement, the presumption is rebutted."

In the Estate of Fischer, 189 Pa. 179, 42 Atl. 8, the main question was as to the validity of a certain release, and it was justly held that the lapse of 17 years did not bar the claimant from seeking to avoid the effect of said release on the ground that she imperfectly understood English, did not comprehend the meaning of the terms employed, and was induced to execute it by reason of certain threats which were made. It was in view of these circumstances that the court said:

> "There is nothing therefore left to sustain the plea of laches but mere lapse of time; and that is clearly insufficient."

In Wilson v. McCarty, 55 Md. 277, it was held that the orphans' court had jurisdiction to compel a surviving executor to return assets of the estate or recover them where they could be recovered even where an account called final had been allowed and some 14 years had elapsed since such account. The court said this could be done within a reasonable time and "what is reasonable time depends upon the peculiar circumstances of each case, and the character of the correction to be made."

In Werborn v. Austin, 82 Ala. 498, 8 South. 280, the court recognized the presumption of payment from the lapse of 20 years in the case of a trust, but held that it was overcome by evidence to the contrary.

In Branch v. Hanrick, 70 Tex. 731, 8 S. W. 539, suit was brought August 11, 1885, against one who had been appointed administrator of an estate in 1867. The action was by one claiming a distributive share of the estate, who sought to compel an accounting by the administrator. The latter contended that by virtue of a certain statute of Texas the administration of the estate was conclusively presumed to have been closed, but the Supreme Court held that said statute had been repealed, and that it was proper to show that such settlement had not been made.

The important question in Re Sanderson, 74 Cal. 199, 15 Pac. 753, was whether the executor had been negligent as to the collection of a certain note, he having made no excuse for his failure. The matter was covered by section 1615 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing that—

> "No executor or administrator is accountable for any debts due to the decedent, if it appears that they remain uncollected without his fault."

The Supreme Court properly held that the statute of limitations did not run against the continuing trust of the executor, and that in case the debt was not collected the statute imposed upon him the burden of showing that it was without his fault.

In Bemmerly v. Woodward, 124 Cal. 568, 57 Pac. 561, the action was brought for an accounting about 11 years after the last account had been rendered. It is plain, though, that no final accounting could have been enforced against Woodward during the disability of the minors, the will containing this provision:

> "Whenever one of my children becomes of age or it shall be entitled to his or her share of the estate then remaining in the hands of my executors, and they are hereby directed and authorized to deliver up such child's portion by a fair division made of the lands then belonging to the estate."

It seems that the youngest minor reached his majority only about 1 year before the suit was brought. So, the case is hardly in point here. It is true that the court said:

> "To show an honest execution of the trust it was incumbent upon Woodward to show what he did with the money. In the absence of such showing, I think we must conclude that he did not use them for the estate."

That was a proper rule to apply under the peculiar circumstances of the case. Besides, the evidence and pleadings of the parties were such that the lower court could hardly have concluded otherwise than in favor of plaintiff, the serious question on appeal being as to the sufficiency of the finding of Woodward's neglect to invest the trust money and as to the amount of interest that should be charged against him.

[5] But appellant claims that the lower court without warrant assumed or found certain circumstances to exist which are essential to the support of the conclusion that plaintiff and the other heirs were chargeable with laches. One of these, namely, in relation to the fact that no inventory was filed nor other step taken in the administration of the estate, we have already noticed. We may add that it was undoubtedly the right of the heir to invoke the aid of the court to compel the administrator to settle the estate within the statutory ime.

[6] Again, it is claimed that the evidence does not show that the heirs had knowledge of the death of George Pratt and of the condition of his estate. The only heir, as we have seen, for 23 years was his father, and power of attorney from him to Samuel Pratt, Jr., dated July 11, 1876, was received in evidence, in which he referred to "my late son George Pratt, deceased." It is true that an objection was made by appellant to the introduction of this instrument on the ground that—

> "The deed and certificate are not in conformity with our statute, and that the execution is insufficient, and that the acknowledgment is not in the form required to prove the signature of a signer to a document, and that it is not duly authenticated as required by the laws of the state of California, and it does not show that it has ever been acted upon as genuine, and its custody has not been explained, and it does not appear that it has ever been treated as a genuine document."

The power of attorney purported to be executed in England and acknowledged before Cad. E. Palmer, a notary public of Barnstaple in the county of Devon, and had the seal of his office attached. This notary certified that Samuel Pratt appeared before him "and acknowledged the said letter of attorney to be his act." To this with the seal of his office was annexed the certificate of the United States consul at Bristol, England, "that the foregoing signature and seal are the true and genuine signature and seal of Cadwaloder Edwards Palmer, a notary public, residing at Barnstaple, in the county of Devon, England." Section 1189 of our Civil Code specifies the general form of the certificate of acknowledgment, but adds:

> "Provided, however, that any acknowledgment taken without this state in accordance with the laws of the place where the acknowledgment is made, shall be sufficient in this state; and provided further, that the certificate of the clerk of a court of record of the county or district where such acknowledgment is taken, that the officer certifying to the same is authorized by law so to do, and that the signature of said officer to such certificate is his true and genuine signature, and that such acknowledgment is taken in accordance with the laws of the place where the same is made, shall be prima facie evidence of the facts stated in the certificate of said clerk."

Since the instrument was executed in England it was therefore necessary that it be acknowledged according to the law of that country. But if it was not so acknowledged, or there was any claim to that effect, such specific objection should have been made. The only objection in that respect was that it was not acknowledged as required by the laws of this state. We may add that the certificate contemplated by said proviso is not required to be attached to the acknowledgment. If attached, it affords prima facie evidence of the proper acknowledgment of the instrument, but, in its absence, other evidence of compliance with the requirement of the foreign law may be offered as provided by sections 1901 or 1902 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Appellant should have made the specific objection to put the respondent to such proof.

But, regardless of this instrument, it is not to be supposed that the father for over 20 years was ignorant of the death of his son. The presumption that "things have happened according to the ordinary habits of life" would justify the inference that he made inquiry and ascertained from his son, Samuel, that George had passed away. As to William, the plaintiff, the evidence shows that he lived for some years in the county of Stanislaus, wherein the latter was appointed administrator of the estate of his brother, George, and it would be quite unreasonable to assume that he was ignorant of the situation. If he had not known of the death of George or of the father, of course, he would have so testified when he was on the stand. The fact that he was not interrogated concerning it is quite sufficient, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, to lead to the conclusion that he had such knowledge. We may add that his failure to excuse his delay of 15 years after the death of his father and nearly a year after the death of his brother, Samuel, before instituting this action is equally significant.

[7] It is also claimed that there is no sufficient support for the finding that, owing to the great lapse of time, evidence could not be secured as to the payment or nonpayment of the claim. It is true that counsel on both sides seemed somewhat reluctant to question the witnesses, the examination having been apparently very brief; but the evidence showed without doubt that the only parties who could have positive knowledge of the fact were dead, and this, considered with the circumstance that such slight evidence was offered on both sides, would appear to justify the court's conclusion that the evidence was not available.

[8] Speaking generally, we think it must be said that there is no hard and fast rule as to the length of time that would bar such an action as this, that much depends upon the peculiar circumstances of the case; that a large discretion is confided to the trial judge, and the disposition of an appellate court is and should be to respect that discretion and not to interfere with his conclusion unless manifestly an injustice has been done. When we recall all the circumstances to which we have adverted, we cannot say that the decision was wrong. The responsibility for determining the question rested with the court below, and we think we are bound by the findings. The judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

In re KING'S GUARDIANSHIP. (Civ. 2910.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 18, 1919.)

1. Insane persons ⚿33(2)—Affirmance of judgment on conflicting evidence.

Where the evidence was conflicting, and enough appeared to support the findings that the alleged incompetent was not incompetent and that no fraud had been practiced upon her by the son, with whom she was living, the judgment refusing to appoint guardian for her will be affirmed.

2. Appeal and error ⚿333 — Dismissal when case rendered moot.

Where the person for whom a guardian is sought to be appointed dies pending appeal from judgment refusing to appoint, the ordinary course would be to dismiss the appeal as moot.

3. Appeal and error ⚿803—Dismissal of same effect as affirmance.

The effect of dismissal of appeal from judgment refusing to appoint guardian for an alleged incompetent person, because she has died pending appeal, would be the same as an affirmance of the judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

In the matter of the guardianship of the person and estate of Phebe R. King, incompetent. From a judgment refusing to appoint a guardian for the alleged incompetent, there is an appeal. Affirmed.

N. Lindsay South and Everts & Ewing, all of Fresno, for appellant.

Harris & Harris, of Fresno, and C. W. Trabing, of Kingsburg, for respondent.

BRITTAIN, J. [1] While Phebe R. King, aged 83, was living with one of her sons, other children petitioned for the appointment of a guardian, alleging she was incompetent and subject to fraud, which they further alleged was being practiced upon her. The petition was denied. The appeal was based wholly on the claimed insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings that she was not incompetent and that no fraud had been practiced. The evidence was conflicting, and enough appeared to support the findings. In such a case the judgment will be affirmed. Matter of Daniels, 140 Cal. 335-337, 73 Pac. 1053.

[2, 3] When the matter was called for argument, a letter from counsel for the appellants was presented. It contained a statement that Mrs. King had died pending the appeal, and asked that the matter be submitted. If the statement in the letter was sufficient as a suggestion of death, the ordinary course would be to dismiss the appeal. The effect of such a dismissal would be the same as an affirmance of the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

43 Cal. App. 162

COMMERCIAL SECURITY CO. v. MODESTO DRUG CO. (Civ. 1956.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 5, 1919.)

1. Corporations ⚿414(2)—Notes by president, without approval of directors, enforceable.

Where president and general manager of corporation entered into contract, the sole purpose of which was to increase the volume of business of the corporation, which received the benefits of contract in consideration of which notes were given, and M., who with the president owned all but one share of stock, was informed of the contract on the day following, and made no protest, held, notes were enforceable against corporation by innocent purchaser for value before maturity, though there was no compliance with by-law requiring contracts to be approved by board of directors before president could sign.

2. Corporations ⚿405—Power of president of commercial corporation.

Where a corporation is organized for commercial purposes, its president or general manager, given immediate direction or control of its affairs, is its agent empowered, unless expressly restricted to the performance of certain specific acts, to do anything which naturally and ordinarily has to be done to carry out its paramount purposes.

3. Corporations ⚿400—Cannot deny liability on ground that officer had no authority.

Where officer of corporation is held out by such corporation to be possessed of power to perform all acts involved in its ordinary or usual business, the law will not permit third parties to suffer from such acts of such officer by plea of corporation that ostensible authority of such officer was not in fact conferred upon him.

4. Corporations ⚿425(4) — Estopped by accepting benefits of agreement by president.

Act of defendant corporation in accepting benefits of agreement made by its president and general manager amounted to a consent to all obligations thereof, and if it was not a ratification (Civ. Code, § 1589) defendant is nevertheless estopped from denying the binding force of the agreement.

5. Corporations ⚿465 — Consideration for note given by president.

Where president and general manager of corporation entered into contract, sole purpose of which was to increase volume of business of corporation, which received benefits of contract in consideration of which notes were given, and

M., who with the president owned all but one share of stock, was informed of the contract on the day following, and made no protest, and later purchased stock of the president, agreed to pay the note, and so informed payee, it cannot be contended that the notes were not supported by a consideration.

6. BILLS AND NOTES 🔑370—WANT OF CONSIDERATION DOES NOT AFFECT INNOCENT PURCHASER.

That notes were not supported by a consideration would be of no consequence, where plaintiff purchased them for value before maturity without knowledge of want of consideration; a written instrument itself being presumptive evidence of a consideration (Civ. Code, § 1614).

7. BILLS AND NOTES 🔑370—ENFORCEMENT OF PAYMENT BY INNOCENT PURCHASER.

Where purchaser of promissory note has no knowledge of any infirmity in the paper on the score of consideration, or of facts which, when followed with reasonable diligence, would lead to a discovery of such infirmity, and no fraud in the transaction resulting in the execution of the note is shown or claimed, the purchaser, if he has exchanged value for the note, will be protected as an innocent purchaser for a consideration, and may enforce payment (Civ. Code, § 3122).

8. BILLS AND NOTES 🔑342—CORPORATIONS 🔑432(12) — WANT OF CONSIDERATION NOT SHOWN BY ABSENCE OF SEAL.

That seal of defendant corporation was not affixed to notes is not conclusive evidence of a want of authority for the execution of the notes, nor a circumstance sufficient to create a suspicion that the notes were not wanting in consideration, or that their consideration had failed at the time of their transfer to plaintiff.

9. CORPORATIONS 🔑403 — NECESSITY FOR USE OF SEALS.

The seal of a corporation performs no further or greater function than to import prima facie verity of the due execution by the corporation of the written obligation.

10. EVIDENCE 🔑22(2) — COMMON KNOWLEDGE OF ABSENCE OF SEAL TO CONTRACTS OF CORPORATION.

It is a matter of common knowledge that many contracts made by corporations and unattested by their seals are enforced.

11. CORPORATIONS 🔑432(6) — PAROL EVIDENCE OF AUTHORITY TO MAKE CONTRACT.

The fact that an unsealed contract was duly authorized by a corporation may be shown by parol.

12. BILLS AND NOTES 🔑345—PURCHASER'S KNOWLEDGE OF INFIRMITY.

That plaintiff took a bill of sale of notes, with a guaranty from the payee that they would be paid, in lieu of the customary indorsement, does not constitute a circumstance sufficiently significant to justify a suspicion that the notes were not all that they on their face purported to be.

13. BILLS AND NOTES 🔑497(2)—BURDEN OF PROOF ON INNOCENT PURCHASER.

It is only where fraud or irregularity in the inception of a note is shown that burden is on purchaser to prove that he purchased before maturity, in good faith, for value, in the usual course of business; the rule not applying where there has been a valid consideration, which has failed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

Action by the Commercial Security Company against the Modesto Drug Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Scott Rex, of Stockton, for appellant.

Hawkins & Hawkins, of Modesto, for respondent.

HART, J. Plaintiff, an Illinois corporation, brought the action against defendant, a California corporation, to recover judgment on two promissory notes, each for $400, dated December 4, 1915, payable to the Partin Manufacturing Company, and alleged to have been duly indorsed and delivered by the payee to plaintiff prior to maturity. Judgment was in favor of defendant, from which judgment plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

The Modesto Drug Company was engaged in the retail drug business in the city of Modesto. The capital stock of the corporation, with the exception of one share, was owned equally by J. T. Skow and D. W. Morris. Mr. Skow was a pharmacist, and was president of the defendant corporation. He was called as a witness for plaintiff, and testified that he was manager of the business, discharged the general duties pertaining to the conduct of the business, bought and sold goods, and had charge of the advertising. In the fall of 1915 Skow had some negotiations with a representative of the Partin Manufacturing Company, of Memphis, Tenn., and on the 4th of December, 1915, a contract, in the form of a letter addressed to the Partin Manufacturing Company, was signed "Modesto Drug Co., Purchaser, by J. T. Skow," and also contained the signature of the salesman of the Partin Company. Portions of said contract are as follows:

"Please ship to us at your earliest convenience by freight f. o. b. factory the following goods as described below:

"Capital prize, 2 passenger roadster. The purchaser is to deliver to the winner in this trade campaign the winner's choice of the following automobiles: Partin-Palmer, Monroe, Chevrolet. * * *

"Second prize, one lady's bracelet watch. * * * Third prize, one three piece French Ivory toilet set." Fourth and fifth prizes were named and ten dinner sets. Advertising matter to be furnished by the Partin Company was specified.

"(1) The undersigned purchaser warrants that his sales for the past 12 months were $20,000. On this warranty of sales, Partin Manufacturing Company hereby agrees to increase the purchaser's sales and collections not less than $12,500 in the next 12 months. Partin Manufacturing Company agrees to refund 6 cents on every dollar the purchaser falls short of the $12,500 increase and agrees to send their bond to purchaser's bank in the sum of $800 to guarantee this agreement, guaranteed by some surety company or bank satisfactory to company. Partin Manufacturing Company reserves the right to increase the number of premiums, without cost to the purchaser, if in their opinion it is necessary to bring about the above guaranteed increase. Partin Manufacturing Company agrees to send a bank certificate of deposit to purchaser's bank for $400, to be held by purchaser's bank as a guaranty that Partin Manufacturing Company will deliver the automobile chosen by the winner in this campaign. Partin Manufacturing Company agrees to send a personal representative to assist in getting candidates and helping start this trade campaign."

There followed stipulations on the part of the purchaser as to the receipt of goods, making reports, etc. "The attached notes are executed and tendered in settlement of this order, and Partin Manufacturing Company is authorized to detach the same on acceptance of this order."

The notes in suit, attached to the above instrument, had been cut therefrom prior to the commencement of the action. The first note reads as follows:

"P. O. Modesto, Calif.
"$400.00. December 4, 1915.

"Five months after date for value received we promise to pay to the order of Partin Manufacturing Company, Incorporated, four hundred dollars —— Union Savings Bank, Modesto, California.

Modesto Drug Co.,
"By J. T. Skow."

[Eight cents revenue stamps attached.]

The second note was identical with the first, except that it was payable six months after date. Witness Skow testified that the representative of the Partin Company explained to him the methods by which the defendant's business was to be increased, consisting of advertising, voting contests for prizes, etc.

The court found that the defendant did not execute or deliver to the Partin Manufacturing Company the notes in question, or any promissory notes; that J. T. Skow made and delivered the notes in suit, but was not authorized by the Modesto Drug Company so to do, and had no power or authority to execute them; that the Modesto Drug Company never at any time ratified the execution of said notes, "and is not estopped from denying the execution of said written instruments by J. T. Skow"; that the consideration for said promissory notes and the contract above referred to has failed; that the Partin Manufacturing Company did not ship at any time to the Modesto Drug Company any automobile, or any of the other articles mentioned in said contract; "that the consideration for said obligation has fully failed"; that at the time plaintiff acquired said promissory notes "it had knowledge of facts sufficient to put it on guard, and to require it to make inquiry as to the authority of J. T. Skow to execute said written instruments, and as to the consideration given therefor."

Appellant contends that the notes were the notes of the defendant corporation; that, if they were executed without authority, the execution and delivery of the notes was ratified by defendant; and that appellant is a bona fide purchaser of the notes.

The by-laws of the defendant corporation were introduced in evidence. Article IV thereof provided:

"The directors shall have power * * * to incur indebtedness. * * * The terms and amount of such indebtedness shall be entered on the minutes of the board, and the note or obligation given for the same, signed officially by the president and secretary, shall be binding on the corporation. * * * The president * * * shall sign * * * all contracts and other instruments of writing which have been first approved by the board of directors."

On April 7, 1916, while the advertising and voting contest was still being carried on, Skow sold all his shares of the capital stock of the defendant corporation to Morris, who signed an instrument stating:

"I do hereby agree to pay all of the outstanding bills and accounts of the Modesto Drug Company, and to save and hold harmless the said J. T. Skow from all indebtedness now due or owing, including current bills, notes, and notes for advertising."

Witness Skow testified that the words "notes for advertising" in said instrument referred to the notes in suit. On the same day Morris wrote the Partin Manufacturing Company the following letter:

"I have purchased all the interest of J. T. Skow in the Modesto Drug Company, from which company you hold two notes. I have agreed with Mr. Skow to pay all notes due from the corporation, and he desires me to let you know of this fact, and I hereby notify you that I will pay said notes."

Skow testified that before he signed the notes he discussed the matter with Morris and that the latter said:

"Well, if you think it is a good thing, go ahead."

Morris denied having made this statement.

The deposition of Roland A. Crandall, president of the plaintiff corporation, was read in evidence. He deposed that, in the month of January, 1916, he purchased for the plaintiff, from the Partin Manufacturing Company, certain notes, including those in suit, paying therefor 92.71 per cent. of their face value.

D. W. Morris, called as a witness for the defendant, testified that he and Skow owned, in an equal amount, all the shares of the stock of the defendant, except one share, which was in the name of a lawyer by the name of J. M. Walthall; that Skow, who was president of defendant, was a pharmacist by profession, and had at all times active management of the business of the corporation, buying the goods and making all contracts for and on behalf of the defendant; that he (Morris) spent practically all of his time in and about the store of the defendant, and acted with Skow in an advisory capacity with respect to the business. Morris denied the statement of Skow that the latter, before the making of the contract with the Partin Company, discussed with him the proposition involving said contract, but admitted that Skow did tell him of the making of said contract the next day after it was entered into and executed. He further testified that the board of directors of defendant never held a meeting for the purpose of authorizing Skow to sign the notes; that the Partin Manufacturing Company did not furnish to the winner of the contest an automobile, and that he (witness) gave the winner a check for $545 in lieu thereof; that one of the prizes, an ivory set, was so inferior that witness replaced it with another set taken from the stock in the store; that some of the sets of dishes were sent to the defendant; that the certificate of deposit and bond mentioned in the contract were never furnished by the Partin Company. On cross-examination Morris testified that he thought there was some delay on the part of the Partin Company in getting the advertising scheme started, but—

> "the matter was in his [Skow's] hands. He had signed the contract with them, and I paid very little attention to it. Q. In your conversation with Mr. Skow, when this subject was under discussion, did he state to you or inform you in any way of the extent of the financial obligation that the company had incurred or was supposed to have incurred—that is, the amount of it? A. Yes, sir. Q. And so you knew that there was outstanding what was or what might be a financial obligation to this Partin Manufacturing Company to the extent of $800? A. Yes; he told me that at the time he signed the contract. * * * Q. He did give you to understand that payment would have to be made in the course of a few months? A. I suppose he did. He told me he had the time extended. He had had the contract changed. Q. Yes; the printed contract, he gave you to understand, had been changed at his instance? A. Yes. Q. Did he state to you or inform you at that time that the obligation was evidenced in the form of a note or notes? A. He told me that he had signed the notes."

Morris testified that he addressed the following letter to the Partin Manufacturing Company, at Memphis, Tenn., under date of January 12, 1916, and mailed the same on said date:

> "Dear Sirs: We have not heard anything from you regarding the starting the contest. We wish to get action on it as soon as possible, as some of our competitors have heard of what we are going to do. We have a tentative list of candidates ready for you."

The said letter was signed, "Modesto Drug Co., by D. W. Morris." The witness said that the Partin Company forwarded to defendant some of the prizes they agreed to provide it with, but that in quality they did not measure up to the agreement. He also testified that the company had sent one of its employés (a woman) to Modesto to assist Skow in prosecuting the contest; that that party accompanied Skow through the country about Modesto and assisted him in "stirring up" an enthusiastic interest among the people in the contest; that later a man by the name of Prindville was sent to Modesto by the Partin Company to assist in making the contest a success, but that he remained in Modesto but a few hours. On the 25th day of April, 1916, a letter signed "Modesto Drug Co., by D. W. Morris," was addressed and mailed by Morris to the Partin Company, and in that letter Morris stated that "we have not had a word from you regarding the contest for a long time," and further said that—

> "Mr. Skow, who is no longer connected with the Modesto Drug Company, and who has been actively engaged in the conduct of the campaign, informs us that he wrote you some three weeks ago that some action would be necessary to put some life into the campaign. The time is now getting short and some quick action is necessary. * * * Expecting to hear from you at once, we are," etc.

To that letter the Partin Company replied, by letter under date of May 14, 1916, and after therein acknowledging receipt of Morris' letter of April 25th and stating that "we note that you state that Mr. Skow is no longer connected with your firm," the letter proceeded, in part:

> "We would be glad to have you send the names and addresses of your candidates who are in the campaign, and also let us know about how active each candidate is, and we will be glad to write them a special letter. We would be glad to have you do a little personal work with your candidates, and explain to them that the close of the campaign is drawing near and that some one must get busy and win this car. If you think that by offering a vacuum cleaner to the public at large—to the one estimating the nearest correct amount of the votes cast the last month in your campaign, would help the campaign, we will be glad to express you one of these vacuum cleaners immediately. In the meantime, we hope your campaign will show a great improvement, and we would like to hear from you by return mail."

On further cross-examination, Morris repeated that, at the time, he purchased Skow's stock in the defendant, he and Skow discussed between them the notes executed and delivered to the Partin Company by the defendant or Skow. "Q. And it was in view of the existence of those two outstanding notes," counsel for the plaintiff asked Morris, "that at that time you executed and delivered to Mr. Skow those two papers which have been offered in evidence here this morning by me, marked Plaintiff's Exhibits 1 and 2, which your counsel showed you here? A. Yes." (The exhibits, 1 and 2, referred to, were the agreement between Skow and Morris setting forth the consideration and conditions for the sale of the former's stock to the latter, and the letter written by Morris to the Partin Company, after said sale, informing said company that he had assumed liability for the payment of the notes in question.)

The above statement of the testimony and of the undisputed facts, to which may be added the further statement that it appears in the evidence that the increase of sales during the time the contest was in progress amounted to about $2,500, is sufficient for the purposes of the consideration and decision of the points involved in this appeal.

The learned trial judge, in deciding the case, filed a written opinion, which has been incorporated in the record here. Therein he based the decision of the controversy upon the grounds: (1) That the notes were not those of the defendant; (2) that there was a failure of consideration for the notes; and in this particular connection it is argued both in the judge's opinion and in the respondent's brief that the plaintiff, at the time of purchasing the notes, had knowledge of facts sufficient to put it upon inquiry as to the consideration.

[1] The argument advanced in support of the proposition first above stated is that, since the notes were made and delivered by Skow without any formal action of the board of directors of the defendant authorizing the notes to be issued and delivered, or the contract upon which they were made and delivered to be executed, the notes cannot be held to be legal obligations of the defendant. The evidence shows—indeed, it is admitted—that at the time the transaction constituting the basis of this litigation took place Skow and Morris were practically the defendant—that is, the corporation itself. They owned all the stock but one single share, which, as is often so with so-called "close corporations," was put in the name of attorney Walthall, undoubtedly for the sole working purposes of the corporation. There can be absolutely no doubt that, when making the contract and the notes in question, Skow was not acting for himself individually, except in so far as he was interested in the defendant as a stockholder, but was acting as agent of the defendant in his capacity as its president and manager. The sole purpose of the contract was, obviously, to build up or increase the volume of the business of the defendant, and not to benefit a business in which he was interested other than as a stockholder in the defendant corporation. As a matter of fact, and to all practical intents and purposes, Skow and Morris were partners in the business of the defendant, although in legal contemplation they were, under the name of the defendant, a corporation; and the situation, in its legal aspect, was in no way changed by the act of Morris in purchasing the stock of Skow, except in the fact that Morris thus himself practically became the corporation. The corporation was a mere instrumentality adopted originally by Skow and Morris, and perpetuated by the latter when he became the sole owner of all the stock therein, through which they could the more conveniently transact their business.

The defendant, as we have shown, received the benefits, whatever they were, flowing from the agreement in consideration of which the notes were given, and Morris was informed by Skow of the making of the agreement and of the terms thereof, according to his own testimony, the day following that upon which the agreement was made. He made no protest or objection against the agreement, or the making thereof by Skow, and thus he approved and ratified the act of Skow, the president and manager of the defendant, in making the agreement. Here, then, we have a case where a party, serving in the dual capacity of president and manager of what well may be termed a "one-man" corporation, has made an agreement for and in behalf and in the name of the corporation, undoubtedly believing in good faith that in so doing he was acting as the agent of said corporation, duly authorized to make such an agreement, and where said agreement or the act of making it has been tacitly, or by quiescence, acquiesced in by a party who, with said president and manager, owns practically all the stock of the corporation, after he has been put in possession by said manager of knowledge of the making of the agreement and of its terms and object, and where the corporation has received certain of the benefits flowing from said agreement.

The question may be asked: May a corporation, whose capital stock is entirely owned, practically, by two persons, one of whom, being in the active management of the business of such corporation, has made an agreement for the benefit of the corporation, and the other of whom has virtually indorsed or by conduct ratified it, refuse performance of its obligations under the agreement? Having received the benefits, or some of them, of an agreement obviously made for it and for its benefit (and ostensibly by it), with the consent and concurrence of the owners of substantially all its capital stock, will a corporation be permitted to dodge or escape liability for obligations arising upon such agreement by the plea that the contract was made without observance of the formal requisites or prerequisites prescribed by its charter or by-laws with respect to the making of contracts? The answer to these questions may be found in the principles of equity and justice applicable to such a case as we have here. Indeed, it would be deemed a hard rule, or one of more than mere unsubstantial technical texture, if the courts could not consistently break through it and so hold that a corporation is bound by contract made under such circumstances as characterized the making of the contract in the present case.

But the books are replete with cases holding that, where it appears that a corporation is but the instrumentality through which an individual for convenience transacts a particular kind of business, "not only equity, looking through form to substance, but the law itself, would hold such a corporation bound [where contracts are made under its name under circumstances similar to those here] as the owner of the corporation might be bound, or, conversely, hold the owner bound by acts which bound his corporation." Llewellyn Iron Works v. Abbott Kinney Co., 172 Cal. 210, 214, 155 Pac. 986, 987, and the many cases cited therein. It is hardly necessary to do more herein than to refer to the Llewellyn-Abbott Case and the many cases cited therein as supporting that proposition. It will suffice to say that in those cases it is held that, where an obligation is created by the duly authorized agent of a corporation for such corporation, where most, if not all, of its capital stock is held and owned by one person, and the obligation is one the making of which is within the corporate powers of the corporation, and the act of making it is therefore not ultra vires, the corporation will be held bound to and liable for the proper execution of the terms of the obligation, notwithstanding that it may be shown that the act of making the agreement was not in strict accord with the adopted rules or the by-laws of the corporation with respect to such matters.

[2, 3] But there is another rule, applicable to all corporations, and which we think has application to the present case, which is stated in Stevens v. Selma Fruit Co., Inc., 18 Cal. App. 242, 250, 123 Pac. 212, 215, as follows:

> "There is in the record before us no evidence from which it appears that any particular officer of the defendant was specifically authorized by the board of directors to execute promissory notes for and on its behalf. The very nature of commercial corporations, of which the defendant is a type, requires that the authority to transact their usual or ordinary business affairs shall be vested in some one or more persons. A corporation is an artificial person, and, where it is organized for commercial purposes, its president or general manager, or whoever may be given immediate direction or control of its affairs, is its agent, empowered, unless expressly restricted to the performance of certain specified acts, to do anything which naturally and ordinarily has to be done to carry out its paramount purposes; and where authority to do some particular act, which is included in the ordinary affairs of such a corporation, is not specifically given to any particular officer, and the performance of which is not specifically inhibited to the person authorized to manage its affairs generally, the intention of the board of directors to confer upon the person or officer in whom is vested the immediate direction or control or management of the affairs of such corporation to perform such particular act will be inferred from the general authority so given. And where, as was clearly the case here, an officer of a corporation is held out by such corporation to be possessed of power to perform all acts involved in its ordinary or usual business, the law will not permit third parties to suffer from such acts of such officer by the plea of the corporation that the ostensible authority of such officer was not in fact conferred upon him. In Brown v. Crown Gold Milling Co., 150 Cal. 376, 387, 89 Pac. 87, 91, it is said:

> "The majority of the board having knowledge of the facts, it was not necessary, to conclude the company defendant in favor of plaintiff, that his employment should be ratified at a regular meeting of the board. It was sufficient that the majority of the board individually were advised of the terms of the employment of plaintiff by Mr. Doe, and took no measures to disaffirm as directors that employment. In Doerr v. Fandango Lumber Co., 31 Cal. App. 318, 325, 160 Pac. 406, 409, this court said:

> "Indeed, the proposition that ratification of a contract, the making of which is unauthorized by one of the principals, may be effectuated by a recognition, howsoever informally, of the agreement and the obligations arising by virtue thereof, is elementary. A familiar and common application of this doctrine is to be found in those cases where an agent, in making a contract for his principal, transcends the scope of his authority as such, and the principal, after the contract has been made, although not at that time legally bound by its terms, does some act recognizing the validity of the agreement—as, for instance, accepting some of the benefits or assuming some of the burdens thereof. In such case, quite obviously, the principal will be deemed from his acquiescence in the contract to have ratified the unauthorized act of his agent, and will be held to its terms and conditions, notwithstanding that he has not in express language or in a formal manner ratified the contract. The case here comes within the principle thus referred to. The giving of the mortgage was not an ultra vires act, and there is no claim that it was. If the act involved the making of an invalid contract, it was, as shown, merely because of the manner in which it was attempted to perform the act or make the contract, and, like any other contract, it is capable of being ratified by conduct or a recognition in some manner of the obligation."

Morris himself testified, as seen, that Skow was the president of the corporation and the manager of it and its business, that he (Morris) knew nothing of the drug business, or of the profession of pharmacist, and that the entire management of the concern in all its aspects was in the hands of Skow, although he (Morris) was about the establishment much of the time and acted with Skow in an advisory capacity. Thus it is clear that the corporation was not only under the immediate control and management of Skow, but that he was held out as such to the public, with authority to transact for the corporation all the usual and ordinary business matters coming within its purposes and objects. Certainly it will not be denied that Skow possessed general authority to transact and carry out such business matters of the defendant as in his judgment would tend to increase the volume of the business of the corporation and thereby augment its income and profits.

[4] It is not material to inquire whether the acceptance of benefits arising from an obligation the making of which was in excess of the authority of the party receiving and accepting such benefits amounts to a ratification or has the effect merely of creating an estoppel whereby the acceptor will be precluded from setting up the plea of want of authority to make the obligation to relieve himself of the burden imposed upon him by the obligation. The legal effect of either ratification or estoppel in such a case is precisely the same. Our Civil Code (section 1589) declares in effect that in such case there is a ratification. But, be that as it may, if we were to be driven from the position in this case to which the facts firmly affix us, viz.: That the transaction culminating in the execution of the agreement and the notes concerned here represents practically the corporate act of the defendants, it being, admittedly, a transaction within the scope of its corporate powers—we would, nevertheless, find ourselves buttressed by unimpeachable reason in holding that the act of the defendant in accepting the benefits of the agreement amounted to a consent to all the obligations thereof, and if, therefore, there was not thereby in law a ratification of the transaction, the defendant is, by its act of accepting the benefits of the obligation, estopped from denying the binding force thereof upon it. In other words, an estoppel by conduct, or in pais by reason of the conduct of the defendant in accepting the benefits of the agreement for which the notes were given, was raised against the right of the defendant to object to the enforcement of the notes on the ground that their execution and delivery had not been duly authorized by the defendant. Curtin v. Salmon River, etc., Co., 141 Cal. 308, 312, 74 Pac. 851, 99 Am. St. Rep. 75, and cases cited therein; and, also, Doerr v. Fandango Lumber Co., 31 Cal. App. 318, 324, et seq., 160 Pac. 406, supra; McQuaide v. Enterprise Brewing Co., 14 Cal. App. 315, 318, 111 Pac. 927; Standard Oil Co. v. Slye, 164 Cal. 435, 446, 129 Pac. 589.

We should now pay brief attention to the conduct of Morris with respect to the transaction involved herein at and after the time he purchased the stock of Skow and thus practically became the sole owner of the corporation. We have shown that Morris admitted that Skow told him of the fact of entering into the agreement and of the terms thereof the day following that upon which the transaction was completed, and that Morris made no objection or protest of any kind against the transaction, being evidently accustomed to defer, as to such matters, to the judgment of Skow, who was the active manager of the defendant. We now again call attention to the conditions as set forth in their agreement, upon which the sale of Skow's stock to Morris was made. In that agreement, Morris expressly assumed liability for all the outstanding debts and obligations of the defendant, including the notes in question. Not only that, but he later addressed to the Partin Company a letter in which he stated that he had purchased Skow's stock and that he had assumed liability for the payment of the notes in suit. When that letter was written he was, as stated, the sole owner of practically all the stock of the defendant. Can it for a moment be doubted from all this that Morris expressly affirmed and confirmed, not alone for himself, but for his corporation, the agreement made by Skow, for the corporation, and all its terms? He not only expressly recognized the agreement as a valid and legal one in all respects, but likewise assumed the obligations created thereby; and it would amount to a mere play upon words to construe the expressions contained in his letter to the Partin Company as evidencing an intention to recognize and confirm the agreement as anything other than what it purports to be, viz.: The agreement of the defendant, made for and on its behalf for the sole benefit of its business.

[5-7] The foregoing is a sufficient reply to the contention that the notes in suit were not supported by a consideration, although, so far as the plaintiff is concerned, it would be a matter of no consequence whether there was in point of fact a consideration supporting the notes, if it purchased the notes for value without knowledge of such want of consideration at the time of such purchase. A written instrument is itself presumptive evidence of a consideration (Civil Code, § 1614), and where there is not in the possession of a purchaser of a promissory note knowledge of any infirmity in the paper on the score of consideration, or of facts, which, when followed with reasonable diligence, would lead to the discovery of such infirmity, and no fraud in the transaction resulting in the execution of the note is shown or claimed, the purchaser, if he has exchanged value for the note, will be protected as an innocent purchaser for a consideration, and so may enforce payment thereof. Civil Code, § 3122; Kunz v. Cal. Trona Co., 169 Cal. 348, 146 Pac. 883; Pac. Portland Cement Co. v. Reinecke, 30 Cal. App. 501, 158 Pac. 1041; Henry v. Sutro, 28 Cal. App. 698, 153 Pac. 972; Jones v. Evans, 6 Cal. App. 88, 91 Pac. 532; Eames v. Crosier, 101 Cal. 260, 35 Pac. 873.

But there is really no claim made that the notes in question were not executed and delivered to the Partin Company for a sufficient consideration. It is the contention, though, and the court so found, that there was a failure of consideration, and that, when the plaintiff purchased the notes, it had knowledge of facts sufficient to put it on inquiry as to the consideration, and thus have had disclosed to it, not only that the consideration for the notes had failed, but that the obligations were not those of the defendant corporation. The facts referred to are that the notes in question did not bear the corporate seal of the defendant, that Skow did not sign the contract by or under his official designation, and that the plaintiff, instead of taking the notes by the usual or customary indorsement in the case of the transfer of title to negotiable instruments required a bill of sale of them, with a guaranty that they would be paid. The fact of the absence of the seal, it is contended, was sufficient to inspire in the plaintiff distrust as to the legal integrity of the obligations, and the circumstance last mentioned, it is said, negatives the theory that the plaintiff took the notes in good faith. These propositions, for reasons to be given, are not important to the decision of this case, but they are vigorously pressed, and we will briefly notice them.

[8] We attach no significance to the fact that to the notes the seal of the defendant was not affixed. The fact is neither conclusive evidence of a want of authority for the execution of the notes for the corporation, nor a circumstance sufficient to create even a suspicion that the notes were not wanting in a consideration, or that their consideration had failed at the time of their transfer to the plaintiff.

[9-11] It is now the rule, generally if not universally, recognized and followed throughout the American states as well as in England, that corporations of all kinds may be bound by their contracts, not under their seals. The rule in former times was (as the cases show) that a corporation could not express its will, or enter into a contract, except through an instrument under seal, executed by a duly constituted agent. Thompson on Corporations (2d Ed.) § 1920. The modern and by far the more sensible rule is, however, that the seal of a corporation itself performs no further or greater function than to import prima facie verity of the due execution by the corporation of written obligations—that is, it merely stands as prima facie evidence that the contracts made by corporations were executed by their authority—and no longer is a seal held to be indispensable to the execution of valid contracts by corporations. It is a matter of common knowledge that many contracts made by corporations and unattested by their seals are enforced. The books are full of such cases. The fact that such a contract was duly authorized by a corporation may be shown by parol. There is, therefore, nothing in the fact that a contract purporting to be that of a corporation is not authenticated or attested by its seal which would necessarily justify even a suspicion that it was not executed by authority of the corporation.

[12] Nor, in our opinion, does the fact that the plaintiff took a bill of sale of the notes, with a guaranty from the Partin Company that they would be paid, in lieu of the customary indorsement in such a case, constitute a circumstance sufficiently significant to justify a suspicion that the notes were not all that they on their face purported to be. We therefore do not concur in the view of the trial judge that that fact negatives the theory that the plaintiff took the notes "in due course of business, before maturity, for value, and without notice." The plaintiff, it appears, is in the business of buying negotiable paper, and it may be that it is its uniform custom and policy to require a bill of sale of notes purchased by it, with a guaranty that the obligations are valid and will be paid. Indeed, one might acquire the ownership of such obligations without knowledge of whether the makers thereof were solvent and able to meet them, and in such case it would only be good business judgment to demand a guaranty, or some protection, against loss in case they proved worthless obligations for any reason. We do not know what actuated the plaintiff in thus fortifying itself against loss in the transaction, but we think it clear that that circumstance itself was not such as to indicate that the plaintiff was not an innocent purchaser of the notes for value.

But, as above stated, the matter just considered we do not deem of any particular consequence, so far as the decision here is concerned. The proposition that the notes were not those of the defendant we disposed of in the outset of this discussion, and nothing further need be said of it, although we may well add to what we have already said on that question that, even if the plaintiff had made an inquiry into the question of the validity of the notes, the result would only have been to discover that Skow was the president and the manager of the defendant; that, acting as such, he made the agreement and the notes for defendant, and for the sole benefit of its business, and that the agreement, and the obligations arising thereupon against the defendant, were approved by Morris, who, with Skow, owned practically the entire capital stock of the defendant; that the defendant's business increased to some extent in volume as a result of the action of the Partin Company under the agreement. Knowledge of these facts by the plaintiff, when it bought the notes, would not, of course, have made it any the less an innocent purchaser for value.

With regard to the matter of the alleged failure of consideration, as to which it is claimed that the plaintiff, when it bought the notes, had knowledge of facts sufficient to put it upon inquiry to ascertain whether the consideration had then failed, it is to be said that there is no evidence in the record showing or tending to show that there was such failure.

The evidence, without conflict, shows that the plaintiff purchased and became the owner of the notes before their maturity, and before the contract between the defendant and the Partin Company had been completed. In other words, the plaintiff bought the notes before the purpose of the agreement was accomplished, and while the steps essential to the accomplishment of that purpose were still in progress. If, then, there was a failure of consideration for the notes, it was, of course, in the failure of the Partin Company to comply with the terms of the contract between it and the defendant, and therefore such failure of consideration occurred, if at all, long after the plaintiff became the owner of the notes. The correspondence between Morris and the Partin Company, in which the former complained to the latter of its inertness in the matter of prosecuting the prize contest, took place subsequently to the time at which the plaintiff bought the notes. In brief, as above stated, the contract, in consideration of which the notes were issued, was still in process of execution on the part of the Partin Company at the time the plaintiff purchased the notes, and there was not then, nor could there have been, either a total or even partial failure of consideration. Of this fact it may be that the plaintiff was aware at the time it bought the notes; but if it was without knowledge of the fact, and for any reason had prosecuted an investigation to determine the legal status of the notes, it would thus have readily learned that fact, and still have learned no valid reason why it should not have purchased the notes and acquired title thereto by the transfer free from any infirmity, so far as consideration was concerned.

The cases cited by respondent, of which there are many, we have examined and found to be very different from this case as to the facts. For instance, in the case of Burns v. Bauer, 174 Pac. 346, fraud was charged, proved, and found as characterizing the very transaction eventuating in the execution and delivery of the note sued on therein; and not only was that true, but the court found upon ample evidence that the plaintiff, a lawyer, who was the assignee of the note, was familiar with facts extrinsic to the note itself, which were of a most suspicious character, and which, if followed up with reasonable diligence, would have disclosed that the note was procured by the corporation to which it was given through false and fraudulent representations. In fact, it was found that the attorney for the plaintiff was the secretary of the corporation in whose favor the note was executed at the time the note was procured, and it was further found that plaintiff, while making inquiry as to the ability of the maker to pay the note (and it was also found by the court that the maker was amply able to pay it), made no inquiry as to whether said note was valid.

[13] And, in this connection, we may add, though we conceive it to be of no special importance in view of the views of the transaction involved herein we have expressed, that it is only where fraud or illegality in the inception of a promissory note is shown that the burden is upon the purchaser of such an obligation to prove that he purchased the note before maturity, in good faith, for value, in the usual course of business. The rule, indeed, applies to a case only where there has been an illegal consideration, and not where there has been a valid consideration, and it has failed. This is clearly shown by the reason upon which the rule proceeds, as it is formulated by the authorities, viz.:

> "The presumption is (in case of fraud or duress, etc., in the procurement of the note) that he who has been guilty will part with the note for the purpose of enabling some third party to recover upon it for his benefit; and such presumption operates against the holder, and it devolves upon him to show that he gave value for it. So where the note was given for a distinctly illegal consideration." Parsons on Notes and Bills, 188, 189; Graham v. Larimer, 83 Cal. 173, 178, 23 Pac. 286; Jordan v. Grover, 99 Cal. 194, 195, 33 Pac. 889; Bailey v. Bidwell, 13 Mees. & W. 73; 32 English Law and Equity, 134.

It is, of course, clear that this case does not come within the above-considered rule. Here, as the evidence indisputably shows, and, indeed, as is in effect conceded to be the fact, the notes involved were not procured by fraud or duress, or without a valid consideration. It is also clear, as we have pointed out, that the plaintiff acquired ownership of the notes for value, before their maturity, and before there could have been a failure of the consideration for which they were given.

We conclude, upon the record before us, that to deny the right of plaintiff to recover upon these notes would mean a failure of justice.

The judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

43 Cal. App. 479

PEOPLE v. MACY et al. (Civ. 1962.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 8, 1919.)

1. Nuisance 🔑84—Reputation of house as evidence under Red Light Abatement Act.

In view of Red Light Abatement Act, § 5, general reputation of the place involved may alone be sufficient to prove the character of such place in a proceeding under such act to abate a nuisance.

2. Nuisance 🔑84—Sufficiency of evidence under Red Light Abatement Act.

In a proceeding by the state under the Red Light Abatement Act for the purpose of abating a nuisance existing in a house, evidence held sufficient to show the character of the house to be immoral.

3. Nuisance 🔑77—Proceeding under Red Light Abatement Act civil action.

A proceeding by the state under the Red Light Abatement Act for the purpose of abating a nuisance existing in a house is not a criminal proceeding, but is a civil action.

4. Nuisance 🔑81—Law of entrapment not applicable to Red Light Abatement Act.

Since a proceeding by the state under the Red Light Abatement Act to abate a nuisance existing in a house is a civil action, witnesses who induced immoral women in the presence of employés of the house to go to such house with them for immoral purposes can testify as to such fact, for the purpose of showing that the house was at the time in question used for the purposes alleged, and that the persons in charge of it were allowing such use; the law of entrapments not applying.

5. Evidence 🔑67(1)—House shown disorderly at certain date presumed to continue a nuisance.

Where it is proved, in a proceeding under the Red Light Abatement Act to abate a nuisance, that the house was used for immoral purposes up to a certain date, there is a presumption, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 32, that the immoral condition continued to exist so long as is usual for things or conditions of such nature, in the absence of satisfactory evidence to the contrary.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Proceeding by the People of the State of California against L. D. Macy and others under the Red Light Abatement Act. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Martin I. Welsh and V. L. Hatfield, both of Sacramento, for appellants.

John R. Robinson, Dist. Atty., of Chico, for the People.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought under the Red Light Abatement Act (St. 1913, p. 20) for the purpose of abating a nuisance existing in the Johnson House, a hotel in Chico, and of causing the same to be closed as provided by the provisions of said act. The judgment was in favor of the plaintiff, from which the owner of the premises has appealed. Three points are made by appellant, as follows:

(1) He insists that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the judgment, for the reason that it consists solely of evidence of the general reputation of said house in the community.

(2) It is claimed that the testimony of the two investigators or detectives, who testified in the case, cannot be considered by reason of the application of the doctrine of the "law of entrapments."

(3) The further claim is made that the evidence is insufficient to show that at the time of the filing of the complaint on the 14th of September, 1918, or at the time of the trial, one month later, the house was being used for said unlawful purposes, assuming that the evidence was sufficient to show such use on August 12, 1918, the date on which the last act of illicit intercourse and the reputation of the house were shown.

[1, 2] From reading and an examination of the record we are satisfied that there is no merit whatever in any of these contentions. As to the first point there was a strong showing of the bad reputation of the house in said community. The witnesses who so testified were persons of long residence there, or persons engaged in business in Chico, or persons whose calling would tend to make them familiar with the general reputation of any hotel in the community. They comprised business men, ministers, peace officers, and also women who were interested in the social conditions and welfare of the community. Their testimony was direct, clear, and unequivocal that the house had a bad reputation in the respects indicated. As an example of the general character of the testimony of these various witnesses, we may quote from the record of the testimony of Galen L. Rose as follows:

> "Q. Do you know the general reputation of the Johnson House for lewdness, prostitution, or assignation? A. I do. Q. What it is, good or bad? A. Bad.
> "Cross-examination: Q. With whom did you discuss the reputation of the Johnson House, Mr. Rose? A. I have discussed it. It came up in a general way in a conversation with a considerable number of people. I do not know as I recollect the individuals; but is a topic that comes up frequently in a conversation in a general way. And in all of my conversations I never heard a good word for the Johnson House, and I heard a good many speak and they were that it was bad."

It is to be observed that section 5 of said act provides:

> "In such action, evidence of the general reputation of the place shall be admissible for the purpose of proving the existence of said nuisance."

This would seem to imply that such evidence may be of itself sufficient to prove the character of the house, and upon this point it may be said that seldom is such a strong showing made as appears in the present instance. But beyond that, there was strong evidence that the character of several inmates or frequenters of the hotel was morally bad, and this is a circumstance of great importance in the determination of the character of the house. De Martini v. Anderson, 127 Cal. 33, 59 Pac. 207. As an example of this line of evidence we may quote from the record of the testimony of William Alexander, formerly chief of police, as follows:

> "Q. Do you know of your own personal knowledge, Mr. Alexander, while you were acting chief of police of the city of Chico, of any woman of a lewd or immoral character going to the Johnson House? A. I do. I know of one Myrtle McNeal, who was, at one time an inmate of the house of prostitution known to the house as such, having lived in the Johnson House for some time. A. Do you know of any other such person? A. Of my own knowledge I do not know of any such person, except that I have seen women, whose reputation was known to be bad, go into the Johnson House at all hours of the day."

There was other evidence of similar character and import. In addition to the foregoing, there was the positive testimony of the two investigators or detectives of acts of improper relations with a certain woman known as Hazel Howard in said house on August 10 and August 12, 1918. It appears further that said woman had a notorious reputation for immorality in the community and was in conversation with the clerk of the house in front of the desk in the office of said premises when one of said detectives came up and the agreement was made between him and her in the presence and hearing of said clerk to occupy together a room in said house. In fact, the evidence seems as strong and conclusive of the truth of the charge against the house as has appeared in any case of this class that this court has been called upon to consider.

[3, 4] As to the second point, it is sufficient to say that the record contains no evidence that said detectives or either of them offered any inducement to or enticed or allured or urged or persuaded in any manner the said Hazel Howard to commit any crime or to go to the Johnson House for any immoral purpose whatever. Moreover, this is not a criminal proceeding, but is a civil action for the purpose of abating a nuisance, and if such inducement had been offered the evidence would be admissible for the purpose of showing that said Johnson House was at the time in question used for the purposes alleged in said complaint and that the persons in charge of it were allowing such use. In this connection it may be proper to quote from Corpus Juris, vol. 16, p. 88, on the doctrine of entrapments, as follows:

> "While it has been said that the practice of entrapping persons into crime for the purpose of instituting criminal prosecutions is to be deplored, and while investigation, as distinguished from mere entrapment, has often been condemned and has sometimes been held to prevent the act from being criminal or punishable, the general rule is that it is no defense to the perpetrator of a crime that facilities for its commission were purposely placed in his way, or that the criminal act was done at the 'decoy solicitation' of persons seeking to expose the criminal, or that detectives feigning complicity in the act were present and apparently assisting in its commission. Especially is this true in that class of cases where the offense is one of a kind habitually committed, and the solicitation merely furnishes evidence of a course of conduct."

It will be observed that in nearly all of those cases where such evidence has been held inadmissible it has been upon the ground that no crime has been actually committed, as in the case where the owner induces a person to steal his property. In such case there could be no commission of the crime, if the property is taken with the owner's consent, since it is an essential factor of the crime of larceny that it be against the will of the owner. It may be further said that the cases distinguish clearly between measures used to entrap a person into crime and artifice used to detect persons suspected of being engaged in criminal practices, particularly as such criminal practices vitally affect the public welfare rather than individuals. People v. Liphardt, 105 Mich. 80, 62 N. W. 1022. This distinction is illustrated in the case of People v. Haselman, 76 Cal. 460, 18 Pac. 425, 9 Am. St. Rep. 238, which was a criminal prosecution for larceny. The complaining witness was a constable, who, for the purpose of detecting persons in theft, placed money in his pockets and pretended to be drunk in order to catch some one in the act of taking money from his pocket, and the defendant was caught in this way. It was held that these acts of the complaining witness, by way of inducement, did not amount to a consent to the taking, and were no defense to the criminal charge. The most that could be said in the present instance as to the conduct of said investigators was that they resorted to artifice and strategy and placed themselves in an attitude of willingness to participate in the commission of an immoral and illegal act in order to obtain evidence of the character of said house. Of course, it is to be regretted that it should seem necessary or expedient or proper for reputable citizens to so conduct themselves, but that is not sufficient reason for rejecting their testimony as altogether unworthy of credence. Manifestly in this class of cases it is usually quite difficult to secure evidence of the true character of the house, and therefore there is some excuse and justification in the interests of the public welfare, for the questionable method adopted by said investigators.

[5] As to the third point, it is sufficient to say that it was proved that the Johnson House was used for said immoral purposes as late as August 12, 1918, and that there was a course of such conduct up to that time. From this proof the presumption would follow that said condition continued to exist as long as is usual for things or conditions of such nature. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 32. Of course, if there were satisfactory evidence that the condition had changed, it might be said that the presumption was overcome. There was indeed the testimony of the owner of the premises that no immoral acts of the character charged had been committed in the house since said date of August 12, 1918. He even went further and declared that no such acts had ever been committed therein. The lower court, undoubtedly, was not greatly impressed with the truthfulness of his statements. We cannot say that he was entitled to any more credit than was accorded him by the trial judge. As bearing upon this consideration we may cite People v. Dillman, 174 Pac. 951; White v. White, 82 Cal. 427, 23 Pac. 276, 7 L. R. A. 799; Hohenshell v. South Riverside, etc., Co., 128 Cal. 627, 61 Pac. 371; Judge v. Kribs, 71 Iowa, 183, 32 N. W. 324; Halfman v. Spreen, 75 Iowa, 309, 39 N. W. 512.

We think it must be held that the case was fairly tried and justly decided, and that no error whatever appears in the record.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

EHRHART et al. v. MAHONY et al.
(Civ. 1990.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 4, 1919.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⚷114(2)—NECESSITY OF PLEADING ESSENTIALS OF CAUSE OF ACTION.

To obtain relief by way of specific performance, it is necessary to plead that defendant has received an adequate consideration for the contract, and that it is as to him just and reasonable, as required by Civ. Code, § 3391.

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⚷114(2)—SUFFICIENCY OF ALLEGATIONS AS TO REASONABLENESS AND FAIRNESS.

In a suit for specific performance of a contract for the purchase of mining claims, allegations that the purchase price was fair and reasonable, and that the contract was as to defendants just, reasonable, air, and equitable, while to some extent involving conclusions, held sufficient as against general demurrer, in view of Civ. Code, § 3391.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=1099(3)—DECISION ON PRIOR APPEAL AS TO TENDER LAW OF CASE.

A decision by the Supreme Court on appeal in a suit for specific performance that a defective tender was immaterial where a conveyance would have been refused in any event constitutes the law of the case on a subsequent appeal, where the facts presented are the same.

Appeal from Superior Court, Calaveras County; N. D. Arnot, Judge.

Action by Thomas J. Ehrhart and another against D. R. Mahony and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. A. Dower, of San Andreas, for appellants.

Snyder & Snyder and Nutter & Hancock, all of Stockton, for respondents.

HART, J. On September 27, 1910, the parties to the action entered into a written agreement denominated "Contract for Deed," whereby the plaintiffs agreed to sell and the defendants agreed to purchase three certain quartz mining claims in Calaveras county for the sum of $3,000, payable in installments, and defendants agreed to do all assessment work on said claims from the date of said contract. Defendants paid the first installment of $50, but made no further payments, and they notified plaintiffs that they refused to carry out said contract or to pay any further installments. On the 19th of December, 1910, plaintiffs executed a deed of said mining property, conveying the same to defendants, and offered to deliver the same to defendants upon the payment of the balance of the purchase price, which defendants refused to do. This action was brought to recover the balance of the purchase price, $2,950, and the sum of $300, which plaintiffs alleged they had expended for assessment work upon the claims. Judgment was in favor of plaintiffs for the amount sued for, and this appeal is prosecuted by defendants from said judgment upon the judgment roll alone.

The action was before the Supreme Court upon an appeal from a former judgment for the same amount. Ehrhart v. Mahony et al., 170 Cal. 148, 148 Pac. 934. That court held, upon the authority of White v. Sage, 149 Cal. 613, 87 Pac. 193, and Sparks v. Hess, 15 Cal. 186, that the action here is in effect one for the specific performance of a contract, and reversed the judgment for the reason that—

> "The complaint does not allege, nor does the court find, facts showing that there was an adequate consideration for the obligation sought to be enforced, or that the contract was just or reasonable as to the defendants."

Upon the case being returned to the superior court of Calaveras county the complaint was amended as follows:

> "That said defendants have received an adequate consideration for said contract; that the price for which the defendants so agreed to purchase said property and the plaintiffs so agreed to sell the same is a fair and reasonable price for said property and a fair valuation thereof, and that said contract is, as to the defendants, just, reasonable, fair, and equitable, and was fairly entered into between the plaintiffs and defendants"

—and a finding was made accordingly. To the amended complaint the defendants submitted a general demurrer, which was overruled, whereupon they filed an answer thereto.

Two points are made by appellants for a reversal of the present judgment: First. That the complaint fails to disclose that the contract, as to the defendants is just and reasonable, and that they have received an adequate consideration for the contract. Civ. Code § 3391. Second. That the findings do not support the theory that "defendants served notice that they refused to perform their part of the contract prior to the time that respondents made tender and demand."

Section 3391 of the Civil Code declares that specific performance cannot be enforced as to the party against whom that remedy is invoked, "if he has not received an adequate consideration for the contract," or "if it is not, as to him, just and reasonable."

[1] The above requisites in an action for relief by way of specific performance, as all the authorities say, must be pleaded and proved to justify the awarding of such relief.

[2] The amended complaint in this action, as we have seen, alleges that the price at which the defendants agreed to purchase the property in question "is fair and reasonable and a fair valuation thereof, and that said contract is, as to the defendants, just, reasonable, fair, and equitable," etc. While these allegations in a measure involve conclusions of the pleader and of law, they also involve a statement of the fact. At any rate, they are sufficient to resist the effect of a general demurrer. The amended answer specifically denies these allegations, and thus tendered an issue upon the question of the fairness and reasonableness of the consideration; and, the appeal not being supported by a transcript of the testimony or a bill of exceptions, we may presume, in support of the judgment, that the action was tried upon the theory that the allegations were sufficient, and that testimony was received without objection in support thereof.

The remaining point of those urged for a reversal involves an attack upon the findings that the defendants notified the plaintiffs of their refusal to perform their part of the contract, and that plaintiffs made a tender of a conveyance to defendants, and demanded of them the performance of the contract.

The complaint, the answer, and the findings upon the question of tender and the refusal of the defendants to stand up to the contract are precisely the same here as they were in the record on the former appeal, which, like the appeal here, was from the judgment on the judgment roll alone. The question of tender was presented to the Supreme Court on the former appeal, and in the opinion in that case (Ehrhart et al. v. Mahony et al., 170 Cal. 148, 148 Pac. 934, supra) was disposed of as follows:

> "The appellants criticise the allegation of tender, but since their answer showed that a conveyance would have been refused in any event, technical defects in the tender, or even a want of any tender, would be of no importance. Civ. Code, § 1440."

[3] The facts presented on both appeals upon the point now under review being the same, the above is the law of the case as to said point, and is decisive thereof against the position of the appellants.

No other points are presented.

The judgment is affirmed.

TORMEY v. McINTOSH et al. (Civ. 2635.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 2, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 1, 1919.)

ESTOPPEL ⚷22(3)—RECITALS IN ATTACHMENT BOND.

Where sureties caused attachment bond to be drawn which purported to be authorized by defendant in attachment suit, and which in form complied with Code Civ. Proc. § 540, and the property was released in reliance upon representations therein, sureties were estopped by recitals in bond from proving that it was not given by defendant but by persons having no right to give such bond.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Ben E. Tormey against Belinda P. McIntosh and others. From judgment denying relief, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Milton Newmark and Clarence A. Shuey, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. Oscar Goldstein, of Chico, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment for the defendants in an action brought against them as sureties upon a bond given pursuant to the provisions of section 540, Code of Civil Procedure. In 1912, plaintiff began an action in the superior court for Butte county against one Frank N. Miller, seeking to recover $1,200 for merchandise sold and delivered to him. At the time of the commencement of the suit, a writ of attachment was issued and placed in the hands of the sheriff for execution. The sheriff levied upon a stock of merchandise in a store in Chico, which was the property of the defendant in that action. The defendants in the present action executed a bond meeting the requirements of section 540, Code of Civil Procedure, which is the bond sued upon in the present action. Upon receipt of the bond, the sheriff released the property which he had seized. Subsequently, Miller was adjudged a bankrupt, and, in the course of the administration of his property in the bankruptcy court, plaintiff received a dividend of something over $300, which amount was credited on Miller's account. Thereafter, the defendant in the attachment suit filed a supplemental answer setting up his discharge in bankruptcy. Plaintiff asked for a judgment against the defendant for the balance due, in order that he might be enabled to enforce his rights against the sureties on the bond. He asked that judgment be entered in his favor with a perpetual stay of execution against the property of Miller. The superior court gave judgment for the defendant, from which judgment an appeal was prosecuted, and said judgment reversed. The superior court then rendered its judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $875.30 with a perpetual stay of execution against the property of Miller. Demand was made upon the sureties, who refused to pay, and the present action was brought against them, in which action judgment was rendered in their favor.

The appellant argues at some length, and cites numerous cases in support of the proposition, that the subsequent bankruptcy of the attachment defendant did not relieve the bondsmen from their liability. It is unnecessary for us to discuss this point here, because it is conceded by respondents in their brief that the subsequent bankruptcy of Miller would not in itself release the defendants in the present action, if there were no other valid defenses to the bond.

There are several points made in the briefs under different subdivisions, but they are all included in the main question presented. The record presents a conflict in the evidence on certain matters, arising by reason of the fact that the defendant Hazel Miller testified in direct contradiction to some of the recitals of the bond she had executed. The findings of the trial court on such matters are in direct conflict with the recitals of the attachment bond given by the defendants. The inquiry must then be whether, under the facts of this case, the defendants may contradict by their testimony the positive recitals of the bond, which recitals they represented to the plaintiff to be true, and upon the strength of which the plaintiff relinquished what was at the time a very valuable right.

At the time the bond was given, the defendant McIntosh was the mother-in-law of Miller, and the defendant Hazel P. Miller was his wife. It appears that Mrs. Miller had loaned her husband about $2,500, which had been used by him in purchasing the store, and that he had promised to repay this amount to her. She testified that at the time the attachment was threatened she and her husband were having domestic troubles; that her husband had gone to San Francisco, and she did not know where he was; that, when she received notice of the contemplated attachment, she was ill at her mother's home; that she and her mother signed the bond of their own motion, upon the advice of their attorney and without any request from Miller so to do; that said bond was signed for the purpose of protecting the interest that she (Mrs. Miller) had in the store; that the property was attached, and later released by the sheriff after he received the bond; and that she was in the store when the sheriff released it from the attachment. Upon this testimony, as against the positive recitals of the bond, as found by the court, the defendants base their argument that the bond was not given by the defendant in the attachment suit for his benefit, but was given by persons having no right under the statute to give such a bond, and for the benefit of such persons alone. The trial court accepted this view and found in accordance therewith. The bond itself is signed, not only by the sureties, but by Frank N. Miller himself. It recites that whereas the said defendant, Frank N. Miller, is desirous of giving the undertaking mentioned in the writ, now, therefore, the undersigned, etc. There is in the record the testimony of Guy R. Kennedy, identifying the signature of Frank Miller upon the bond, and this witness also stated that he saw Miller in Chico between the time the writ was issued and the bond was given. Mrs. Miller herself admits that the signature upon the bond looks like the signature of her former husband. The decisions of this state are to the effect that the recitals of such a bond are conclusive as between the parties thereto. Pierce v. Whiting, 63 Cal. 540; Smith v. Fargo, 57 Cal. 159; Bailey v. Ætna Indemnity Co., 5 Cal. App. 744, 91 Pac. 416; McMillan v. Dana, 18 Cal. 346. The facts of this case are such as to call strongly for the application of the principle announced in the foregoing cases. Taking defendants' view of the evidence, we have a case where Mrs. Miller was seeking an advantage to herself—seeking to protect her interest in the property. She claims now that she had no right to protect this interest by furnishing an attachment bond of her own motion. Let us assume that she had not, and that the only right of this kind was in the defendant in the attachment suit, Frank Miller. If, then, this is assumed to be the law, we must also assume that such facts were known to her and her attorney. But she nevertheless caused a bond to be drawn by her attorney which purported to be authorized by Miller, and in form complied with the statutory bond which he might have furnished. She signed this bond; it was given to the sheriff. The record is silent as to who actually gave the bond to the sheriff, but we will assume that it was regularly given to him by a person authorized to do so. The bond was signed by Frank Miller; the property was released under said bond. The plaintiff in the attachment suit relied upon the representations made in the bond. Mrs. Miller accepted the release of the property; she knew it had been released in reliance upon the bond. Later, when called upon to respond upon the bond, she attempted to contradict the very allegations upon which she secured the release of the attached property. We must conclude that, though the facts be as found by the trial court, these defendants are nevertheless estopped by the recitals of the bond to prove such facts in contradiction of such recitals. The findings of the trial court upon which the judgment is based are findings which have no support except in this testimony on behalf of the defendants. The plaintiff objected to the introduction of such evidence, and his objections were overruled. This ruling was error; the testimony should not have been admitted, and, if it is ignored, there is no evidence in the record to sustain the findings upon which the judgment was based.

The case of Thayer v. Braden, 27 Cal. App. 435, 150 Pac. 653, relied upon by respondents, is not inconsistent with the views herein announced. The question involved here does not arise in that case.

As to the contention that the bond was given to prevent an attachment and not to release one, the case of Preston v. Hood, 64 Cal. 405, 1 Pac. 487, disposes of that contention.

The judgment is reversed.
